To my parents, who, while I was growing up in Kansas, always encouraged me to look farther than my own backyard; and to my sons, Matthias and Johannes, for putting up with my absences for as long as they can remember.

Acknowledgments

I would like to thank some fine and very special people, without whose generous assistance and advice this book could never be as comprehensive as it is. A special arigatō goes to Zenbon Tei, Takanari Yamada, Marian Goldberg, Etsuko Kawasaki, and Kazuko Maratea of the Japan National Tourist Organization for years of support and behind-the-scenes guidance. I would also like to thank the following for their regional expertise and assistance they extended during my travels: Katsunori Hirano of Shizuoka Prefecture; Yasuaki Fukuyori and Masanori Nishimura in Okayama Prefecture; Doi Yoshimasa, Hiroshi Yoshimoto, Benjamin Brown, and Meiko Tada of Kagawa Prefecture; Shoji Aono, Yamamoto Taiji, Yuki Tomitani, Kenji Aono, Hisashi Harada and all the others who made my most recent trip to Ehime Prefecture with my son Matthias so special; Mitsuo Matsuoka of Kumamoto Prefecture; Satsuki Watanabe and Mikiko Morita of Kagoshima Prefecture; Haruko Hagio of Oita Prefecture; Toriyabe Tamotsu and Yasuko Murayama in Towada City; and Hiromi Kusanagi in Akita Prefecture. Debbie Howard gets kudos for her moral support, not to mention her years as a partner in crime researching Tokyo's nightlife, while Junko Matsuda gets a huge thanks for her tireless fact-checking skills and valuable knowledge of Tokyo. Finally, I'd also like to thank Tak Nagaoka at JNTO for encouraging me so many years ago to take on this mammoth project, which sent my life in a totally unexpected direction.

—Beth Reiber

My very deepest appreciations go to the Japan National Tourist Office staff for their invaluable assistance, and especially to Yasutake Tsukamoto, Naoko Marutani, and Yohko Scott of the Los Angeles JNTO and to Atsuchi Murai of the Tokyo office for coming to my rescue in my hour of need. My thanks of support go to Stephen Pearlman and Naomi Ichikawa of JAL; to Ken Yokoyama for sharing his hospitality, knowledge, and love of Kyoto; to Hiromi Nishimoto, "Yoshi," and Yuko Kumamoto for showing me true Osaka hospitality; to Jacques and Chizuko Borie for their culinary insights; and to Debbie Howard, Bob Dieter, and Julia Nolet for their insider information and long-trying friendship.

About the Authors

Long before she could read, Beth Reiber spent hours pouring over her grandparents' latest National Geographic magazines. What's New in Japan

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS Since late 2007, an anti-terrorism measure requires all foreigners entering Japan to be fingerprinted and photographed, despite the fact that terrorism in Japan has been mostly homegrown. Exceptions include children younger than 16, diplomats, and some permanent residents of Japan. Foreign travelers must also present passports for photocopying when checking into hotels and inns.

ATMs Getting cash has never been easier, thanks to 11,700 ATMs in 7-Eleven convenience stores throughout the country that now accept most foreign bank cards and credit cards. Better news yet: Most are open 24 hours.

GETTING AROUND JAPAN Non-smokers can breathe easier now that most Japan Rail (JR) trains are entirely non-smoking, including those in Hokkaido and those run by the JR East Group (covering Tokyo and Tohoku). JR Kyushu is now considering banning smoking as well.

TOKYO After suffering more than 16 years under a sluggish economy, Tokyo is abuzz with many new developments, including new luxury hotels such as The Ritz-Carlton, Tokyo, 9-7-1 Akasaka (☎ 800/241-3333 in the U.S. and Canada or 03/3423-8000); the new National Art Center, Tokyo, with its changing exhibits; the upscale Omotesando Hills shopping center in Harajuku; the huge urban development Tokyo Midtown in Roppongi, with Tokyo's tallest building; and a revamped Akihabara, which now boasts Japan's largest appliance store, an increasing number of anime and manga shops, and the Tokyo Anime Center.

SIDE TRIPS FROM TOKYO Architecture buffs are saddened to hear that Ryokan Inaba in Ito has closed; the cost of maintaining the 85-year-old inn, a registered National Treasure, was too great for innkeeper Mrs. Inaba. There's hope that the city will step in to preserve the venerable structure, just as it did when it turned an equally historic inn next door into a museum; even better would be a philanthropist who restores and keeps the inn running.

THE JAPAN ALPS One of our favorite museums, the Inro Museum in Takayama, with its display of portable medicine cases and netsuke, has closed. Luckily, the mountain town has a wealth of other museums, including the new Showa Kan (☎ 0577/33-7836), which re-creates a Showa-era (1926-89) town and gives a nostalgic look into life in Japan in the not-too-distant past.

KYOTO Fortunately, there aren't many changes in our favorite city, but the new Hyatt Regency Kyoto in Higashiyamaku (☎ 800/233-1234 in the U.S. and Canada; www.hyattregencykyoto.com), is turning heads with its graceful blend of Asian and contemporary interiors, an 850-year-old garden that once belonged to an emperor, and a spa that offers everything from acupuncture to aromatherapy. Travelers' desires for modern comfort has trickled down to budget accommodations, prompting the fourth-generation owner of Kyoraku Ryokan (☎ 075/371-1260; www.ryokankyoraku.jp) and the sixth-generation innkeeper of Matsubaya Ryokan (☎ 075/351-3727; www.matsubayainn.com) to tear down their aging structures and rebuild. Kyoraku Ryokan is already open; Matsubaya Ryokan is scheduled to reopen in autumn 2009.

THE REST OF WESTERN HONSHU
Nagoya has joined a growing roster of cities that make it easier to get around with a dedicated sightseeing bus, eliminating the 20-minute round-trip hike it used to take to get to the Tokugawa Art Museum.

In Kanazawa, the Ishikawa Prefectural Art Museum (☎ 076/231-7580; www.ishibi.pref.ishikawa.jp) is closed for a much-needed renovation until the end of 2008. Until then, some of the museum's wonderful collection of paintings, Kutani pottery, and other items dating from Japan's Feudal Era are on display at the Ishikawa Prefectural History Museum, 3-1 Dewa-machi (☎ 076/262-3236)—with the exception, alas, of the art museum's national treasures.

Visitors have been flocking to Mount Koya since it was declared a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 2004. To make access easier, cheaper, and more convenient, a discount ticket, called Koyasan Free Service, has been introduced that includes round-trip train travel from Osaka, the cable car to Mount Koya, unlimited bus travel atop the mountain, and slight discounts to attractions. Another great addition is the rental audio guide available at the Koyasan tourist office, which imparts invaluable information on Mount Koya's many historic sights and is almost like having a personal guide.

Okayama Prefecture began opening a handful of International Villas (www.harenet.ne.jp/villa) approximately 20 years ago, located in picturesque rural areas and open only to foreigners and their Japanese guests at very low rates. Low occupancy, however, has prompted the Okayama government to open all but one of the five villas to Japanese and foreigners alike.

In Kurashiki, some travelers may be disappointed to learn that Ryokan Kurashiki (☎ 086/422-0730; www.ryokan-kurashiki.jp), which used to be a rambling 17-room affair, filled with antiques and curios, has undergone a major renovation that reduced accommodations to only five luxurious two- and three-room suites, naturally at much higher prices.

Regrettably, one of Matsue's best museums, the Louis C. Tiffany Museum and Gardens, has closed. No word yet on where the world's largest Tiffany collection will resurface.

SHIKOKU Takamatsu boasts one of Japan's most convenient and best public computer centers, courtesy of Kagawa Prefecture, which opened E-Topia Kagawa next to Takamatsu Station to boost its citizens' technical know-how. Best of all, use of one of the center's 28 computers is free.

Benesse Art Site Naoshima, Japan's top destination for cutting-edge art, opened three new Art House Projects in September 2007, doubling the number of old buildings that have been remodeled by artists into interactive art installations that you can visit with a general admission ticket (two other works require reservations). Of course, general admission has also doubled.

KYUSHU Kyushu's biggest news is that Ocean Dome, the world's largest all-weather indoor water park, closed in Miyazaki.

TOHOKU Kakunodate, one of northern Japan's most engaging former castle towns, is even more fun to visit now that several more Feudal-Era samurai houses have opened to the public in the Buke-yashiki district. Rental bikes at the station make it even easier to travel down memory lane.

HOKKAIDO Obtaining information about Hokkaido, which constitutes its own prefecture, has never been easier now that the Hokkaido-Sapporo Tourist Information Center has opened in Sapporo Station in Sapporo. There's even a Japan Rail information counter here, where visitors can obtain JR train and bus schedules and get rail passes validated, as well as an Internet cafe.

Sadly, the Sapporo Beer Museum, which used to include tours of its brewery until it shut down in 2003 but continued to give free guided tours describing the brewing process, has now dispensed even with that, making a walk past displays described only in Japanese frustrating at best. Even worse, Sapporo brewery got rid of its outdoor beer garden, one of Sapporo's best summertime institutions. You can still dine in the brewery's historic Kessel Hall, though its name, the Sapporo Bier Garten, is a misnomer.

Hakodate, which opened as one of Japan's first international ports at the end of the Feudal Era but then languished as a mere stopover for travelers entering Hokkaido, has blossomed in recent years as a chic destination, with its burgeoning waterfront warehouse district with shops and restaurants and historic district of turn-of-the-20th-century Western-style homes, churches, and other buildings. Emblematic of Hakodate's rejuvenation is the Hakodate Danshaku Club Hotel & Resorts (☎ 0138/21-1111), a locally owned hotel that opened in 2007, offering suites with balconies and—rare in Japan—fully stocked kitchens. Who cares that it's named after a potato?

The best reason for visiting Sounkyo village in Daisetsuzan National Park used to be spectacular Soukyo Gorge. A rock avalanche, however, closed off road access. Although determined sightseers can catch glimpses of the gorge from a few vantage points, the main reasons for visiting Sounkyo now are its picturesque sights and hiking trails.

The Best of Japan

Hardly a day goes by that you don't hear something about Japan, whether the subject is trade, travel, cuisine, the arts, or Japanese imports ranging from Sony and Toyota to karaoke and anime. Yet Japan remains something of an enigma to people in the Western world. What best describes this Asian nation? Is it the giant producer of cars and an entire array of sleek electronic goods that compete favorably with the best in the West? Or is it still the land of geisha and bonsai, the punctilious tea ceremony, and the delicate art of flower arrangement? Has it become, in its outlook and popular culture, a country more Western than Asian? Or has it retained its unique ancient traditions while forging a central place in the contemporary post-industrialized world?

In fact, Japan is an intricate blend of East and West. Its cities may look Westernized—often disappointingly so—but, beyond first impressions, there's very little about this Asian nation that could lull you into thinking you're in the West. Yet Japan also differs greatly from its Asian neighbors. Although it borrowed much from China in its early development, including Buddhism and its writing system, the island nation remained steadfastly isolated from the rest of the world throughout much of its history, usually deliberately so. Until World War II, it had never been successfully invaded; and for more than 200 years, while the West was stirring with the awakenings of democracy and industrialism, Japan completely closed its doors to the outside world and remained a tightly structured feudalistic society with almost no outside influence.

It's been only some 140 years since Japanese opened their doors, embracing Western products wholeheartedly, yet at the same time altering them and making them unquestionably their own. Thus, that modern high-rise may look Western, but it may contain a rustic-looking restaurant with open charcoal grills, corporate offices, a pachinko parlor, a high-tech bar with views of Mount Fuji, a McDonald's, an acupuncture clinic, a computer showroom, and a rooftop shrine. Your pizza may come with octopus, beer gardens are likely to be fitted with Astroturf, and "parsley" refers to unmarried women older than 25 (because parsley is what's left on a plate). City police patrol on bicycles; garbage collectors attack their job with the vigor of a well-trained army; and white-gloved elevator operators, working in some of the world's swankiest department stores, bow and thank you as you exit.

Because of this unique synthesis of East and West into a culture that is distinctly Japanese, Japan is not easy for Westerners to comprehend. Discovering it is like peeling an onion—you uncover one layer only to discover more layers underneath. Thus, no matter how long you stay in Japan, you never stop learning something new about it—and to me that constant discovery is one of the most fascinating aspects of being here.

1 The Best Travel Experiences

Long ago, Japanese ranked the three best of almost every natural wonder and attraction in their country: the three best gardens, the three best scenic spots, the three best waterfalls, even the three best bridges. But choosing the “best” of anything is inherently subjective, and decades—even centuries—have passed since some of the original “three best” were so designated. Still, lists can be useful for establishing priorities. To help you get the most out of your stay, I’ve compiled this list of what I consider the best Japan has to offer based on years of traveling through the country. From the weird to the wonderful, the profound to the profane, the obvious to the obscure, these recommendations should fire your imagination and launch you toward discoveries of your own.

- Making a Pilgrimage to a Temple or Shrine: From mountaintop shrines to neighborhood temples, Japan’s religious structures rank among the nation’s most popular attractions. Usually devoted to a particular deity, they’re visited for specific reasons: Shopkeepers call on Fushimi-Inari Shrine outside Kyoto, dedicated to the goddess of rice and therefore prosperity, while couples wishing for a happy marriage head to Kyoto’s Jishu Shrine, a shrine to the deity of love. Shrines and temples are also the sites for most of Japan’s major festivals. See chapter 2, the regional chapters, and “The Best Temples & Shrines” section, below, for more on Japan’s temples and shrines.
- Taking a Communal Hot-Spring Bath: No other people on earth bathe as enthusiastically, as frequently, and for such duration as Japanese. Their many hot-spring baths—thought to cure all sorts of ailments as well as simply make you feel good—range from elegant, Zen-like affairs to rustic outdoor baths with views of the countryside. No matter what the setup, you’ll soon warm to the ritual of soaping up, rinsing off, and then soaking in near-scalding waters. Hot-spring spas are located almost everywhere in Japan, from Kyushu to Hokkaido; see “Minding Your Ps & Qs: Bathing,” in appendix A, and the regional chapters for more information.
- Participating in a Festival: With Shintoism and Buddhism as its major religions, and temples and shrines virtually everywhere, Japan has multiple festivals every week. These celebrations, which range from huge processions of wheeled floats to those featuring horseback archery and ladder-top acrobatics, can be lots of fun; you may want to plan your trip around one (and book early for a hotel). See the “Japan Calendar of Events,” in chapter 2, for a list of some of the most popular festivals.
- Dining on Japanese Food: There’s more to Japanese cuisine than sushi, and part of what makes travel here so fascinating is the variety of national and regional dishes. Every prefecture, it seems, has its own style of noodles, its special vegetables, and its delicacies. If money is no object, order kaiseki, a complete meal of visual and culinary finesse. See the “Tips on Dining, Japanese Style” section of chapter 2; the “Where to Dine” sections in the regional chapters; and “The Best Culinary Experiences,” later in this chapter, for more on Japanese food.
- Viewing the Cherry Blossoms: Nothing symbolizes the coming of spring so vividly to Japanese as the appearance of the cherry blossoms—and nothing so amazes visitors as the way Japanese gather under the blossoms to celebrate the season with food, drink, dance, and karaoke. See the “Japan Calendar of Events,” in chapter 2, for cherry blossom details.

- Riding the Shinkansen Bullet Train: Asia’s fastest train whips you across the countryside at more than 290km (180 miles) an hour as you relax, see the country’s rural countryside, and dine on boxed meals filled with local specialties of the area through which you’re speeding. See “Getting Around Japan,” in chapter 2.
- Staying in a Ryokan: Japan’s legendary service reigns supreme in a top-class ryokan, a traditional Japanese inn. Staying in one is the height of both luxury and simplicity: You’ll bathe in a Japanese tub or hot-spring bath, feast your eyes on lovely views (usually a Japanese garden) past shoji screens, dine like a king in your own room, and sleep on a futon. See “Tips on Accommodations” in chapter 2 and the “Where to Stay” sections in the regional chapters for more on ryokan.
- Shopping in a Department Store: Japan’s department stores are among the best in the world, offering everything from food to designer clothing to electronics to kimono and traditional crafts. Service also is among the best in the world: If you arrive when the store opens, staff will be lined up at the front door to bow as you enter. See the “Shopping” sections throughout this book.
- Visiting a Local Market: Tsukiji Fish Market, in Tokyo, is Japan’s largest, but there are local seafood and produce markets virtually everywhere. Those in Kyoto, Takayama, and Hakodate are among my favorites. See the “Shopping” sections of the regional chapters for more information.
- Attending a Kabuki Play: Based on universal themes and designed to appeal to the masses, Kabuki plays are extravaganzas of theatrical displays, costumes, and scenes—but mostly they’re just plain fun. See “Cultural Snapshots: Japanese Arts in a Nutshell,” in appendix A, and the Kabuki section of “Tokyo After Dark,” in chapter 5.
- Strolling Through Tokyo’s Nightlife District: Every major city in Japan has its own nightlife district, but probably none is more famous, more wicked, or more varied than Tokyo’s Kabuki-cho, in Shinjuku, which offers everything from hole-in-the-wall bars to strip joints, discos, and gay clubs. See “Tokyo After Dark,” in chapter 5.
- Seeing Mount Fuji: It may not seem like much of an accomplishment to see Japan’s most famous and tallest mountain, visible from 161km (100 miles) away. But, the truth is, it’s hardly ever visible, except during the winter months and rare occasions when the air is clear. Catching your first glimpse of the giant peak is truly breathtaking and something you’ll never forget, whether you see it from aboard the Shinkansen, a Tokyo skyscraper, or a nearby national park. If you want to climb it (possible only in July and Aug), be prepared for a group experience—600,000 people climb Mount Fuji every summer. See “Climbing Japan’s Most Famous Mountain: Mount Fuji,” in chapter 6.
- Spending a Few Days in Kyoto: If you see only one city in Japan, Kyoto should be it. Japan’s capital from 794 to 1868, Kyoto is one of Japan’s finest ancient cities, boasting some of the country’s best temples, Japanese-style inns, traditional restaurants, shops, and gardens. See chapter 8 for extensive information on the city.

2 The Best Temples & Shrines

- Meiji Jingu Shrine (Tokyo): Tokyo's most venerable and refined Shinto shrine honors the Emperor Meiji and his empress with simple yet dignified architecture surrounded by a dense forest. This is a great refuge in the heart of the city. See p. 176.
- Sensoji Temple (Tokyo): The capital's oldest temple is also its liveliest. Throngs of visitors and stalls selling both traditional and kitschy items lend it a festival-like atmosphere. This is the most important temple to see in Tokyo. See p. 177.
- Kotokuin Temple (Kamakura): This temple is home to the Great Buddha, Japan's second-largest bronze image, which was cast in the 13th century and sits outdoors against a magnificent wooded backdrop. The Buddha's face has a wonderful expression of contentment, serenity, and compassion. See p. 224.
- Hase Kannon Temple (Kamakura): Although this temple is famous for its 9m-tall (30-ft.) Kannon of Mercy, the largest wooden image in Japan, it's most memorable for its thousands of small statues of Jizo, the guardian deity of children, donated by parents of miscarried, stillborn, or aborted children. It's a rather haunting vision. See p. 224.
- Toshogu Shrine (Nikko): Dedicated to Japan's most powerful shogun, Tokugawa Ieyasu, this World Heritage Site is the nation's most elaborate and opulent shrine, made with 2.4 million sheets of gold leaf. It's set in a forest of cedar in a national park. See p. 227.
- Kiyomizu Temple (Kyoto): One of Japan's best-known temples with a structure imitated by lesser temples around the country, Kiyomizu commands an exalted spot on a steep hill with a view over Kyoto. The pathway leading to the shrine is lined with pottery and souvenir shops, and the temple grounds have open-air pavilions, where you can drink beer or eat noodles. Don't neglect a visit to the smaller Jishu Shrine on its grounds—it's dedicated to the god of love. See p. 318.
- Sanjusangendo Hall (Kyoto): Japan's longest wooden building contains the spectacular sight of more than 1,000 life-size wood-carved statues, row upon row of the thousand-handed Kannon of Mercy. See p. 319.
- Kinkakuji (Temple of the Golden Pavilion) (Kyoto): Constructed in the 14th century as a shogun's retirement villa, this three-story pavilion shimmers in gold leaf and is topped with a bronze phoenix; it's a beautiful sight when the sun shines and the sky's blue. See p. 319.
- Todaiji Temple (Nara): Japan's largest bronze Buddha sits in the largest wooden structure in the world, making it the top attraction in this former capital. While not as impressive as the Great Buddha's dramatic outdoor stage in Kamakura (see above), the sheer size of Todaiji Temple and its Buddha make this a sight not to be missed if you're in the Kansai area. See p. 339.
- Horyuji Temple (Nara): Despite the fact that Todaiji Temple with its Great Buddha (see above) gets all the glory, true seekers of Buddhist art and history head to the sacred grounds of Horyuji Temple with its treasures and ancient buildings. See p. 340.
- Ise Grand Shrines (Ise): Although there's not much to see, these shrines are the most venerated Shinto shrines in all of Japan, and pilgrims have been flocking here for centuries. Amazingly, the Inner Shrine, which contains the Sacred Mirror, is razed and reconstructed on a new site every 20 years in accordance with strict rules governing purification in the Shinto religion. Follow the age-old route of former pilgrims after you visit the shrines, and stop for a meal in the nearby Okage Yokocho District. See p. 359.

- Myoryuji Temple (Kanazawa): This is a temple of a different kind, popularly known as Ninja-dera and fun to visit because of its hidden stairways, trick doors, traps, secret chambers, and other Feudal-Era devices meant to thwart enemy intruders. Reservations are required. See p. 371.
- Itsukushima Shrine (Miyajima): The huge red torii (the traditional entry gate of a shrine), standing in the waters of the Seto Inland Sea, is one of the most photographed landmarks in Japan and signals the approach to this shrine. Built over the tidal flats on a gem of an island called Miyajima, it's considered one of Japan's most scenic spots. At night, the shrine is illuminated. See p. 460.

- Kotohiragu Shrine (Kotohira, on Shikoku): One of Japan's oldest and most popular shrines beckons at the top of 785 granite steps on the Yashima Plateau with great views of the Seto Inland Sea, but for most Japanese, it's the "I made it!" that counts. See p. 469.
- Dazaifu Tenmangu Shrine (Fukuoka): Established in 905 to deify the god of scholarship, this immensely popular shrine has a festive atmosphere and is popular with students wishing to pass school exams. The road leading to the shrine is lined with souvenir and craft shops; the Kyushu National Museum is an escalator ride away. See p. 490.

3 The Best Gardens

- Rikugien Garden (Tokyo): It's not as centrally located as Tokyo's other gardens, but Rikugien stands out not only for its quintessentially Japanese setting but also because its vistas are unmarred by surrounding skyscrapers. Created in 1702 and later donated to the city by the founder of Mitsubishi, it boasts a strolling path around a pond complete with islets, teahouses, and arched bridges. See p. 182.
- Sankeien Garden (Yokohama): Historic villas, tea arbors, a farmhouse, a pagoda, and other authentic buildings, all set in a century-old landscaped garden with ponds and streams, make this one of the most interesting and picturesque gardens in Japan. See p. 238.
- Ryoanji Temple (Kyoto): Japan's most famous Zen rock garden, laid out at the end of the 15th century, consists of moss-covered boulders and raked pebbles enclosed by an earthen wall. It is said that it's impossible to see all 15 rocks from any vantage point; see if you can. Come early in the morning for some peaceful meditation and to beat the crowds. See p. 320.

- Katsura Imperial Villa (Kyoto): Designed by Japan's most famous gardener, Kobori Enshu, the garden surrounding this imperial villa is, in my view, Japan's most beautiful. A "strolling garden," its view changes with every step but is always complete, perfectly balanced, and in harmony. It's well worth the extra effort involved to see it. See p. 329.
- Saihoji (Kyoto): Popularly known as the Moss Temple, Saihoji boasts Japan's most famous moss garden, with more than 100 varieties spread throughout the grounds, giving off an iridescent glow. It's especially beautiful after a rainfall. See p. 330.

- Kenrokuen Garden (Kanazawa): Considered by some to be Japan's grandest landscape garden (and rated one of the "three best"), Kenrokuen is also one of the largest. The garden took 150 years to complete and consists of ponds, streams, rocks, mounds, trees, grassy expanses, and footpaths. Best of all, no tall buildings detract from the views. After Katsura (see above), this is my top choice. See p. 368.
- Koko-en (Himeji): It isn't old (it was laid out in 1992), but this is a wonderful surprise package of nine small gardens, each one different but typical of gardens during the Edo Period, which lasted from 1603 to 1867. Upon seeing what can be accomplished with skill and money in little more than 16 years, some gardeners may turn green with envy. See p. 419.
- Korakuen Garden (Okayama): Rated one of Japan's three most beautiful gardens and protected by laws limiting the size of surrounding buildings, Korakuen was completed in 1700 and incorporates the surrounding hills and Okayama Castle into its design. It's definitely worth a visit if you're in the vicinity, though personally, I like Kenrokuen (see above) more. See p. 423.

- Ritsurin Park (Takamatsu): Dating from the 17th century, this former private retreat of the ruling Matsudaira clan is an exquisite strolling garden that incorporates Mount Shiun in its landscaping and boasts 1,400 pine trees and 350 cherry trees. Stop for tea in the Feudal-Era teahouse and contemplate the view at leisure. See p. 468.
- Sengan'en (Kagoshima): Laid out more than 300 years ago by the Shimadzu clan, this summer retreat with a 25-room villa was known for its poem-composing parties, held beside a rivulet that still exists. After touring the garden and villa, be sure to visit the nearby museum with relics belonging to the Shimadzu family. This garden is one of my favorites. See p. 526.

4 The Best Castles, Palaces & Villas

- Tamozawa Imperial Villa (Nikko): Comprised of a 1632 villa and an 1899 expansion, this 106-room villa was the home of a prince who later became emperor. You can learn about traditional Japanese architectural details and lifestyles of the aristocracy on self-guided tours, and unlike Japan's other imperial villas, it does not require a reservation. See p. 231.
- Matsumoto Castle (Matsumoto): Popularly known as the Crow Castle due to its black color, this small castle boasts the oldest keep (donjon) in Japan (more than 400 years old). A moon-viewing room was added in 1635, and exhibited inside the castle is a superb collection of Japanese matchlocks and samurai armor dating from the mid-16th century through the Edo Period. Volunteer guides stand ready for personal tours. See p. 258.

- Nijo Castle (Kyoto): One of the few castles built by the mighty Tokugawa shogunate as a residence rather than for defense, Nijo Castle is where the shogun stayed whenever he was in Kyoto. It's famous for its nightingale (creaking) floorboards that warned of enemy intruders. The castle is considered the quintessence of Momoyama architecture. See p. 316.

- Kyoto Imperial Palace (Kyoto): Home to Japan's imperial family from the 14th to the 19th centuries, this palace is praised for its Heian design and graceful garden. Good news for travelers: Guided tours of the palace are free. See p. 315.
- Katsura Imperial Villa (Kyoto): Built in the 1600s by a brother of the emperor, this villa and garden are considered to be among the best—if not the best—in traditional architecture and landscape gardening. More than anyplace else, the villa illustrates the life of refinement enjoyed by 17th-century nobility, when leisurely pursuits included such activities as moon viewing. See p. 329.
- Osaka Castle (Osaka): Although just a reproduction of what was once the mightiest castle in the land, Osaka Castle still impresses with its sheer size. Inside you'll find a high-tech museum detailing the life and times of Toyotomi Hideyoshi, the warrior general who built the castle. See p. 385.
- Himeji Castle (Himeji): Said to resemble a white heron poised in flight over the plains, this is quite simply Japan's most beautiful castle. With its extensive gates, moats, turrets, and maze of passageways, it has survived virtually intact since feudal times. If you see only one castle in Japan, make this the one. See p. 418.
- Matsue Castle (Matsue): This 17th-century castle is one of Japan's few remaining original castles (not a reconstruction). It features a five-story donjon with samurai gear and artifacts belonging to the ruling Matsudaira clan. See p. 439.
- Matsuyama Castle (Matsuyama): Occupying a hill above the city, this 400-year-old fortress is also one of the few original castles left in Japan. It boasts good views over Matsuyama from its three-story donjon as well as a collection of armor and swords of the Matsudaira clan. See p. 475.
- Kumamoto Castle (Kumamoto): Although a ferroconcrete reconstruction not nearly as huge as the original, this massive castle is still an impressive sight, especially at night when it's illuminated. It's famous for its curved walls, which made invasion virtually impossible. The interior houses a museum with palanquins, armor, swords, and other artifacts of the former ruling clans. See p. 515.

5 The Best Museums

- Edo-Tokyo Museum (Tokyo): Housed in a high-tech modern building, this ambitious museum chronicles the fascinating and somewhat tumultuous history of Tokyo (known as Edo during the Feudal Era) with models, replicas, artifacts, and dioramas. Volunteers stand ready to give free guided tours in English. See p. 172.
- Tokyo National Museum (Tokyo): Even professed museumphobes should make a point of visiting the National Museum, the largest repository of Japanese arts in the world. Lacquerware, china, kimono, samurai armor, swords, woodblock prints, religious art, and more are on display, making this the best place in Japan to view Japanese antiques and decorative objects. If you visit only one museum in Japan, this should be it. See p. 178.
- Hakone Open-Air Museum (Chokoku-no-Mori, Hakone): Beautifully landscaped grounds and spectacular scenery showcase approximately 400 20th-century sculptures, from Giacomo and Rodin to Henry Moore. Here, too, is the Picasso Pavilion, housing 200 of the artist's works. See p. 245.

- Japan Ukiyo-e Museum (Matsumoto): One of the best woodblock-print museums in Japan, this museum displays the largest collection of prints in the world on a rotating basis. A must-see in Matsumoto. See p. 259.
- Hida Minzoku Mura Folk Village (Takayama): Picturesquely situated around a pond with flowers, more than 30 shingled and thatched farmhouses—many transported from the surrounding Japan Alps—are filled with farm implements and objects of daily life, providing fascinating insight into the life and times of the extended families that once inhabited them. See p. 268.
- Museum Meiji Mura (Nagoya): This open-air architectural museum is an absolute treasure, with more than 60 original buildings and structures dating from the Meiji Period situated on 100 beautifully landscaped hectares (250 acres) on the shore of a lake. Western-style homes, churches, a Kabuki theater, a bathhouse, a prison, a brewery, and much more are open for viewing and filled with furniture and household items. Mail a postcard from an authentic post office, buy candy from an old candy store, and drink tea in the lobby of the original Imperial Hotel, which was designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. See p. 352.
- Ishikawa Prefectural Museum for Traditional Products and Crafts (Kanazawa): Kanazawa is famous for its handcrafted items, including gold leaf, umbrellas, stringed instruments, Buddhist altars, pottery, and more. English-language explanations, a detailed pamphlet, and an audio guide explain how they're made. See p. 369.
- Disaster Reduction and Human Renovation Institution (Kobe): You can't tell by its name, but this excellent museum is devoted to Kobe's 1995 earthquake, with films, dioramas, and exhibits detailing the city's destruction and rebirth. See p. 405.
- Ohara Museum of Art (Kurashiki): Founded in 1930, this museum just keeps getting bigger and better, with works by both Western and Japanese greats spread throughout several buildings. Its location in the picturesque Kurashiki historic district is a bonus. See p. 432.
- Adachi Museum (Matsue): This museum near Matsue combines two of my passions—art and gardens—making it a winner. Japanese modern art is the focus indoors, while the perfectly landscaped garden—one of Japan's best—comes into view through framed windows, making it part of the art in a very surreal way. See p. 442.
- Peace Memorial Museum (Hiroshima): Japan's most thought-provoking museum contains exhibits examining Hiroshima's militaristic past, the events leading up to the explosion of the world's first atomic bomb, the city's terrible destruction, and its active antinuclear movement. See p. 451.
- Benesse Art Site Naoshima (Takamatsu): This is not a single museum, but rather an island in the Seto Inland Sea that's devoted to cutting-edge art, with two museums (both designed by Tadao Ando) and interactive art installations in traditional Japanese buildings. There's no other place in Japan quite like this. See p. 471.
- Fukuoka Asian Art Museum (Fukuoka): This fascinating museum is devoted to contemporary and modern art from around Asia, including the Philippines, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, China, Korea, and India. See p. 489.

6 The Best National Parks

- Nikko National Park: This 80,000-hectare (200,000-acre) national park centers on the sumptuous Toshogu Shrine with its mausoleum for Tokugawa Ieyasu, majestic cedars, and lakeside resorts. See p. 227.
- Fuji-Hakone-Izu National Park: Boasting magnificent Mount Fuji at its core, this popular weekend getaway beckons vacationing Tokyoites with its many hot-spring spas, stunning close-up views of Mount Fuji, sparkling lakes, historic attractions relating to the famous Feudal-Era Tokaido Highway, and coastal areas of Izu Peninsula. One of the best ways to see Hakone is via a circular route that involves travel on a two-car mountain streetcar, a cable car, a ropeway, and a boat; the delightful journey offers wonderful scenery and interesting sights along the way. See p. 242.
- Japan Alps National Park: Encompassing Honshu's most impressive mountain ranges and the site of the 1998 Winter Olympics, this national park offers skiing and hiking as well as unique villages worth a visit in their own right. See p. 256.
- Ise-Shima National Park: Boasting a rugged seascape of capes, inlets, and islets, this park is the birthplace of cultivated pearls. It's famous for its bays dotted with pearl-cultivating oyster rafts, its female divers, a pearl museum, plus a top-notch aquarium and the Ise Grand Shrines, Japan's most venerable shrines. Two theme parks are also located here. See p. 358.
- Seto-Naikai (Inland Sea) National Park: Covering 650 sq. km (251 sq. miles) of water, islands, islets, and coastline, this sea park stretches from Kobe in the east to Beppu in the west. It's studded with numerous islands of all sizes, the most famous of which is Miyajima, home of the Itsukushima Shrine. Cruises ply the waters of the Seto Inland Sea, as do regular ferries sailing between Honshu, Shikoku, and Kyushu. The adventuresome can even cycle across the Seto Inland Sea via the Shimanami Kaido route linking Honshu with Shikoku (see "The Best Outdoor Adventures," below). See p. 453.
- Unzen-Amakusa National Park: At western Kyushu's high-altitude national park, you can climb Mount Fugen (1,360m/4,462 ft. above sea level), relax in a hot-spring bath, and take a walk through the Hells, the park's extra-steamy sulfur springs. See p. 509.
- Towada-Hachimantai National Park: Tohoku's most popular park beckons with scenic lakes, rustic hot-spring spas, hiking, and skiing. See p. 566.
- Shikotsu-Toya National Park: This 987-sq.-km (381-sq.-mile) park in eastern Hokkaido encompasses lakes, volcanoes, and famous hot-spring resorts such as Noboribetsu. See p. 593.
- Daisetsuzan National Park: The largest of Japan's 28 national parks—and some say Hokkaido's most beautiful—Daisetsuzan boasts three volcanic chains, fir- and birch-covered hillsides, impressive Sounkyo Gorge, and plenty of skiing and hiking opportunities. See p. 599.
- Akan National Park: Popular for hiking, skiing, canoeing, and fishing, Akan National Park in Hokkaido is characterized by dense forests of sub-arctic primeval trees and caldera lakes, the most famous of which are Kussharo, one of Japan's largest mountain lakes, and Mashu, considered one of Japan's least-spoiled lakes and one of the world's clearest. See p. 603.

7 The Best of Old Japan

- Splurging on a Night in a Ryokan: If you can afford to, splurge on at least 1 night in one of the country's best ryokan, where the service is impeccable, the kaiseki meals are out of this world, and glorious views outside your tatami room are of miniature landscaped gardens. You'll be pampered in a manner befitting an emperor; many of the nation's oldest ryokan were indeed born to serve members of the imperial court and feudal lords as they traveled Japan's highways. See "Tips on Accommodations," in chapter 2; the "Where to Stay" sections in the regional chapters; and "The Best Traditional Ryokan," below.
- Attending a Sumo Match: There's nothing quite like watching two monstrous sumo wrestlers square off, bluff, and grapple as they attempt to throw each other on the ground or out of the ring. Matches are great cultural events, but even if you can't attend one, you can watch them on TV during one of six annual 15-day tournaments. For more information, see "Spectator Sports," in chapter 5, and "Sumo," in appendix A.
- Strolling through a Japanese Garden: Most of Japan's famous gardens are relics of the Edo Period, when the shogun, daimyo feudal lords, imperial family, and even samurai and Buddhist priests developed private gardens for their own viewing pleasure. Each step in a strolling garden brings a new view to die for. Refer to "The Best Gardens," earlier in this chapter, and the attractions sections in the regional chapters to see which are heaven on earth.
- Participating in Zazen Meditation in a Buddhist Temple: Zazen, or sitting meditation, is practiced by Zen Buddhists as a form of spiritual training and by laypeople as a way to relieve stress and clear the mind. Several temples in Japan are willing to take in foreigners for Zazen sessions. See the "Five Unforgettable Ways to Immerse Yourself in Japanese Culture" section, in chapter 5.
- Attending a Traditional Tea Ceremony: Developed in the 16th century as a means to achieve inner harmony with nature, the highly ritualized ceremony is carried out in teahouses throughout the country, including those set in Japan's many parks and gardens. Several Tokyo hotels offer English-language instruction in the tea ceremony. See p. 180.
- Getting a Shiatsu Massage: Shiatsu, or pressure-point massage, is available in virtually all first-class accommodations in Japan and at most moderately priced ones as well. After a hard day of work or sightseeing, nothing beats a relaxing massage in the privacy of your room.
- Relaxing at a Hot-Spring Resort: No country in the world boasts more natural hot springs than Japan, which has 19,500 different springs. Hot-spring spas are found in virtually all regions of the country and feature everything from hot-sand baths to open-air baths. See the regional chapters for more information.
- Spending a Day in Asakusa (Tokyo): Asakusa is the best place to experience Tokyo's old downtown, with its popular Sensoji Temple, Nakamise shopping lane with crafts and kitsch, and casual traditional restaurants. As in days of yore, arrive by boat on the Sumida River. See chapter 5.
- Exploring Kyoto's Higashiyama-ku District: Kyoto's eastern sector is a lovely combination of wooded hills, temples, shrines, museums, shops, and traditional restaurants, making it one of the best neighborhoods in Japan for a stroll. See “A Stroll through Higashiyama-ku,” in chapter 8.

- Visiting Kyoto’s Gion District: Japan’s most famous geisha houses may be off-limits to anyone without a proper introduction, but an early-evening stroll through this enclave of wooden homes and plain facades is like a journey back in time. You might even catch a glimpse of an elaborately made-up apprentice (maiko) on her way to an appointment or hear strains of a traditional three-stringed Japanese instrument (shamisen) played behind closed doors. See chapter 8.
- Watching Cormorant Fishing: Every night in summer, wooden boats gaily decorated with paper lanterns will take you out on rivers outside Nagoya for an up-close look at cormorant fishing. The birds, maneuvered by fishermen in traditional garb, have tight collars around their necks to prevent them from swallowing their catch. Drinking and dining on board contribute to the festive air. See p. 352.

- Walking to Kobo Daishi’s Mausoleum on Mount Koya: Ever since the 9th century, when Buddhist leader Kobo Daishi was laid to rest at Okunoin on Mount Koya, his faithful followers have followed him to their graves—and now tomb after tomb line a 1.6km (1-mile) pathway to Daishi’s mausoleum. Cypress trees, moss-covered stone lanterns, and thousands upon thousands of tombs make this the most impressive graveyard stroll in Japan, especially at night. See “Exploring Mount Koya,” in chapter 9.

8 The Best of Modern Japan

- Visiting Tsukiji Fish Market (Tokyo): One of the largest wholesale fish markets in the world, this indoor market bustles with activity from about 3am on as frozen tuna is unloaded from boats, auctions are held, and vendors sell octopus, fish, squid, and everything else from the sea that’s edible to the city’s restaurants. Be sure to bring your camera. See p. 178.
- Attending a Baseball Game (Tokyo): After sumo, baseball is Japan’s most popular spectator sport. Watching a game with a stadium full of avid fans can be quite fun and can shed new light on America’s favorite pastime. See the “For It’s Ichi, Ni, San Strikes You’re Out . . .” box, on p. 198, and the “Take Me Out to the Ballgame” box, on p. 491.
- Seeing Tokyo from the TMG: On the 45th floor of the Tokyo Metropolitan Government Office (TMG), designed by well-known architect Kenzo Tange, an observatory offers a bird’s-eye view of Shinjuku’s cluster of skyscrapers, the never-ending metropolis, and, on fine winter days, Mount Fuji. Best of all, it’s free. See p. 187.
- Hanging Out in Harajuku (Tokyo): Nothing beats Sunday in Harajuku, where you can begin the day leisurely with brunch and then stroll the promenade of Omote Sando Dori, shop the area’s many boutiques, take in a museum or two and perhaps a flea market, and then relax over drinks at a sidewalk cafe and watch the never-ending parade of humanity.

See “A Stroll through Harajuku & Aoyama,” in chapter 5.

- Shopping for Japanese Designer Clothes (Tokyo): Japanese designer clothing is often outrageous, occasionally practical, but mostly just fun. Department stores and designer boutiques in Aoyama are the places to try on the styles if you have both the money and the figure for them. See “Shopping,” in chapter 5.
- Spending an Evening in an Entertainment District: A spin through one of Japan’s famous nightlife districts, such as Shinjuku or Roppongi in Tokyo or Dotombori in Osaka, is a colorful way to rub elbows with the natives as you explore narrow streets with their whirls of neon, tiny hole-in-the-wall bars and restaurants, and all-night amusement spots. See “Tokyo After Dark,” in chapter 5, and “Osaka After Dark,” in chapter 9.

- Seeing Fish Eye-to-Eye in an Aquarium (Nagoya, Toba, Osaka, Kagoshima, Beppu): Because Japan is surrounded by sea, it’s no surprise that it has more than its fair share of aquariums. Several have made splashy debuts in the past couple decades, with innovative displays that put you eye-to-eye with the creatures of the deep. My favorite is the one in Osaka. See p. 350, 363, 387, 527, and 550.

9 The Best Outdoor Adventures

- Climbing Mount Fuji: Okay, so climbing Japan’s tallest—3,716m high (12,388 ft.)—and most famous mountain is not the solitary, athletic pursuit you may have envisioned—but with 600,000 people climbing it annually, it’s a great, culturally enriching group activity. The most recent trend is to climb through the night with a flashlight and then cheer the sunrise from the top of the mountain. See “Climbing Japan’s Most Famous Mountain: Mount Fuji,” in chapter 6.
- Hiking the Old Nakasendo Highway (Japan Alps): Back in the days of the shogun, feudal lords were required to return to Edo (now Tokyo) every other year, traveling designated highways. Nakasendo was one of these highways, and an 8km (5-mile) stretch through a valley still exists between the old post towns of Magome and Tsumago. It’s a beautiful walk, and the towns are historic relics. See p. 263.
- Skiing in Honshu & Hokkaido: Host of two winter Olympics (in Sapporo in 1972 and Nagano in 1998) and riddled with mountain chains, Japan is a great destination for skiing, the most popular winter sport in the country. The Japan Alps in Central Honshu and the mountains of Tohoku and Hokkaido are popular destinations. See chapters 7, 12, and 13.

If you’d rather leave the planning to someone else, join a trip sponsored by the Shinyi Ski Club; contact Julia Nolet (☎ 03/3423-8858, 10am–10pm Tokyo time; fax 03/3423-8859; jnworwor@gol.com).

- Cycling (Matsuyama, Hiroshima, and Okayama): Hard to believe, but you can bike between Shikoku island and Hiroshima Prefecture via the 80km (50-mile) Shimanami Kaido route, which actually comprises seven bridges and six islands in the Seto Inland Sea and follows a well-maintained, dedicated biking path. See “Cycling the Shimanami Kaido,” in chapter 10, and “Exploring Sights of the Seto Inland Sea,” in chapter 9. Another favorite: Cycling through the historic, rural Kibiji District in Okayama Prefecture on a path that takes you past paddies, ancient burial grounds, temples, and shrines. See p. 425.

- Shooting the Kumagawa Rapids (Kumamoto): You can glide down one of Japan's most rapid rivers in a long, traditional wooden boat, powered by men with poles. See "Shooting the Kumagawa Rapids," under "Kumamoto," in chapter 11.

- Fishing: Most foreigners laugh when they see Japanese fishing spots—a stocked pool in the middle of Tokyo or a cement-banked river, lined elbow to elbow with fishermen. For more sporting conditions, head to Lake Akan in Hokkaido's Akan National Park, where you can fish for rainbow trout or white spotted char. See "Akanko Spa & Akan National Park," in chapter 13.

10 The Best Traditional Ryokan

- Hiiragiya Ryokan (Kyoto; ☎ 075/221-1136): If ever there was an example of the quintessential ryokan, Hiiragiya is it. Located in the heart of old Kyoto, it's the ultimate in tatami luxury: a dignified enclave of polished woods and rooms with antique furnishings overlooking private gardens. Six generations of the same family have provided impeccable service and hospitality here since 1861. See p. 293.
- Tawaraya (Kyoto; ☎ 075/211-5566): This venerable inn has been owned and operated by the same family since it opened in the first decade of the 1700s; it's now in its 11th generation of innkeepers. Located in old Kyoto, its guest list reads like a who's who of visitors to Japan, including Leonard Bernstein, the king of Sweden, Alfred Hitchcock, and Saul Bellow. See p. 294.
- Ryokan Kurashiki (Kurashiki; ☎ 086/422-0730): Located right beside the willow-lined canal of Kurashiki's famous historic district, this ryokan occupies an old mansion and three 250-year-old converted warehouses, yet it contains only five elegant suites, each with a tatami living room and sleeping quarters with Western-style beds. See p. 434.
- Iwaso Ryokan (Miyajima; ☎ 0829/44-2233): The setting here is as romantic as any you'll find in Japan. If you can afford it, stay in one of the ryokan's 80-year-old cottages, where you'll have a view of maples and a gurgling brook on one of Japan's most scenic and famous islands. If staying here doesn't make you feel like a samurai or a geisha, nothing will. See p. 462.
- Hakusuikan Ryokan (Ibusuki; ☎ 0993/22-3131): I'm usually partial to historic Japanese inns, but this sprawling complex right on the coast, with manicured lawns dotted by pine trees, offers an assortment of accommodations (the oldest building is 45 years old), along with one of the best hot-spring spas I've ever seen, modeled after a public bath of the Edo Era, as well as a museum filled with antiques. See p. 535.
- Kannawaen (Beppu; ☎ 0977/66-2111): This century-old ryokan spreads through lush and carefully tended gardens. Its tatami rooms with shoji screens look out onto hot springs, bamboo, streams, bonsai, stone lanterns, and flowers. It's the perfect place to escape the crowds and relax in the traditional bathhouse or the open-air hot springs. See p. 550.

11 The Best Western-Style Hotels

- Park Hyatt Tokyo (Tokyo; ☎ 800/233-1234 in the U.S. and Canada): Occupying the 39th to 52nd floors of a skyscraper designed by Kenzo Tange, this gorgeous property offers stunning views of the city, one of Tokyo's hottest restaurants, rooms you could live in, and legendary service. No wonder it was the hotel featured in Lost in Translation. See p. 122.
- The Ritz-Carlton, Tokyo (Tokyo; ☎ 800/241-3333 in the U.S.): Occupying the lofty reaches of Tokyo's tallest building, this luxury property in Tokyo Midtown ranks as one of Japan's best hotels, with Tokyo's largest rooms and coolest bathrooms (the two sinks and counters are at opposite ends, making them perfect for couples). It cocoons guests from the mad whirl of central Tokyo, yet Roppongi's hopping nightlife is just outside its doors. See p. 123.
- Four Seasons Hotel Tokyo at Chinzan-So (Tokyo; ☎ 800/332-3442): Surrounded by a lush, 7-hectare (17-acre) garden, this top-rated hotel is a wonderful respite in one of the world's most crowded cities, with its impeccable service and a terrific spa and health club. See p. 124.
- Nikko Kanaya Hotel (Nikko; ☎ 0288/54-0001): Dating from the 19th century, this rambling, old-fashioned hotel combines the rustic charm of a European country lodge with design elements of old Japan—and it's just a 15-minute walk from Toshogu Shrine. See p. 232.
- The Fujiya Hotel (Hakone; ☎ 0460/2-2211): Established in 1878 and nestled on a wooded hillside, the Fujiya is one of Japan's oldest, grandest, and most majestic Western-style hotels. Resembling a Japanese ryokan from the outside, it boasts a comfortable interior of detailed woodwork, old-fashioned antiques-filled guest rooms, and a delightful 1930s dining hall. It also offers indoor/outdoor pools, extensive landscaping, and hot-spring baths. A stay here makes you feel like you've traveled not just to Hakone but to another century. See p. 248.
- Kawana Hotel (Ito; ☎ 0557/45-1111): Built in 1936 to resemble an English country estate, this relaxed yet refined hotel boasts large, manicured lawns that slope to the sea, and two famous 18-hole golf courses. It's a great getaway from Tokyo. See p. 254.
- The Westin Miyako (Kyoto; ☎ 800/WESTIN-1 in the U.S. and Canada): First built in 1890 but completely remodeled, this smartly appointed hotel sprawls across more than 6.4 hectares (16 acres) of hilltop on the eastern edge of town near many famous temples. Good views, a free shuttle service from the train station, indoor/outdoor swimming pools, a children's playroom, a tea-ceremony room, and a Japanese garden make this a winner. There's even an annex with Japanese-style rooms as well. See p. 299.
- Nara Hotel (Nara; ☎ 0742/26-3300): From far away, this 1909 building just a short walk from Nara Park resembles a palace. Rooms in the main building have high ceilings, antique light fixtures, and old-fashioned decor. See p. 343.
- Unzen Kanko Hotel (Unzen; ☎ 0957/73-3263): This rustic mountain lodge of ivy-covered wood and stone was built in 1935 to cater to foreigners in search of Mount Unzen's cooler climate. It offers a casual and relaxed atmosphere, hot-spring baths, and comfortable, old-fashioned rooms not far from the Hells. See p. 512.

- Towada Hotel (Lake Towada; ☎ 0176/75-1122): This Japanese-temple-meets-Western-lodge property occupies a secluded wooded hill overlooking Lake Towada. Its oldest wing, built in 1938, was crafted by shrine and temple carpenters. It offers both Japanese- and Western-style rooms, all facing the lake. See p. 572.

12 The Best Affordable Japanese-Style Places to Stay

- Homeikan (Tokyo; ☎ 03/3811-1181): Although it's a bit far from Tokyo's main attractions, this is my top pick for an affordable, authentic Japanese inn in the capital. Rooms do not have private bathrooms, but pluses include a Japanese garden, nice public baths, and detailed tatami rooms adorned with traditional architectural features. Meals (optional) are served in your room. Another great plus: The owner speaks English. See p. 137.
- Ryokan Fujioto (Tsumago; ☎ 0264/57-3009): This 100-year-old inn is nestled back from the main street of Tsumago, a delightful village on the Edo-Era Nakasendo Highway. Meals feature local specialties. The owner speaks English; his daughter volunteers to guide visitors for free (you can request her services when making reservations). See p. 266.
- Antique Inn Sumiyoshi (Takayama; ☎ 0577/32-0228): Located in the heart of Takayama on the banks of the Miyagawa River, this 90-year-old former silkworm factory features an open-hearth fireplace (irori) in the high-ceilinged communal room, antiques and painted screens throughout, and simple but delightfully old-fashioned tatami rooms overlooking the river. See p. 271.
- Minshuku in Shirakawago's Ogimachi: Nestled in a narrow valley of the Japan Alps, Ogimachi is a small village of paddies, flowers, irrigation canals, and 200-year-old thatched farmhouses, about two dozen of which offer simple tatami accommodations and meals featuring local cuisine. This is a great, inexpensive escape. See p. 277.

- Temple Accommodations on Mount Koya: If your vision of Japan includes temples, towering cypress trees, shaven-headed monks, and religious chanting at the crack of dawn, head for the religious sanctuary atop Mount Koya, where some 50 Buddhist temples offer tatami accommodations—some with garden views—and two vegetarian meals a day. See “The Temples of Mount Koya” in chapter 9.
- International Villas (Okayama; ☎ 086/256-2535): Five country inns, spread throughout Okayama Prefecture in small villages or rural areas, offer inexpensive accommodations in unique settings, from a thatched farmhouse and a renovated soy-sauce warehouse to modern villas on the shores of the Seto Inland Sea. See p. 427.
- Miyajima Morinoyado (Miyajima; ☎ 0829/44-0430): This public people's lodge, on picturesque Miyajima, is modern yet traditional and would easily cost four times as much if it were privately owned. See p. 463.
- Tsuru-no-yu Onsen (Nyuto Onsen; ☎ 0187/46-2139): This rustic inn, with a history stretching back to the Edo Period, thatched-roof building, and outdoor hot-spring baths, is as close as you can get to time travel. To really save money, opt for the self-cooking wing and prepare your own meals. See p. 569.

13 The Best Culinary Experiences

- Experiencing a Kaiseki Feast: The ultimate in Japanese cuisine, kaiseki is a feast for the senses and the spirit. Consisting of a variety of exquisitely prepared and arranged dishes, a kaiseki meal is a multicourse event to be savored slowly. Both the ingredients and the dishes they comprise are chosen with great care to complement the season. There are hundreds of exceptional kaiseki restaurants in Japan, from old-world traditional to sleek modern; a standout is Kagetsu in Nagasaki. Traditional ryokan also serve kaiseki. See p. 506 as well as “Tips on Dining, Japanese Style” in chapter 2.
- Spending an Evening in a Robatayaki: Harking back to the olden days when Japanese cooked over an open fireplace, a robatayaki is a convivial place for a meal and drinks. One of the most famous is Inakaya in Tokyo, where diners sit at a counter; on the other side are two cooks, grills, and mountains of food. You’ll love the drama of this place. See p. 162 as well as “Tips on Dining, Japanese Style,” in chapter 2.
- Dining on Western Food in Modern Settings: Japan has no lack of great Western food, and some of the best places to dine are its first-class hotels. The New York Grill, on the 52nd floor of the Park Hyatt in Tokyo, epitomizes the best of the West with its sophisticated setting, great views, great food, and great jazz. See p. 154.

- Buying Prepared Meals at a Department Store: The basement floors of department stores are almost always devoted to foodstuffs, including take-out foods. Shopping for your meal is a fun experience: Hawkers yell their wares, samples are set out for you to nibble, and you can choose anything from tempura and sushi to boxed meals. See chapter 5, the regional chapters, and “Tips on Dining, Japanese Style,” in chapter 2.
- Slurping Noodles in a Noodle Shop: You’re supposed to slurp when eating Japanese noodles, which are prepared in almost as many different ways as there are regions. Noodle shops range from stand-up counters to traditional restaurants; one of my favorites is Raitei in Kamakura. See p. 226 as well as “Tips on Dining, Japanese Style,” in chapter 2, and the “Where to Dine” sections in regional chapters.
- Rubbing Elbows in a Yakitori-ya: Yakitori-ya are the pubs of Japan—usually tiny affairs with just a counter, serving up skewered grilled chicken. They’re good places to meet the natives and are inexpensive as well. You’ll find them in every nightlife district in the country. See the regional chapters and also “Tips on Dining, Japanese Style,” in chapter 2.

14 The Best Destinations for Serious Shoppers

- For Everything: Japanese department stores are microcosms of practically everything Japan produces, from the food halls in the basement to the departments selling clothing, accessories, office supplies, souvenirs, pottery, household goods, and cameras, to rooftop garden centers. What’s more, service is great and purchases are beautifully wrapped. You'll be spoiled for life. See "Shopping" in chapter 5.

- For Designer Fashions: Tokyo's Shibuya District has the most designer boutiques in town, while Aoyama boasts main shops for all the big-name designers, including Issey Miyake and Comme des Garçons. Department stores also carry big-name designers; their annual summer sales are mob scenes. See "Shopping," in chapter 5.
- For Souvenirs: Japanese are avid souvenir shoppers when they travel, so souvenirs are sold literally everywhere, even near shrines and temples. Nakamise Dori, a pedestrian lane leading to Tokyo's Sensoji Temple, is one of Japan's most colorful places to shop for paper umbrellas, toys, and other souvenirs. The two best places for one-stop memento shopping are the Oriental Bazaar (p. 203) in Tokyo and the Kyoto Handicraft Center (p. 333), both of which offer several floors of everything from fans to woodblock prints.
- For Traditional Crafts: Japan treasures its artisans so highly that it designates the best as National Living Treasures. The two best shops for a varied inventory of traditional crafts, from knives and baskets to lacquerware and ceramics, are the Japan Traditional Craft Center in Tokyo and the Kyoto Craft Center. Department stores also offer an excellent collection of traditional crafts. See "Shopping," in chapter 5, and "Shopping in Kyoto," in chapter 8, as well as p. 203 and p. 331 respectively.
- For Antiques & Curios: Flea markets are great for browsing; you'll see everything from used kimono to Edo-Era teapots for sale. Japan's largest and one of its oldest monthly markets is held the 21st of each month at Toji Temple in Kyoto. (A lesser flea market is held there the first Sun of each month.) Tokyo also has great weekend markets. See chapters 5 and 8.
- For Electronics: Looking for that perfect digital camera, MP3 player, calculator, or rice cooker? Then join everyone else in the country by going to one of the nation's two largest electronics and electrical-appliance districts. In Tokyo, it's Akihabara, where open-fronted shops beckon up to 50,000 weekday shoppers with whirring fans, blaring radios, and sales pitches. In Osaka, head to Den Den Town. Be sure to comparison-shop and bargain. See "Shopping," in chapters 5 and 9.
- For Local Specialties: Many prefecture capitals have a government-owned exhibition hall where local products are displayed for sale. Often called a kanko bussankan, the hall may have everything from locally produced pottery to folk toys and foodstuffs. Cities with kanko bussankan include Kanazawa, Okayama, Matsuyama, and Kumamoto. See chapters 9, 10, and 11.
- For Porcelain & Pottery: Porcelain and pottery are produced seemingly everywhere in Japan. Some of the more famous centers include Nagoya, home to Noritake, Japan's largest chinaware company; Kanazawa, known for its Kutani pottery with its distinctive colorful glaze; Matsuyama, famous for its Tobe pottery (white porcelain with cobalt-blue designs); and Kagoshima, with its Satsuma pottery, which comes in white (used by the upper class in feudal Japan) and black (used by the common people). See chapters 9, 10, and 11.

Planning Your Trip to Japan

This book is designed to guide you through your own discoveries of Japan, however brief or extended your visit may be. From experience, I know that the two biggest concerns for visitors to Japan are the language barrier and the high cost of living. To help alleviate fears about the first, I've provided the Japanese characters for establishments that do not have English-language signs so you can recognize their names (see appendix C), given brief instructions on how to reach most of the places I recommend, made suggestions for ordering in restaurants without English-language menus, and provided prices for everything from subway rides to admission to museums.

As for costs, probably everyone has heard horror stories about Japan's high prices. After the dramatic fall of the dollar against the yen in the 1980s and 1990s, Tokyo and Osaka did indeed become two of the world's most expensive cities, with food and lodging costing as much as in New York or London, maybe more. But since Japan's economic bubble burst in the early 1990s, something happened that would have been unthinkable during the heady spending days of the 1980s: Japanese became bargain-conscious. There are now inexpensive French bistros, secondhand clothing stores, 100-yen shops, and budget hotels.

Still, it's difficult not to suffer an initial shock from Japan's high prices, which will seem especially exorbitant if you insist on living and eating exactly as you do back home. The secret is to live and eat as Japanese do. This book will help you do exactly that, with descriptions of eateries and Japanese-style inns that cater to the native population. By following this book's advice and exercising a little caution on your own, you should be able to cut down on needless expenses and learn even more about Japan in the process. While you may never find Japan cheap, you will find it richly rewarding for all the reasons you chose Japan as a destination in the first place.

Despite the difficulties inherent in visiting any foreign country, I think you'll find Japan very easy to navigate. There are many more signs in English now than there were even just a decade ago. And Japan remains one of the safest countries in the world; in general, you don't have to worry about muggers, pickpockets, or crooks. In fact, I sometimes feel downright coddled in Japan. Everything runs like clockwork: Subway trains are on time, all the public telephones work, and the service—whether in hotels, restaurants, or department stores—ranks among the best in the world. I know if I get truly lost, someone will help me and will probably even go out of his or her way to do so. Japanese are honest and extremely helpful toward foreign visitors. Indeed, it's the people themselves who make traveling in Japan such a delight.

This chapter will help you with the what, when, where, and how of travel to Japan—from what documents you should take with you to how to get around easily and economically.

1 The Regions in Brief

Separated from mainland China and Korea by the Sea of Japan, the nation of Japan stretches in an arc about 2,898km (1,800 miles) long from northeast to southwest, yet it is only 403km (250 miles) wide at its broadest point. Japan consists primarily of four main islands—Honshu, Hokkaido, Shikoku, and Kyushu. Surrounding these large islands are more than 6,000 smaller islands and islets, most of them uninhabited; farther to the south are the Okinawan islands, perhaps best known for the fierce fighting that took place there during World War II and for their continued (and controversial) use as an American military base. If you were to superimpose Japan's four main islands onto a map of the United States, they would stretch all the way from Maine down to Florida, which should give you an idea of the diversity of Japan's climate, flora, and scenery—Hokkaido in the north is subarctic, while southern Kyushu is subtropical. Honshu, Japan's most populous island and home to Tokyo, Kyoto, and Osaka, is connected to the other three islands by tunnel or bridge, which means you can travel to all four islands by train.

As much as 70% of Japan consists of mountains. They are found on all four main islands and most are volcanic in origin. Altogether, there are some 265 volcanoes, more than 30 of them still considered active. Mount Fuji (on Honshu), dormant since 1707, is Japan's highest and most famous volcano, while Mount Aso (on Kyushu) boasts the largest caldera in the world. Because of its volcanic origins, earthquakes have plagued Japan throughout its history. In the 20th century, the two most destructive earthquakes were the 1923 Great Kanto Earthquake, which killed more than 100,000 people in the Tokyo area, and the 1995 Great Hanshin Earthquake, which claimed more than 6,000 lives in Kobe.

Japan is divided into 47 regional divisions, or prefectures. Each prefecture has its own prefectural capital and is comparable to the U.S. state or the British county. Japan's total landmass is slightly smaller than California in area, yet Japan has almost half (42%) the population of the United States. And because three-fourths of Japan is mountainous and therefore uninhabitable, its people are concentrated primarily in only 10% of the country's landmass, with the rest of the area devoted to agriculture. In other words, imagine 42% of the U.S. population living in California—primarily in San Diego County—and you get an idea of how crowded Japan is. For this island nation—isolated physically from the rest of the world, struck repeatedly through the centuries by earthquakes, fires, and typhoons, and possessed of only limited space for harmonious living—geography and topography have played major roles both in determining its development and in shaping its culture, customs, and arts.

HONSHU

Of the four main islands, Honshu is the largest and most populated. Because it's also the most important historically and culturally, it's where most visitors spend the bulk of their time.

KANTO DISTRICT

Located in east-central Honshu and comprising metropolitan Tokyo and six prefectures, this district is characterized by the Kanto Plain, the largest flatland in Japan. Although development of the district didn't begin in earnest until the establishment of the shogunate government in Edo (present-day Tokyo) in 1603, Tokyo and surrounding giants such as Yokohama make this the most densely populated region in Japan.

Japan

KANSAI DISTRICT

Also called the Kinki District and encompassing seven prefectures, this is Japan's most historic region. Nara and Kyoto—two of Japan's ancient capitals—are here, as are two of Japan's most important port cities, Kobe and Osaka. With the opening of Kansai International Airport outside Osaka in 1994, many foreign visitors opt to bypass Tokyo altogether in favor of Kansai's many historic spots, including Mount Koya with its many temples, Himeji with what I consider to be Japan's most beautiful castle, Ise-Shima National Park with Japan's most revered Shinto shrine, Nara with its Great Buddha and temples, and, of course, Kyoto, the former capital for more than 1,000 years with so many temples, imperial villas, and gardens that it ranks as Japan's foremost tourist destination.

CHUBU DISTRICT

The Chubu (Central) District lies between Tokyo and Kyoto and straddles central Honshu from the Pacific Ocean to the Japan Sea, encompassing nine prefectures. Nagoya, Japan's fourth-largest city and home to an international airport nicknamed Centrair, is Chubu's most important city and a gateway to its other destinations. The district is marked by great variety—mountain ranges (including the Japan Alps, see below), volcanoes (including Mount Fuji), large rivers, and coastal regions on both sides of the island. It's popular for skiing and hiking, for quaint mountain villages such as Takayama, and for tourist attractions that include the open-air Museum Meiji Mura (near Nagoya), the castle in Matsumoto, and Kenrokuen Garden in Kanazawa, considered one of Japan's finest.

THE JAPAN ALPS

Spreading over central Honshu in the Chubu District, the Japan Alps are among Japan's most famous mountain ranges, especially since hosting the 1998

XVIII Winter Olympics in Nagano. Chubu-Sangaku National Park (also called the Japan Alps National Park) contains some of the nation's most beautiful mountain scenery and the country's best skiing, while destinations like Takayama and Shirakawago provide everything from quaint historic districts to thatched-roof farmhouses.

ISE-SHIMA

Shima Peninsula, in Mie Prefecture, juts into the Seto Inland Sea and is famous for Ise-Shima National Park, noted for its coastal scenery and Ise Jingu Shrines. Toba, birthplace of the cultured pearl, is popular for its Mikimoto Pearl Island and the Toba Aquarium. Shima Peninsula also boasts two theme parks, one fashioned after Japan's Warring States Era and the other an amusement park with a Spanish theme.

CHUGOKU DISTRICT

Honshu's western district has five prefectures and is divided by the Chugoku Mountain Range. Industrial giants such as Hiroshima and Okayama lead as the major cities, drawing tourists with reconstructed castles, Korakuen Garden, and the sobering Peace Memorial Park in Hiroshima, dedicated to victims of the world's first atomic bomb. Kurashiki is a must for its photogenic, historic warehouse district, while Miyajima, part of the Seto-Naikai (Inland Sea) National Park, is considered one of Japan's most beautiful islands.

TOHOKU DISTRICT

Northeastern Honshu, with Sendai as its regional center, encompasses six prefectures. Known as the Tohoku District, it isn't nearly as developed as the central and southern districts of Honshu, due in large part to its rugged, mountainous terrain and harsh climate. Matsushima, about halfway up the coast between Tokyo and the northern tip of Honshu, is the district's major tourist destination; with its pine-clad islets dotting the bay, it's considered one of Japan's most scenic spots. Kakunodate, located inland, is a former castle town offering preserved samurai houses and, during cherry-blossom season, a stunning show of pink flowers to travelers willing to take a road less traveled. Towada-Hachimantai National Park, which extends over three prefectures, boasts scenic lakes, rustic hot-spring spas, hiking, and skiing.

SHIKOKU

Shikoku, the smallest of the four main islands, is off the beaten path for many foreign visitors. It's famous for its 88 Buddhist temples founded by one of Japan's most interesting historical figures, the Buddhist priest Kukai, known posthumously as Kobo Daishi. Other major attractions are Ritsurin Park in Takamatsu, Matsuyama Castle in Matsuyama, and Dogo Spa, one of Japan's oldest hot-spring spas. For active travelers, the Shimane Kaido route offers 80 scenic kilometers (50 miles) of dedicated biking trails that connect Shikoku with Hiroshima Prefecture via six islands and a series of bridges in the Seto Inland Sea.

KYUSHU

The southernmost of the four main islands, Kyushu boasts a mild subtropical climate, active volcanoes, and hot-spring spas. Because it's the closest to Korea and

China, Kyushu served as a gateway to the continental mainland throughout much of Japan's history, later becoming the springboard for both traders and Christian missionaries from the West. Fukuoka, Kyushu's largest city, serves as the rail gateway from Honshu, dispersing travelers to hot springs in Beppu, Unzen, and Ibusuki and to such major attractions as Kumamoto Castle in Kumamoto and Sengan'en Garden in Kagoshima. Nagasaki, victim of the world's second atomic bomb, is one of Japan's most cosmopolitan cities and one of my favorites.

HOKKAIDO

Japan's second-largest island, Hokkaido lies to the north of Honshu and is regarded as the country's last frontier with its wide-open pastures, evergreen forests, mountains, gorges, crystal-clear lakes, and wildlife, much of it preserved in national parks. Originally occupied by the indigenous Ainu, it became colonized by Japanese settlers mostly after the Meiji Restoration in 1868. Today it's home to 5.7 million people, 1.8 million of whom live in Sapporo. With a landmass that accounts for 22% of Japan's total area, Hokkaido has the nation's lowest population density: less than 5% of the total population. That, together with the island's cold, severe winters but mild summers and its unspoiled natural beauty, make this island a nature lover's paradise.

2 Visitor Information & Maps

The Japan National Tourist Organization (JNTO) publishes a wealth of free, colorful brochures and maps covering Japan as a whole and various regions of the country. Be sure to get "The Tourist's Language Handbook," a phrase booklet to help foreign visitors communicate with Japanese. Other useful publications available from JNTO include the free "Tourist Map of Japan," showing the four major islands and major highway and railway lines, with maps of major cities on the reverse side; a "Directory of Welcome Inns," which lists inexpensive accommodations throughout Japan, with a free reservation system; and the invaluable "Railway Timetable," which contains timetables for Shinkansen bullet trains and major train lines throughout Japan. JNTO has offices in the in multiple locations.

In the United States: One Rockefeller Plaza, Suite 1250, New York, NY 10020 (☎ 212/757-5640; visitjapan@jntonyc.org); and 515 S. Figueroa, Suite 1470, Los Angeles, CA 90071 (☎ 213/623-1952; info@jnto-lax.org).

In Canada: 481 University Ave., Suite 306, Toronto, ON M5G 2E9, Canada (☎ 416/366-7140; info@jntoyyz.com).

JNTO ONLINE Information is available via the Internet at www.jnto.go.jp (and at www.japantravelinfo.com for North American travelers; www.seejapan.co.uk for British travelers), where you can read up on what's new, view maps of more than 20 major cities, check train and flight schedules and fares around Japan, get the latest weather reports, find links to online hotel reservation companies, and browse through information ranging from reasonable accommodations and hints on budget travel to regional events, museums, and attractions. You can also download regional guides to various cities and destinations throughout Japan by going to www.jnto.go.jp and clicking on "Browse by Destinations."

THE JNTO IN JAPAN In Japan, your best bet for general or specific information is at one of JNTO's three excellent Tourist Information Centers (TICs).

They're located in downtown Tokyo, at Narita Airport outside Tokyo, and at Kansai International Airport outside Osaka (see chapters 4 and 9 for locations and open hours). All distribute leaflets on destinations throughout Japan that are not available at the destinations themselves (though you can download them at JNTO's website). They also provide train, bus, and ferry schedules and leaflets on major attractions and sights—for example, Japanese gardens, hot springs, museums, and art galleries. They also carry information on hotels and ryokan in Japan and will even book inexpensive accommodations for you free of charge.

LOCAL INFORMATION You'll also find locally run tourist offices in nearly every city and town throughout Japan, most of them conveniently located at or near the main train station. Look for the logo of a red question mark with the word INFORMATION written below. Although the staff at a particular tourist office may not speak English (many do), they can point you in the direction of your hotel, perhaps provide you with an English-language map (usually free), and, in many cases, even make hotel bookings for you. Note, however, that they're not equipped to provide you with information on other regions of Japan (for that, go to a TIC). I've included information on local tourist offices throughout this book (see "Visitor Information," in the regional chapters), including how to reach them after you disembark from the train and their open hours.

Tips Passport Savvy

Safeguard your passport in an inconspicuous place and keep a photocopy of your passport's information page in your luggage. Note: All foreigners must present their passports for bank transactions and for photocopying when checking into lodging facilities. In addition, foreigners are required to carry with them at all times either their passports or, for those who have been granted longer stays, their alien registration cards. Police generally do not stop foreigners, but if you're caught without an ID, you'll be taken to local police headquarters. It happened to me once and, believe me, I can think of better ways to spend an hour and a half than explaining in detail who I am, what I am doing in Japan, where I live, and what I plan to do for the rest of my life. I even had to write a statement explaining why I rushed out that day without my passport, apologizing and promising never to do such a thoughtless thing again. The policemen were polite and were simply doing their duty.

stay of 90 days or less need only a valid passport to gain entry into the country.

Canadians don't need a visa for stays of up to 3 months, and United Kingdom and Irish citizens can stay up to 6 months without a visa.

Note: Only tourists don't need a visa—that is, those in the country for sightseeing, sports activities, family visits, inspection tours, business meetings, or short study courses. Tourists cannot work in Japan or engage in any remunerative activity, including the teaching of English (though some young people ignore the law). No extensions of stay are granted, which means tourists must leave the country after 90 days. If you're going to Japan to work or to study for longer than 90 days, you'll need a visa; contact the Japanese embassy or consulate nearest you (see www.jnto.go.jp for a list of addresses).

ENTRY PROCEDURES Since November 2007, all foreigners arriving in Japan are fingerprinted and photographed to prevent terrorists from entering Japan. Exceptions include children younger than 16, diplomats, and some permanent residents of Japan.

MEDICAL REQUIREMENTS

For information on medical requirements and recommendations, see “Health & Safety,” later in this chapter.

CUSTOMS

For information on what you can bring into and take out of Japan, go to “Customs,” in the “Fast Facts” section of this chapter.

4 When to Go

CLIMATE Most of Japan's islands lie in a temperate seasonal wind zone similar to that of the East Coast of the United States, which means there are four distinct seasons. Japanese are very proud of their seasons and place much more emphasis on them than people do in the West. Kimono, dishes and bowls used for kaiseki, and even Noh plays change with the season. Certain foods are eaten during certain times of the year, such as eel in summer and blowfish (fugu) in winter. Almost all haiku have seasonal references. The cherry blossom signals the beginning of spring, and most festivals are tied to seasonal rites. Even urban dwellers note the seasons; almost as though on cue, businessmen will change virtually overnight from their winter to summer attire.

Because Japan's four main islands stretch in an arc from northeast to southwest at about the same latitudes as Boston and Atlanta, you can travel in the country at virtually any time of year. Winters in southern Kyushu are mild, while summers in northern Hokkaido are cool. In addition, there's no rainy season in Hokkaido.

Summer, which begins in June, is heralded by the rainy season, which lasts from about mid-June to mid-July. Although it doesn't rain every day, it does rain a lot, sometimes quite heavily, and umbrellas are imperative. You'll also be more comfortable in light cottons, though you should bring a light jacket for unexpected cool evenings or air-conditioned rooms. After the rain stops, it turns very hot (in the 80s Fahrenheit/high 20s Celsius) and uncomfortably humid throughout the country, with the exception of the northern island of Hokkaido, mountaintop resorts such as Hakone, and the Japan Alps.

The period from the end of August to September is typhoon season, although most storms stay out at sea and generally vent their fury on land only in thunderstorms.

Autumn, which lasts until about November, is one of the best times to travel in Japan. The days are pleasant and slightly cool, and the changing red and scarlet of leaves contrast brilliantly with the deep blue skies. There are also many chrysanthemum shows in Japan at this time, popular maple-viewing spots, and many autumn festivals. Be sure to pack a jacket in autumn.

Winter, lasting from December to March, is marked by snow in much of Japan, especially in the mountain ranges where the skiing is superb. Many tourists also flock to hot-spring resorts during this time. The climate is generally dry, and on the Pacific coast the skies are often blue. Tokyo, where the mean winter temperature is about 40°F (4°C), doesn't get much snow, though it can be crisp, cold, and wet. Northern Japan's weather, in Tohoku and Hokkaido, can be quite severe, while southern Japan, especially Kyushu, enjoys generally mild, warm weather. Wherever you are, you'd be wise to bring warm clothing throughout the winter months.

Spring arrives with a magnificent fare of plum and cherry blossoms in March and April, an exquisite time when all of Japan is ablaze in whites and pinks. The cherry-blossom season starts in southern Kyushu in March and reaches northern Japan about mid-April. The blossoms themselves last only a few days, symbolizing to Japanese the fragile nature of beauty and of life itself. Other flowers also bloom through May or June, including azaleas and irises. During spring, numerous festivals throughout Japan celebrate the rebirth of nature.

BUSY SEASONS Japanese have a passion for travel, and they all generally travel at the same time, resulting in jam-packed trains and hotels. The worst times of year to travel are around New Year's, from December 27 to January 4; Golden Week, from April 29 to May 5; and during the Obon Festival, about a week in mid-August. Avoid traveling on these dates at all costs, since all long-distance trains, domestic airlines, and most accommodations are booked solid. The weekends before and after these holidays are also likely to be crowded or booked. Exceptions are major cities like Tokyo or Osaka—since the major exodus is back to hometowns or the countryside, metropolises can be downright blissful during major holidays such as Golden Week, especially since most restaurants and museums do not close (privately owned museums are generally closed on public holidays; municipal and national museums normally closed on Mon will remain open if it's a public holiday, closing on Tues instead). Note: During New Year's, all museums and most restaurants in Japan are closed, often for 3 or 4 days.

Another busy time is during the school summer vacation, from about July 19 or 20 through August. It's best to reserve train seats and book accommodations during this time in advance. In addition, you can expect destinations to be packed during major festivals, so if one of these is high on your list, be sure to make plans well in advance.

HOLIDAYS National holidays are January 1 (New Year's Day), second Monday in January (Coming-of-Age Day), February 11 (National Foundation Day), March 20 or 21 (Vernal Equinox Day), April 29 (Showa Day, after the late Emperor Showa), May 3 (Constitution Memorial Day), May 4 (Greenery Day, beginning 2007), May 5 (Children's Day), third Monday in July (Maritime Day), third Monday in September (Respect-for-the-Aged Day), September 23 or 24 (Autumn Equinox Day), second Monday in October (Health Sports Day), November 3 (Culture Day), November 23 (Labor Thanksgiving Day), and December 23 (Emperor's Birthday).

iday. Although government offices and some businesses are closed on public holidays, restaurants and most stores remain open. The exception is during the New Year's celebration, January 1 through January 3, when virtually all restaurants, public and private offices, stores, and even ATMs close; during that time, you'll have to dine in hotels.

All museums close for New Year's for 1 to 4 days, but most major museums remain open for the other holidays. If a public holiday falls on a Monday (when most museums are closed), many museums will remain open but will close instead the following day, Tuesday. Note, however, that privately owned museums, such as art museums or special-interest museums, generally close on public holidays. To avoid disappointment, be sure to phone ahead if you plan to visit a museum on a holiday or the day following it.

FESTIVALS With Shintoism and Buddhism the major religions in Japan, it seems as though there's a festival going on somewhere in the country almost every day, especially in summer. Every major shrine and temple has at least one annual festival. Such festivals are always free, though admission may be charged for special exhibitions such as flower shows. There are also a number of national holidays observed throughout the country with events and festivals, as well as such annual seasonal events as cormorant fishing and cherry-blossom viewing.

The larger, better-known festivals are exciting to attend but do take some advance planning since hotel rooms may be booked 6 months in advance. If you haven't made prior arrangements, you may want to let the following schedule be your guide in avoiding certain cities on certain days.

A note on festival dates: If you plan your trip around a certain festival, be sure to double-check the exact dates with the Japan National Tourist Organization since these dates can change. In Japan, stop by a TIC office in Tokyo or at Narita or Kansai airports for a leaflet called “Calendar Events,” which comes out monthly and describes major festivals in Tokyo and the rest of Japan. You can also try calling the local tourist office of the city hosting each festival (though staff may not speak much English) or checking local websites for more information (see the regional chapters).

JAPAN CALENDAR OF EVENTS

January

New Year’s Day is the most important national holiday in Japan. Because this is a time when Japanese are with their families and because virtually all businesses, restaurants, museums, and shops close down, it’s not a particularly rewarding time of the year for foreign visitors. Best bets are shrines and temples, where Japanese come in their best kimono or dress to pray for good health and happiness in the coming year. January 1.

Tamaseseri (Ball-Catching Festival), Hakozaikigu Shrine, Fukuoka. The main attraction here is a struggle between two groups of men, dressed only in loincloths, who try to capture a sacred wooden ball. The winning team is supposed to have good luck the entire year. January 3.

Dezomeshiki (New Year’s Parade of Firemen), Tokyo Big Sight, Ariake, Tokyo. Agile firemen dressed in Edo-era firemen costumes prove their worth with acrobatic stunts atop tall bamboo ladders in this parade. January 6.

Usokae (Bullfinch Exchange Festival), Dazaifu Tenmangu Shrine, outside Fukuoka. The object here is to get hold of the bullfinches made of gilt wood passed from person to person. Given away by priests, they’re supposed to bring good luck. A giant fire is lit in the evening to drive away evil spirits. January 7.

Coming-of-Age Day, a national holiday. This day honors young people who have reached the age of 20, when they can vote and assume other responsibilities. On this day, they visit shrines throughout the country to pray for their future. In Tokyo, the most popular shrine for the occasion is Meiji Shrine near Harajuku Station. Second Monday in January.

Toka Ebisu Festival, Imamiya Ebisu Shrine, Osaka. Ebisu is considered the patron saint of business and good fortune, so this is the time when businesspeople pray for a successful year. The highlight of the festival is a parade of women dressed in colorful kimono and carried through the streets in palanquins (covered litters). Stalls sell good-luck charms. January 9 to 11.

Ame-Ichi (Candy Fair), Matsumoto. Formerly a salt fair, this lively festival has featured traditional candy for the past century. Second weekend in January.

Yamayaki (Grass Fire Ceremony), Nara. As evening approaches, Wakakusayama Hill is set ablaze and fireworks are displayed. The celebration marks a time more than 1,000 years ago when a dispute over the boundary of two major temples in Nara was settled peacefully. Second Sunday in January.

Toh-shiya, Kyoto. This traditional Japanese archery contest is held in the back corridor of Japan’s longest wooden structure, Sanjusangendo Hall. Sunday closest to January 15.

Sounkyo Ice Festival, Sounkyo Onsen. Ice sculptures, ice slides, frozen waterfalls lit in various colors, and evening fireworks are the highlights of this small-town festival. Mid-January to Mid-March.

February

Oyster Festival, Matsushima. Matsushima is famous for its oysters, and this is the time they're considered to be at their best. Oysters are given out free at booths set up at the seaside park along the bay. First Sunday in February.

Setsubun (Bean-Throwing Festival), at leading temples throughout Japan. According to the lunar calendar, this is the last day of winter; people throng to temples to participate in the traditional ceremony of throwing beans to drive away imaginary devils, yelling, "Evil go out, good luck come in." February 3 or 4.

Lantern Festival, Kasuga Shrine, Nara. A beautiful sight in which more than 3,000 stone and bronze lanterns are lit from 6:30 to 9pm. February 3.

Snow Festival, Odori Avenue, Sapporo. This famous 7-day Sapporo festival features huge, elaborate statues and figurines carved in snow and ice. Competitors come from around the world. Early February.

Saidaiji Eyo, Saidaiji Kannon-in Temple, Okayama. Thousands of loincloth-clad men grapple for sacred wooden sticks tossed by priests. Third Saturday of February at midnight.

March

Omizutori (Water-Drawing Festival), Todaiji Temple, Nara. This festival includes a solemn evening rite in which young ascetics brandish large burning torches and draw circles of fire. The biggest ceremony takes place on the night of March 12; on the next day, the ceremony of drawing water is held to the accompaniment of ancient Japanese music. March 1 to 14.

Hinamatsuri (Doll Festival), observed throughout Japan. It's held in honor of young girls to wish them a future of happiness. In homes where there are girls, dolls dressed in ancient costumes representing the emperor, empress, and dignitaries are set up on a tier of shelves along with miniature household articles. March 3.

Kasuga Matsuri, Kasuga Shrine, Nara. This 1,100-year-old festival features traditional costumes and classical dances. March 13.

Vernal Equinox Day is a national holiday. Throughout the week, Buddhist temples hold ceremonies to pray for the souls of the departed. March 20 or 21.

April

Kanamara Matsuri, Kanayama Shrine, Kawasaki (just outside Tokyo). This festival extols the joys of sex and fertility (and more recently, raises awareness about AIDS). It features a parade of giant phalluses, some carried by transvestites. You'll definitely get some unusual photographs here. First Sunday in April.

Buddha's Birthday (also called Hana Matsuri, or Floral Festival), observed throughout Japan. Ceremonies are held at all Buddhist temples. April 8.

Kamakura Matsuri, Tsurugaoka Hachimangu Shrine, Kamakura. This festival honors heroes from the past, including Minamoto Yoritomo, who made Kamakura his shogunate capital back in 1192. Highlights include horseback archery (truly spectacular to watch), a parade of portable shrines, and sacred dances. Second to third Sunday of April.

Takayama Spring Festival, Takayama. Supposedly dating from the 15th century, this festival is one of Japan's grandest with a dozen huge, gorgeous floats that are wheeled through the village streets. April 14 and 15.

Gumonji-do (Firewalking Ceremonies), Miyajima. Walking on live coals is meant to show devotion and to pray for purification and protection from illness and disaster. Daishoin Temple. April 15 and November 15.

Yayoi Matsuri, Futarasan Shrine, Nikko. Yayoi Matsuri features a parade of house-shaped floats embellished with artificial cherry blossoms and paper lanterns. April 16 to 17.

Golden Week is a major holiday period throughout Japan, when many Japanese offices and businesses close down and families go on vacation. It's a crowded time to travel; reservations are a must. April 29 to May 5.

May

Hakata Dontaku Port Festival, Fukuoka. Citizens, dressed as deities, parade through the streets clapping wooden rice paddles. May 3 and 4.

Children's Day is a national holiday honoring all children, especially boys. The most common sight throughout Japan is colorful streamers of carp—which symbolize perseverance and strength, attributes desirable for boys—flying from poles. May 5.

Takigi Noh Performances, Kofukuji Temple, Nara. These Noh plays are presented outdoors after dark under the blaze of torches. May 11 and 12.

Kanda Festival, Kanda Myojin Shrine. This festival, which commemorates Tokugawa Ieyasu's famous victory at Sekigahara in 1600, began during the Feudal Period as the only time townspeople could enter the shogun's castle and parade before him. Today this major Tokyo festival features a parade of dozens of portable shrines carried through the district, plus geisha dances and a tea ceremony. Held in odd-numbered years (with a smaller festival held in even years) on the Saturday and Sunday closest to May 15.

Aoi Matsuri (Hollyhock Festival), Shimogamo and Kamigamo Shrines, Kyoto. This is one of Kyoto's biggest events, a colorful parade with 500 participants wearing ancient costumes to commemorate the days when the imperial procession visited the city's shrines. May 15.

Kobe Matsuri, Kobe. This relatively new festival celebrates Kobe's international past with fireworks at Kobe Port, street markets, and a parade on Flower Road with participants wearing native costumes. Mid-May.

Shunki Reitaisai (Grand Spring Festival), Nikko. Commemorating the day in 1617 when Tokugawa Ieyasu's remains were brought to his mausoleum in Nikko, this festival re-creates that drama with more than 1,000 armor-clad people escorting three palanquins through the streets. May 17 and 18.

Sanja Matsuri, Asakusa Shrine, Tokyo. Tokyo's most celebrated festival features about 100 portable shrines carried through the district on the shoulders of men and women in traditional garb. Third Sunday and preceding Friday and Saturday of May.

Mifune Matsuri, Arashiyama, on the Oigawa River outside Kyoto, is when the days of the Heian Period (during which the imperial family used to take pleasure rides on the river) are re-enacted by some 20 boats and people in costume. Third Sunday in May.

June

Takigi Noh Performances, Kyoto. Evening performances of Noh are presented on an open-air stage at the Heian Shrine. June 1 and 2.

Hyakumangoku Matsuri (One Million Goku Festival), Kanazawa. Celebrating Kanazawa's production of one million goku (5.119 bushels) of rice, this extravaganza features folk songs and traditional dancing in the streets, illuminated paper lanterns floating downriver, public tea ceremonies, geisha performances, and—the highlight—a parade that winds through the city in re-enactment of Lord Maeda Toshie's triumphant arrival in Kanazawa on June 14, 1583, with lion dances, ladder-top acrobatics by Kaga firemen, and a torch-lit outdoor Noh performance. June 8 to 14.

Sanno Festival, Hie Shrine, Tokyo. This Edo Period festival, one of Tokyo's largest, features the usual portable shrines, transported through the busy streets of the Akasaka District. June 10 to 16.

Rice-Planting Festival, Sumiyoshi Taisha Shrine, Osaka. In hopes of a successful harvest, young girls in traditional farmers' costumes transplant rice seedlings in the shrine's rice paddy to the sound of music and traditional songs. June 14.

Cormorant Fishing, Nagara River near Gifu, Kiso River in Inuyama (near Nagoya), and Oi River near Kyoto. Visitors board small wooden boats after dark to watch cormorants dive into the water to catch ayu, a kind of trout. Generally June to September.

July

Tanabata (Star Festival), celebrated throughout Japan. According to myth, the two stars Vega and Altair, representing a weaver and a shepherd, are allowed to meet once a year on this day. If the skies are cloudy, however, the celestial pair cannot meet and must wait another year. Celebrations may differ from town to town, but in addition to parades and food/souvenir stalls, look for bamboo branches with colorful strips of paper bearing children's wishes. July 7.

Hozuki Ichi (Ground-Cherry Pod Fair), Tokyo. This colorful affair at Sensoji Temple in Asakusa features hundreds of stalls selling ground-cherry pods and colorful wind bells. July 9 and 10.

Yamakasa, Fukuoka. Just before the crack of dawn, seven teams dressed in loincloths and happi coats (short, colorful, kimono-like jackets) race through town, bearing 1-ton floats on their shoulders. In addition, elaborately decorated, 9m-tall (30-ft.) floats designed by Hakata doll masters are on display throughout town. July 15.

Gion Matsuri, Kyoto. One of the most famous festivals in Japan, this dates back to the 9th century, when the head priest at Yasaka Shrine organized a procession to ask the gods' assistance in a plague raging in the city. Although celebrations continue throughout the month, the highlight is on the 17th, when more than 30 spectacular wheeled floats wind their way through the city streets to the accompaniment of music and dances. Many visitors plan their trip to Japan around this event. July 16 and 17.

Maritime Day. Dedicated to those employed in the marine industry, this national holiday celebrates the importance of the sea in Japan's livelihood. Third Monday in July.

Obon Festival. This national festival commemorates the dead who, according to Buddhist belief, revisit the world during this period. Many Japanese return to their hometowns for the religious rites, especially if a family member has died recently. As one Japanese whose grandmother had died a few months before told me, "I have to go back to my hometown—it's my grandmother's first Obon." Mid-July or mid-August, depending on the area in Japan.

Tenjin Matsuri, Temmangu Shrine, Osaka. One of the city's biggest festivals, this dates from the 10th century when the people of Osaka visited Temmangu Shrine to pray for protection against diseases prevalent during the long, hot summer. They would take pieces of paper cut in the form of human beings and, while the Shinto priest said prayers, would rub the paper over themselves in ritual cleansing. Afterward, the pieces of paper were taken by boat to the mouth of the river and disposed of. Today, events are re-enacted with a procession of more than 100 sacred boats making their way downriver, followed by a fireworks display. There's also a parade of some 3,000 people in traditional costume. July 24 and 25.

Matsuri-Miyazaki Festival, on the riverside by City Hall, Miyazaki. Miyazaki Prefecture's largest festival attracts more than 300,000 people with its performing arts and stalls selling food and local products. Late July.

Kangensai Music Festival, Itsukushima Shrine, Miyajima. There is classical court music and Bugaku dancing, and three barges carry portable shrines, priests, and musicians across the bay along with a flotilla of other boats. Because this festival takes place according to the lunar calendar, the actual date changes each year. Late July or early August.

Hanabi Taikai (Fireworks Display), Tokyo. This is Tokyo's largest summer celebration, and everyone sits on blankets along the banks of the Sumida River near Asakusa to see the show. It's great fun! Last Saturday of July.

August

Oshiro Matsuri, Himeji. This celebration is famous for its Noh dramas lit by bonfire and performed on a special stage on the Himeji Castle grounds, as well as a procession from the castle to the city center with participants dressed as feudal lords and ladies in traditional costume. First Friday and Saturday of August.

Peace Ceremony, Peace Memorial Park, Hiroshima. This ceremony is held annually in memory of those who died in the atomic bomb blast of August 6, 1945. In the evening, thousands of lit lanterns are set adrift on the Ota River in a plea for world peace. A similar ceremony is held on August 9 in Nagasaki. August 6.

Tanabata Festival, Sendai. Sendai holds its Star Festival 1 month later than the rest of Japan. It's the country's largest, and the entire town is decorated with colored paper streamers. August 6 to 8.

Matsuyama Festival, Matsuyama. Jubilant festivities include dances, fireworks, a parade, and a night fair. August 11 to 13.

Takamatsu Festival, Takamatsu. About 6,000 people participate in a dance procession that threads its way along Chuo Dori Avenue; anyone can join in. Food stalls are set up in Chuo Park, and there's also a fireworks display. August 12 to 14.

Toronagashi and Fireworks Display, Matsushima. A fireworks display is followed by the setting adrift on the bay of about 5,000 small boats with lanterns, which are meant to console the souls of the dead; another 3,000 lanterns are lit on islets in the bay. Evening of August 15.

Yamaga Lantern Festival, Kumamoto. Women dressed in yukata dance through town with illuminated paper lanterns on their head, and there's also a fireworks display. August 15 and 16.

Daimonji Bonfire, Mount Nyoigadake, Kyoto. A huge bonfire in the shape of the Chinese character dai, which means "large," is lit near the peak of the mountain; it's the highlight of the Obon Festival (see July, above). August 16.

September

Yabusame, Tsurugaoka Hachimangu Shrine, Kamakura. Archery performed on horseback recalls the days of the samurai. September 16.

October

Okunchi Festival, Suwa Shrine, Nagasaki. This 350-year-old festival, one of Kyushu's best, illustrates the influence of Nagasaki's Chinese population through the centuries. Highlights include a parade of floats and dragon dances. October 7 to 9.

Marimo Matsuri, Lake Akan, Hokkaido. This festival is put on by the native Ainu population to celebrate marimo (a spherical weed found in Lake Akan) and includes a pine torch parade and fireworks. Early October.

Takayama Matsuri (Autumn Festival), Takayama. As in the festival held here in April, huge floats are paraded through the streets. October 9 and 10.

Nagoya Festival, Nagoya. Nagoya's biggest event commemorates three of its heroes—Tokugawa Ieyasu, Toyotomi Hideyoshi, and Oda Nobunaga—in a parade that goes from City Hall to Sakae and includes nine floats with mechanical puppets, marching bands, and a traditional orchestra. Second weekend in October.

Nada no Kenka Matsuri (Nada Fighting Festival), Matsubara Hachiman Shrine, Himeji. Youths shouldering portable shrines jostle each other as they attempt to show their skill in balancing their heavy burdens. October 14 and 15.

Doburoku Matsuri Festival, Ogi-machi, Shirakawago. This village festival honors unrefined sake, said to represent the spirit of god, with a parade, an evening lion dance, and plenty of eating and drinking. October 14 to 19.

Nikko Toshogu Shrine Festival, Nikko. A parade of warriors in early-17th-century dress are accompanied by spear-carriers, gun-carriers, flag-bearers, Shinto priests, pages, court musicians, and dancers as they escort a sacred portable shrine. October 17.

Jidai Matsuri (Festival of the Ages), Kyoto. Another of Kyoto's grand festivals, this one began in 1894 to commemorate the founding of the city in 794. It features a procession of more than 2,000 people dressed in ancient costumes representing different epochs of Kyoto's 1,200-year history, who march from the Imperial Palace to Heian Shrine. October 22.

November

Ohara Matsuri, Kagoshima. About 15,000 people parade through the town in cotton yukata, dancing to the tune of popular local folk songs. A sort of Japanese Mardi Gras, this event attracts several hundred thousand spectators each year. November 2 to 3.

Daimyo Gyoretsu, Yumoto Onsen, Hakone. The old Tokaido Highway that used to link Kyoto and Tokyo comes alive again with a faithful reproduction of a feudal lord's procession in the olden days. November 3.

Shichi-go-san (Children's Shrine-Visiting Day), held throughout Japan. Shichi-go-san literally means "seven-five-three" and refers to children of these ages who are dressed in their kimono best and taken to shrines by their elders to express thanks and pray for their future. In Tokyo, the most popular sites are Asakusa Shrine, Kanda Myojin, and Meiji Shrine. November 15 (or the nearest Sun).

Tori-no-Ichi (Rake Fair), Otori Shrine, Tokyo. This fair in Asakusa features stalls selling rakes lavishly decorated with paper and cloth, which are thought to bring good luck and fortune. Based on the lunar calendar, the date changes each year. Mid-November.

Gishi-sai, Sengakuji Station, Tokyo. This memorial service honors 47 ronin (masterless samurai) who avenged their master's death by killing his rival and parading his head; for their act, all were ordered to commit suicide. Forty-seven men dressed as the ronin travel to Sengakuji Temple (the site of their and their master's burial) with the enemy's head to place on their master's grave. December 14.

Kasuga Wakamiya On-Matsuri, Kasuga Shrine, Nara. This festival features court music with traditional dance and a parade of people dressed as courtiers, retainers, and wrestlers of long ago. December 15 to 18.

Hagoita-Ichi (Battledore Fair), Sensoji Temple, Tokyo. Popular since Japan's feudal days, this Asakusa festival features decorated paddles of all types and sizes. Most have designs of Kabuki actors—images made by pasting together padded silk and brocade—and make great souvenirs and gifts. December 17 to 19.

New Year's Eve. At midnight, many temples ring huge bells 108 times to signal the end of the old year and the beginning of the new. Families visit temples and shrines throughout Japan to pray for the coming year. In Tokyo, Meiji Shrine is the place to be for this popular family celebration, as thousands throng to the shrine to usher in the new year at midnight; many of the area coffee shops and restaurants stay open all night, and trains operate the entire night. December 31.

5 Getting There

BY PLANE

Japan has three international airports. Outside Tokyo is Narita International Airport (NRT), where you'll want to land if your main business is in the capital, the surrounding region, or at points north or east such as Hokkaido. Another international airport, Kansai International Airport (KIX) outside Osaka, is convenient if your destination is Osaka, Kobe, Nara, Kyoto, or western or southern Japan; it is also convenient for domestic air travel within Japan, since most domestic flights out of Tokyo depart from Haneda Airport, necessitating an airport transfer if you arrive at Tokyo International Airport. In between Narita and Kansai airports, outside Nagoya, is the Central Japan International Airport (NGO), nicknamed Centrair, which offers the advantage of slick airport facilities (including hot-spring baths!) and easy access to Nagoya, the Shinkansen bullet train, Japan Alps, and beyond.

THE MAJOR CARRIERS

Since the flying time to Tokyo is about 12 hours from Los Angeles and 14 hours from Chicago or New York, you'll want to consider onboard services and even mileage programs (you'll earn lots of miles on this round-trip) as well as ticket price when choosing your carrier.

Japan Airlines (☎ 800/525-3663; www.ar.jal.com/en), Japan's flagship airline and largest domestic carrier, offers more international flights to Japan than any other carrier. JAL flies nonstop to Tokyo from Honolulu, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, New York, and Vancouver, and code-shares with American Airlines. JAL also serves other countries worldwide, including flights from London to Tokyo and Osaka and flights from New Zealand and Australia. JAL is now in the process of a major fleet renewal, replacing older aircraft with more fuel-efficient, environment-friendly aircraft, which will include the state-of-the-art Boeing 787 Dreamliner. One advantage to flying JAL (or a oneworld partner airline such as American Airlines) is its Yokoso Japan Airpass, which allows passengers flying JAL or member airlines to Japan to purchase discounted airfares for travel within Japan (see “Getting Around Japan,” below, for more information). JAL has also introduced a premium economy class cabin, better seats in first and business class on international routes, and wireless Internet service on flights between Tokyo and New York or London. Other benefits to flying JAL are discounts on accommodation at Nikko hotels and other JAL affiliate hotels, free transfer of one piece of luggage (up to 30kg/66 lb.) to or from an address in Japan (like a hotel) and the airport.

Other airlines nonstop flying to Japan from North America, Europe, Australia, and New Zealand include:

Air Canada (☎ 888/247-2262; www.aircanada.com) offers flights from Vancouver and Toronto to Tokyo and from Vancouver to Osaka.

Air New Zealand (☎ 0800/737-000 in New Zealand; www.airnewzealand.com) flies from both Auckland and Christchurch to Tokyo and Osaka.

All Nippon Airways (☎ 800/235-9262; www.anaskyweb.com), is Japan’s largest domestic carrier and has a code-share alliance with United Airlines. It offers daily nonstop service from New York; Washington, D.C.; Chicago; Los Angeles; and San Francisco to Tokyo. It also flies from London and Sydney to Tokyo. One advantage to flying ANA or one of its Star Alliance members is that you can purchase inexpensive domestic Japan Airpass tickets for throughout Japan (see “Getting Around Japan,” below, for more information).

American Airlines (☎ 800/433-7300; www.aa.com) code-shares with Japan Airlines, giving it one of the largest networks from North America to airports throughout Japan and allowing you to purchase JAL’s discounted domestic fares (see “Getting Around Japan,” below, for more information). You can also earn American frequent-flier miles with JAL. American offers flights daily from Los Angeles, San Francisco, Vancouver, Chicago, and New York to Tokyo.

British Airways (☎ 0870/850-9850 in Britain; www.ba.com) flies from London to Tokyo.

Continental Airlines (☎ 800/523-3273; www.continental.com) offers flights daily from Newark and Houston to Tokyo.

Northwest Airlines (☎ 800/447-4747; www.nwa.com), operating across the Pacific longer than any other airline, offers daily flights to Tokyo from Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Detroit, New York, Minneapolis–St. Paul, Portland, and Honolulu. It also offers direct flights from Detroit to Osaka and Nagoya.

Qantas (☎ 13-13-13 in Australia; www.qantas.com) flies from Sydney, Melbourne, and Perth to Tokyo.

United Airlines (☎ 800/538-2929; www.united.com) has daily flights from Washington, D.C.; Chicago; Seattle; San Francisco; Los Angeles; and Honolulu to Tokyo. It code-shares with ANA, which means you can purchase domestic flights on ANA at a discount (see “Getting Around Japan,” below).

FLYING FOR LESS: TIPS FOR GETTING THE BEST AIRFARE

- Passengers who can book their ticket either long in advance or at the last minute, or who fly midweek or at less-trafficked hours may pay a fraction of the full fare. If your schedule is flexible, say so, and ask if you can secure a cheaper fare by changing your flight plans.

- Search the Internet for cheap fares. The most popular online travel agencies are Travelocity.com (www.travelocity.co.uk); Expedia.com (www.expedia.co.uk and www.expedia.ca); and Orbitz.com. In the U.K., go to Travelsupermarket (© 0845/345-5708; www.travelsupermarket.com), a flight search engine that offers flight comparisons for the budget airlines whose seats often end up in bucket-shop sales. Other websites for booking airline tickets online include Cheapflights.com, SmarterTravel.com, Priceline.com, and Opodo (www.opodo.co.uk). Meta search sites (which find and then direct you to airline and hotel websites for booking) include Sidestep.com and Kayak.com—the latter includes fares for budget carriers such as JetBlue and Spirit as well as the major airlines. In addition, most airlines offer online-only fares that even their phone agents know nothing about.
- Consolidators, also known as bucket shops, are wholesale brokers in the airline-ticket game. Consolidators buy deeply discounted tickets (“distressed” inventories of unsold seats) from airlines and sell them to online ticket agencies, travel agents, tour operators, corporations, and, to a lesser degree, the general public. Consolidators advertise in Sunday newspaper travel sections (often in small ads with tiny type), both in the U.S. and the U.K. They can be great sources for cheap international tickets. On the down side, bucket shop tickets are often rigged with restrictions, such as stiff cancellation penalties (as high as 50%–75% of the ticket price). And keep in mind that most of what you see advertised is of limited availability. Several reliable consolidators are worldwide and available online. STA Travel (www.

statravel.com) is the world’s leading consolidator for students, but their fares are competitive for travelers of all ages.

- Join frequent-flier clubs. Frequent-flier membership doesn’t cost a cent, but it does entitle you to free tickets or upgrades when you amass the airline’s required number of frequent-flier points. But keep in mind that award seats are limited, seats on popular routes are hard to snag, and more and more major airlines are cutting their expiration periods for mileage points—so check your airline’s frequent-flier program so you don’t lose your miles before you use them. Inside tip: Award seats are offered almost a year in advance, but seats also open up at the last minute, so if your travel plans are flexible, you may strike gold. To play the frequent-flier game to your best advantage, consult the community bulletin boards at FlyerTalk.com or go to Randy Petersen’s Insideflyer.com, where Petersen and friends review all the programs in detail and post regular updates on changes in policies and trends.

LONG-HAUL FLIGHTS: HOW TO STAY COMFORTABLE

- Your choice of airline and airplane will definitely affect your legroom. Find more details about U.S. airlines at www.seatguru.com. For international airlines, research firm Skytrax has a list of average seat pitches at www.airlinequality.com.
- Emergency exit seats and bulkhead seats typically have the most legroom. Emergency exit seats are usually left unassigned until the day of a flight (to ensure that someone able-bodied fills the seats); it’s worth getting to the ticket counter early to snag one of these spots for a long flight. Many passengers find that bulkhead seating

Tips Coping with Jet Lag

A major consideration for visitors flying to Japan, especially on long flights from North America, is jet lag. Flying west has slightly less effect than flying east, which means you'll have a harder time recovering from your flight from Japan back to North America.

Here are some tips for combating jet lag:

- Reset your watch to your destination time before you board the plane.
- Drink lots of water before, during, and after your flight. Avoid alcohol.
- Exercise and sleep well for a few days before your trip.
- If you have trouble sleeping on planes, fly eastward on morning flights.
- Daylight is the key to resetting your body clock. At the website for Outside In (www.bodyclock.com), you can get a customized plan of when to seek and avoid light. Upon reaching Japan, put in a normal day.

(the row facing the wall at the front of the cabin) offers more legroom, but keep in mind that bulkhead seats have no storage space on the floor in front of you.

- To have two seats for yourself in a three-seat row, try for an aisle seat in a center section toward the back of coach. If you're traveling with a companion, book an aisle and a window seat. Middle seats are usually booked last, so chances are good you'll end up with three seats to yourselves. And, in the event that a third passenger is assigned the middle seat, he or she will probably be more than happy to trade for a window or an aisle.
- Ask about entertainment options. Many airlines offer seatback video systems where you get to choose your movies or play video games—but only on some of their planes. (Boeing 777s are your best bet.)
- To sleep, avoid the last row of any section or the row in front of an emergency exit, as these seats are the least likely to recline. Avoid seats near highly trafficked toilet areas. Avoid seats in the back of many jets—these can be narrower than those in the rest of coach. Or reserve a window seat, so you can rest your head and avoid being bumped in the aisle.
- Get up, walk around, and stretch every 60 to 90 minutes to keep your blood flowing. This helps avoid deep-vein thrombosis, or “economy-class syndrome.”
- Drink water before, during, and after your flight to combat the lack of humidity in airplane cabins. Avoid alcohol, which will dehydrate you.
- If you're flying with kids, don't forget to carry on toys, books, pacifiers, and snacks and chewing gum to help them relieve ear pressure buildup during ascent and descent.

6 Money & Costs

CURRENCY The currency in Japan is called the yen, symbolized by ¥. Coins come in denominations of ¥1, ¥5, ¥10, ¥50, ¥100, and ¥500. Bills come in denominations of ¥1,000, ¥2,000, ¥5,000, and ¥10,000, though ¥2,000 notes are rarely seen. You'll find that all coins get used (though it's hard to get rid of ¥1 coins). Keep plenty of change handy for riding local transportation such as buses or streetcars. Although change machines are virtually everywhere, even on buses where you can change larger coins and ¥1,000 bills, you'll find it faster to have the exact amount on hand.

Although the conversion rate varies daily and can fluctuate dramatically, the prices in this book are based on the rate of US$1 to ¥120, or ¥100 to US$3¢. The British pound is equal to about ¥240, or ¥100 to 42p.

Some people like to arrive in a foreign country with that country's currency already on hand, but I do not find it necessary for Japan. Narita, Kansai, and Nagoya international airports all have exchange counters for all incoming international flights that offer better exchange rates than what you'd get abroad, as well as ATMs. I usually change enough money to last several days.

Personal checks are not used in Japan. Most Japanese pay with either credit cards or cash—and because the country overall has such a low crime rate, you can feel safe walking around with money (though of course you should always exercise caution). The only time you really need to be alert to possible pick-pockets in Japan is when you're riding a crowded subway during rush hour or walking in heavily visited areas of Tokyo and other large cities.

In any case, although the bulk of your expenses—hotels, train tickets, major purchases, meals in tourist-oriented restaurants—can be paid for with credit cards, you'll want to bring traveler's checks for those times when you might not have easy access to an ATM for cash withdrawals.

ATMs The best way to get cash away from home is from an ATM (automated teller machine). Because most bank ATMs in Japan accept only cards issued by Japanese banks, your best bet for obtaining cash is at 7-Eleven convenience stores, which are found throughout Japan, are often open 24 hours, and have ATMs that accept foreign bank cards operating on the Cirrus (☎ 800/424-7787; www.mastercard.com) and PLUS (☎ 800/843-7587; www.visa.com) systems, as well as American Express.

Another good bet is at one of 21,000 post offices with ATMs that accept foreign bank cards operating on the Cirrus and PLUS systems. Although major post offices, usually located near main train stations, have long open hours for ATMs (generally 7am–11pm weekdays and 9am–7 or 9pm on weekends), small post offices may have only limited hours for ATMs (depending on the post office, that may be until 6 or 7pm weekdays and until 5pm on weekends).

Other places with ATMs that might accept foreign-issued cards include Citibank (which usually accepts cards on the PLUS and Cirrus systems, as well as Visa and MasterCard and sometimes American Express as well, but note that not all foreign cards may be accepted) and large department stores in major cities. Note that there is no public American Express office in Japan.

Be sure you know your 4-digit personal identification number (PIN) and your daily withdrawal limit before leaving home. Also keep in mind that many banks impose a fee every time a card is used at a different bank's ATM, and that fee can be higher for international transactions than for domestic ones. In addition, the bank from which you withdraw cash may charge its own fee. For international withdrawal fees, ask your bank.

CREDIT CARDS Credit cards are a safe way to carry money and provide a convenient record of all your expenses. They also generally offer relatively good exchange rates. You can withdraw cash advances from your credit cards at ATMs (see above) but high fees make credit-card cash advances a pricey way to get cash. Keep in mind that you'll pay interest from the moment of your withdrawal, even if you pay your monthly bills on time. Also, note that many banks now

The Japanese Yen

For American Readers At this writing, $1 = approximately ¥120, or ¥100 = 83¢. This was the rate of exchange used to calculate the dollar values given in this guide (rounded off to the nearest nickel for prices less than $10 and to the nearest dollar for prices more than $10). To roughly figure the price of something in dollars, calculate $8 for every ¥1,000. For example, ¥2,000 is $16.

For British Readers At this writing, £1 = approximately ¥240, or ¥100 = 42p; this was the rate of exchange used to calculate the pound values in the table below. The euro is worth approximately ¥160.

¥	US$	UK£	¥	US$	UK£

A note on exchange rates: The most difficult task of writing a guide is to set the rate of exchange, especially for Japan; if I could advise you accurately on the future exchange rate, I'd be too rich to be a guidebook writer. Since these rates will surely fluctuate, check the rate again when you travel to Japan and use this table only as an approximate guide. For up-to-the-minute currency conversions, check www.oanda.com.

assess a 1% to 3% “transaction fee” on all charges you incur abroad (whether you're using the local currency or your native currency).

The most readily accepted cards are MasterCard (also called Eurocard), Visa, and the Japanese credit card JCB (Japan Credit Bank); many tourist-oriented facilities also accept American Express and Diners Club. Shops and restaurants accepting credit and charge cards will usually post which cards they accept at the door or near the cash register. However, some establishments may be reluctant to accept cards for small purchases and inexpensive meals, so inquire beforehand. In addition, note that the vast majority of Japan's smaller and least-expensive businesses, including many restaurants, noodle shops, fast-food joints, ma-and-pa establishments, and the cheapest accommodations, do not accept credit cards.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS Although traveler's checks are something of an anachronism now that ATMs have come onto the scene, they're still useful for Japan, where ATMs for foreign-issued cards are limited primarily to 7-Eleven convenience stores and post offices. Traveler's checks fetch a better exchange rate than cash and also offer protection in case of theft. Note, however, that in some very remote areas, even banks won't cash them. Before taking off for small towns, be sure you have enough cash.

You can get traveler's checks before leaving home at almost any bank. The most popular traveler's checks are offered by American Express (☎ 800/807-6233 or ☎ 800/221-7282 for card holders), Visa (☎ 800/732-1322), and MasterCard (☎ 800/223-9920) in denominations of $20 to $500 or $1,000, plus a 1% to 4% service fee. Be sure to keep a record of the traveler's checks serial numbers separate from your checks in the event that they are stolen or lost. You'll get a refund faster if you know the numbers.

All banks in Japan displaying an AUTHORIZED FOREIGN EXCHANGE sign can exchange currency and traveler's checks, with exchange rates usually displayed at the appropriate foreign-exchange counter. Banks are generally open Monday through Friday from 9am to 3pm, though business hours for exchanging foreign currency usually don't begin until 10:30 or 11am (be prepared for a long wait; you'll be asked to sit down as your order is processed). If you need to exchange money outside banking hours, inquire at your hotel. Likewise, large department stores also offer exchange services and are often open until 7:30 or 8pm. Note, however, that hotels and department stores may charge a handling fee, offer a slightly less favorable exchange rate, and require a passport for all transactions.

7 Travel Insurance

The cost of travel insurance varies widely, depending on the destination, the cost and length of your trip, your age and health, and the type of trip you're taking, but expect to pay between 5% and 8% of the vacation itself. You can get estimates from various providers through InsureMyTrip.com. Enter your trip cost and dates, your age, and other information, for prices from more than a dozen companies.

U.K. citizens and their families who make more than one trip abroad per year may find an annual travel insurance policy works out cheaper. Check www.moneysupermarket.com, which compares prices across a wide range of providers for single- and multitravel policies.

Most big travel agents offer their own insurance and will probably try to sell you their package when you book a holiday. Think before you sign. Britain's Consumers' Association recommends that you insist on seeing the policy and reading the fine print before buying travel insurance. The Association of British Insurers (☎ 020/7600-3333; www.abi.org.uk) gives advice by phone and publishes Holiday Insurance, a free guide to policy provisions and prices. You might also shop around for better deals: Try Columbus Direct (☎ 0870/033-9988; www.columbusdirect.net).

TRIP-CANCELLATION INSURANCE

Trip-cancellation insurance will help retrieve your money if you have to back out of a trip or depart early, or if your travel supplier goes bankrupt. Trip cancellation traditionally covers such events as sickness, natural disasters, and Department of State advisories. The latest news in trip-cancellation insurance is the availability of expanded hurricane coverage and the “any-reason” cancellation coverage—which costs more but covers cancellations made for any reason. You won’t get back 100% of your prepaid trip cost, but you’ll be refunded a substantial portion. Travel-Safe (☎ 888/885-7233; www.travel-safe.com) offers both types of coverage. Expedia also offers any-reason cancellation coverage for its air-hotel packages.

For details, contact one of the following recommended insurers: Access America (☎ 866/807-3982; www.access-america.com); Travel Guard International (☎ 800/826-4919; www.travel-guard.com); Travel Insured International (☎ 800/243-3174; www.travel-insured.com); and Travelex Insurance Services (☎ 888/457-4602; www.travelex-insurance.com).

MEDICAL INSURANCE For travel overseas, most U.S. health plans (including Medicare and Medicaid) do not provide coverage, and the ones that do often require you to pay for services upfront and reimburse you only after you return home.

As a safety net, you may want to buy travel medical insurance. Try MEDEX Assistance (☎ 410/453-6300; www.medexassist.com) or Travel Assistance International (☎ 800/821-2828; www.

travellassistance.com; for general information on services, call the company’s Worldwide Assistance Services, Inc., at ☎ 800/777-8710).

Canadians should check with their provincial health plan offices or call Health Canada (☎ 866/225-0709; www.hc-sc.gc.ca) to find out the extent of their coverage and what documentation and receipts they must take home in case they are treated overseas.

LOST-LUGGAGE INSURANCE On international flights (including U.S. portions of international trips), baggage coverage is limited to approximately $9.07 per pound, up to approximately $635 per checked bag. If you plan to check items more valuable than what’s covered by the standard liability, see if your homeowner’s policy covers your valuables, get baggage insurance as part of your comprehensive travel-insurance package, or buy Travel Guard’s “BagTrak” product.

If your luggage is lost, immediately file a lost-luggage claim at the airport, detailing the luggage contents. Most airlines require that you report delayed, damaged, or lost baggage within 4 hours of arrival. The airlines are required to deliver luggage, once found, directly to your house or destination free of charge.

8 Health & Safety

STAYING HEALTHY

It’s safe to drink tap water and eat to your heart’s content everywhere in Japan (pregnant women, however, are advised to avoid eating raw fish or taking hot baths). Although Japan had nine cases of mad cow disease after its first confirmed case in 2001, all slaughtered cows must now be checked for the disease before the meat is authorized for consumption.

You don’t need any inoculations to enter Japan. Prescriptions can be filled at Japanese pharmacies only if they’re issued by a Japanese doctor. To avoid hassle, bring more prescription medications than you think you’ll need, clearly labeled in their original vials, and be sure to pack them in your carry-on luggage. But to be safe, bring copies of your prescriptions with you, including generic names of medicines in case a local pharmacist is unfamiliar with the brand name. Over-the-counter items are easy to obtain, though name brands are likely to be different from back home, some ingredients allowed elsewhere may be forbidden in Japan, and prices are likely to be higher.

Contact the International Association for Medical Assistance to Travelers (IAMAT) (☎ 716/754-4883 or, in Canada, 416/652-0137; www.iamat.org) for tips on travel and health concerns in the countries you're visiting, and for lists of local, English-speaking doctors. The United States Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (☎ 800/311-3435; www.cdc.gov) provides up-to-date information on health hazards by region or country and offers tips on food safety. Travel Health Online (www.tripprep.com), sponsored by a consortium of travel medicine practitioners, may also offer helpful advice on traveling abroad. You can find listings of reliable medical clinics overseas at the International Society of Travel Medicine (www.istm.org).

WHAT TO DO IF YOU GET SICK AWAY FROM HOME

For travel abroad, you may have to pay all medical costs upfront and be reimbursed later. Medicare and Medicaid do not provide coverage for medical costs outside the U.S. Before leaving home, find out what medical services your health insurance covers. To protect yourself, consider buying medical travel insurance (see “Medical Insurance,” under “Travel Insurance,” above).

Very few health insurance plans pay for medical evacuation back to the U.S. (which can cost $10,000 and up). A number of companies offer medical evacuation services anywhere in the world. If you're hospitalized more than 150 miles from home, MedjetAssist (☎ 800/527-7478; www.medjetassistance.com) will pick you up and fly you to the hospital of your choice virtually anywhere in the world in a medically equipped and staffed aircraft 24 hours day, 7 days a week. Annual memberships are $225 individual, $350 family; you can also purchase short-term memberships.

U.K. nationals will need a European Health Insurance Card (EHIC) to receive free or reduced-costs health benefits during a visit to a European Economic Area (EEA) country (European Union countries plus Iceland, Liechtenstein, and Norway) or Switzerland. The European Health Insurance Card replaces the E111 form, which is no longer valid. For advice, ask at your local post office or see www.dh.gov.uk/travellers.

In Japan, the local consulate and sometimes even the local tourist office can provide a list of area doctors who speak English. You might also consider asking your hotel concierge to recommend a local doctor—some hotels even have in-house doctors or clinics. If you can't find a doctor who can help you right away, try the emergency room at the local hospital. Many emergency rooms also have walk-in-clinics for cases that are not life threatening; you may not get immediate attention, but you won't pay the high price of an emergency room visit.

STAYING SAFE

One of the greatest delights of traveling in Japan is that the country is safe and the people are honest. When a friend of mine forgot her purse in a public restroom in

Osaka in 2003, someone turned it in to the police station complete with money, digital camera, and passport. That said, petty crime is on the increase and you should stay alert for pickpockets in congested areas like Narita airport and Tokyo subways. Women should avoid public parks at night. Otherwise, I feel safe walking anywhere in Japan alone, day or night.

9 Specialized Travel Resources

TRAVELERS WITH DISABILITIES

For travelers with disabilities, traveling can be a nightmare in Japan, especially in Tokyo and other large metropolises. City sidewalks can be so jam-packed that getting around on crutches or in a wheelchair is exceedingly difficult. Some subway and train stations are accessible only by stairs, and although trains have seating for passengers with disabilities—called “Priority Seats” and located in the first and last compartments of the train—subways can be so crowded that there’s barely room to move. Moreover, Priority Seats are almost always occupied by commuters—so unless you look visibly handicapped, no one is likely to offer you a seat.

As for accommodations, only 10% of the nation’s 8,500 hotels have barrier-free rooms (called a “universal” room in Japan and used primarily by the elderly), mostly in the expensive category. Only a scant 1% of Japanese inns have such rooms. Restaurants can also be difficult to navigate, with raised doorsills, crowded dining areas, and tiny bathrooms. Even Japanese homes are not very accessible, since the main floor is always raised about a foot above the entrance-hall floor.

When it comes to facilities for the blind, however, Japan has a very advanced system. At subway stations and on many major sidewalks in large cities, raised dots and lines on the ground guide blind people at intersections and to subway platforms. In some cities, streetlights chime a theme when the signal turns green east-west, and chime another for north-south. Even Japanese yen notes are identified by a slightly raised circle—the ¥1,000 note has one circle in a corner, while the ¥10,000 note has two. And finally, many elevators have floors indicated in Braille, and some hotels identify rooms in Braille.

In any case, a disability shouldn’t stop anyone from traveling. Organizations that offer a vast range of resources and assistance to disabled travelers include MossRehab (☎ 800/CALL-MOSS; www.mossresourcenet.org); the American Foundation for the Blind (☎ 800/232-5463; www.afb.org); and Society for Accessible Travel & Hospitality (☎ 212/447-7284; www.sath.org). British travelers should contact Holiday Care (☎ 0845-124-9971 in U.K. only; www.holidaycare.org.uk) to access a wide range of travel information and resources for disabled and elderly people.

GAY & LESBIAN TRAVELERS

While there are many gay and lesbian establishments in Tokyo, the gay community in Japan is not a vocal one, and in any case, information in English is hard to come by. The International Gay & Lesbian Travel Association (☎ 800/448-8550 or 945/776-2626; www.iglt.org) is the trade association for the U.S. gay and lesbian travel industry and offers an online directory of gay- and lesbian-friendly travel businesses.

Gay.com Travel (☎ 800/929-2268 or 415/644-8044; www.gay.com/travel or www.outandabout.com), is an excellent online successor to the popular Out & About print magazine. It provides regularly updated information about gay-owned, gay-oriented, and gay-friendly lodging, dining, sightseeing, nightlife, and shopping establishments in every important destination worldwide. British travelers should click on the “Travel” link at www.uk.gay.com for advice and gay-friendly trip ideas.

The Canadian website GayTraveler (<http://gaytraveler.ca>) offers ideas and advice for gay travel all over the world.

SENIOR TRAVEL

More and more attractions are offering free admission to seniors over 65 (be sure to have your passport handy). However, discounts may not be posted, so be sure to ask. In addition, visitors to Japan should be aware that there are many stairs to navigate in metropolitan areas, particularly in subway and train stations and even on pedestrian overpasses.

Before leaving home, consider becoming a member of AARP (☎ 888/687-2277; www.aarp.org), which brings a wide range of special benefits, including AARP: The Magazine and a monthly newsletter. Anyone over 50 can join. If you want something more than the average vacation or guided tour, try Elderhostel (☎ 877/426-8056; www.elderhostel.org), which arranges study programs for those ages 55 and over (and a spouse or companion of any age) to countries around the world, including Japan.

FAMILY TRAVEL

Japanese are very fond of children, which makes traveling in Japan with kids a delight. All social reserve seems to be waived for children. Taking along some small and easy-to-carry gifts (such as colorful stickers) for your kids to give to other children is a great icebreaker.

Safety also makes Japan a good destination for families. Still, plan your itinerary with care. To avoid crowds, visit tourist sights on weekdays. Never travel on city transportation during rush hour or on trains during popular public holidays. And remember that with all the stairways and crowded sidewalks, strollers are less practical than baby backpacks.

Children 6 to 11 years old are generally charged half-price for everything from temple admission to train tickets, while children under 6 are often admitted free. Tourist spots in Japan almost always have a table or counter with a stamp and inkpad so that visitors can commemorate their trip; you might wish to give your children a small notebook so that they can collect imprints of every attraction they visit. There are many attractions throughout Japan geared just toward kids, including sophisticated theme parks. And what teenager could resist Japan’s pop culture, fashion, and fads?

As for the food, the transition from kid-favorite spaghetti to udon noodles is easy, and udon and soba shops are inexpensive and ubiquitous. In addition, most family-style restaurants, especially those in department stores, offer a special children’s meal that often includes a small toy or souvenir. For those real emergencies, Western fast-food places such as McDonald’s and KFC are seemingly everywhere in Japan.

If your child under 6 sleeps with you, you generally won’t even have to pay for him or her in most hotels and ryokan. However, it’s always advisable to ask in advance. Many upper-range hotels in such major cities as Tokyo and Osaka provide babysitting services, although they are prohibitively expensive. Expect to fork over a minimum of ¥5,000 ($42/£21) for 2 hours of babysitting.

To locate those accommodations, restaurants, and attractions that are particularly kid-friendly, refer to the “Kids” icon throughout this guide.

STUDENT TRAVEL

Students sometimes receive discounts at museums, though occasionally discounts are available only to students enrolled in Japanese schools. Furthermore, discounted prices are often not displayed in English. Your best bet is to bring along an International Student Identity Card together with your university student ID and show them both at ticket windows. In addition to entrance-fee discounts, the ISIC provides basic health and life insurance and a 24-hour helpline. You can apply for the card online or in person at STA Travel (☎ 800/781-4040 in North America; www.statravel.com), the biggest student travel agency in the world; check the website to locate STA Travel offices worldwide.

10 Staying Connected

TELEPHONES

To call Japan:

1. Dial the international access code: 011 from the U.S.; 00 from the U.K., Ireland, or New Zealand; or 0011 from Australia.
2. Dial the country code for Japan (81).
3. Dial the city code (3 for Tokyo, 6 for Osaka; for other area codes, check the listings for each city in this guide) and then the number.

Domestic calls: If you're making a long-distance domestic phone call, all telephone area codes for all Japanese cities begin with a zero (03 for Tokyo, 06 for Osaka).

Despite the proliferation of cellphones, you can still find public telephones in telephone booths on the sidewalk, in or near train stations, in hotel lobbies, and restaurants and coffee shops, and even on the bullet train (but these require a prepaid card; see below). A local call costs ¥10 (10¢/5p) for each minute; a warning chime will ring to tell you to insert more coins or you'll be disconnected. I usually insert two or three coins at the start so I won't have to worry about being disconnected; ¥10 coins that aren't used are returned at the end of the call. Most public phones accept both ¥10 and ¥100 coins. The latter is convenient for long-distance calls, but no change is given for unused minutes. All gray ISDN telephones are equipped for international calls and have dataports for Internet access.

If you think you'll be making a lot of domestic calls from public telephones and don't want to deal with coins, purchase a magnetic prepaid telephone card. These are available in a value of ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) and are sold at vending machines (often located right beside telephones), station kiosks, and convenience stores. Green and gray telephones accept telephone cards. In fact, many nowadays accept telephone cards exclusively. Insert the card into the slot. On the gray ISDN telephones, there's a second slot for a second telephone card, which is convenient if the first one is almost used up or if you think you'll be talking a long time. Domestic long-distance calls are cheaper at night, on weekends, and on national holidays for calls of distances more than 60km (37 miles).

Toll-free numbers: Numbers beginning with 0120 or 0088 are toll-free, but calling an 800 number in the U.S. from Japan is not toll-free but costs the same as an international call.

To make international calls: From a public telephone, look for a specially marked INTERNATIONAL AND DOMESTIC CARD/COIN TELEPHONE. Although many of the specially marked green or gray telephones, the most common public telephone, accept both coins and magnetic telephone cards for domestic calls, most do not accept magnetic cards for direct overseas calls (due to illegal usage of telephone cards), especially in big cities. You'll therefore either have to use coins, or purchase a special prepaid international telephone card that works like telephone cards issued by U.S. telephone companies. An access number must first be dialed, followed by a secret telephone number, and then the number you wish to dial. Such cards are often sold from vending machines next to telephone booths in hotels or in convenience stores like Sunkus, Circle K, Family Mart, or Lawson. There are numerous such cards (with instructions in English), such as the rechargeable Brastel Smart Phonocard (☎ 0120/659-543; www.brastel.com), which charges ¥34 to ¥39 (30¢–35¢/10p–15p) per minute to a landline in the U.S. or United Kingdom; or the KDDI Super World Card (☎ 0057; www.kddi.com), which gives approximately 21 minutes of weekday talk time to the U.S. on its ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) card. Alternatively, some hotels have special phones equipped to accept credit cards.

International rates vary according to when you call, which telephone company you use, and what type of service you use. Direct-dial service is cheaper than operator-assisted calls. The cheapest time to call is between 11pm and 8am Japan time, while the most expensive time is weekdays from 8am to 7pm.

If you're not using a prepaid card (which has its own set of instructions and access numbers), to make a direct-dial international call, you must first dial one of the international access codes offered by the various telephone companies—001 (KDDI), 0033 (NTT Communications), or 0061 (Softbank Telecom)—followed by 010 and then the country code. The country code for the United States and Canada is 1; for the United Kingdom, it's 44; for Australia, it's 61; and for New Zealand, it's 64. Next you dial the area code and number. For example, if you wanted to call the British Embassy in Washington, D.C., using KDDI, you would dial 001-010-1-202-588-7800. If you're dialing from your hotel room, you must first dial for an outside line, usually 0.

For a collect call or to place an operator-assisted call through KDDI, dial the international telephone operator at ☎ 0051. If you wish to be connected with an operator in your home country, you can do so from green international telephones by dialing ☎ 0039 followed by the country code. (For the United States, dial ☎ 0039-111.) These calls can be used for collect calls or credit card calls. Some hotels and other public places are equipped with special phones that will link you to your home operator with the push of a button, and there are instructions in English.

If you have a U.S. calling card, ask your phone company for the direct access number from Japan that will link you directly to the United States. If you have AT&T, for example, dial ☎ 00539-111 (you can also pay by credit card at this number for calls made to the United States). If you're using MCI, however, it depends on which Japanese company you're using (for KDDI, it's ☎ 0053-121).

CELLPHONES

The three letters that define much of the world's wireless capabilities are GSM (Global System for Mobiles). Unfortunately, Japan uses a system that is incompatible with GSM. However, you can use your own mobile phone number in Japan by bringing your own SIM card from home and inserting it into a handset rented from Softbank Global Rental or NTT DoCoMo. It only works, however, if your home service provider has a roaming agreement with Softbank or NTT. For more information, contact your mobile phone company, NTT DoCoMo (<http://roaming.nttdocomo.co.jp>), or Softbank Global Rental (www.softbank-rental.jp), where you can also find out about rental costs and rental locations and make online reservations. Another option is to bring your own mobile phone and rent a SIM card from Softbank.

Otherwise, if you want to have a telephone number before arriving in Japan,

Tips Over and Out

If you're traveling with a buddy, consider bringing along walkie-talkies. They're cheaper than phones, could be a lifesaver if you get separated, and make it easier to rendezvous, especially in big cities.

consider renting a phone before leaving home. North Americans can rent one before leaving home from InTouch USA (☎ 800/872-7626; www.intouchglobal.com) or RoadPost (☎ 888/290-1606 or 905/272-5665; www.roadpost.com).

You can also rent a phone in Japan (unfortunately, foreign visitors are not allowed to buy cellphones in Japan). If you're in Japan for only a few days and are staying in an upper-class hotel, most convenient but most expensive is to rent a mobile phone from your hotel. A check of several hotels in Tokyo turned up rental fees ranging from ¥520 to ¥1,050 ($4.35–$8.75/£2.15–£4.35) per day (the more expensive the hotel, the more expensive the rental).

Otherwise, Narita, Osaka, and Nagoya international airports offer on-the-spot phone rentals. Narita, for example, has lots of companies at both terminals, including NTT DoCoMo and Softbank Global Rental (see above), as well as G-Call (www.g-call.com/e), Telecom Square (www.telecomsquare.co.jp), and PuPuRu (www.pupuru.com), which have the extra convenience of easy pickup and drop offs and offer online reservations. Most rentals start at ¥525 ($4.35/£2.20) per day, though bargains are often offered online or on-site. Charges for domestic and international calls vary, but incoming calls are usually free.

For travelers staying in Japan a week or longer, Go Mobile (www.gomobile.co.jp) offers 1- and 2-week and 30-day rentals, including a limited number of free local calls. A 1-week rental costs ¥2,995 ($25/£13) and includes 15 minutes of free local calls. Phones are shipped to an address in Japan (such as your hotel) and returned via a prepaid, pre-addressed envelope.

VOICE-OVER INTERNET PROTOCOL (VOIP)

If you have Internet access while traveling, you might consider a broadband-based telephone service (in technical terms, Voice over Internet protocol, or VoIP) such as Skype (www.skype.com) or Vonage (www.vonage.com).

INTERNET/E-MAIL WITHOUT YOUR OWN COMPUTER

Cybercafes are finally catching on in Japan, though they're still nonexistent in small towns. We've listed cybercafes for many destinations when we could find them (see individual chapters), but more may have opened by the time you travel. Ask local tourist offices for locations; or check www.cybercaptive.com or www.cybercafe.com, though from my experience information on these sites can be outdated. Avoid hotel business centers unless you're willing to pay exorbitant rates (though some accommodations provide a computer in the lobby guests can use for free). Although expensive, Kinko's has locations throughout Japan. Many are open 24 hours and charge ¥210 ($1.75/90p) per 10 minutes of computer time.

WITH YOUR OWN COMPUTER

With the exception of some budget hotels, virtually all hotels in Japan's major cities nowadays provide Internet access in their guest rooms (see individual hotel listings for each city). While most provide high-speed dataports, more and more are going Wi-Fi (wireless fidelity). I'm also happy to report that more and more are also offering Internet connections for free. Otherwise, expect to pay anywhere from ¥500 to ¥1,050 ($4.15–$8.75/£2.10–£4.35) on average per day.

To find public Wi-Fi hot spots at your destination, go to www.jiwire.com; its Hotspot Finder holds the world's largest directory of public wireless hot spots. In rural areas, however, especially national parks, don't expect anyone to have Internet connections, including hotels.

Wherever you go, bring a phone cord and a spare Ethernet network cable—or find out whether your hotel supplies them to guests (many do, for free). For Japan's electricity requirements, see “Fast Facts: Japan” later in this chapter.

11 Escorted & Package Tours

ESCORTED TOURS

Escorted tours are structured group tours, with a group leader. The price usually includes everything from airfare to hotels, meals, tours, admission costs, and local transportation.

Despite the fact that escorted tours require big deposits and predetermine hotels, restaurants, and itineraries, many people derive security and peace of mind from the structure they offer. Escorted tours—whether they're navigated by bus, motor coach, train, or boat—let travelers sit back and enjoy the trip without having to drive or worry about details. They take you to the maximum number of sights in the minimum amount of time with the least amount of hassle. They're particularly convenient for people with limited mobility and they can be a great way to make new friends.

On the down side, you'll have little opportunity for serendipitous interactions with locals. The tours can be jam-packed with activities, leaving little room for individual sightseeing, whim, or adventure—plus they often focus on the heavily touristed sites, so you miss out on many a lesser-known gem.

That said, lots of tour companies offer group trips to Japan, including General Tours (☎ 800/221-2216; www.general-tours.com), which offers tours to major tourist destinations in Japan, while Intrepid Travel (☎ 800/970-7299; www.intrepidtravel.com) specializes in small group tours that take in everything from the Tsukiji fish market or a tea ceremony to the hike up Mount Fuji.

If you want someone else to take care of logistics but don't like group tours, Artisans of Leisure (☎ 800/214-8144; www.artisansofleisure.com) provides luxury tours with private guides that are tailored to your interests, whether it's private cooking classes or Japanese gardens. Likewise, Esprit Travel (☎ 800/377-7481; www.esprittravel.com) designs private tours for individuals and groups and can arrange everything from a wedding in a Buddhist temple to private viewings at the Benesse Art Site Naoshima.

For current information on escorted tours departing North America, including special-interest tours that may cover everything from gardens to geisha, go to www.japantravelinfo.com; for tours departing England, go to www.seejapan.co.uk.

PACKAGE TOURS

Before searching for the lowest airfare, consider booking your flight as part of a travel package, which is simply a way to buy the airfare, accommodations, and other elements of your trip (such as airport transfers and sometimes even activities) at the same time and often at discounted prices.

One good source for deals is the airlines' tour operators, which package their flights with accommodations. Japan Airlines operates JALPAK (☎ 800/221-1081; www.jalpak.com) in North America and Jaltour (☎ 0870/111-8830; www.jaltour.co.uk) in Great Britain, with airfare and hotel packages to Japan, plus optional escorted day trips. In 2007, for example, a 5-night JAL package departing from Los Angeles to Tokyo and Kyoto cost $1,819 plus tax, including city tours. Both American Airlines (☎ 800/949-3556; www.aa.com) and Northwest Airlines World Vacations (☎ 800/800-1504; www.nwaworldvacations.com) also offer flight-and-hotel packages to Tokyo and beyond.

In addition, travel companies offering independent packages to Japan include Kintetsu International (☎ 800/422-3481; www.kintetsu.com) and JTB USA (☎ 800/235-3523; www.jtbusa.com) both of which offer lots of specials, including airfares, airfare and hotel packages, 1-day sightseeing tours, and seasonal escorted tours.

Travel packages are also listed in the travel sections of Sunday newspapers. Or check ads in travel magazines such as Budget Travel Magazine, Travel + Leisure, National Geographic Traveler, and Condé Nast Traveler.

12 Getting Around Japan

Japan has an extensive public transport system, the most convenient segment of which is the nation's excellent rail service. You can also travel by plane (good for long-distance hauls but expensive unless you plan ahead), bus (the cheapest mode of travel), ferry, and car.

BY TRAIN

The most efficient way to travel around most of Japan is by train. Whether you're being whisked through the countryside aboard the famous Shinkansen bullet train or are winding your way up a wooded mountainside in a two-car electric streetcar, trains in Japan are punctual, comfortable, dependable, safe, and clean. All trains except local commuters have washrooms, toilets, and drinking water. Bullet trains even have telephones and carts selling food and drinks. And because train stations are usually located in the heart of the city next to the city bus terminal or a subway station, arriving in a city by train is usually the most convenient method. Furthermore, most train stations in Japan's major cities and resort areas have tourist offices. The staff may not speak English, but the office usually has maps or brochures in English and can point you in the direction of your hotel. Train stations also often have a counter where hotel reservations can be made free of charge. Most of Japan's trains are run by the six companies (such as JR East and JR Kyushu) that make up the Japan Railways (JR) Group, which operates as many as 27,800 trains daily, including more than 500 Shinkansen bullet trains.

SHINKANSEN (BULLET TRAIN)

The Shinkansen is probably Japan's best-known train. With a front car that resembles a space rocket, the Shinkansen hurtles along at a maximum speed of 300kmph

Tips Travel Tip

In the following chapters, to help you reach the hotels, restaurants, and sights recommended in this book, I've included the nearest train or subway station or bus or streetcar information followed in parentheses by the approximate number of minutes it takes to walk from the station or bus stop to your destination.

(187 mph) through the countryside on its own special tracks.

There are five basic Shinkansen routes in Japan, plus some offshoots. The most widely used line for tourists is the Tokaido Shinkansen, which runs from Tokyo and Shinagawa stations west to such cities as Nagoya, Kyoto, and Osaka. The Sanyo Shinkansen extends westward from Osaka through Kobe, Himeji, Okayama, and Hiroshima, before reaching its final destination in Hakata/Fukuoka on the island of Kyushu. Only Nozomi Super Express trains, the fastest and most frequent trains, cover the entire 1,175km (729 miles) between Tokyo and Hakata. Since the Nozomi is not covered by the Japan Rail Pass (see “Japan Rail Pass,” below), most travelers must transfer in Osaka or Okayama if they’re traveling the entire line. Trains run so frequently—as often as four times an hour during peak times not including the Nozomi—that it’s almost like catching the local subway.

The Tohoku Shinkansen Line runs north from Tokyo and Ueno stations to Sendai, Morioka, Kakunodate, and Hachinohe (some trains require reservations; the line will extend all the way to Aomori by 2010), with branches extending to Shinjo and Akita. The Joetsu Shinkansen connects Tokyo and Ueno stations with Niigata on the Japan Sea coast, while the Nagano Shinkansen, completed in time for the 1998 Winter Olympics, connects Tokyo and Ueno stations with Nagano in the Japan Alps. The newest line is the Kyushu Shinkansen, which currently runs between Shin-Yatsuhiro and Kagoshima but will extend all the way from Kagoshima to Hakata by 2011.

Shinkansen running along these lines usually offer two kinds of service—trains that stop only at major cities (like the Nozomi on the Tokaido-Sanyo Line) and trains that make more stops and are therefore slightly slower. If your destination is a smaller city on the Shinkansen line, make sure the train you take stops there. As a plus, each stop is announced in English through a loudspeaker and a digital signboard in each car.

REGULAR SERVICE In addition to bullet trains, there are also two types of long-distance trains that operate on regular tracks. The limited-express trains, or LEX (Tokkyu), branch off the Shinkansen system and are the fastest after the bullet trains, often traveling scenic routes, while the express trains (Kyuko) are slightly slower and make more stops. Slower still are rapid express trains (Shin-Kaisoku) and the even slower rapid trains (Kaisoku). To serve the everyday needs of Japan’s commuting population, local trains (Futsu) stop at all stations.

For long distances, say, between Tokyo and Sapporo, JR operates overnight sleeper trains (Shindai-sha), which offer compartments and berths.

There are also privately owned lines that operate from major cities to tourist destinations. Kintetsu (Kinki Nippon Railway) lines, for example, are useful for traveling in the Kansai area and to the Ise Shima Peninsula, while Odakyu serves Hakone.

INFORMATION For the most comprehensive site covering rail travel in Japan, go to www.japanrail.com, which also provides links to the websites of all six JR Group companies, gives fares and timetables for long-distance JR trains (including the Shinkansen), displays maps of Tokyo and Shinjuku stations, and contains information on rail passes.

In Japan, stop by the Tourist Information Center in downtown Tokyo or at the international airports in Narita or Osaka (see chapters 4 and 9 for locations and open hours) for the invaluable Railway Timetable, published in English and providing train schedules for the Shinkansen and limited express JR lines. To be on the safe side, I also stop by the train information desk or the tourist information desk as soon as I arrive at a new destination to check on train schedules onward to my next destination.

TRAIN DISTANCES/TRAVELING TIME Because Japan is an island nation, many people erroneously believe that the traveling time between destinations is of little concern. However, the country is much longer than most people imagine. Its four main islands, measured from the northeast to the southwest, cover roughly the distance from Maine to Florida. (Thank goodness for the Shinkansen bullet train!) In addition, transportation can be slow in mountainous regions, especially if you're on a local train.

The chart below measures the distances and traveling times from Tokyo to principal Japanese cities. Traveling times do not include the time needed for transferring and are calculated for the fastest trains available, excluding the Nozomi Shinkansen. (I have excluded the Nozomi

Tips Train Travel Tips

Pack lightly, since porters are virtually nonexistent, overhead luggage space is small, and most rail stations have lots of stairs. Your best sources for train schedules are at www.japanrail.com or the Railway Timetable available at JNTO's Tourist Information Centers. For routing information and questions about train times once you've begun your trip, call the Tourist Information Center at ☎ 03/3201-3331 in Tokyo. You can also call the JR East Infoline in Tokyo for information in English (☎ 050/2016-1603; www.jreast.co.jp/e) daily from 10am to 6pm; no reservations are accepted by phone, but you can inquire about time schedules, fares, location of reservation offices, lost-and-found offices, and more.

because most tourists to Japan use the JR Rail Pass, which is not valid on the Nozomi.)

TRAIN FARES & RESERVATIONS

Trains are expensive in Japan; ticket prices are based on the type of train (Shinkansen bullet trains are the most expensive), the distance traveled, whether your seat is reserved, and the season, with slightly higher prices (usually a ¥200/$1.65/80p surcharge) during peak season (Golden Week, July 21–Aug 31, Dec 25–Jan 10, and Mar 21–Apr 5). Children (ages 6–11) pay half fare, while up to two children 5 and younger travel for free if they do not require a separate seat. I've included train prices from Tokyo for many destinations covered in this book (see individual cities for more information). Unless stated otherwise, prices in this guide are for adults for nonreserved seats on the fastest train available during regular season. You can buy JR tickets and obtain information about JR trains traveling throughout Japan at any Japan Railways station (in Tokyo this includes major stations along the Yamanote Line, which loops around Tokyo). If you wish to purchase a ticket using a credit card, go to a Reservation Ticket Office at any major JR station.

No matter which train you ride, be sure to hang onto your ticket—you'll be required to give it up at the end of your trip as you exit through the gate.

Seat Reservations You can reserve seats for the Shinkansen, as well as for limited-express and express trains (but not for slower rapid or local trains, which are on a first-come, first-served basis) at any major Japan Railways station in Japan. Reserved seats cost slightly more than unreserved seats (¥510/$4.25/£2.10 for the Shinkansen). The larger stations have a special reservation counter called Midori-no Madoguchi (Reservation Ticket Office) or View Plaza (Travel Service Center), easily recognizable by their green signs with RESERVATION TICKETS written on them. If you're at a JR station with no special reservation office, you can reserve your seats at one of the regular ticket windows. You can also purchase and reserve seats at several travel agents, including the giant Japan Travel Bureau (JTB), which has offices all over Japan. It's a good idea to reserve your seats for your entire trip through Japan as soon as you know your itinerary, especially if you'll be traveling during peak times; however, you can only reserve 1 month in advance. If it's not peak season, you'll probably be okay using a more flexible approach to traveling—all trains also have nonreserved cars that fill up on a first-come, first-seated basis. You can also reserve seats on the day of travel up to departure time. I hardly ever reserve a seat when it's not peak season, preferring instead the flexibility of being able to hop on the next available train (or, sometimes I reserve a seat just before boarding). If you want to sit in the nonsmoking car of the Shinkansen bullet train, ask for the kinensha, though nowadays most trains are completely smoke free.

Tips for Saving Money If your ticket is for travel covering more than 100km (62 miles), you can make as many stopovers en route as you wish as long as you complete your trip within the period of the ticket's validity. Tickets for 100 to 200km (62–124 miles) are valid for 2 days, with 1 day added for each additional 200km. Note, too, that stopovers are granted only for trips that are not between major urban areas, such as Tokyo, Osaka, Nagoya, Kyoto, Kobe, Hiroshima, Kitakyushyu, Fukuoka, Sendai, or Sapporo. In addition, stopovers are not permitted when traveling by express and limited express. Ask about stopovers when purchasing your ticket.

You can also save money by purchasing a round-trip ticket for long distances. A round-trip ticket by train on distances exceeding 600km (373 miles) one-way costs 20% less than two one-way tickets.

There are also regional tickets good for sightseeing. The Hakone Free Pass, for example, offered by Odakyu railways (www.odakyu.jp/english), includes round-trip transportation from Tokyo and unlimited travel in Hakone for a specific number of days. The Hokkaido Furii Pasu (www.jrhokkaido.co.jp) valid for 7 days of JR train and bus travel in Hokkaido, costs ¥23,400 ($195/£97), though some restrictions apply.

If you don't qualify for a Japan Rail Pass (see below), the Seishun 18 (Seishun jūhachi kippu) is a 5-day rail pass for ¥11,500 ($93/£47) for travel anywhere in Japan so long as you use JR local and rapid trains (that is, no Shinkansen, limited express or express trains), making it a good bet for day excursions in the countryside, albeit very slow ones (the trip from Tokyo to Kyoto would take 8 hours and requires three changes of trains, compared to 2

Value Japan Rail Pass

You can save quite a bit by purchasing a rail pass, even if you only plan to travel a little. How economical is a Japan Rail Pass? For example, if you were to buy a round-trip reserved-seat ticket on the Shinkansen from Tokyo to Kyoto, it would cost you ¥26,440 ($220/£110), which is almost as much as a week's ordinary rail pass. If you plan to see more than just Tokyo and Kyoto, it pays to use a rail pass, which you must buy outside Japan (some regional rail passes, however, described below, can be purchased in Japan if you're a tourist in Japan).

With a Rail Pass, you can make seat reservations for free, which otherwise costs ¥510 ($4.25/£2.10) per ride on the Shinkansen. Another advantage to a rail pass is that it offers a 10% discount or more off room rates at more than 50 JR Hotel Group hotels, including the Hotel Granvia in Kyoto, Okayama, and Hiroshima; the Crowne Plaza Metropolitan in Tokyo; and Hotel Kurashiki, Nara Hotel, JR Kyushu Hotel Fukuoka, JR Kyushu Hotel Kumamoto, JR Kyushu Hotel Nagasaki, ANA Hotel Clement Takamatsu, and many more. A Japan Rail Pass booklet, which comes with your purchase of a rail pass, lists member hotels (or go to www.jrhotelgroup.com).

hours and 20 minutes on the Shinkansen). You can use it on 5 consecutive days or on any 5 days within a limited time period. It's available, however, only certain times of the year. There are also special passes for senior citizens (Full Moon Pass, valid for married couples with a total age of 88) and for two or three women over age 30 traveling as a group (Nice Midi Pass). For more information, go to "Discount Tickets" at www.japanrail.com. If you qualify, the Japan Rail Pass, however, is more economical than these alternatives.

JAPAN RAIL PASS The Japan Rail Pass is without a doubt the most convenient and most economical way to travel around Japan. With the rail pass, you don't have to worry about buying individual tickets, and you can reserve your seats on all JR trains for free. The rail pass entitles you to unlimited travel on all JR train lines including the Shinkansen (except, regrettably, the Nozomi Super Express), as well as on most JR buses and the JR ferry to Miyajima.

There are several types of rail passes available; make your decision based on your length of stay in Japan and the cities you intend to visit. You might even find it best to combine several passes to cover your travels in Japan, such as a 1-week standard pass for longer journeys, say, to Kyushu, plus a regional pass just for Kyushu. Information on passes is available online at www.japanrailpass.net and www.japanrail.com.

The Standard Pass If you wish to travel throughout Japan, your best bet is to purchase the standard Japan Rail Pass. It's available for ordinary coach class and for the first-class Green Car and is available for travel lasting 1, 2, or 3 weeks. Rates for the ordinary pass (as of Jan 2008) are ¥28,300 ($236/£118) for 7 days, ¥45,100 ($376/£188) for 14 days, and ¥57,700 ($481/£240) for 21 days. Rates for the Green Car are ¥37,800 ($315/£157), ¥61,200 ($510/£255), and ¥79,600 ($663/£332) respectively. Children (ages 6–11) pay half fare. Personally, I have never traveled first-class in Japan and don't consider it necessary. However, during peak travel times (New Year's, Golden Week, and the Obon season in mid-Aug), you may find it easier to reserve a seat in the first-class Green Car, which you can get by paying a surcharge in addition to showing your ordinary pass.

Before You Leave Home The standard Japan Rail Pass is available only to foreigners visiting Japan as tourists and can be purchased only outside Japan. It's available from most travel agents (chances are your travel agent sells them), including Kintetsu International (☎ 800/422-3481; www.kintetsu.com) and JTB USA (☎ 800/235-3523; www.jtbusa.com). If you're flying Japan Airlines (JAL); ☎ 800/525-3663; www.ar.jal.com/en) or All Nippon Airways (ANA); ☎ 800/235-9262; www.anaskyweb.com), you can also purchase a rail pass from them. A full list of authorized travel agents is available at www.japanrail.com.

Upon purchasing your pass, you'll be issued a voucher (called an Exchange Order), which you'll then exchange for the pass itself after you arrive in Japan. Note that once you purchase your Exchange Order, you must exchange it in Japan for the pass itself within 3 months of the date of issue of the Exchange Order. When obtaining your actual pass, you must then specify the date you wish to start using the pass within a 1-month period.

Once You've Arrived In Japan, you can exchange your voucher for a Japan Rail Pass at more than 40 JR stations that have Japan Rail Pass exchange offices, at which time you must present your passport and specify the date you wish to begin using the pass; most offices are open daily from 10am to 6 or 7pm, some even longer.

At both Narita Airport (daily 6:30am–9:45pm) and Kansai International Airport (daily 5:30am–11pm), you can pick up Japan Rail Passes at either the Travel Service Center or the Ticket Office. Other Travel Service Centers or Ticket Offices, all located in JR train stations, include those at Tokyo (daily 5:30am–10:45pm), Ueno, Shinjuku, Ikebukuro, and Shibuya stations in Tokyo; Kyoto Station; Shin-Osaka and Osaka stations; and Hiroshima, Sapporo, Nagoya, Okayama, Takamatsu, Matsuyama, Hakata, Nagasaki, Kumamoto, Miyazaki, and Kagoshima Chuo stations. Stations and their open hours are listed in a pamphlet you'll receive with your voucher.

Regional Passes In addition to the standard Japan Rail Pass above, there are regional rail passes available for ordinary coach class that are convenient for travel in eastern or western Honshu, Kyushu, or Hokkaido. These passes can be purchased before arriving in Japan from the same vendors that sell the standard pass. They can also be purchased inside Japan, usually only within the area covered by the pass but also at Narita airport for some passes. These regional passes are available only to foreign visitors and require that you present your passport to verify your status as a “temporary visitor”; you may also be asked to show your plane ticket. Only one pass per region per visit to Japan is allowed.

If you're arriving by plane at the Kansai Airport outside Osaka and intend to remain in western Honshu, you may wish to opt for one of two different JR-West Passes (www.westjr.co.jp), available at Kansai Airport, Osaka JR station, and other locations. The Kansai Area Pass, which can be used for travel between Osaka, Kyoto, Kobe, Nara, Himeji, and other destinations in the Kansai area, is available as a 1-day pass for ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50), 2-day pass for ¥4,000 ($33/£17), 3-day pass for ¥5,000 ($42/£21), or 4-day pass for ¥6,000 ($50/£25). Travel is restricted to JR rapid and local trains, as well as unreserved seating in limited express trains that operate only between Kansai Airport, Shin-Osaka, and Kyoto (that is, Shinkansen are not included in the pass). Children pay half-price for all passes.

The other JR-West Pass available is the Sanyo Area Pass, which covers a larger area, allows travel via Shinkansen (including the superfast Nozomi) and JR local trains from Osaka as far as Hakata (in the city of Fukuoka on Kyushu), and includes Hiroshima, Okayama, Kurashiki, Himeji, and Kobe. It's available for 4 days for ¥20,000 ($167/£83) and for 8 days for ¥30,000 ($250/£125). Though not as popular as western Honshu, eastern Honshu also offers its own JR-East Pass (www.jreast.co.jp), which includes travel from Tokyo to parts of the Japan Alps and throughout the Tohoku District, including Sendai, Kakunodate, and Aomori via Shinkansen and local JR lines. Passes for travel in ordinary coach cars are available for 5 days for ¥20,000 ($167/£83) and 10 days for ¥32,000 ($266/£133); a 4-day flexible pass (which is valid for any 4 consecutive or nonconsecutive days within a month) costs ¥20,000 ($167/£83). Green Car passes are also available. Passes are available at Narita airport and JR stations in Tokyo, including Tokyo, Shinagawa, and Shinjuku.

If your travels are limited to the island of Kyushu, consider the JR-Kyushu Rail Pass (www.jrkyushu.co.jp), valid for 3 days for ¥13,000 ($108/£54) and for 5 days for ¥16,000 ($133/£67) and available for purchase at Hakata, Nagasaki, Kumamoto, Kagoshima Chuo, Miyazaki, and Beppu JR stations. Likewise, there's a Hokkaido Rail Pass (www.jrhokkaido.co.jp) valid for 3 days of travel for ¥14,000 ($117/£58) or 5 days for ¥18,000 ($150), sold at Narita Airport and Hakodate and Sapporo JR stations.

BY PLANE

Because it takes the better part of a day and night to travel by train from Tokyo down to southern Kyushu or up to northern Hokkaido, you may find it faster—not to mention cheaper if you buy your ticket in advance (see below)—to fly at least one stretch of your journey in Japan. You may, for example, fly internationally into Osaka and then onward to Fukuoka on Kyushu, from where you can take a leisurely 2 weeks to travel by train through Kyushu and Honshu before returning to Osaka. I don't, however, advise flying short distances—say, from Tokyo to Osaka—simply because the time spent getting to and from airports is longer than the time spent traveling by Shinkansen.

Almost all domestic flights from Tokyo leave from the much more conveniently located Haneda Airport. If you're already in Tokyo, you can easily reach Haneda Airport via Airport Limousine Bus, monorail from Hamamatsucho Station on the Yamanote Line, or the Keikyu Line from Shinagawa. If you're arriving on an international flight at Narita Airport, therefore, make sure you know whether a connection to a domestic flight is at Narita or requires a transfer to Haneda Airport via the Airport Limousine Bus (see chapter 4 for details).

Two major domestic airlines are Japan Airlines (JAL; ☎ 0120/25-5971 toll-free in Japan; www.jal.co.jp; see "Getting There," earlier in this chapter, for U.S. phone numbers and websites); and All Nippon Airways (ANA; ☎ 0120/029-222 toll-free in Japan; www.anaskyweb.com). Regular fares with these two companies are generally the same no matter which airline you fly domestically. However, fares change often, with the most expensive fares charged for peak season including New Year's, Golden Week, and summer vacation. However, bargains do exist. Some flights early in the day or late at night may be cheaper than flights during peak time; you can also save by purchasing tickets 7 days in advance and even more by purchasing them 21 days in advance (ask carriers for details). Round-trip tickets provide a slight discount.

Otherwise, there are small, regional airlines that generally offer fares that are cheaper than the standard full fare charged by JAL or ANA. These include Skymark (☎ 03/3433-7670 in Tokyo, or 092/736-3131 in Fukuoka), operating out of Fukuoka on the island of Kyushu; Skynet Asia Airways (☎ 03/5733-5859 in Tokyo), connecting Nagasaki, Kumamoto, Kagoshima, and Miyazaki on Kyushu with Tokyo; and Air Do (☎ 0120/0570-333 toll-free), out of Sapporo on the island of Hokkaido.

Although it's subject to change, the regular fare for a one-way flight aboard JAL from Tokyo to Kagoshima, for example, which takes 1 hour and 45 minutes, is ¥35,700 ($296/£148) during the regular season, though discounts may be available for advance purchases of certain flights. Skynet Asia Airway's regular fare is ¥28,500 ($238/£119). For comparison, a train ticket between the two cities is ¥26,980 ($225/£112) one-way for a trip that takes 9 hours, not including transfers. Where airline fares are provided in this book (see individual city listings), fares are for regular tickets during the regular season. Tickets can be purchased directly through the airline or at a travel agent such as Japan Travel Bureau (JTB), which has offices virtually everywhere in Japan.

SAVING MONEY ON AIRFARES

Purchasing domestic tickets in advance in connection with your international flight is by far the most economical way to go. JAL's "oneworld Yokoso/Visit Japan Fare" ticket, purchased in conjunction with a flight to Japan with JAL or one of its oneworld partners (such as American Airlines) and sold only outside Japan, provides discount fares of ¥10,000

($83/£42) per flight for domestic travel to 42 cities in Japan served by JAL and its two subsidiaries, JAL Express and Japan TransOcean Air.

Visitors flying other airlines into Japan can take advantage of JAL's "Welcome to Japan Fare," which provides discounts on JAL's domestic flights regardless of which international airline is used to reach Japan. Also sold only outside Japan, it costs ¥13,650 ($114/£57) per flight, with a minimum of two flights required. ANA offers a similar program, with its Star Alliance Japan Airpass ticket costing ¥11,000 ($92/£46) per flight if you fly ANA or one of its Star Alliance partners such as United Airlines and its Visit Japan Fare for ¥13,000 ($108/£54) per ticket if you don't. Note that there are blackout dates for all these fares, mostly in mid-March, during summer vacation (mid-July through Aug), and New Year's, and that fares above exclude airport taxes and insurance. You should first purchase your international ticket and then contact JAL or ANA to purchase and book your Japan domestic tickets.

BY BUS

Buses often go where trains don't and thus may be the only way for you to get to the more remote areas of Japan, such as Shirakawago in the Japan Alps. In Hokkaido, Tohoku, Kyushu, and other places, buses are used extensively.

Some intercity buses require you to make reservations or purchase your ticket in advance at the ticket counter at the bus terminal. For others (especially local buses), when you board a bus you'll generally find a ticket machine by the entry door. Take a ticket, which is numbered with a digital board displayed at the front of the bus. The board shows the various fares, which increase with the distance traveled. You pay your fare when you get off.

In addition to serving the remote areas of the country, long-distance buses (called chokuyori basu) also operate between major cities in Japan and offer the cheapest mode of transportation. Although Japan Railways operates almost a dozen bus routes eligible for JR Rail Pass coverage, the majority of buses are run by private companies. Some long-distance buses travel during the night and offer reclining seats and toilets, thus saving passengers the price of a night's lodging. For example, special buses depart from Tokyo Station's Yaesu south side every night for Kyoto (¥8,180/$68/£34), Osaka (¥8,610/$72/£36), and Hiroshima (¥11,600/$97/£48), arriving at those cities' main train stations the next morning. Night buses also depart from Shinjuku Station's new south exit or from the Shinjuku Highway Bus Terminal (a 3-min. walk from Shinjuku Station's west exit) bound for Kyoto, Nagoya, Okayama, and beyond. Night buses also travel from these cities in reverse back to Tokyo. Slight discounts are given for round-trip travel completed within 6 to 10 days, depending on the city. There are also day buses traveling between Tokyo and Kyoto or Osaka for ¥6,000 ($50/£25). Long-distance bus tickets can be purchased at View Plazas at major JR stations (for JR buses), at travel agencies such as JTB, or at bus terminals.

For more information on local and long-distance bus service, refer to individual cities covered in this guide or contact the Tourist Information Center in Tokyo (see "Visitor Information" in chapter 4).

BY CAR

With the exception, perhaps, of Izu Peninsula, the Tohoku region, and Hokkaido, driving is not recommended for visitors wishing to tour Japan. Driving is British style (on the left side of the road), which may be hard for those not used to it; traffic can be horrendous; and driving isn't even economical. Not only is gas expensive, but all of Japan's expressways charge high tolls—the one-way toll from Tokyo to Kyoto is almost the same price as a ticket to Kyoto on the Shinkansen. And whereas the Shinkansen takes only 3 hours to get to Kyoto, driving can take about 8 hours. In addition, you may encounter few signs in English in remote areas. Driving in cities is even worse: Streets are often hardly wide enough for a rickshaw, let alone a car, and many roads don't have sidewalks so you have to dodge people, bicycles, and telephone poles. Free parking is hard to find, and garages are expensive. Except in remote areas, it just doesn't make sense to drive.

There are approximately a dozen major car-rental companies in Tokyo alone, with branch offices throughout the city and at the Narita Airport, including Nippon Rent-A-Car Service (☎ 03/3485-7196 for the English Service Desk), Toyota Rent-A-Car (☎ 03/5954-8008 in Tokyo, or 0070-8000-10000 toll-free), Nissan Rent-A-Car (☎ 0120/00-4123), and Avis (☎ 03/6436-6404); these companies also have branches throughout Japan. In almost every city with a JR train station, there is also a JR Eki Rent-A-Car office, offering 20% discounts on train fares booked in conjunction with car rentals; you can reserve these cars at any JR Travel Service Center (located in train stations) anywhere in Japan. Rates vary, but the average cost for 24 hours with unlimited mileage averages about ¥10,500 ($87/£44) for a subcompact including insurance but not gas; in some tourist areas, such as Hokkaido, rates are more expensive in peak season.

If you do intend to drive in Japan, you'll need either an international or a Japanese driving license. Remember, cars are driven on the left side of the road, and signs on all major highways are written in both Japanese and English. It is against the law to drink alcohol and drive, and you must wear seat belts at all times. Be sure to purchase a bilingual map, as back roads often have names of towns written in Japanese only. Recommended is the Shobunsha Road Atlas Japan, available in bookstores that sell English-language books; it also contains maps of major cities, including Tokyo, Sapporo, Hiroshima, and others.

BREAKDOWNS/ASSISTANCE The Japan Automobile Federation (JAF) maintains emergency telephone boxes along Japan's major arteries to assist drivers whose cars have broken down or drivers who need help. Calls from these telephones are free and will connect you to JAF's operation center.

BY FERRY

Because Japan is an island nation, an extensive ferry network links the string of islands. Although travel by ferry takes longer, it's also cheaper and can be a pleasant, relaxing experience. For example, you can take a ferry from Osaka to Beppu (on Kyushu), with fares starting at ¥8,800 ($73/£37) for the 11-hour trip. Contact the Tourist Information Center (see "Visitor Information" in chapter 4) for more details concerning ferries, prices, schedules, and telephone numbers of the various ferry companies.

13 Tips on Accommodations

Accommodations available in Japan range from Japanese-style inns to large Western-style hotels, in all price categories. Although you can travel throughout Japan without making reservations beforehand, it's essential to book in advance if you're traveling during peak travel seasons and is recommended at other times (see "When to Go," earlier in this chapter for peak travel times). If you arrive in a town without reservations, most local tourist offices—generally located in or near the main train station—will find accommodations for you at no extra charge. Note that in popular resort areas, most accommodations raise their rates during peak times. Some also charge more on weekends.

A note on reservations: When making reservations at Japanese-style accommodations and small business hotels, it's usually best if the call is conducted in Japanese or by fax or e-mail if available, as written English is always easier for most Japanese to understand. First-class hotels, however, always have English-speaking staff, as do many of the Japanese inns recommended in this guide.

A note about taxes and service charges: A 5% consumption tax is included in all hotel rates, including those given in this book. Furthermore, upper-end hotels and some moderately priced hotels also add a 10% to 15% service charge to their published rates, while expensive ryokan will add a 10% to 20% service charge. No service charge is levied at business hotels, pensions, and minshuku (accommodations in a private home) for the simple reason that no services are provided. In resort areas with hot-spring spas, a spa (onsen) tax of ¥150 ($1.25/60p) is added per night. Tokyo levies its own local hotel tax (¥100–¥200/85¢–$1.65/40p–80p per person per night). Unless otherwise stated, the prices given in this guide include all consumption taxes and service charge, but not onsen or local hotel tax.

JAPANESE-STYLE INNS

Although an overnight stay in a traditional Japanese inn (ryokan) can be astoundingly expensive, it's worth the splurge at least once during your stay. Nothing quite conveys the simplicity and beauty—indeed the very atmosphere—of old Japan more than these inns with their gleaming polished wood, tatami floors, rice-paper sliding doors, and meticulously pruned gardens. Personalized service by kimono-clad hostesses and exquisitely prepared kaiseki meals are the trademarks of such inns, some of which are of ancient vintage. Indeed, staying in one is like taking a trip back in time.

If you want to experience a Japanese-style inn but can't afford the prices of a full-service ryokan, a number of alternatives are described below. Although they don't offer the same personalized service, beautiful setting, or memorable cuisine, they do offer the chance to sleep on a futon in a simple tatami room and, in some cases, eat Japanese meals.

RYOKAN Ryokan developed during the Edo Period, when feudal lords (daimyo) were required to travel to and from Edo (present-day Tokyo) every 2 years. They always traveled with a full entourage including members of their family, retainers, and servants. The best ryokan, of course, were reserved for the daimyo and members of the imperial family. Some of these exist today, passed down from generation to generation.

Traditionally, ryokan are small, only one or two stories high, contain about 10 to 30 rooms, and are made of wood with a tile roof. Most guests arrive at their ryokan around 3 or 4pm. The entrance is often through a gate and small garden; upon entering, you're met by a bowing woman in a kimono. Take off your shoes, slide on the proffered plastic slippers, and follow your hostess down the long wooden corridors until you reach the sliding door of your room. After taking off your slippers, step into your tatami room, almost void of furniture except for a low table in the middle of the room, floor cushions, an antique scroll hanging in an alcove (tokonoma), and a simple flower arrangement. Best of all is the view past rice-paper sliding screens of a Japanese landscaped garden with bonsai, stone lanterns, and a meandering pond filled with carp. Notice there's no bed in the room.

Almost immediately, your hostess serves you welcoming hot tea and a sweet at your low table so you can sit there for a while, recuperate from your travels, and appreciate the view, the peace, and the solitude. Next comes your hot bath, either in your own room (if you have one) or in the communal bath. Since many ryokan are clustered around onsen, many offer the additional luxury of bathing in thermal baths, including outdoor baths. (For bathing, be sure to follow the procedure outlined in “Minding Your Ps & Qs,” in appendix A—soaping and rinsing before getting into the tub.) After bathing and soaking away all travel fatigue, aches, and pains, change into your yukata, a cotton kimono provided by the ryokan. You can wear your yukata throughout the ryokan, even to its restaurant (in hotels, however, never wear a yukata outside your room).

When you return to your room, you'll find the maid ready to serve your kaiseki dinner, an elaborate spread that is the highlight of a ryokan stay. It generally consists of locally grown vegetables, raw fish (sashimi), grilled or baked fish, tempura, and various regional specialties, all spread out on many tiny plates; the menu is determined by the chef. Admire how each dish is in itself a delicate piece of artwork; it all looks too wonderful to eat, but finally hunger takes over. If you want, you can order sake or beer to accompany your meal (but you'll pay extra for drinks).

After you've finished eating, your maid will return to clear away the dishes and to lay out your bed. The bed is really a futon, a kind of two-layered mattress with quilts, and is laid out on the tatami floor. The next morning, the maid will wake you, put away the futon, and serve a breakfast of fish, pickled vegetables, soup, dried seaweed, rice, and other dishes. Feeling rested, well fed, and pampered, you're then ready to pack your bags and pay your bill. Your hostess sees you off at the front gate, smiling and bowing as you set off for the rest of your travels.

Such is life at a good ryokan. Sadly, however, the number of upper-class ryokan diminishes each year. Unable to compete with more profitable high-rise hotels, many ryokan in Japan have closed down, especially in large cities; very few remain in such cities as Tokyo and Osaka. If you want to stay in a Japanese inn, it's best to do so in Kyoto or at a resort or hot-spring spa.

In addition, although ideally a ryokan is an old wooden structure that once served traveling daimyo or was perhaps the home of a wealthy merchant, many today—especially those in hot-spring resort areas—are actually modern concrete affairs with as many as 100 or more rooms, with meals served in communal dining rooms. What they lack in intimacy and personal service, however, is made up for with cheaper prices and such amenities as modern bathing facilities and perhaps a bar and outdoor recreational facilities. Most guest rooms are fitted with a TV, a telephone, a safe for locking up valuables, and a cotton yukata, as well as such amenities as soap, shampoo, a razor, a toothbrush, and toothpaste.

Rates in a ryokan are always per person rather than per room and include breakfast and dinner. Thus, while rates may seem high, they're actually competitively priced compared to what you'd pay for a hotel room and comparable meals in a restaurant. Although rates can vary from ¥9,000 to an astonishing ¥150,000 ($75–$1,250/£37–£625) per person, the average cost is generally ¥12,000 to ¥20,000 ($100–$167/£50–£83). Even within a single ryokan the rates can vary greatly, depending on the room you choose, the dinner courses you select, and the number of people in your room. If you're paying the highest rate, you can be certain you're getting the best room, the best view of the garden or perhaps even your own private garden, and a much more elaborate meal than lower-paying guests. All the rates for ryokan in this book are based on double occupancy; if there are more than two of you in one room, you can generally count on a slightly lower per-person rate; small children who sleep in the same bed as their parents often receive a discount as well. Although most Japanese would never dream of checking into an exclusive ryokan solo, lone travelers may be able to secure a room if it's not peak season.

Although I heartily recommend you try spending at least 1 night in a ryokan, there are a number of disadvantages to this style of accommodation. The most obvious problem is that you may find it uncomfortable sitting on the floor. And because the futon is put away during the day, there's no place to lie down for an afternoon nap or rest, except on the hard, tatami-covered floor. In addition, some of the older ryokan, though quaint, are bitterly cold in the winter and may have only Japanese-style toilets. As for breakfast, you might find it difficult to swallow raw egg, rice, and seaweed in the morning. (I've even been served grilled grasshopper—quite crunchy.) Sometimes you can get a Western-style breakfast if you order it the night before, but more often than not the fried or scrambled eggs will arrive cold, leading you to suspect they were cooked right after you ordered them.

A ryokan is also quite rigid in its schedule. You're expected to arrive sometime between 3 and 5pm, take your bath, and then eat at around 6 or 7pm. Breakfast is served early, usually by 8am, and checkout is by 10am. That means you can't sleep in, and because the maid is continually coming in and out, you have a lot less privacy than you would in a hotel.

Another drawback of the ryokan is that some will not take you. They simply do not want to deal with the problems inherent in accepting a foreign guest, including the language barrier and differing customs. I've seen a number of beautiful old ryokan I'd like to include in this book, but I've been turned away at the door. Sadly, I've also lost ryokan that once accepted foreigners but have stopped doing so following unacceptable behavior (such as climbing in the window at midnight). In any case, those recommended in the pages that follow do welcome Westerners.

You should always make a reservation if you want to stay in a first-class ryokan (and even in most medium-priced ones), because the chef has to shop for and prepare your meals. The ryokan staff members often do not look kindly upon unannounced strangers turning up on their doorstep (though I did this on a weekday trip to Nikko without any problems at all). You can make a reservation for a ryokan through any travel agency in Japan or by contacting a ryokan directly. You may be required to pay a deposit. For more information on ryokan in Japan, including destinations not covered in this guide, pick up the Japan Ryokan Guide at one of the Tourist Information Centers in Japan, which lists some 1,400 members of the Japan Ryokan Association (☎ 03/3231-5310); or go online at www.ryokan.or.jp.

JAPANESE INN GROUP If you want the experience of staying in a Japanese-style room but cannot afford the extravagance of a ryokan, you might consider staying in one of the participating members of the Japanese Inn Group—an organization of more than 80 Japanese-style inns and hotels throughout Japan offering inexpensive lodging and catering largely to foreigners. Although you may balk at the idea of staying at a place filled mainly with foreigners, keep in mind that many inexpensive Japanese-style inns are not accustomed to guests from abroad and may be quite reluctant to take you in. I have covered many Japanese Inn Group members in this book over the years and have found the owners for the most part to be an exceptional group of friendly people eager to offer foreigners the chance to experience life on tatami and futons. In many cases, these are good places in which to exchange information with other world travelers, and they are popular with both young people and families.

Although many of the group members call themselves ryokan, they are not ryokan in the true sense of the word, because they do not offer the trademark personalized service or the beautiful setting common to ryokan. However, they do offer simple tatami rooms that generally come with TVs and air conditioners; most have towels and cotton yukata. Some offer Western-style rooms as well, and/or rooms with private bathrooms. Facilities generally include a coin-operated washer and dryer and a public bath. The average cost of a 1-night stay is about ¥4,500 to ¥8,000 ($37–$67/£19–£33) per person, without meals. Breakfast is usually available if you pay extra; dinner is also sometimes available.

You can view member inns at www.jpinn.com. Or, upon your arrival in Tokyo, head to the Tourist Information Center for the free pamphlet called Japanese Inn Group. Make reservations directly with the inn in which you wish to stay (most have faxes and e-mail). In some cases, you'll be asked to pay a deposit (most accept American Express, MasterCard, and Visa). Many member inns belong to the Welcome Inn Group as well (see "Finding a Hotel or Inn," below), which means you can also make reservations through one of the methods described there.

MINSHUKU Technically, a minshuku is inexpensive Japanese-style lodging in a private home—the Japanese version of a bed-and-breakfast. Usually located in tourist areas, rural settings, or small towns, minshuku can range from thatched farmhouses and rickety old wooden buildings to modern concrete structures. Because minshuku are family-run affairs, there's no personal service, which means you may be expected to lay out your own futon at night, stow it away in the morning, and tidy up your room. Most also do not supply a towel or yukata, nor do they have rooms with a private bathroom. There is, however, a public bathroom, and meals, included in the rates, are served in a communal dining room. Since minshuku cater primarily to domestic travelers, they're often excellent places to meet Japanese. Keep in mind, however, that many minshuku owners have day jobs, so it's important for guests to be punctual for meals and checkout.

Officially, what differentiates a ryokan from a minshuku is the level of service and corresponding price, but the differences are sometimes very slight. I've stayed in cheap ryokan providing almost no service and in minshuku too large and modern to be considered private homes. The average per-person cost for 1 night in a minshuku, including two meals, is generally ¥6,000 to ¥9,000 ($50–$75/£25–£37).

Reservations for minshuku should be made directly with the establishment. Or, contact the Minshuku Network Japan (☎ 0120/07-6556; www.minshuku.jp) for a reservation in one of its 3,000 member minshuku throughout Japan.

KOKUMIN SHUKUSHA A kokumin shukusha can be translated as a People's Lodge—public lodging found primarily in national parks and resort and vacation areas. Established by the government, there are more than 300 of these facilities throughout Japan. Catering largely to Japanese school groups and families, they offer basic, Japanese-style rooms at an average daily rate of about ¥8,000 to ¥9,000 ($67–$75/£33–£37) per person, including two meals. Since they're usually full during the summer, peak seasons, holidays, and weekends, reservations are a must and can be made directly at the facility or through a travel agency; many are also in the Directory of Welcome Inns (see “Finding a Hotel or Inn,” below). There are also 36 so-called National Park Resort Villages (nicknamed Qkamura) located exclusively in national parks (www.qkamura.or.jp). The drawback for many of these lodges is that because they’re often located in national parks and scenic spots, the best way to reach them is by car.

SHUKUBO These are lodgings in a Buddhist temple, similar to inexpensive ryokan, except they’re attached to temples and serve vegetarian food. There’s usually an early-morning service at 6am, which you’re welcome—in some shukubo, required—to join. Probably the best place to experience life in a temple is at Mount Koya (see chapter 9). Prices at shukubo generally range from about ¥7,000 to ¥15,000 ($58–$125/£29–£62) per person, including two meals.

WESTERN-STYLE ACCOMMODATIONS

Western-style lodgings range from luxurious first-class hotels to inexpensive ones catering primarily to Japanese businessmen.

When selecting and reserving your hotel room, contact the hotel directly to inquire about rates, even if a North American toll-free 800 number is provided; sometimes there are special packages, such as weekend or honeymoon packages, that central reservation desks will not be aware of. Special rates are also often available only through the hotel’s website. In any case, always ask what kinds of rooms are available. Almost all hotels in Japan offer a wide range of rooms at various prices, with room size the overwhelming factor in pricing. Other aspects that often have a bearing on rates include bed size, floor height (higher floors are more expensive), and in-room amenities. Rooms with views—whether of the sea or a castle—are also generally more expensive. In Japan, a twin room refers to a room with twin beds, and a double room refers to one with a double (or larger) bed; most hotels charge more for a twin room, but others charge more for doubles. Since Japanese couples generally prefer twin beds, doubles are often in short supply, especially in business hotels. A Hollywood twin means two twin beds pushed together side by side.

Some of the upper-priced hotels also offer executive floors, which are generally on the highest floors and may offer such perks as a private lounge with separate check-in, more in-room amenities, complimentary breakfast and evening cocktails, extended checkout time, and privileges that can include free use of the health club. At just a few thousand yen more than regular rates, these can be quite economical.

When making your reservation, therefore, inquire about the differences in room categories and rates and what they entail. Once you decide on the type of room you want, ask for the best in that category. For example, if you want a standard room, and deluxe rooms start on the 14th floor, ask for a standard on the 13th floor, which may give better views than standards on the 10th. In addition, be specific about the kind of room you want, whether it’s a nonsmoking room, a room with a view of Mount Fuji, or a room with Internet connections for your laptop.

Be sure to give your approximate time of arrival, especially if it’s after 6pm when they might give your room away. Check-in ranges from about 1 or 2pm in first-class hotels to 3 or 4pm for business hotels. Checkout is generally about 10am for business hotels and 11am or noon for upper-range hotels. In any case, it’s perfectly acceptable to leave luggage with the front desk or bell captain if you arrive early or want to sightsee after checking out.

HOTELS Both first-class and mid-priced hotels in Japan are known for excellent service and cleanliness. The first-class hotels in the larger cities can compete with the best hotels in the world and offer a wide range of services, from health clubs and aesthetic spas with massage services to business centers and top-class restaurants and shopping arcades. Unfortunately, health clubs and swimming pools usually cost extra—anywhere from ¥1,050 to an outrageous ¥5,000 ($8.75–$42/£4.35–£21) per single use. In addition, outdoor pools are generally open only in July and August. Rooms in upper-range hotels and many moderate hotels in large cities catering to tourists come with such standard features as a minibar, bilingual cable TV with pay movies and English-language channels like CNN or BBC, high-speed dataports or wireless connections (often for free), clock, a radio, yukata, a hot-water pot and tea (and occasionally coffee, though you usually have to pay extra for it), a hair dryer, and a private bathroom with a tub/shower combination. (Since Japanese are used to soaping down and rinsing off before bathing, it would be rare to find tubs without showers; similarly, showers without tubs are practically nonexistent in this nation of bathers.) Virtually all hotels nowadays also have “Washlet” toilets, which are combination toilets and spray bidets with a controllable range of speeds and temperatures. Because they’re accustomed to foreigners, most hotels in this category employ an English-speaking staff and offer nonsmoking floors or rooms. Services provided include room service, same-day laundry and dry cleaning, and English-language newspapers such as the Japan Times delivered free to your room. Note that in medium-range hotels, same-day laundry service is not available Sundays and holidays and you must turn in your laundry by 10am to receive it by 5pm that day.

The most expensive hotels in Japan are in Tokyo and Osaka, where you’ll pay at least ¥30,000 ($250/£125) for a double or twin room in a first-class hotel and ¥16,000 to ¥29,000 ($133–$242/£67–£121) for the same in a midpriced hotel. Outside the major cities, rooms for two people range from about ¥18,000 to ¥25,000 ($150–$208/£75–£104) for first-class hotels and ¥12,000 to ¥16,000 ($100–$133/£50–£67) for midpriced hotels.

Although some internationally known chains have a presence in Japan, including Four Seasons (www.fourseasons.com), Sheraton (www.sheraton.com), Hilton (www.hilton.com), Hyatt (www.hyatt.com), InterContinental (www.ichotels-group.com), Marriott (www.marriott.com), Radisson (www.radisson.com), Ritz-Carlton (www.ritzcarlton.com), and Westin (www.starwoodhotels.com/westin/index.html), Japanese chains naturally dominate, including New Otani (www1.newotani.co.jp/en), Nikko and JAL Hotels (associated with Japan Airlines; www.jalhotels.com), Prince (www.princejapan.com), and the Japan Railways Group, which provides discounts to holders of the Japan Rail Pass (www.jrhotelgroup.com).

BUSINESS HOTELS Catering traditionally to traveling Japanese businessmen, a “business hotel” is a no-frills establishment with tiny, sparsely furnished rooms, most of them singles but usually with some twin or double rooms also available. Primarily just places to crash for the night, these rooms usually have everything you need, but in miniature form—minuscule bathroom, tiny

Tips for Saving on Your Hotel Room

Although Japanese hotels have traditionally remained pretty loyal to their published rack rates, which are always available at the front desk, the recession has opened possibilities for bargains.

- Always ask politely whether a room less expensive than the first one mentioned is available. Since there are usually many categories, ask what the difference is, say, between a standard twin and a superior twin. If there are two of you, ask whether a double or a twin room is cheaper. Ask whether there are corporate discounts. Find out the hotel's policy on children—do children stay free in the room or is there a special rate?
- Contact the hotel directly. In addition to calling a hotel's toll-free number, call the hotel directly to see where you can get the best deal.
- Check the Internet. If the hotel has a website, check to see whether discounts or special promotions are offered. Some hotels offer discounts exclusively through the Internet.
- Ask about promotions and special plans. Hotels frequently offer special "plans," including "Spring Plans," "Ladies' Plans," and even "Shopping Plans" that provide cheaper rates and services.
- Remember the law of supply and demand. Resort hotels are more crowded and therefore more expensive on weekends and during peak travel periods such as Golden Week. Discounts, therefore, are often available for midweek and off-season stays. Business hotels, on the other hand, are sometimes cheaper on weekends.
- Ask about hotel membership plans. Some chain business hotels offer hotel memberships with discounts on meals and free stays after a certain number of nights. Others, such as the New Otani, Okura, and the Imperial in Tokyo, allow free use of the hotel swimming pool simply if you become a member at no extra charge. Ask the concierge or front desk.
- Ask the local tourist office whether there's a Welcome Card. Several tourist regions around Japan, including Fukuoka, Mount Fuji, and Hiroshima, offer a free Welcome Card to foreign visitors, providing discounts on room rates in participating hotels. Find out more about Welcome Cards at JNTO's website (www.jnto.go.jp/eng/arrange/essential/welcome.html#10).

bathub/shower, small bed (or beds), and barely enough space to unpack your bags. If you're a large person, you may have trouble sleeping in a place like this. There are no bellhops, no room service, and sometimes not even a lobby or coffee shop, although usually there are vending machines selling beer, soda, cigarettes, and snacks. Some business hotels do not have nonsmoking rooms, though this is slowly changing. The advantages of staying in business hotels are price—starting as low as ¥6,000 or ¥7,000 ($50/£25 or $58/£29) for a single—and location—usually near major train and subway stations. Check-in is usually not until 3 or 4pm, and checkout is usually at 10am; you can leave your bags at the front desk.

As for business-hotel chains, I'm partial to the Toyoko Inn chain (www.toyoko-inn.com), which boasts more than 160 locations around Japan. Often managed by women, they offer minuscule rooms outfitted with about everything you need, including free Internet access, and have raised the bar in business-hotel amenities by adding lobby computers with free Internet access, free domestic calls from lobby phones, free nightly in-room movies (often in English), and free Japanese breakfast. Other chains to look for are Tokyu Hotels (www.tokyuhotels.co.jp), including its budget Tokyu Inns, all with specially designed Ladies Rooms with female-oriented toiletries and amenities, Washington Hotels (www.wh-rsv.com), and the Sunroute Hotel Chain (www.sunroute.jp).

PENSIONS Pensions are like minshuku, except that accommodations are Western-style with beds instead of futons, and the two meals served are usually Western. Often managed by a young couple or a young staff, they cater to young Japanese and are most often located in ski resorts and in the countryside, sometimes making access a problem. Averaging 10 guest rooms, many seem especially geared to young Japanese women and are thus done up in rather feminine-looking decor with lots of pinks and flower prints. The average cost is ¥8,000 to ¥10,000 ($67–$87/£33–£43) per person per night, including two meals.

YOUTH HOSTELS There are some 350 youth hostels in Japan, most of them privately run and operating in locations ranging from temples to concrete blocks. There's no age limit (though children younger than 4 may not be accepted), and although most of them require a youth hostel membership card, they let foreigners stay without one at no extra charge or for ¥600 ($5/£2.50) extra per night (after 6 nights you automatically become a YH member). Youth hostels are reasonable, averaging about ¥3,500 ($29/£14) per day including two meals, and can be reserved in advance. However, there are usually quite a few restrictions, such as a 9 or 10pm curfew, a lights-out policy shortly thereafter, an early breakfast time, and closed times through the day, generally from about 10am to 3pm. In addition, rooms generally have many bunk beds or futons, affording little privacy. On the other hand, they're certainly the cheapest accommodations in Japan.

Because youth hostels are often inconveniently located, I have included only a couple in this guide, but if you plan on staying almost exclusively in hostels, pick up a pamphlet called "Youth Hostel Map of Japan," available at the Tourist Information Centers in Japan, or check www.jyh.or.jp. For youth hostel membership in the U.S., contact Hostelling International USA (☎ 301/495-1240; www.hiusa.org). Cards cost $28 for adults, $18 for seniors older than 54, and are free for children younger than 18.

CAPSULE HOTELS Capsule hotels, which became popular in the early 1980s, are used primarily by Japanese businessmen who have spent an evening out drinking and missed the last train home—costing about ¥4,000 ($33/£16) per person, a capsule hotel is sometimes cheaper than a taxi to the suburbs. Units are small—no larger than a coffin and consisting of a bed, a private TV, an alarm clock, and a radio—and are usually stacked two deep in rows down a corridor; the only thing separating you from your probably inebriated neighbor is a curtain. A cotton kimono and a locker are provided, and bathrooms and toilets are communal. Most capsule hotels do not accept women, but those that do have separate facilities.

INTERNATIONAL VILLAS International Villas are such a great deal that I want to give them special mention here. These small country inns, financed and maintained by the Okayama prefectural government, are small, with a half-dozen or so guest rooms (usually without private bathrooms), and come equipped with public bathrooms and kitchen facilities. No meals are served, but you can cook your own or visit one of the local restaurants. There are five International Villas in Okayama Prefecture, most of them in small villages or rural settings with mostly Western-style twins. An overnight stay is ¥3,000 ($25/£13) per person for nonmembers and ¥2,500 ($21/£11) for members, but membership costs only ¥500 ($4.15/£2.05) and is available at any villa. See “Okayama: Gateway to Shikoku,” in chapter 9.

LOVE HOTELS Finally, a word about Japan’s so-called “love hotels.” Usually found close to entertainment districts and along major highways, such hotels do not provide sexual services themselves; rather, they offer rooms for rent by the hour to couples. You’ll know that you’ve wandered into a love-hotel district when you notice hourly rates posted near the front door, though gaudy structures shaped like ocean liners or castles are a dead giveaway. Because many of them have reasonable overnight rates as well, I have friends who, finding themselves out too late and too far from home, have checked into love hotels, solo.

FINDING A HOTEL OR INN

If all my recommendations for a certain city are fully booked, or if you’re traveling to destinations not covered in this guide, there are several ways to find alternative accommodations.

SURFING FOR HOTELS In addition to the online travel booking sites Travelocity, Expedia, Orbitz, and Priceline, you can book hotels through Hotels.com, Quikbook.com, and Trave-lax.net. Other good sources include Asiatravel.com, and Asia-hotels.com. In any case, be sure to compare rates at several booking sites, as well as with individual hotel websites to make sure you’re getting a good deal.

Of course, you’ll also want to check all the websites mentioned earlier, including www.j-hotel.or.jp for members of the Japan Hotel Association, www.ryokan.or.jp for members of the Japan Ryokan Association, www.jpinn.com for members of the Japan Inn Group, and www.minshuku.jp for members of Minshuku Network Japan, as well as the websites for Japanese and foreign hotel chains listed above.

In addition, Japan’s largest online hotel reservations company for budget and moderately priced accommodations is http://travel.rakuten.co.jp/en/index.html. At the top of my list for budget accommodations are also those that are members of Welcome Inns (www.itcj.jp), operated in cooperation with the Japan National Tourist Organization. Some 700 modestly priced accommodations in Japan, including business hotels and Japanese inns, are members of Welcome Inns, all priced at about ¥13,000 ($108/£54) or less for a double. No fee is charged for the reservation service, though you are asked to guarantee your reservation with a credit card.

In any case, it’s always a good idea to get a confirmation number and make a print-out of any online booking transaction.

FINDING A ROOM WHEN YOU’RE IN JAPAN

In addition to booking Welcome Inns via the Internet (see above), you can also book a room by appearing in person at one of the three Tourist Information Centers in Japan—at Narita Airport (in the arrivals lobbies of Terminals 1 and 2); near Yurakucho Station in the heart of Tokyo (see “Visitor Information,” in chapter 4); and at Osaka’s Kansai International Airport (see “Osaka” in chapter 9). Reservations are accepted at the Narita TIC daily from 8am to 7:30pm; at the Tokyo TIC daily from 9 to 11:30am and 1 to 4:30pm; and at the Kansai TIC daily 8:30am to 8pm April to October and 9am to 8:30pm November to March. You can also make Welcome Inn reservations at the Kyoto Tourist Information on the ninth floor of Isetan department store in Kyoto Station (☎ 075/344-3300; daily 10am–12:30pm and 2–5:30pm, closed the second and fourth Tues of every month).

High-end hotels and ryokan can be booked through travel agencies in Japan, including the ubiquitous Japan Travel Bureau.

Finally, if you arrive at your destination without accommodations, most major train stations contain a tourist information office or a hotel and ryokan reservation counter where you can book a room. Although policies may differ from office to office, you generally don't have to pay a fee for their services, but you usually do have to pay a percentage of your overnight charge as a deposit. The disadvantage is that you don't see the locale beforehand, and if there's space left at a ryokan even in peak tourist season, there may be a reason for it. Although these offices can be a real lifesaver in a pinch and in most cases may be able to recommend quite reasonable and pleasant places in which to stay, it pays to plan in advance.

14 Tips on Dining, Japanese Style

Whenever I leave Japan, it's the food I miss the most. Sure, there are sushi bars and other Japanese specialty restaurants in many major cities around the world, but they don't offer nearly the variety available in Japan (and often they aren't nearly as good). For just as America has more to offer than hamburgers and steaks and England more than fish and chips, Japan has more than just sushi and teppanyaki. For both the gourmet and the uninitiated, Japan is a treasure-trove of culinary surprises.

JAPANESE CUISINE

Altogether, there are more than a dozen different and distinct types of Japanese cuisine, plus countless regional specialties. A good deal of what you eat may be completely new to you as well as completely unidentifiable. Sometimes Japanese themselves don't even know what they're eating, so varied and so wide is the range of available edibles. The rule is simply to enjoy, and enjoyment begins even before you raise your chopsticks to your mouth.

To the Japanese, presentation of food is as important as the food itself, and dishes are designed to appeal not only to the palate but to the eye. In contrast to the American way of piling as much food as possible onto a single plate, Japanese use lots of small plates, each arranged artfully with bite-size morsels of food. After you've seen what can be done with maple leaves, flowers, bits of bamboo, and even pebbles to enhance the appearance of food, your relationship with what you eat may change forever.

Below are explanations of some of the most common types of Japanese cuisine. Generally, only one type of cuisine is served in a given restaurant—for example, only raw seafood is served in a sushi bar, whereas tempura is featured at a tempura counter. There are exceptions to Keep in mind that first-class restaurants will also add a 10% to 15% service charge, as do most hotel restaurants.

this, especially in regards to raw fish, which is served as an appetizer in many restaurants, and set meals, which contain a variety of dishes. In addition, Japanese restaurants in hotels may offer a great variety, and some Japanese drinking establishments (called izakaya or nomiya) offer a wide range of foods from soups to sushi to skewered pieces of chicken known as yakitori.

For a quick rundown of individual dishes, refer to the food terms in appendix B.

FUGU Known as blowfish, pufferfish, or globefish in English, fugu is one of the most exotic and adventurous foods in Japan: If it's not prepared properly, it means almost certain death for the consumer. In the past decade or so, some 50 people in Japan have died from fugu poisoning, usually because they tried preparing it at home. The fugu's ovaries and intestines are deadly and must be entirely removed without puncturing them. So why eat fugu if it can kill you? Well, for one thing, it's delicious; for another, fugu chefs are strictly licensed by the government and are greatly skilled in preparing fugu dishes. Ways to order it include raw (fugu-sashi), when it's sliced paper-thin and dipped into soy sauce with bitter orange and chives; in a stew (fugu-chiri) cooked with vegetables at your table; and as a rice porridge (fugu-zosui). The season for fresh fugu is October or November through March, but some restaurants serve it throughout the year.

KAISEKI The king of Japanese cuisine, kaiseki is the epitome of delicately and exquisitely arranged food, the ultimate in Japanese aesthetic appeal. It's also among the most expensive meals you can eat and can cost ¥25,000 ($208/£104) or more per person; some restaurants, however, do offer more affordable mini-kaiseki courses. In addition, the better ryokan serve kaiseki, a reason for their high cost. Kaiseki, which is not a specific dish but rather a complete meal, is expensive because much time and skill are involved in preparing each of the many dishes, with the ingredients cooked to preserve natural flavors. Even the plates are chosen with great care to enhance the color, texture, and shape of each piece of food.

Kaiseki cuisine is based on the four seasons, with the selection of ingredients and their presentation dependent on the time of the year. In fact, so strongly does a kaiseki preparation convey the mood of a particular season, the kaiseki gourmet can tell what season it is just by looking at a meal.

A kaiseki meal is usually a lengthy affair with various dishes appearing in set order. First come the appetizer, clear broth, and one uncooked dish. These are followed by boiled, broiled, fried, steamed, heated, and vinegary dishes and finally by another soup, rice, pickled vegetables, and fruit. Although meals vary greatly depending upon the region and what's fresh, common dishes include some type of sashimi, tempura, cooked seasonal fish, and bite-size pieces of various vegetables. Since kaiseki is always a set meal, there's no problem in ordering. Let your budget be your guide.

KUSHIAGE Kushiage foods are breaded and deep-fried on skewers and include chicken, beef, seafood, and lots of seasonal vegetables (snow peas, green pepper, ginkgo nuts, lotus root, and the like). They're served with a slice of lemon and usually a specialty sauce. The result is delicious, and I highly recommend trying it. You'll find it at shops called kushiage-ya (ya means "shop"), which are often open only at night, such as yakitori-ya. Ordering the set meal is easiest, and what you get is often determined by both the chef and the season.

OKONOMIYAKI Okonomiyaki, which originated in Osaka after World War II and literally means "as you like it," is often referred to as Japanese pizza. To me, it's more like a pancake to which meat or fish, shredded cabbage, and vegetables are added, topped with Worcestershire sauce. Since it's a popular offering of street vendors, restaurants specializing in this type of cuisine are very reasonably priced. At some places the cook makes it for you, but at other places it's do-it-yourself, which can be quite fun if you're with a group. Fried Chinese noodles and cabbage (yakisoba) are also usually on offer at okonomiyaki restaurants.

RICE As in other Asian countries, rice has been a Japanese staple for about 2,000 years. In fact, rice is so important to the Japanese diet that gohan means both "rice" and "meal." There are no problems here—everyone is familiar with rice. The difference, however, is that in Japan it's quite sticky, making it easier to pick up with chopsticks. It's also just plain white rice—no salt, no butter, no soy sauce (it's thought to be rather uncouth to dump a lot of sauces in your rice)—though trendy restaurants may sprinkle rice bowls with black sesame seeds, plum powder, or other seasoning. In the old days, not everyone could afford the expensive white kind, which was grown primarily to pay taxes or rent to the feudal lord; the peasants had to be satisfied with a mixture of brown rice, millet, and greens. Today, some Japanese still eat rice three times a day, although they're now just as apt to have bread and coffee for breakfast. Restaurants specializing in organic foods often offer unpolished brown rice (genmai).

ROBATAYAKI Robatayaki refers to restaurants in which seafood and vegetables are cooked over an open charcoal grill. In the olden days, an open fireplace (robata) in the middle of an old Japanese house was the center of activity for cooking, eating, socializing, and simply keeping warm. Therefore, today's robatayaki restaurants are like nostalgia trips back into Japan's past and are often decorated in rustic farmhouse style with the staff dressed in traditional clothing. Robatayaki restaurants—mostly open only in the evening—are popular among office workers for both eating and drinking.

There's no special menu in a robatayaki restaurant—rather, it includes just about everything eaten in Japan. The difference is that most of the food will be grilled. Favorites of mine include ginkgo nuts (ginman), asparagus wrapped in bacon (asparagus bacon), a type of green pepper (piman), mushrooms (various kinds), potatoes (jagabataa), and just about any kind of fish. You can usually get skewers of beef or chicken as well as a stew of meat and potatoes (nikujaga)—delicious during cold winter months. Since ordering is usually a la carte, you'll just have to look and point.

SASHIMI & SUSHI It's estimated that the average Japanese eats 38 kilograms (84 lb.) of seafood a year—that's six times the average American consumption. Although this seafood may be served in any number of ways from grilled to boiled, a great deal of it is eaten raw.

Sashimi is simply raw seafood, usually served as an appetizer and eaten alone (that is, without rice). If you've never eaten it, a good choice to start out with is maguro, or lean tuna, which doesn't taste fishy at all and is so delicate in texture that it almost melts in your mouth. The way to eat sashimi is to first put pungent green horseradish (wasabi) into a small dish of soy sauce and then dip the raw fish in the sauce using your chopsticks (some purists maintain that wasabi and soy sauce shouldn't be mixed, but that's what my Japanese friends do).

Sushi, which is raw fish with vinegared rice, comes in many varieties. The best known is nigiri-zushi: raw fish, seafood, or vegetables placed on top of vinegared rice with just a touch of wasabi. It's also dipped in soy sauce. Use chopsticks or your fingers to eat sushi; remember you're supposed to eat each piece in one bite—quite a mouthful, but about the only way to keep it from falling apart. Another trick is to turn it upside down when you dip it in the sauce, to keep the rice from crumbling.

Also popular is maki-zushi, which consists of seafood, vegetables, or pickles rolled with rice inside a sheet of nori seaweed. Inari-zushi is vinegared rice and chopped vegetables inside a pouch of fried tofu bean curd.

Typical sushi includes tuna (maguro), flounder (hirame), sea bream (tai), squid (ika), octopus (tako), shrimp (ebi), sea eel (anago), and omelet (tamago). Ordering is easy because you usually sit at a counter where you can see all the food in a refrigerated glass case in front of you. You also get to see the sushi chefs at work. The typical meal begins with sashimi and is followed by sushi, but if you don't want to order separately, there are always various set meals or courses (seto). Pickled ginger is part of any sushi meal.

By the way, the least expensive sushi is chirashi, which is a selection of fish, seafood, and usually tamago on a large shallow bowl of rice. Because you get more rice, those of you with bigger appetites may want to order chirashi. Another way to enjoy sushi without spending a fortune is at a kaiten sushi shop, in which plates of sushi circulate on a conveyor belt on the counter—customers reach for the dishes they want and pay for the number of dishes they take.

SHABU-SHABU & SUKIYAKI Until about 100 years ago, Japanese could think of nothing so disgusting as eating the flesh of animals (fish was okay). Considered unclean by the Buddhists, meat consumption was banned by the emperor way back in the 7th century. Imagine the horror of Japanese when they discovered that Western “barbarians” ate bloody meat! It wasn't until Emperor Meiji himself announced more than a century ago his intention to eat meat that Japanese accepted the idea. Today, Japanese have become skilled in preparing a number of beef dishes.

Sukiyaki is among Japan's best-known beef dishes and is one many Westerners seem to prefer. Whenever I'm invited to a Japanese home, this is the meal most often served. Like fondue, it's cooked at the table.

Sukiyaki is thinly sliced beef cooked in a broth of soy sauce, stock, and sake along with scallions, spinach, mushrooms, tofu, bamboo shoots, and other vegetables. All diners serve themselves from the simmering pot and then dip their morsels into their own bowl of raw egg. You can skip the raw egg if you want (most Westerners do), but it adds to the taste and also cools the food down enough so that it doesn't burn.

Shabu-shabu is also prepared at your table and consists of thinly sliced beef cooked in a broth with vegetables in a kind of Japanese fondue. (It's named for the swishing sound the beef supposedly makes when cooking.) The main difference between the two dishes is the broth: Whereas in sukiyaki it consists of stock flavored with soy sauce and sake and is slightly sweet, in shabu-shabu it's relatively clear and has little taste of its own. The pots used are also different.

Using their chopsticks, shabu diners hold pieces of meat in the watery broth until they're cooked. This usually takes only a few seconds. Vegetables are left in longer to swim around until fished out. For dipping, there's either sesame sauce with diced green onions or a more bitter fish stock sauce. Restaurants serving sukiyaki usually serve shabu-shabu as well, and they're usually happy to show you the right way to prepare and eat it.

SHOJIN RYORI Shojin Ryori is the ultimate vegetarian meal, created centuries ago to serve the needs of Zen Buddhist priests and pilgrims. Dishes may include yudofu (simmered tofu) and an array of local vegetables. Kyoto is the best place to experience this type of cuisine.

SOBA & UDON NOODLES Japanese love eating noodles, but I suspect at least part of the fascination stems from the way they eat them—they slurp, sucking in the noodles with gravity-defying speed. What's more, slurping noodles is considered proper etiquette. Fearing it would stick with me forever, however, slurping is a technique I've never quite mastered.

There are many different kinds of noodles, and it seems like almost every region of Japan has its own special style or kind—some are eaten plain, some in combination with other foods such as shrimp tempura, some served hot, some served cold. Soba, made from unbleached buckwheat flour and enjoyed for its nutty flavor and high nutritional value, is eaten hot (kake-soba) or cold (zaru-soba). Udon is a thick white wheat noodle originally from Osaka; it's usually served hot. Somen is a fine white noodle eaten cold in the summer and dunked in a cold sauce. Establishments serving noodles range from stand-up eateries to more refined noodle restaurants with tatami seating. Regardless of where you eat them, noodles are among the least expensive dishes in Japan.

TEMPURA Today a well-known Japanese food, tempura was actually introduced by the Portuguese in the 16th century. Tempura is fish and vegetables coated in a batter of egg, water, and wheat flour and then deep-fried; it's served piping hot. To eat it, dip it in a sauce of soy, fish stock, radish (daikon), and grated ginger; in some restaurants, only some salt, powdered green tea, or a lemon wedge is provided as an accompaniment. Various tempura specialties may include eggplant (nasu), mushroom (shiitake), sweet potato (satsumaimo), small green pepper (shishito), sliced lotus root (renkon), shrimp (ebi), squid (ika), lemon-mint leaf (shiso), and many kinds of fish. Again, the easiest thing to do is to order the set meal, the teishoku.

TEPPANYAKI A teppanyaki restaurant is a Japanese steakhouse. As in the famous Benihana restaurants in many U.S. cities, the chef slices, dices, and cooks your meal of tenderloin or sirloin steak and vegetables on a smooth hot grill right in front of you—though with much less fanfare than his U.S. counterpart. Because beef is relatively new in Japanese cooking, some people categorize teppanyaki restaurants as “Western.” However, I consider this style of cooking and presentation special enough to be referred to as Japanese. Teppanyaki restaurants also tend to be expensive, simply because of the price of beef in Japan, with Kobe beef the most prized.

TONKATSU Tonkatsu is the Japanese word for “pork cutlet,” made by dredging pork in wheat flour, moistening it with egg and water, dipping it in bread crumbs, and deep-frying it in vegetable oil. Since restaurants serving tonkatsu are generally inexpensive, they're popular with office workers and families. The easiest order is the teishoku, which usually features either the pork filet (hirekatsu) or the pork loin (rosukatsu). In any case, your tonkatsu is served on a bed of shredded cabbage, and one or two different sauces will be at your table, a Worcestershire sauce and perhaps a specialty sauce. If you order the teishoku, it will come with rice, miso soup, and pickled vegetables.

UNAGI I'll bet that if you eat unagi without knowing what it is, you'll find it very tasty—and you'll probably be very surprised to find out you've just eaten eel.

Popular as a health food because of its rich protein and high vitamin A content, eel is supposed to help you fight fatigue during hot summer months but is eaten year-round. Broiled eel (kabayaki) is prepared by grilling filet strips over a charcoal fire; the eel is repeatedly dipped in a sweetened barbecue soy sauce while cooking. A favorite way to eat broiled eel is on top of rice, in which case it's called unaju or unagi donburi. Do yourself a favor and try it.

YAKITORI Yakitori is chunks of chicken or chicken parts basted in a sweet soy sauce and grilled over a charcoal fire on thin skewers. Places that specialize in yakitori (yakitori-ya, often identifiable by a red paper lantern outside the front door) are technically not restaurants but drinking establishments; they usually don't open until 5 or 6pm. Most yakitori-ya are popular with workers as inexpensive places to drink, eat, and be merry.

The cheapest way to dine on yakitori is to order a set course, which will often include various parts of the chicken including the skin, heart, and liver. Since this may not be entirely to your taste, you may wish to order a la carte, which is more expensive but gets you exactly what you want. In addition to chicken, other skewered, charcoaled delicacies are usually offered (called kushi-yaki). If you're ordering by the stick, you might want to try chicken breast (sasami), chicken meatballs (tsukune), green peppers (piman), chicken and leeks (negima), mushrooms (shiitake), or ginkgo nuts (ginnan).

OTHER CUISINES During your travels you might also run into these types of Japanese cuisine: Kamameshi is a rice casserole served in individual-size cast-iron pots with different toppings that might include seafood, meat, or vegetables. Donburi is also a rice dish, topped with tempura, eggs, and meat like chicken or pork. Nabe, a stew cooked in an earthenware pot at your table, consists of chicken, sliced beef, pork, or seafood; noodles; and vegetables. Oden is a broth with fish cakes, tofu, eggs, and vegetables, served with hot mustard. If a restaurant advertises that it specializes in Kyodo-Ryori, it serves local specialties for which the region is famous and is often very rustic in decor. A more recent trend is crossover fusion cuisine—creative dishes inspired by ingredients from both sides of the Pacific.

Although technically considered Chinese fast-food restaurants, ramen shops are a big part of dining in Japan. Serving what I consider to be generic Chinese noodles, soups, and other dishes, ramen shops can be found everywhere; they're easily recognizable by red signs, flashing lights, and quite often pictures of various dishes displayed right by the front door. Many are stand-up affairs—just a high counter to rest your bowl on. In addition to noodle and vegetable soup (ramen), you can also get such things as fried noodles (yakisoba) or—my favorite—fried pork dumplings (gyoza). What these places lack in atmosphere is made up for in price: Dishes average ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70), making them some of the cheapest places in Japan for a meal.

DRINKS

All Japanese restaurants serve complimentary green tea with meals. If that's a little too weak, you may want to try sake, an alcoholic beverage made from rice and served either hot or cold. It goes well with most forms of Japanese cuisine. Produced since about the 3rd century, sake varies by region, production method, alcoholic content, color, aroma, and taste. Altogether, there are more than 1,800 sake brewers in Japan producing about 10,000 varieties of sake. Miyabi is a prized classic sake; other popular brands are Gekkeikan, Koshinokanbai, Hakutsuru (meaning White Crane), and Ozeki.

Japanese beer is also very popular. The biggest sellers are Kirin, Sapporo, Asahi, and Suntory, with each brand offering a bewildering variety of brews. They enjoyed exclusive brewing rights until deregulation in the 1990s opened the gates to competition; now microbreweries are found everywhere in Japan. Businessmen are fond of whiskey, which they usually drink with ice and water. Popular in recent years is shochu, an alcoholic beverage usually made from rice but sometimes from wheat, sweet potatoes, or sugar cane. It used to be considered a drink of the lower classes, but sales have increased so much that it's threatening the sake and whiskey businesses. A clear liquid comparable, perhaps, to vodka, it can be consumed straight but is often combined with soda water in a drink called chuhai. My personal favorite is ume-shu, a plum-flavored shochu. But watch out—the stuff can be deadly. Wine, usually available only at restaurants serving Western food, has gained in popularity in recent years, with both domestic and imported brands available. Although cocktails are available in discos, hotel lounges, and fancier bars at rather inflated prices, most Japanese stick with beer, wine, sake, shochu, or whiskey.

TIPS ON DINING IN JAPAN RESTAURANT ESSENTIALS

ORDERING The biggest problem facing the hungry foreigner in Japan is ordering a meal in a restaurant without an English-language menu. This book alleviates the problem to a large extent by giving some sample dishes and prices for recommended restaurants throughout Japan; we've also noted which restaurants offer English-language menus.

One aid to simplified ordering is the common use of plastic food models in glass display cases either outside or just inside the front door of many restaurants.

Sushi, tempura, daily specials, spaghetti—they're all there in mouthwatering plastic replicas along with the corresponding prices. Simply decide what you want and point it out to your waitress.

Unfortunately, not all restaurants in Japan have plastic display cases, especially the more exclusive or traditional ones. In fact, you'd be missing a lot of Japan's best cuisine if you restrict yourself to eating only at places with displays. If there's no display from which to choose, the best thing to do is to look at what people around you are eating and order what looks best. An alternative is to order the teishoku, or daily special meal (also called "set course" or simply "course," especially in restaurants serving Western food); these fixed-price meals consist of a main dish and several side dishes, including soup, rice, and Japanese pickles. Although most restaurants have special set courses for dinner as well, lunch is the usual time for the teishoku, generally from 11 or 11:30am to 1:30 or 2pm.

HOURS In larger cities, the usual open hours for restaurants are from about 11am to 10 or 11pm. Of course, some establishments close earlier at 9pm, while others stay open past midnight; the majority close for a few hours in the afternoon (2–5pm). In big cities such as Tokyo or Osaka, try to avoid the lunchtime rush, which is from noon to 1pm. In rural areas and small towns, restaurants tend to close early, often by 7:30 or 8pm.

Another thing to keep in mind is that the closing time posted for most restaurants is exactly that—everyone is expected to pay his or her bill and leave. A general rule of thumb is that the last order is taken at least a half-hour before closing time, sometimes an hour or more for kaiseki restaurants. To be on the safe side, try to arrive at least an hour before closing time so you have time to relax and enjoy your meal.

ETIQUETTE

UPON ARRIVAL As soon as you're seated in a Japanese restaurant (that is, a restaurant serving Japanese food), you'll be given a wet towel, which will be steaming hot in winter or pleasantly cool in summer. Called an oshibori, it's for wiping your hands. In all but the fancy restaurants, men can get away with wiping their faces as well, but women are not supposed to (I ignore this if it's hot and humid outside). Sadly, some cheaper Japanese restaurants now resort to a paper towel wrapped in plastic, which isn't nearly the same. Oshibori are generally not provided in Western restaurants.

CHOPSTICKS The next thing you'll probably be confronted with is chopsticks (though knives and forks are used in restaurants serving Western food). The proper way to use a pair is to place the first chopstick between the base of the thumb and the top of the ring finger (this chopstick remains stationary) and the second one between the top of the thumb and the middle and index fingers. (This second chopstick is the one you move to pick up food.)

The best way to learn to use chopsticks is to have a Japanese person show you how. It's not difficult, but if you find it impossible, some restaurants might have a fork as well. How proficiently foreigners handle chopsticks is a matter of great curiosity for Japanese, and they're surprised if you know how to use them; even if you were to live in Japan for 20 years, you would never stop receiving compliments on how talented you are with chopsticks.

Chopstick Etiquette If you're taking something from a communal bowl or tray, you're supposed to turn your chopsticks upside down and use the part that hasn't been in your mouth; after transferring the food to your plate, you turn the chopsticks back to their proper position. The exception is shabu-shabu and sukiyaki.

Never point at someone with your chopsticks, and never stick them down vertically into your bowl of rice and leave them there, and never pass anything from your chopsticks to another person's chopsticks—both actions have origins relating to funerary rites but are now mostly considered bad manners.

EATING SOUP & NOODLES If you're eating soup, you won't use a spoon. Rather, you'll pick up the bowl and drink from it. Use your chopsticks to fish out larger pieces of food. It's considered in good taste to slurp with gusto, especially if you're eating noodles. Noodle shops in Japan are always well orchestrated with slurps and smacks.

DRINKING Women should hold their glass or cup with both hands, but men do not. If you're drinking in Japan, the main thing to remember is that you never pour your own glass. Bottles of beer are so large that people often share one. The rule is that in turn, one person pours for everyone else in the group, so be sure to hold up your glass when someone is pouring for you. As the night progresses Japanese get sloppy about this rule. It took me awhile to figure this out, but if no one notices your empty glass, the best thing to do is to pour everyone else a drink so that someone will pour yours. If someone wants to pour you a drink and your glass is full, the proper thing to do is to take a few gulps so that he or she can fill your glass. Because each person is continually filling everyone else's glass, you never know exactly how much you've had to drink, which (depending on how you look at it) is either very good or very bad.

PAYING THE BILL If you go out with a group of friends (not as a visiting guest of honor and not with business associates), it's customary to split the dinner bill equally, even if you all ordered different things. Even foreigners living in Japan adopt the practice of splitting the bill; it certainly makes figuring everyone's share easier, especially since there's no tipping in Japan. But it can be hard on frugal diners on a budget.

OTHER TIPS It's considered bad manners to walk down the street eating or drinking (except at a festival). You'll notice that if a Japanese buys a drink from a vending machine, he'll stand there, gulp it down, and throw away the container before going on. To the chagrin of their elders, young Japanese sometimes ignore this rule.

HOW TO EAT WITHOUT SPENDING A FORTUNE

During your first few days in Japan—particularly if you're in Tokyo—money will seem to flow from your pockets like water. In fact, money has a tendency to disappear so quickly that many people become convinced they must have lost some of it somehow. At this point, almost everyone panics (I've seen it happen again and again), but with time they slowly realize that because prices are markedly different here (steeper), a bit of readjustment in thinking and habits is necessary. Coffee, for example, is something of a luxury, and some Japanese are astonished at the thought of drinking four or five cups a day. Here are some tips for getting the most for your yen.

BREAKFAST Buffet breakfasts are popular at Japanese hotels and are often an inexpensive way to eat your fill. Otherwise, coffee shops offer what's called "morning service" until 10 or 11am; it generally consists of a cup of coffee, a small salad, a boiled egg, and the thickest slice of toast you've ever seen for about ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70). That's a real bargain when you consider that just one cup of coffee can cost ¥250 to ¥500 ($2.10–$4.15/£1.05–£2.05). (Except at most hotel breakfast buffets, there's no such thing as the bottomless cup in Japan.) There are many coffee-shop chains in Japan, including Doutour, Pronto, and an ever-expanding Starbucks (700 in Japan at last count).

SET LUNCHES Eat your biggest meal at lunch. Many restaurants serving Japanese food offer a daily set lunch, or teishoku, at a fraction of what their set dinners might be. Usually ranging in price from ¥800 to ¥2,000 ($6.65–$17/£3.30–£8.50), they're generally available from 11 or 11:30am to 1:30 or 2pm. A Japanese teishoku will often include the main course (such as tempura, grilled fish, or the specialty of the house), soup, pickled vegetables, rice, and tea, while the set menu in a Western-style restaurant (often called set lunch) usually consists of a main dish, salad, bread, and coffee.

CHEAP EATS Inexpensive restaurants can be found in department stores (often one whole floor will be devoted to various kinds of restaurants, most with plastic-food displays), underground shopping arcades, nightlife districts, and in and around train and subway stations. Some of the cheapest establishments for a night out on the town are the countless yaki-tori-ya, noodle and ramen shops, coffee shops (which often offer inexpensive pastries and sandwiches), and conveyor-belt sushi bars where you reach out and take the plates that interest you. Japan also has American fast-food chains, such as McDonald's (where Big Macs cost about ¥280/$2.35/£1.15), Wendy's, and KFC, as well as Japanese chains—Freshness Burger and First Kitchen, among them—that sell hamburgers and french fries.

Ethnic restaurants, particularly those serving Indian, Korean, Chinese, Italian, and other cuisines, are plentiful and usually inexpensive. Hotel restaurants can also be good bargains for inexpensive set lunches or buffets (called viking in Japanese), while inexpensive drinking places are good bets for dinner.

Street-side stalls, called yatai, are also good sources of inexpensive meals. These restaurants-on-wheels sell a variety of foods, including fish cakes (oden), skewered barbecued chicken (yakitori), and fried noodles (yakisoba), as well as sake and beer. They appear mostly at night, lighted by a single lantern or a string of lights, and most have a counter with stools as well, protected in winter by a wall of tarp. These can be great, cozy places for rubbing elbows with the locals. Fukuoka, in Kyushu, is famous for its yatai, but you'll find them in many cities, especially in nightlife districts. Sadly, however, traditional pushcarts are being replaced by motorized vans, which do not offer seating.

PREPARED FOODS You can save even more money by avoiding restaurants altogether. There are all kinds of prepared foods you can buy; some are even complete meals, perfect for picnics in a park or right in your hotel room.

Perhaps the best known is the obento, or box lunch, commonly sold on express trains, on train-station platforms, in food sections of department stores, and at counter windows of tiny shops throughout Japan. In fact, the obento served by vendors on trains and at train stations are an inexpensive way to sample regional cuisine since they often include food typical of the region you're passing through. Costing between ¥800 and ¥1,500 ($6.65–$13/£3.35–£6.25), the basic obento contains a piece of meat (generally fish or chicken), various side dishes, rice, and pickled vegetables. Sushi boxed lunches are also readily available.

My favorite place to shop for prepared foods is department stores. Located in basements, these food and produce sections hark back to Japanese markets of yore, with vendors yelling out their wares and crowds of housewives deciding on the evening's dinner. Different counters specialize in different items—tempura, yakitori, eel, Japanese pickles, cooked fish, sushi (sometimes made by robots!), salads, vegetables, and desserts. Almost the entire spectrum of Japanese cuisine is available, as are numerous samples. There are also counters selling obento box meals. In any case, you can eat for less than ¥1,200 ($10/£5), and there's nothing like milling with Japanese housewives to make you feel like one of the locals. Though not as colorful, 24-hour convenience stores also sell packaged foods, including sandwiches and obento.

15 Packing Tips

The first thing you'll want to do when you're packing is select the smallest bag you can get away with and pack as lightly as you can. Storage space is limited on Japan's trains, including the Shinkansen bullet train, business hotels sometimes lack closets, and there are multitudes of stairs and overhead and underground passageways to navigate in virtually every train station in the country.

The most important item is a good pair of walking shoes, well broken in. You will probably be walking much more than you do at home. Keep in mind, too, that because you have to remove your shoes to enter Japanese homes, inns, shrines, and temples, you should bring a pair that's easy to slip on and off. And, because you may be walking around in stocking feet, save yourself embarrassment by packing socks and hose without holes.

As for clothes, you'll need a coat in winter and very light clothing for the hot and humid summer months. Jackets are necessary for spring and autumn; I've seen it snow in March in Tokyo, and even May can be quite crisp. Japan's top French restaurants often require jackets and ties for men. Although the older generation considers it inappropriate for women to wear dresses without hose or tops without sleeves, I've noticed that the younger generation ignores this, especially in resort areas. Jeans and Capri pants are okay for casual dining and sightseeing, but shorts are uncommon in Japan outside hiking and sports areas, the exception being children and teenagers.

Tips Help with Heavy Bags

If your bag becomes a burden but you don't want to mail items home, an alternative is to send a bag onward to your next or last stop by takkyu-bin, available at larger hotels, train stations, and convenience stores. Bags reach most destinations in 1 or 2 nights, with the delivery cost of an average-size bag weighing 10 kilograms (22 lb.) ¥1,400 ($12/£6). I love this amazingly efficient service—it's a lifesaver!

Virtually all hotels and Japanese-style inns—save youth hostels and some budget-priced inns—provide towels, soap, washcloths, toothbrushes, toothpaste, shampoo, a cotton kimono (called a yukata and not a giveaway), and usually razors. If you run out of something, you'll have no problem finding it in Japan. Most hotels and inns also provide a thermos of hot water or a water heater as well as some tea bags. Free coffee is rare, so if you're a coffee addict, you can save money by buying instant coffee and drinking your morning cup in your hotel room. Hair dryers are a standard feature in virtually all rooms with private bathrooms, including business hotels. Because the sun rises early in summer (as early as 4am), you might want to include a pair of eyeshades.

Also carry a supply of pocket tissues, which you can pick up at newspaper stands near and in train stations, because some public restrooms in rural areas might lack toilet paper. It's also a good idea to carry change for local buses (faster than trying to change ¥1,000 notes), a folding umbrella, and a compass for getting your bearings and following directions using local maps. Finally, pack small, inexpensive gifts from home that can be given to those who show unexpected kindness, including candy, postcards, and hometown souvenirs.

16 Recommended Books

Japanese publisher Kodansha International (www.kodansha-intl.com) has probably published more books on Japan in English—including Japanese-language textbooks—than any other company. Available at major bookstores in Japan, they are also available at www.amazon.com.

HISTORY The definitive work of Japan's history through the ages is Japan: The Story of a Nation (Alfred A. Knopf, 1991) by Edwin O. Reischauer, a former U.S. ambassador to Japan. Ivan Morris's The World of the Shining Prince: Court Life in Ancient Japan (Kodansha Globe, 1997) highlights the golden age of the imperial court through diaries and literature of the Heian Period (794–1192), while Everyday Life in Traditional Japan (Tuttle, 2000) details the daily lives of samurai, farmers, craftsmen, merchants, courtiers, and outcasts during the Edo Period.

For personal accounts of Japan in ages past, there's no better anthology than Donald Keene's Travelers of a Hundred Ages: The Japanese as Revealed Through 1,000 Years of Diaries (Holt, 1989). Written by Japanese from all walks of life, the journals provide fascinating insight into the hidden worlds of imperial courts, Buddhist monasteries, isolated country inns, and more. Lafcadio Hearn, a prolific writer about things Japanese, describes life in Japan around the turn of the 20th century in Writings from Japan (Penguin, 1985), while Isabella Bird, an Englishwoman who traveled in Japan in the 1870s, writes a vivid account of rural Japanese life in Unbeaten Tracks in Japan (Virago Press Limited, 1984). Autobiography of a Geisha (Columbia University Press, 2003), first published in 1957, is Sayo Masuda's account of being sold to a geisha house as a child, working as a geisha at a hot-spring spa, and living under harsh conditions during and after World War II.

SOCIETY Reischauer's The Japanese Today (Tuttle, 1993) offers a unique perspective of Japanese society, including historical events that have shaped and influenced Japanese behavior and the role of the individual in Japanese society. A classic description of Japanese and their culture is found in Ruth Benedict's brilliant The Chrysanthemum and the Sword: Patterns of Japanese Culture (Mariner Books, 2006), first published in the 1940s but reprinted many times since. Debunking theories that have long shaped the outside world's views of Japan (many of which are espoused by the books above) is Japan: A Reinterpretation (Pantheon, 1997) by former International Herald Tribune Tokyo bureau chief Patrick Smith, who gives a spirited reinterpretation of Japan's economic miracle and demise.

A more entertaining look at the Japanese psyche is provided by English translations of Japanese articles that never made it into the Japan Times in Tabloid Tokyo: 101 Tales of Sex, Crime, and the Bizarre from Japan's Wild Weeklies (Kodansha, 2005), edited by Mark Schreiber, and its sequel, Tabloid Tokyo 2 (Kodansha, 2007).

For advice on Japanese etiquette, refer to Japanese Etiquette Today: A Guide to Business and Social Customs (Tuttle, 1994) by James M. Vardaman and Michiko Sasaki Vardaman; it covers everything from bowing and bathing to eating and dining customs, office etiquette, and the complicated art of giving gifts.

CULTURE & THE ARTS For a cultural overview in one book, see Introduction to Japanese Culture, edited by Daniel Sosnoski (Tuttle, 1996), which covers major festivals, the tea ceremony, flower arranging, Kabuki, sumo, Japanese board games, Buddhism, kanji, and much more. Elizabeth Kiritani's Vanishing Japan: Traditions, Crafts & Culture (Tuttle, 1995) covers a wide spectrum of traditional Japanese crafts and professions that were once a part of daily life, from potato vendors, shoe shiners, and tatami makers to Japanese umbrellas and handmade paper, many of which are fast disappearing in today's modern Japan.

The Japan Travel Bureau puts out nifty pocket-size illustrated booklets on things Japanese (available in Japan at bookstores with an English-language section, including those recommended in the Tokyo chapter), including A Look into Japan, Eating in Japan, Festivals of Japan, Martial Arts & Sports in Japan, and Japanese Family & Culture, which covers everything from marriage in Japan to problems with mothers-in-law and explanations of why Dad gets home so late. My favorite is Salaryman in Japan (JTB, 1987), which describes the private and working lives of Japan's army of white-collar workers who receive set salaries.

And while some might argue it's not art, there's no denying the power manga (Japanese comics) has over Japanese readers. The best primers in manga history and its various genre are Paul Gravett's Manga: 60 Years of Japanese Comics (Collins Design, 2004) and, though dated, Frederik L. Schodt and Tezuka Osamu's Manga! Manga!: The World of Japanese Comics (Kodansha, 1988), with a follow-up provided in Schodt's Dreamland Japan: Writings on Modern Manga (Stone Bridge Press, 1996). Likewise, travelers new to Japanese animation should check out Anime from Akira to Howl's Moving Castle by Susan J. Napier (Palgrave Macmillan, 2005).

CONTEMPORARY CHRONICLES

For contemporary experiences of foreigners in Japan, there's the inimitable Dave Barry, who describes his whirlwind trip to the land of the rising sun in the comical Dave Barry Does Japan (Random House, 1992) and solves such puzzling mysteries as why Japanese cars sell successfully (they're made of steel!). A delightful account of Japanese and their customs is given by the irrepressible George Mikes in The Land of the Rising Yen (Penguin, 1973). Traveler's Tales Guides: Japan (Traveler's Tales, 1999) relates the firsthand experiences of Dave Barry, Pico Iyer, and other writers who tackle such issues as sand bathing and Washlet toilets. A book seemingly from another era is Geisha (Vintage, 2000) by Liza C. Dalby; first published in 1983, it describes her year living as a geisha in Kyoto as part of a research project. The Japan Journals: 1947–2004 (Stone Bridge Press, 2004) by film scholar Donald Richie provides personal insight to Japan's transformation from a postwar nation to a cultural and economic powerhouse.

FICTION Whenever I travel in Japan, I especially enjoy reading fictional accounts of the country; they help put me in tune with my surroundings and increase my awareness and perception. The world's first major novel was written by a Japanese woman, Murasaki Shikibu, whose classic, The Tale of Genji (Knopf, 1978), dating from the 11th century, describes the aristocratic life of Prince Genji.

In Tokyo bookstores, you'll find entire sections dedicated to English translations of Japan's best-known modern and contemporary authors, including Mishima Yukio, Soseki Natsume, Abe Kobo, Tanizaki Junichiro, and Nobel Prize winners Kawabata Yasunari and Oe Kenzaburo. An overview of Japanese classical literature from the earliest times to the mid-19th century is provided in Anthology of Japanese Literature (Grove Press, 1988), edited by Donald Keene. Likewise, The Showa Anthology: Modern Japanese Short Stories (Kodansha, 1992), edited by Van C. Gessel and Tomone Matsumoto, covers works by Abe Kobe, Mishima Yukio, Kawabata Yasunari, Oe Kenzaburo, and others written between 1929 and 1984, while Modern Japanese Stories: An Anthology (Tuttle, 1962), edited by Ivan Morris, introduces short stories by some of Japan's top modern writers, including Mori Ogai, Tanizaki Junichiro, Kawabata Yasunari, and Mishima Yukio.

For novels, you might wish to read Mishima's The Sea of Fertility (Knopf), a collection of four separate works, the last of which, The Decay of the Angel, was delivered to his publisher on the day of his suicide; or The Sound of Waves (Knopf, 1956), about young love in a Japanese fishing village. Other famous works by Japanese authors include Soseki Natsume's first novel, I am a Cat (Charles E. Tuttle, 1972), which describes the foibles of upper-middle-class Japanese during the Meiji Era through the eyes of a cat; and his later novel, Kokoro (Regnery Gateway Co., 1985), as well as Kawabata Yasunari's Snow Country (Knopf, 1956), translated by Edward G. Seidensticker. Although not well known in the West, Enchi Fumiko wrote an absorbing novel about women in an upper-class, late-19th-century family in The Waiting Years (Kodansha, 2002), first published in 1957.

Oe Kenzaburo gained international recognition when he became the second Japanese to win the Nobel Prize for literature in 1994. In addition to such well-known novels as A Personal Matter (Grove Press, 1968), about a man in search of himself after the birth of a handicapped son, and Hiroshima Notes (Grove/Atlantic, 1996), with personal accounts of atomic bomb survivors and a moving commentary on the meaning of the Hiroshima bombing, is A Healing Family (Kodansha, 1996), a collection of essays written over several years dealing primarily with Oe's severely handicapped autistic son, Hikari, who became a celebrity in his own right as a composer of classical music. Favorite writers of Japan's baby-boom generation include Murakami Ryu, who burst onto the literary scene with Almost Transparent Blue (Kodansha, 1977) and later captured the undercurrent of decadent urban life in his best-selling Coin Locker Babies (Kodansha, 1995). Murakami Haruki's writings include Dance Dance Dance (Kodansha, 1994); Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World (Vintage, 1993); The Wind-Up Bird Chronicle (Knopf, 1997); South of the Border, West of the Sun (Knopf, 1999), the story of a bewildered man in contemporary Tokyo; and Norwegian Wood (Vintage, 2000), a coming-of-age story set during the 1969 student movement in Japan. His After the Quake: Stories (Knopf, 2002) centers on fictional characters in the months after the 1995 Kobe earthquake.

For works of fiction about Japan by Western writers, most Westerners are familiar with James Clavell's Shogun (Dell, 1975), a fictional account based on the lives of Englishman William Adams and military leader Tokugawa Ieyasu around 1600. The best-selling Memoirs of a Geisha (Knopf, 1997), by Arthur Golden and also a movie, is the fictional autobiography of a fisherman's daughter sold to a geisha house, later becoming one of Kyoto's most celebrated geisha of the 1930s.

For fictional yet personal contemporary accounts of what it's like for Westerners living in Japan, entertaining novels include Ransom (Vintage, 1985) by Jay McInerney and Pictures from the Water Trade (Harper & Row, 1986) by John D. Morley. Pico Iyer taps into the mysterious juxtaposition of the old Japan vs. the new in The Lady and the Monk: Four Seasons in Kyoto (Knopf, 1991). Audrey Hepburn's Neck (Simon & Schuster, 1996) is Alan Brown's poignant portrait of Japan's mishmash of Western and Japanese culture, as seen through the eyes of a confused young Japanese comic illustrator. Mystery fans should read Sujata Massey's nine novels following the adventures of Japanese-American Rei Shimura; Massey's latest, Girl in a Box (HarperCollins, 2006), follows Rei's cross-cultural escapades as she works undercover in a Japanese department store.

FAST FACTS: Japan

American Express There are no American Express customer-service offices in Japan.

ATM Networks See "Money & Costs," p. 39.

Business Hours Government offices and private companies are generally open Monday through Friday 9am to 5pm. Banks are open Monday through Friday 9am to 3pm (but usually will not exchange money until 10:30 or 11am, after that day's currency exchange rates come in). Neighborhood post offices are open Monday through Friday 9am to 5pm. Major post offices, however (usually located near major train stations), have longer hours and may be open weekends as well. (Some central post offices, such as those in Tokyo and Osaka, are open 24 hr. for mail.)

Department stores are open from about 10am to 8pm; they sometimes close irregularly (but always the same day of the week). Smaller stores are generally open from 10am to 8pm, closed 1 day a week. Convenience stores such as 7-Eleven are open 24 hours.

Keep in mind that museums, gardens, and attractions stop selling admission tickets at least 30 minutes before the actual closing time. Similarly, restaurants take their last orders at least 30 minutes before the posted closing time (even earlier for kaiseki restaurants). Most museums are closed on Monday.

Currency See “Money & Costs,” p. 39.

Customs What You Can Bring into Japan: If you're 20 or older, you can bring duty-free into Japan up to 400 non-Japanese cigarettes or 500 grams of tobacco or 100 cigars; three bottles (760cc each) of alcohol; and 2 ounces of perfume. You can also bring in goods for personal use that were purchased abroad whose total market value is less than ¥200,000 ($1,666/£833).

What You Can Take Home from Japan: U.S. Citizens: For specifics on what you can bring back and the corresponding fees, download the invaluable free pamphlet Know Before You Go online at www.cbp.gov. (Click on “Travel,” and then click on “Know Before You Go! Online Brochure.”) Or contact the U.S. Customs & Border Protection, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20229 (☎ 877/287-8667) to request the pamphlet.

Canadian Citizens: For a clear summary of Canadian rules, write for the booklet I Declare, issued by the Canada Border Services Agency (☎ 800/461-9999 in Canada, or 204/983-3500; www.cbsa-asfc.gc.ca).

U.K. Citizens: For information, contact HM Customs & Excise at ☎ 0845/010-9000 (from outside the U.K., 020/8929-0152), or consult their website at www.hmce.gov.uk.

Australian Citizens: A helpful brochure available from Australian consulates or Customs offices is Know Before You Go. For more information, call the Australian Customs Service at ☎ 1300/363-263, or log on to www.customs.gov.au.

New Zealand Citizens: Most questions are answered in a free pamphlet available at New Zealand consulates and Customs offices: New Zealand Customs Guide for Travellers, Notice no. 4. For more information, contact New Zealand Customs, The Customhouse, 17–21 Whitmore St., Box 2218, Wellington (☎ 04/473-6099 or 0800/428-786; www.customs.govt.nz).

Drugstores Drugstores, called kusuri-ya, are found readily in Japan. Note, however, that you cannot have a foreign prescription filled in Japan without first consulting a doctor in Japan, so it's best to bring an adequate supply of important medicines with you. No drugstores in Japan stay open 24 hours. However, convenience stores, open day and night throughout Japan, carry such nonprescription items as aspirin.

Earthquakes Kobe's tragic 1995 earthquake brought attention to the fact that Japan is earthquake-prone, but in reality, most earthquakes are too small to detect (of the more than 100,000 earthquakes annually in Japan, only 1% are big enough to feel). However, in case of an earthquake you can feel, there are a few precautions you should take. If you're indoors, take cover under a doorway or against a wall and do not go outdoors. If you're outdoors, stay away from trees, power lines, and the sides of buildings; if you're surrounded by tall buildings, seek cover in a doorway. If you're near a beach or the bay, evacuate to higher ground to avoid danger in case of a tsunami. Never use elevators during a quake. Other precautions include noting emergency exits wherever you stay; all hotels supply flashlights, usually found attached to your bedside table.

Electricity The electricity throughout Japan is 100 volts AC, but there are two different cycles in use: In Tokyo and in regions northeast of the capital, it's 50 cycles, while in Nagoya, Kyoto, Osaka, and all points to the southwest, it's 60 cycles. Leading hotels in Tokyo often have two outlets, one for 110 volts and one for 220 volts; almost all have hair dryers in the rooms. You can use many American appliances in Japan because the American standard is 110 volts and 60 cycles, but they may run a little slowly. Note, too, that the flat, two-legged prongs used in Japan are the same size and fit as in North America, but three-pronged appliances are not accepted.

Embassies & Consulates Most embassies are located in Tokyo (see "Fast Facts: Tokyo" in chapter 4). There are, however, U.S., British, and Australian consulates in Osaka (see "Osaka" in chapter 9). For the location of other consulates, inquire at the respective embassies.

Emergencies The national emergency numbers are ☎ 110 for police and ☎ 119 for ambulance and fire. You do not need to insert money into public telephones to call these numbers. However, if using a green public telephone, you must push a red button before dialing. If calling from a gray public telephone or one that accepts only prepaid cards, simply lift the receiver and dial. Be sure to speak slowly and precisely.

Holidays See "When to Go" earlier in this chapter.

Internet Access See "Staying Connected" earlier in this chapter.

Language English is widely understood in major hotels, restaurants, and shops, but it's hit and miss elsewhere. Be sure to pick up the free "Tourist's Language Handbook," at the Tourist Information Center, and see "Dealing with the Language Barrier," in appendix A.

Laundry & Dry Cleaning All upper- and most midrange hotels offer laundry and dry-cleaning services (but it's expensive, with a laundered shirt costing about ¥400/$3.35/£1.65). For same-day service, it's usually necessary to turn in your laundry by 10am; many hotels do not offer laundry service on Sundays and holidays. Budget accommodations sometimes have coin-operated machines. Otherwise, laundrettes are abundant, and many hotel guest rooms have a pull-out laundry line over the tub for hand washables.

Legal Aid Contact your embassy if you find yourself in legal trouble. The Legal Counselling Center, 1-4 Yotsuya, Shinjuku (☎ 03/5367-5280; www.horitsu-sodan.jp; station: Yotsuya), is operated by three bar associations and provides legal counseling with English interpreters Monday to Friday from 1 to 4pm.

Liquor Laws The legal drinking age is 20. Beer, wine, and spirits are readily available in grocery stores, some convenience stores, and liquor stores. Many bars, especially in nightlife districts in major cities, are open until dawn. If you intend to drive in Japan, you are not allowed even one drink.

Lost & Found Be sure to notify all your credit card companies the minute you discover your wallet has been lost or stolen, and file a report at the nearest police precinct. Your credit-card company or insurer may require a police report number or record of the loss. Most credit card companies have an emergency toll-free number to call if your card is lost or stolen; they may be able to wire you a cash advance immediately or deliver an emergency credit card in a day or two. Visa's emergency number in Japan is ☎ 00531/11-15555. American Express cardholders can call ☎ 03/3220-6220 and for traveler's checks it's ☎ 0120/779-656. MasterCard holders should call ☎ 00531/11-3886 in Japan. If you need emergency cash over the weekend when all banks are closed, you can have money wired to you via Western Union (☎ 800/325-6000; www.westernunion.com).

Luggage & Lockers Because storage space on Shinkansen bullet trains is limited, travel with the smallest bag you can get away with. Coin-operated lockers are located at all major train stations as well as at most subway stations, but most lockers are generally not large enough to store huge pieces of luggage (and those that are large are often taken). Lockers generally cost ¥300 to ¥800 ($2.50–$6.65/£1.25–£3.35) depending on the size. Some major stations also have check-in rooms for luggage, though these tend to be rare. If your bag becomes too much to handle, you can have it sent ahead via takkyu-bin, a wonderful and efficient luggage/parcel forwarding service available at upper-range hotels and all convenience stores in Japan. At Narita and Kansai international airports, delivery service counters will send luggage to your hotel the next day (or vice versa) for about ¥2,000 ($17/£8.35) per bag for bags up to 20 kilograms (44 lb.).

Mail If your hotel cannot mail letters for you, ask the concierge for the location of the nearest post office, recognizable by the red logo of a capital T with a horizontal line over it. Mailboxes are bright orange-red. It costs ¥110 (90¢/45p) to airmail letters weighing up to 25 grams and ¥70 (60¢/30p) to mail postcards to North America and Europe. Domestic mail costs ¥80 (65¢/35p) for letters weighing up to 25 grams, and ¥50 (40¢/20p) for postcards. Post offices throughout Japan are also convenient for their ATMs, which accept international bank cards operating on the PLUS and Cirrus systems, as well as MasterCard and Visa.

Although all post offices are open Monday through Friday from 9am to 5pm, international post offices (often located close to the central train station) have longer hours, often until 7pm or later on weekdays and with open hours also on weekends (in Tokyo and Osaka, counters are open 24 hr.). If your hotel does not have a shipping service, it is only at these larger post offices that you can mail packages abroad. Conveniently, they sell cardboard boxes in several sizes with the necessary tape. Packages sent via surface mail cannot weigh more than 20 kilograms (about 44 lb.) and take about a month to reach North America, with a package weighing 10 kilograms (about 22 lb.) costing ¥6,750

($56/£28). Express packages, which take 3 days to North America and can weigh up to 30 kilograms (66 lb.), cost ¥12,550 ($105/£53) for 10 kilograms (22 lb.). For more information, check the website www.post.japanpost.jp.

Measurements Before the metric system came into use in Japan, the country had its own standards for measuring length and weight. One of these old standards is still common: Rooms are still measured by the number of tatami straw mats that will fit in them. A six-tatami room, for example, is the size of six tatami mats, with a tatami roughly 3 feet wide and 6 feet long.

Newspapers & Magazines Three English-language newspapers are published daily in Japan: the Japan Times and the Daily Yomiuri (both with weekly supplements from the Los Angeles Times, Washington Post, and London's Times), as well as the International Herald Tribune/Asahi Shimbun. Hotels and major bookstores carry the international editions of such newsmagazines as Time and Newsweek. You can also read the Japan Times online at www.japantimes.co.jp.

Passports For Residents of Australia: You can pick up an application from your local post office or any branch of Passports Australia, but you must schedule an interview at the passport office to present your application materials. Call the Australian Passport Information Service at ☎ 131-232, or visit the government website at www.passports.gov.au.

For Residents of Canada: Passport applications are available at travel agencies throughout Canada or from the central Passport Office, Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, Ottawa, ON K1A 0G3 (☎ 800/567-6868; www.ppt.gc.ca).

For Residents of Ireland: You can apply for a 10-year passport at the Passport Office, Setanta Centre, Molesworth Street, Dublin 2 (☎ 01/671-1633; www.irl.gov.ie/iveagh). Those under age 18 and over 65 must apply for a 3-year passport. You can also apply at 1A South Mall, Cork (☎ 021/272-525) or at most main post offices.

For Residents of New Zealand: You can pick up a passport application at any New Zealand Passports Office or download it from their website. Contact the Passports Office at ☎ 0800/225-050 in New Zealand or 04/474-8100, or log on to www.passports.govt.nz.

For Residents of the United Kingdom: To pick up an application for a standard 10-year passport (5-yr. passport for children under 16), visit your nearest passport office, major post office, or travel agency or contact the United Kingdom Passport Service at ☎ 0870/521-0410 or search its website at www.ukpa.gov.uk.

For Residents of the United States: Whether you're applying in person or by mail, you can download passport applications from the U.S. Department of State website at <http://travel.state.gov>. To find your regional passport office, either check the U.S. Department of State website or call the National Passport Information Center toll-free number (☎ 877/487-2778) for automated information.

Police The national emergency number for police is ☎ 110.

Restrooms If you need a restroom, your best bets are at train and subway stations (though these tend to be dirty), big hotels, department stores, and fast-food restaurants. Use of restrooms is free in Japan, and though most public facilities supply toilet paper, it's a good idea to carry a packet of tissues.

In parks and some restaurants, especially in rural areas, don't be surprised if you go into some restrooms and find men's urinals and private stalls in the same room. Women are supposed to walk right past the urinals without noticing them.

Many toilets in Japan, especially those at train stations, are Japanese-style toilets: They're holes in the ground over which you squat facing the end that has a raised hood. Men stand and aim for the hole. Although Japanese lavatories may seem uncomfortable at first, they're actually much more sanitary because no part of your body touches anything.

Across Japan, the rage nowadays is Washlets, combination toilet/bidets with heated toilet seats, buttons and knobs directing sprays of water of various intensities to various body parts, and even lids that raise when you open the stall. But alas, instructions are usually in Japanese only. Listen to the voice of experience: Don't stand up until you've figured out how to turn the darn spray off.

Safety See "Health & Safety," earlier in this chapter.

Smoking You must be 20 years old to smoke in Japan. Smoking is banned in most public areas, including train and subway stations and office buildings. In many cities, there are also nonsmoking ordinances that ban smoking on sidewalks but allow it in marked areas, usually near train stations. Many restaurants nowadays have nonsmoking sections, though bars do not. Most hotels have designated nonsmoking floors, except for some business hotels and Japanese-style inns. If you want to sit in the nonsmoking car of the Shinkansen bullet train, ask for the kinensha (though some lines are completely smoke-free). During peak times, be sure to reserve a seat in the nonsmoking car in advance.

Taxes A 5% consumption tax is imposed on goods and services in Japan, including hotel rates and restaurant meals. Although hotels and restaurants are required to include the tax in their published rates, a few have yet to comply (especially on English-language menus). In Tokyo, hotels also levy a separate accommodations tax of ¥100 (85¢/40p) per person per night on rooms costing ¥10,000 to ¥14,999 ($83–$125/£42–£62); rates ¥15,000 and up are taxed at ¥200 ($1.65/85p) per night per person. Some hotels include the local tax in their published rack rates, others do not. In hot-spring resort areas, a ¥150 ($1.45) onsen tax is added for every night of your stay.

In addition to these taxes, a 10% to 15% service charge will be added to your bill in lieu of tipping at most of the fancier restaurants and at moderately priced and upper-end hotels and ryokan, or Japanese-style inns. Business hotels, minshuku, youth hostels, and inexpensive restaurants do not impose a service charge.

As for shopping, a 5% consumption tax is also included in the price of most goods. (Some of the smaller vendors are not required to levy tax.) Travelers from abroad, however, are eligible for an exemption on goods taken out of the country, although only the larger department stores and specialty shops seem equipped to deal with the procedures. In any case, most department stores grant a refund on the consumption tax only when the total amount of purchases for the day exceeds ¥10,000 ($83/£42). You can obtain a refund immediately by having a sales clerk fill out a list of your purchases and then presenting the list to the tax-exemption counter of the department store; you will need to show your passport. Note that no refunds for consumption tax are given for food, drinks, tobacco, cosmetics, film, and batteries.

Television If you enjoy watching television, you've come to the wrong country. Almost nothing is broadcast in English; even foreign films are dubbed in Japanese. Most upper-range hotels, however, offer bilingual televisions (you can switch from Japanese to English if the program or movie was originally in English), though very few (and fairly dated) English movies and sitcoms are broadcast each week. The plus of bilingual TVs is that you can listen to the nightly national news broadcast by NHK at 7 and 9pm. Otherwise, major hotels in larger cities have cable TV with English-language programs including CNN broadcasts (sometimes in Japanese only) and BBC World as well as in-house pay movies. But even if you don't understand Japanese, I suggest that you watch TV at least once; maybe you'll catch a samurai series or a sumo match. Commercials are also worth watching.

A word on those pay video programs offered by hotels and many resort ryokan: Upper-range hotels usually have a few choices in English, and these are charged automatically to your bill. Most business hotels usually offer only one kind of pay movie—generally “adult entertainment” programs. If you're traveling with children, you'll want to be extremely careful about selecting your TV programs. Many adult video pay channels appear with a simple push of the channel-selector button, and they can be difficult to get rid of. In budget accommodations, you may come across televisions with coin boxes attached to their sides, or, more common nowadays, vending machines offering prepaid cards. These are also for special adult entertainment videos. Now you know.

Time Zone Japan is 9 hours ahead of Greenwich Mean Time, 14 hours ahead of New York, 15 hours ahead of Chicago, and 17 hours ahead of Los Angeles. Since Japan does not go on daylight saving time, subtract 1 hour from the above times in the summer when calling from countries that have daylight saving time such as the United States.

Because Japan is on the other side of the International Date Line, you lose a day when traveling from the United States to Asia. (If you depart the United States on Tues, you'll arrive on Wed.) Returning to North America, however, you gain a day, which means that you arrive on the same day you left. (In fact, it can happen that you arrive in the States at an earlier hour than you departed from Japan.)

Tipping One of the delights of being in Japan is that there's no tipping—even to waitresses, taxi drivers, or bellhops. If you try to tip them, they'll probably be confused or embarrassed. Instead, you'll have a 10% to 15% service charge added to your bill at higher-priced accommodations and restaurants.

Water The water is safe to drink anywhere in Japan, although some people claim it's too highly chlorinated. Bottled water is also readily available.

Suggested Japan Itineraries

Japan, with its rich culture and varied geography, has much to offer the curious visitor, not only in and around the major cities but in many of the outlying regions as well. If you want to see everything, you should plan on spending at least a year in Japan. More likely, your time will be limited to a week or two, so you'll have to be selective; this section will help you decide on an itinerary.

If you're in Japan for several weeks, you can fashion a personalized itinerary by combining several of these suggested itineraries, along with recommended routes provided in the chapters for the Japan Alps (chapter 7) and Kyushu (chapter 11). But regardless of what itinerary you plan, I am adamant about one thing: Kyoto is a must. In addition to having served as the nation's capital for more than 1,000 years, it has more temples, shrines, and historic sights than any other Japanese city.

1 Japan in 1 Week

This trip takes you to Japan's highlights, from fast-paced Tokyo to the quiet temples of Kyoto, along with a couple of other worthwhile destinations. It's designed for first-timers, so if you've already been to Japan and seen all the must-sees, refer to the other itineraries to create your own 1-week itinerary.

Day ①: Arrive in Tokyo

After your arrival at Narita Airport, head to your hotel in Tokyo (about a 2-hr. trip). Recuperate from your flight, settle in, and get a feel for the city. Take a walk through a neighborhood close to your hotel and top off the day with a meal in a traditional restaurant. Try to stay up as late as you can to adjust to the new time zone.

Day ②: Exploring Tokyo

Because of the difference in time zones, you'll probably be wide awake in the wee hours of the morning, so get up and head for Tsukiji Fish Market. After a breakfast of fresh sushi, head to Hama Rikyu, one of Tokyo's oldest Japanese gardens (it opens at 9am), from which you can board a ferry for a cruise up the Sumida River to Asakusa, where you can visit Sensoji Temple and shop for souvenirs along Nakamise Dori. Afterward, see the Tokyo National Museum, the world's finest repository of Japanese art and crafts. Toward evening, head to Ginza for a stroll through a department store; if possible, try to attend a Kabuki play. See chapter 5.

Day ③: Hakone ★★

Take an early train to Hakone Yumoto, gateway to the wonderful Fuji-Hakone-Izu National Park (if possible, leave your luggage at Odawara or Hakone Yumoto Station and travel overnight only with a small bag). Here you can travel through some of Japan's most scenic countryside via a circuitous route that includes a two-car streetcar, a cable car, ropeway, and a boat, while seeing such sights as the wonderful Hakone Open-Air Museum and, if you're lucky, the elusive Mount Fuji. Be sure to schedule some time for a dip in a hot-spring bath, and spend the night in The Fujiya Hotel (p. 248), one of my favorites in all of Japan, or in a Japanese inn. See chapter 6.

Day 4: Hakone to Kyoto

Complete your trip through Hakone, returning to pick up your luggage and then transferring in Odawara for the 3-hour Shinkansen bullet train to Kyoto. End the day with a stroll through Kyoto's central shopping area, topped with a stroll through the Pontocho nightlife area. Spend the night in one of Kyoto's many traditional Japanese-style inns. See chapter 8.

Days 5 & 6: Exploring Kyoto ★★★

Start Day 5 with a self-guided walk through eastern Kyoto (p. 320), seeing Sanjusangendo Hall with its 1,001 wooden statues, Kiyomizu Temple, and Heian Shrine with its garden, followed by shopping at the Kyoto Handicraft Center.

On Day 6, visit Kyoto's other main attractions—Nijo Castle, former home of the shogun; Kyoto Imperial Palace; Ryoanji Temple with its famous Zen rock garden; and the Golden Pavilion. In the evening, head for Gion, Japan's most famous geisha quarters, followed by an evening performance at Gion Corner with its cultural demonstrations (p. 335).

Day 7: Hiroshima ★★

Two hours away by Shinkansen bullet train, Hiroshima is best known for its Peace Memorial Park (p. 450), which contains the sobering Peace Memorial Museum outlining that fateful day in 1945 when the city became the world's first city destroyed by an atomic bomb. If time permits, see also Hiroshima Castle before heading back to Tokyo (p. 452).

2 Japan in 2 Weeks

This is something of a whirlwind trip, but it allows you to take in some of the best that Honshu island has to offer. If you have 1 or 2 extra days, you might wish to devote more time to Kyoto or head over to Kyushu (see chapter 11).

Days 1 & 2: Arrive in Tokyo

Hit Tokyo's highlights as outlined above in "Japan in 1 Week."

Day 3: More of Tokyo

Visit the Edo-Tokyo Museum for a colorful portrayal of the city's tumultuous history, followed by a stroll through Akihabara, the country's largest concentration of shops devoted to electronics, with store after store offering the latest computers, digital cameras, cellphones, calculators, and more (p. 206). Next, go to Harajuku to see Meiji Shrine, Tokyo's most popular shrine, followed by shopping at Oriental Bazaar, great for Japanese souvenirs. End the day with eye-popping views from the 45th-floor observatory in Shinjuku's Tokyo Metropolitan Government Office, followed by a stroll through Japan's most notorious and craziest nightlife district, Kabuki-cho (p. 214).

Day 4: Nikko ★★

Take a day trip outside of Tokyo. An excellent choice is Nikko, famous for its sumptuous mausoleum of Shogun Tokugawa Ieyasu, Japan's most famous shogun, set in a forest of majestic cedars (p. 227).

Day 5: Takayama & the Japan Alps ★★

Early in the morning, take the Shinkansen to Nagoya (about 2 hr.) and then a 3-hour train ride to Takayama in the Japan Alps (if you don't have a rail pass, there are also direct buses from Tokyo's Shinjuku Station spring through autumn). Explore the picturesque, narrow streets of this old castle town and its many interesting museums and merchants' homes. Since Takayama has more traditional Japanese inns than hotels, this is the perfect place to experience tatami living, with accommodations available at various price ranges (p. 266).

Day 6: Exploring Takayama

To get a feel for the small-town atmosphere, start your day with a stroll through the Miyagawa Morning Market (p. 267) on the bank of a river. Of the many small museums and attractions in Takayama, must-sees include the Hida Minzoku Mura Folk Village with its rural architecture, old merchant homes open to the public, and the Hirata Folk Art Museum filled with items used in daily life during the Edo Period (1603–1867) (p. 268, 268, and 269). Also not to be missed is the Historical Government House, the only regional administrative building from the shogun era still in existence (p. 269).

Days 7, 8 & 9: Kyoto ★★

Spend the next few days in Kyoto as outlined above in "Japan in 1 Week." For more sightseeing ideas, see chapter 8.

Japan in 2 Weeks

Day 10: Nara ★★ & Mount Koya ★★★

Early in the morning, head for Nara, an ancient capital even older than Kyoto. Most of Nara's historic buildings and temples, including Todaiji Temple with its Great Buddha, are enclosed within an expansive park that is also home to free-roaming deer (p. 340). From Nara, take the Kintetsu train to Kintetsu Namba Station in Osaka, transferring there for a train and cable car to Mount Koya. Mount Koya is Japan's most sacred religious site, achingly beautiful with more than 115 Buddhist temples spread through the forests. Spend the night in one of these temples (arrive by 5pm at the latest), dining on vegetarian food (p. 416). Be sure to take a nighttime stroll past towering cypress trees and countless tombs and memorial tablets to Okunoin, the burial ground of Kobo Daishi, one of Japan's most revered Buddhist priests (p. 414).

Days 11 & 12: Kurashiki ★★★

After a vegetarian breakfast and perhaps an early-morning Buddhist service, followed by a daytime stroll to Okunoin (when the atmosphere is completely different), return to Osaka and transfer to a train bound for Kurashiki. En route, make a stopover in Himeji to see Himeji Castle, easily the most impressive castle in Japan, and Koko-en, a garden composed of nine different styles of gardens typical of the Feudal Era (p. 419). Spend the night in Kurashiki and take an evening stroll along the canal. The next day, take in the sights of Kurashiki, including its many museums like the Ohara Museum of Art with its impressive collection of Western masters (p. 432).

Day 10: Hiroshima ★★

Leave for Hiroshima first thing in the morning (it's about 1 hr. away by Shinkansen). Spend the morning at Peace Memorial Park with its sobering memorials and museum that does an impressive job of detailing events before, during, and after the explosion of the atomic bomb (p. 450). Afterward, board a streetcar for the 45-minute trip to the tiny island of Miyajima, considered sacred since ancient times and famous for its Itsukushima Shrine (p. 460).

Day 14: Departing Japan

I suggest departing Japan from Osaka's Kansai International Airport (it takes a little less than 2 hr. to reach Shin-Osaka Station, followed by a 45-min. train ride to the airport). Otherwise, you might consider a direct flight to Narita airport. (ANA has an early morning, 1½-hr. flight.) Or, if you have more time—or if you just can't leave—head to Kyushu and tack on a few days or more from the suggested sightseeing route in chapter 11.

3 Japan for Families

There is no end to family entertainment in Japan. To keep your children's interest and preserve your sanity, this itinerary includes temples, shrines, museums, and castles for culture and a little education, along with a healthy dose of Japanese pop culture, from theme parks to sophisticated game arcades. Of course, you'll want to tailor your itinerary to fit your children's ages and interests; just be sure to schedule a lot of downtime so you don't burn out on sensory overload.

Days 1, 2 & 3: Exploring Kyoto ★★

After your arrival at Osaka's Kansai International Airport, take the train 75 minutes to Kyoto. Don't plan anything strenuous the first day, but do walk around to absorb your new environment and to help adjust your time clocks.

In Kyoto you'll want to limit yourselves to only the highlights: Kiyomizu Temple is one of Kyoto's most famous temples, with plenty of food stalls and activities to keep little ones interested (be sure to have them walk the distance between the two stones at Jishu Shrine; p. 318). Nijo Castle is a painless introduction to the world of the shogun (p. 316). And be sure the darlings walk down Nishiki-Koji Dori for an up-close look at the octopus, fish, and everything else Japanese eat (p. 314). But probably the biggest hit with children is Toei Uzumasa Movieland, an actual working studio for Edo-Era film productions, along with a ninja show, haunted house, and other attractions (p. 320).

Day 4: Nara ★★

Although your children may not care that Nara is even older than Kyoto and served as the nation's capital for 74 years, they'll be intrigued by Nara Park, where deer (considered divine messengers) roam free. They might also be impressed by the Great Buddha, Japan's largest bronze Buddha. See if they can crawl through a tiny passageway behind the Buddha—and supposedly attain enlightenment (p. 340). Back in Kyoto, good evening diversions for older kids include a stroll through Gion, where they might catch a glimpse of a geisha, and Gion Corner, where they'll be exposed to traditional cultural pursuits, including Japanese puppetry (Bunraku; p. 335).

Japan for Families

Days 5 & 6: Okayama Prefecture's International Villas

By now you might need some R & R in a rural setting, where you can take a couple of days to unwind and see something of the countryside. Maintained by Okayama Prefecture at greatly reduced prices, five International Villas are located in settings that range from an island in the Seto Inland Sea to a copper-mining town (p. 427). En route to Okayama, however, you might wish to stop over in Himeji to see Japan's most impressive castle.

Day 7: Kurashiki ★★

Most visitors to Kurashiki come to see its picturesque historic district, centered on a willow-lined canal lined with black-and-white-mortared former warehouses now housing shops and ryokan. Your kids, however, will probably be more interested in Tivoli Park, located right next to Kurashiki Station and modeled after the Copenhagen original (p. 433). After a few hours here to get back in the swing of things, either spend the night in Kurashiki or continue on to Hiroshima for the night.

Days 8 & 9: Hiroshima ★★

If you have teenagers, they're old enough for Peace Memorial Park, where they'll learn about the horrors of war, particularly the devastation caused by an atomic bomb (pictures are too graphic, however, for younger children; p. 450). If time permits, Miyajima is also a good destination, not only for the ferry ride and the free-roaming deer but also for the trails through the woods, its swimming beaches, and cable car (p. 459).

Days 10 & 11: Beppu ★★

If you can stand another theme park, Space World, a few minutes' walk from Kokura Station, offers diversions for kids of all ages with the usual roller coasters and amusement rides based on space travel (p. 491).

From Kokura Station, it's another 1½-hour train ride to Beppu, the king of hot-spring resorts in Kyushu. There's probably no child who wouldn't be fascinated by The Hells, a series of thermal wonders ranging from red, bubbling waters to hot springs that house crocodiles (you might not be impressed, but your kids will be; p. 510). They'll also like the wild monkey refuge on Mount Takasaki and the nearby Umitamago aquarium (p. 550). But the highlight for everyone will undoubtedly be Aqua-Beat, an indoor water park. Your kids will like the splash rides and wave pool; you'll like unwinding in its outdoor hot spring (p. 548).

Days 12 & 13: Osaka

It's a 4-hour train trip from Beppu to Osaka (not including a transfer in Kokura). Or, depart Beppu on Day 11 by ferry for an overnight trip to Osaka (at last check, a ferry departed Beppu at 10:40pm, arriving at Osaka at 8:40am). There's more than enough in Osaka to keep families entertained, including the Floating Garden Observatory with its surreal views (p. 384), Osaka Castle (a remake, but impressive nonetheless; p. 385), and Osaka Aquarium (bigger and better than Beppu's; p. 387). It's also a trip at Sega Amusement Theme Park, the reigning king of amusement arcades. Teenagers will also want to take in Den Den Town, Osaka's electronics shopping street, and America-Mura, where young Osakans shop for American and other hip fashions. But if you want to end your trip with a bang, take your kids to Universal Studios Japan. It's almost a carbon copy of its U.S. counterpart, and most attractions are dubbed in Japanese, but do your kids really care? If you can't call it quits, continue on to Tokyo, where there's enough to keep you busy for another week (see chapter 5).

4 Northern Japan in 2 Weeks

Tohoku and Hokkaido are usually ignored on a journey through Japan. Though it's true that the country's most significant historic treasures lie in the southern regions, Northern Japan, where the emphasis is on natural wonders and hot-spring spas, offers a more relaxed vacation for repeat travelers who have already seen the country's must-sees.

Day 1: Arrive in Tokyo

Spend the night in Tokyo; if you wish to spend a few days in the capital sightseeing, refer to the 1- and 2-week itineraries above.

Days 2 & 3: Akan National Park ★★

Fly from Tokyo's Haneda Airport 1½ hours to Kushiro Airport, where you should stop by the small tourist office for a pamphlet on tours of Kushiro

Marshland National Park; you may be able to join one that day. Otherwise, take the bus (1 hr. and 20 min.) to Akanko Onsen. Take a boat cruise of Lake Akan, famous for its marimo, a spongelike ball of duckweed, and tour the marimo museum. Visit Ainu Kotan Village with its shops and traditional Ainu dancing. Outdoor pursuits include hiking, canoeing, and fishing (including ice fishing in winter; p. 605).

Northern Japan in 2 Weeks

Days 4 & 5: Sapporo

Board an early-morning sightseeing bus for a tour of Akan National Park and its natural wonders (p. 603). Finish the tour at Bihoro Station, where you take the train 3 hours to Sapporo. Capital of Hokkaido Prefecture and the island's largest city, Sapporo is an easygoing city that's a snap to navigate. Highlights include the Botanic Garden and Nopporo Forest Park, where you can visit the Historical Museum of Hokkaido and see vintage homes and buildings at the Historical Village of Hokkaido (p. 586). Be sure to dine at the famous Sapporo Bier Garten on the grounds of the old Sapporo beer brewery (p. 592).

Day 6: Noboribetsu Spa

En route to Noboribetsu, stop off at the Poroto Kotan and Ainu Museum in Shiraoui with its impressive collection of indigenous Ainu artifacts (p. 596). In Noboribetsu Onsen, known for its curative hot springs, hike through Hell Valley for a view of the bubbling hot water that has made Noboribetsu famous, and then experience its magic at the Dai-ichi Takimotokan hot-spring baths (p. 597).

Day 7: Hakodate Port Town

Take the train onward 2 hours to Hakodate. Wander the waterfront warehouse district and historic Motomachi, a picturesque neighborhood of steep slopes and turn-of-the-20th-century clapboard homes and other buildings, relics of when Hakodate opened as one of Japan's first international ports following 2 centuries of isolation. In the evening, take a cable car to the top of Mount Hakodate, famous for its night view of Hakodate (p. 578).

Days 8 & 9: Lake Towada

Visit Hakodate's morning market (famous for its hairy crabs; p. 578) and then board a train for the 2-hour ride to Aomori Station, where you should transfer for the 3-hour bus ride to Lake Towada. Take a boat cruise of the lake and visit Towada Jinja Shrine, but the highlight of a stay here is a hike along the Oirase Stream, a coursing river shaded by trees and marked by huge boulders (p. 570).

Days 10 & 11: Back in Time at Nyuto Onsen

There's a sightseeing bus that departs Lake Towada every morning mid-April through October, arriving at Tazawako Station 7 hours later (p. 567), where you then board a local bus for Nyuto Onsen, a secluded valley of hot springs and rustic inns. It's a good base from which to explore the many wonders of the Towada-Hachimantai National Park, including skiing in winter and hiking, biking, and swimming in summer (p. 566). For the ultimate ryokan experience, spend the night in Tsuru-no-yu Onsen, a rustic and remote Japanese inn with outdoor baths (p. 569).

Day 12: Kakunodate Castle Town ★

Only one stop away from Tazawako Station on the Shinkansen is Kakunodate, a small and relatively unspoiled castle town famous for its samurai district and cherry trees. Be sure to see the Aoyagi Samurai Manor, a compound of traditional buildings packed with Edo Period memorabilia (p. 564). Spend the night here or return to your inn in Nyuto Onsen.

Day 13: Matsushima ★

Take the Shinkansen to Sendai (about 1½ hr.) and then board a sightseeing boat for a 50-minute trip to Matsushima, famous for its scenic coastline of pine-studded islets. Visit the venerable Zuiganji Temple, northern Japan's most famous Zen temple; Entsuin Temple, with its nice gardens and restaurant serving Buddhist vegetarian cuisine; and a museum or two (p. 556).

Day 14: Back to Tokyo

Return to Sendai and take the Shinkansen south to Tokyo.

Settling into Tokyo

To the uninitiated, Tokyo may seem like a whirlwind of traffic and people, so confusing that visitors might think they have somehow landed on another planet. Little wonder first-time visitors are almost invariably disappointed. They come expecting an exotic Asian city, but instead they find a city Westernized and modernized to the point of ugliness, much of it a drab concrete jungle of unimaginative buildings clustered so close together that there's hardly room in which to breathe.

Simply stated, Tokyo is a crush of humanity. Its subways are often packed, its sidewalks are crowded, its streets are congested, and its air is filled with noise, pollution, and what can only be called mystery smells. Approximately 12.5 million people live in its 2,100 sq. km (840 sq. miles), many of them in bedroom towns from which they have to commute to work for an average of 2 to 3 hours every day. No matter where you go in Tokyo, you're never alone. After you've been here for a while, Paris, London, and even New York will seem deserted.

Crowds and urban ugliness, however, are what you'll see only if you don't bother to look beneath the surface. For Tokyo is alluring in its own way; and if you open yourself to it, you'll find a city unlike any other in the world, humming with energy and vitality. People rush around here with such purpose, such determination, it's hard not to feel that you're in the midst of something important, that you're witnessing history in the making.

A LOOK AT THE PAST Though today the nation's capital, Tokyo is a relative newcomer to the pages of Japanese history. For centuries it was nothing more than a rather unimportant village called Edo, which means simply "mouth of the estuary." In 1603, Edo was catapulted into the limelight when the new shogun, Tokugawa Ieyasu, made the sleepy village the seat of his government. He expanded Edo Castle, making it the largest and most impressive castle in the land, and surrounded it with an ingenious system of moats that radiated from the castle in a great swirl, giving him easy access to the sea and an upper hand in thwarting enemy attack.

The town developed quickly, due largely to the shogun's decree requiring all feudal lords (daimyo) to permanently leave their families in Edo, a shrewd move to thwart insurrection in the provinces. There were as many as 270 daimyo in Japan in the 17th century, all of whom maintained several mansions in Edo, complete with elaborate compounds and expansive gardens. The daimyos' trusted samurai soon accounted for more than half of Edo's population, and the merchant class expanded as well. By 1787 the population had grown to 1.3 million, making Edo—even then—one of the largest cities in the world.

When the Tokugawas were overthrown in 1868, the Japanese emperor was restored to power and moved the capital from Kyoto to Edo, now renamed Tokyo (Eastern Capital). Japan's Feudal Era—and its isolation from the rest of the world—was over. As the capital city, Tokyo was the hardest hit in this new era of modernization, with fashion, architecture, food, and even people imported from the West. West was best, and things Japanese were forgotten or ignored.

It didn't help that Tokyo was almost totally destroyed twice in the first half of the 20th century: In 1923, a massive earthquake measuring 7.9 on the Richter scale destroyed more than a third of the city and claimed more than 100,000 lives; disaster struck again in 1945, toward the end of World War II when Allied incendiary bombs laid more than half the city to waste and killed another 100,000 people.

TOKYO TODAY Perhaps that's why most visitors are disappointed with Tokyo: It has almost nothing of historical importance to match Kyoto or Kamakura. So put your notions of quaint Japan out of your mind and plunge headfirst into the 21st century, because that's what Tokyo is all about. In fact, in the past few years, skyscrapers and new developments have been mushrooming faster than you can say shiitake, some of them the most ambitious land projects Japan has ever seen.

As the financial nerve center of Japan, Tokyo has long set the pace for what happens in the rest of Asia. The city is the reigning capital of Asian pop art and kitsch, fads, and trends.

But even though the city has a fast-paced, somewhat zany side, it also has a quieter and often overlooked side that makes the city both lovable and livable. Although formidable at first glance, Tokyo is nothing more than a series of small towns and neighborhoods clustered together, each with its own atmosphere, narrow, winding streets, mom-and-pop shops, fruit stands, and stores. Look for the details, and you'll notice carefully pruned bonsai adorning the sidewalks; old women in kimono shuffling down the streets; traditional wooden houses tucked between massive apartment complexes; everywhere, neatness and order. Peer inside those concrete high-rises, and you're apt to find Japanese restaurants that are perfect replicas of wood-beamed farmhouses side-by-side with cocktail bars that epitomize high-tech avant-garde.

I love Tokyo. Despite its daily frustrations, Tokyo is exhilarating, often exciting, and unceasingly interesting. Best of all, it's one of the world's safest metropolises, with the lowest theft rate of any large city on the planet. Although common sense dictates I avoid public parks after dark when I'm out alone and watch my purse in crowded subways, I otherwise walk without fear anywhere and anytime in Tokyo, day or night. The city's safety is best illustrated by what an American friend living in Tokyo was told when her daughter started first grade in a Japanese school: Parents were to refrain from walking their children to or from school, allowing, instead, the children to walk on their own.

Perhaps the only thing in Tokyo you have to watch out for are those Japanese businessmen who've had too much to drink. Reserve thrown off, they might want to practice their English on you.

1 Orientation

ARRIVING BY PLANE

There are two airports serving Tokyo, but most likely you'll arrive at Narita International Airport, 66km (40 miles) outside Tokyo. If you're arriving in Tokyo from elsewhere in Japan, your flight will probably land at Haneda Airport, used primarily for domestic flights.

FACILITIES AT NARITA AIRPORT Narita International Airport (☎ 0476/34-8000; www.narita-airport.jp) consists of two terminals, Terminal 1 and 2. Arrival lobbies in both terminals have ATMs and counters for money exchange, open daily 6:30am to 11pm (change enough money here to last several days, as the exchange rate is the same as in town, the process is speedy, and facilities in town are somewhat limited). Both are connected to all ground transportation into Tokyo.

A Tourist Information Center (TIC), managed by the Japan National Tourist Organization, is located in the arrival lobbies of both Terminal 1 (☎ 0476/30-3383) and Terminal 2 (☎ 0476/34-5877). The TIC offers free maps and pamphlets and can direct you to your hotel or inn. Both are open daily 8am to 8pm; if you don't yet have a hotel room and want one at a modest price, you can make reservations here free of charge until 7:30pm.

If you've purchased a Japan Rail Pass, you can turn in your voucher at one of the Japan Railways (JR) View Plazas (Travel Service Centers), located in both Terminal 1 and Terminal 2 and open daily 6:45am to 9:45pm. Other facilities at both terminals include post offices, medical clinics, shower rooms, day rooms for napping, children's playrooms, luggage storage and lockers, cellular phone rentals, and coin-operated computers with Internet capabilities (¥100/85¢/45p for 10 min.).

GETTING TO TOKYO FROM NARITA AIRPORT Jumping into a taxi is the easiest way to get to Tokyo, but it's also prohibitively expensive—and may not even be the quickest if you happen to hit rush hour. Expect to spend around ¥21,000 ($175/£87) or more for a 1½- to 2-hour taxi ride from Narita.

By Bus The most popular and stress-free way to get from Narita to Tokyo is via the Airport Limousine Bus (☎ 03/3665-7220; www.limousinebus.co.jp), which picks up passengers and their luggage from just outside the arrival lobbies of terminals 1 and 2 and delivers them to downtown hotels. This is the best mode of transportation if you have heavy baggage or are staying at one of the 40 or so major hotels served by the bus. Buses depart for the various hotels generally once an hour, and it can take almost 2 hours to reach a hotel in Shinjuku. Buses also travel to both Tokyo and Shinjuku stations, Haneda Airport, and the Tokyo City Air Terminal (TCAT) in downtown Tokyo, with more frequent departures (up to four times an hour in peak times). If your hotel is not served by limousine bus, take it to the hotel or station nearest your destination. In addition to taxis, TCAT, Shinjuku Station, and Tokyo Station are also served by public transportation; TCAT is connected to the subway Hanzomon Line via moving walkways and escalators; Shinjuku and Tokyo stations are hubs for subway lines and commuter trains.

Check with the staff at the Airport Limousine Bus counter in the arrival lobbies to inquire which bus stops nearest your hotel and its departure time. The fare to most destinations is ¥3,000 ($25/£13). Children 6 to 12 are charged half fare; those under 6 ride free.

By Train The quickest way to reach Tokyo is by train, with several options available. Trains depart directly from the airport's two underground stations, called Narita Airport Station (which is in Terminal 1) and Airport Terminal 2 Station.

The JR Narita Express (NEX); ☎ 03/3423-0111; www.jreast.co.jp) is the fastest way to reach Tokyo Station, Shinagawa, Shibuya, Shinjuku, and Yokohama, with departures approximately once an hour, or twice an hour during peak hours. The 53-minute trip to Tokyo Station costs ¥2,940 ($24/£12) one-way. Note, however, that if

Tips Saving on Transportation

If you're going to be traveling around Tokyo by public transportation (and who doesn't?), you can save money by purchasing both a NEX and Suica card for ¥3,500 ($29/£15), which includes the Narita Express into Tokyo plus ¥2,000 worth of travel in Tokyo. The discount ticket, available only at Narita Airport to foreign visitors, can be purchased at Travel Service Centers at both terminals. Likewise, there's an Airport Limousine & Metro Pass combination ticket that includes one Airport Limousine trip to or from the airport plus 1 day of unlimited rides on Metro subways for ¥3,100 ($26/£13). This ticket is available at Airport Limousine counters at the airport, TCAT, and Shinjuku Station. Finally, there are also 1- and 2-day Metro passes available only in the arrival lobbies of both terminals at Narita for ¥600 ($5/£2.50) and ¥980 ($8.15/£4.10) respectively. For more information on the Suica and 1-day Metro cards, see "Getting Around," later in this chapter.

you have a validated JR Rail Pass, you can ride the NEX free (as mentioned above, you must first validate your rail pass at the JR View Plaza, also called the JR Travel Service Center, located in both terminals). Note: Seats are sometimes sold out in advance, especially during peak travel times. If you want to reserve a seat for your return trip to Narita Airport—and I strongly recommend it—you can do so here at the NEX counter or at any of Tokyo's major JR stations. Plan to arrive at Narita 2 hours before your plane's departure.

If the NEX is sold out and you're still determined to use your rail pass, you can take the slower JR Airport Liner, which will get you to Tokyo Station in 80 minutes. Without a rail pass, this rapid train will cost you ¥1,280 ($11/£5.50).

An alternative is the privately owned Keisei Skyliner train (☎ 03/3831-0131; www.keisei.co.jp), which departs directly from both Narita Airport Station (Terminal 1) and Airport Terminal 2 Station and travels to Ueno Station in Tokyo in about 1 hour, with a stop at Nippori Station on the way. You'll find Keisei Skyliner counters in the arrival lobbies of both terminals. Trains depart about every 40 minutes between 7:52am and 10pm, with the fare from Narita Airport to Ueno Station in Tokyo ¥1,920 ($16/£8) one-way. Travelers on a budget can take one of Keisei's slower limited express trains to Ueno Station, with fares starting at ¥1,000 ($9.35/£4.15) for the 71-minute trip. At Ueno Station, where you'll find a Tokyo Tourist Information Center (daily 9:30am–6:30pm), you can take either the subway or JR Yamanote Line to other parts of Tokyo. There are also plenty of taxis.

GETTING TO HANEDA AIRPORT If you're connecting to a domestic flight, you may need to transfer to Haneda Airport. The Airport Limousine Bus makes runs between Narita Airport and Haneda Airport that cost ¥3,000 ($25/£13). The trip takes about 75 minutes.

GETTING FROM HANEDA AIRPORT INTO CENTRAL TOKYO If you're arriving by domestic flight at Haneda Airport (☎ 03/5757-8111), located near the center of Tokyo, you can take the Airport Limousine Bus to Shinjuku Station, Tokyo Station, the Tokyo City Air Terminal (TCAT) in downtown Tokyo, and to hotels in Shinjuku, Ikebukuro, and Akasaka. Fares run from ¥900 to ¥1,200 ($7.50–$10/£3.75–£5). Locals, however, are more likely to take the monorail from Haneda Airport 15 minutes to Hamamatsucho Station (¥470/$3.90/£1.95), or the Keikyu Line 19 minutes to Shinagawa (¥400/$3.35/£1.65). Both Hamamatsucho and Shinagawa connect to the very useful Yamanote Line, which travels to major stations, including Tokyo Station and Shinjuku Station. There is a Tokyo Tourist Information Center (☎ 03/5757-9345) in Haneda Airport, open daily 9am to 10pm.

BY LAND OR SEA

BY TRAIN If you're traveling to Tokyo by the Shinkansen bullet train, you'll probably arrive at either Tokyo Station or Shinagawa Station, both connected to the rest of the city via JR commuter trains and the subway (avoid Tokyo Station if you can; it's very big and confusing). Trains from northern Japan also stop at Ueno Station.

BY BUS Long-distance bus service from Hiroshima, Nagoya, Osaka, Kyoto, and other major cities delivers passengers to Tokyo Station, which is connected to the rest of the city via subway and commuter train. Other bus terminals serving the region outside Tokyo include Shinagawa and Shinjuku stations, both of which are served by the JR Yamanote Line, which loops around the city.

BY FERRY Long-distance ferries arrive in Tokyo at the Tokyo Ko Ferry Futo (Tokyo Port Ferry Terminal). From there, you can board a bus for Shinkiba JR Station and catch a train to town.

VISITOR INFORMATION

The Tourist Information Center (TIC), 2-10-1 Yurakucho (☎ 03/3201-3331), is located on the 10th floor of a rather obscure office building called Kotsu Kaikan Building next to the JR Yurakucho Station (look for its circular top). Assuming you're able to find them, the TIC staff can answer all your questions regarding Tokyo and Japan, can give you a map of the city plus various sightseeing materials, and will even book inexpensive hotels for you around the country, charging no fee for the service. They're courteous and efficient; I cannot recommend them highly enough. Maintained by the Japan National Tourist Organization, the TIC also has information on the rest of Japan, including pamphlets and brochures on major cities and attractions. Be sure to stop here if you plan to visit other destinations, because information in English may not be available at the destination itself. The TIC is open daily from 9am to 5pm. Other TIC offices are located in the arrival lobbies of Terminal 1 and Terminal 2 at Narita Airport, open daily from 8am to 8pm.

Another great source of information is the Tokyo Tourist Information Center, operated by the Tokyo Metropolitan Government and located on the first floor of the Tokyo Metropolitan Government (TMG) Building No. 1, 2-8-1 Nishi-Shinjuku (☎ 03/5321-3077; www.tourism.metro.tokyo.jp; Station: Tochomae or Shinjuku); you'll probably want to come here anyway for TMG's great free observation floor. The center dispenses pamphlets, its own city map (which is a great complement to the one issued by JNTO's TIC), and handy one-page detailed maps of various city districts, from Ueno to Roppongi. It's open daily 9:30am to 6:30pm. Other city-run information counters are at Keisei Ueno Station (☎ 03/3836-3471; Station: Ueno), open daily 9:30am to 6:30pm; and Haneda Airport (☎ 03/5757-9345), open daily 9am to 10pm.

TOURIST PUBLICATIONS Be sure to pick up Calendar Events at the TIC, a monthly leaflet listing festivals, antiques and crafts fairs, and other events throughout the metropolitan area. Of the many free giveaways available at TIC, restaurants, bars, bookstores, hotels, and other establishments visitors and ex-pats are likely to frequent, best is the weekly Metropolis (<http://metropolis.co.jp>), with features on Tokyo, club listings, and restaurant and movie reviews. Look also for the free JapanZine (www.seekjapan.jp) and att.Japan (www.att-japan.net). Weekly entertainment sections on theater, films, and special events are published in the English-language newspapers, appearing on Friday in the Japan Times and on Thursday in the Daily Yomiuri.

CITY LAYOUT

Your most frustrating moments in Tokyo will probably occur when you find that you're totally lost. Maybe it will be in a subway or train station, when all you see are signs in Japanese, or on a street somewhere as you search for a museum, restaurant, or bar. At any rate, accept it here and now: You will get lost if you are at all adventurous and strike out on your own. It's inevitable. But take comfort in the fact that Japanese get lost, too—even taxi drivers! And don't forget that most of the hotel and restaurant listings in this book have the number of minutes (in parentheses) it takes to walk there from the nearest station; if you take note, you'll at least know the radius from the station to your destination. It's wise, too, to always allow extra time to find your way around.

Tokyo, situated at one end of Tokyo Bay and spreading across the Kanto Plain, still retains some of its Edo Period features. If you look at a map, you'll find a large green oasis in the middle of the city, site of the Imperial Palace and its grounds. Surrounding it is the castle moat; a bit farther out are remnants of another circular moat built by the Tokugawa shogun. The JR Yamanote Line forms another loop around the inner city; most of Tokyo's major hotels, nightlife districts, and attractions are near or inside this oblong loop.

For administrative purposes, Tokyo is broken down into 23 wards, known as ku. Its business districts of Marunouchi and Hibiya, for example, are in Chiyoda-ku, while Ginza is part of Chuo-ku (Central Ward). These two ku are the historic hearts of Tokyo, for it was here that the city had its humble beginnings.

MAIN STREETS & ARTERIES One difficulty in finding your way around Tokyo is that hardly any streets are named. Think about what that means: some 12 million people living in a huge metropolis of nameless streets. Granted, major thoroughfares and some well-known streets in areas such as Ginza and Shinjuku received names after World War II at the insistence of American occupation forces, and a few more have been labeled or given nicknames that only the locals know, but for the most part, Tokyo's address system is based on a complicated number scheme that must make the postal worker's job here a nightmare. To make matters worse, most streets in Tokyo zigzag—an arrangement apparently left over from olden days, to confuse potential attacking enemies. Now they confuse Tokyoites and visitors alike.

Among Tokyo's most important named streets are Meiji Dori, which follows the loop of the Yamanote Line and runs from Minato-ku in the south through Ebisu, Shibuya, Harajuku, Shinjuku, and Ikebukuro in the north; Yasukuni Dori and Shinjuku Dori, which cut across the heart of the city from Shinjuku to Chiyoda-ku; and Sotobori Dori, Chuo Dori, Harumi Dori, and Showa Dori, which pass through Ginza. (Dori means avenue or street, as does michi.)

Intersections in Tokyo are called a crossing; it seems every district has a famous crossing. Ginza 4-chome Crossing is the intersection of Chuo Dori and Harumi Dori. Roppongi Crossing is the intersection of Roppongi Dori and Gaien-Higashi Dori.

ADDRESSES Because streets did not have names when Japan's postal system was established, the country has a unique address system. A typical Tokyo address might read 1-11-1 Marunouchi, Chiyoda-ku, which is the address of the Four Seasons Hotel Tokyo at Marunouchi. Chiyoda-ku is the name of the ward. Wards are further divided into districts, in this case Marunouchi. Marunouchi itself is broken down into chome (numbered subsection), here 1-chome. Number 11 refers to a smaller area within the chome—usually an entire block, sometimes larger. Thus, houses on one side of the street will usually have a different middle number than houses on the other side. The last number, in this case 1, refers to the actual building. Although it seems reasonable to assume that next to a number 1 building will be a number 2, that's not always the case; buildings were assigned numbers as they were constructed, not according to location.

Addresses are usually, but not always, posted on buildings beside doors, on telephone poles, and at major intersection traffic lights, but sometimes they are written in kanji only. One frustrating trend is that new, modern buildings omit posting any address whatsoever on their facades, perhaps in the belief that no one understands the address system anyway.

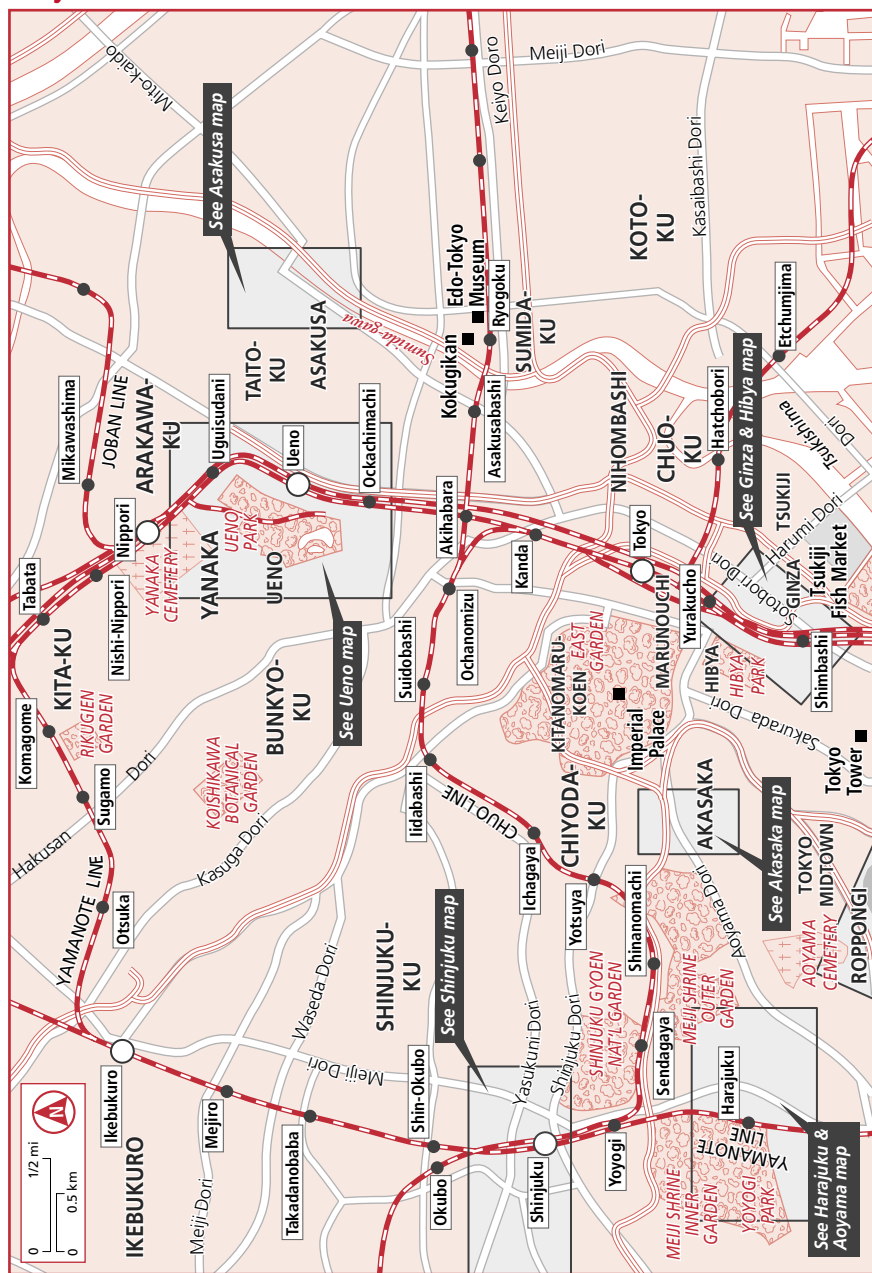

FINDING YOUR WAY AROUND If you're traveling by subway or JR train, the first thing you should do upon exiting your compartment is to look for yellow signs posted on every platform that tell you which exit to take for particular buildings, attractions, and chome. At Roppongi Station, for example, you'll find yellow signboards that tell you the exit to take for Roppongi Hills, which will at least get you pointed in the right direction once you emerge from the station. Stations also have maps of the areas either inside the station or at the exit; these are your best plan of attack when trying to find a particular address.

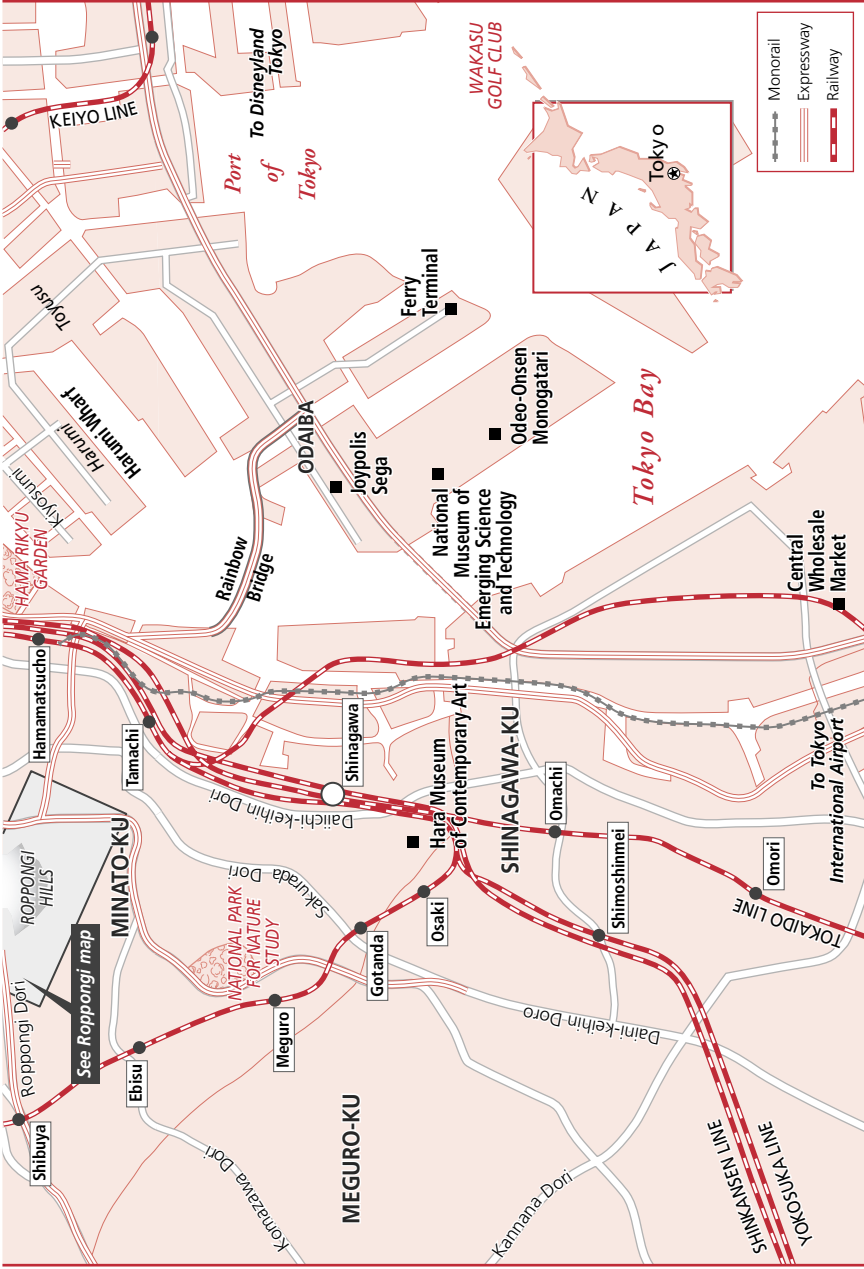

As you walk around Tokyo, you will also notice maps posted beside sidewalks giving a breakdown of the postal number system for the area (look for a white circle with an "i" in the middle). The first time I tried to use one, I stopped one Japanese, then another, and asked them to point out on the map where a particular address was. They both studied the map and pointed out the direction. Both turned out to be wrong. Not very encouraging, but if you learn how to read these maps, they're invaluable. Nowadays, many of them include landmarks translated in English.

Another invaluable source of information are the numerous police boxes, called koban, located in every neighborhood throughout the city. Police officers have area maps and are very helpful (helping lost souls seems to occupy much of their time). You should also never hesitate to ask a Japanese the way, but be sure to ask more than one. You'll be amazed at the conflicting directions you'll receive. Apparently, Japanese would rather hazard a guess than impolitely shrug their shoulders and leave you standing there. The best thing to do is ask directions of several Japanese and then follow the majority opinion. You can also duck into a shop and ask someone where a nearby address is, although in my experience employees do not even know the address of their own store. However, they may have a map of the area.

MAPS Before setting out on your own, arm yourself with a few maps. Maps are so much a part of life in Tokyo that they're often included in shop or restaurant advertisements or brochures, on business cards, and even in private party invitations. Even though I've spent years in Tokyo, I rarely venture forth without a map. The Tourist Information Center issues a Tourist Map of Tokyo, which includes a subway map. Better, in my opinion, are the free maps given away by the Tokyo Metropolitan Government, which range from a city map to detailed maps of Tokyo's many districts (such as Shinjuku). Armed with these maps, you should be able to locate at least the general vicinity of every place mentioned in this chapter and the next. Hotels also sometimes distribute their own maps. In short, never pass up a free map.

For more detailed maps, head for Tower Books, Kinokuniya, or one of the other bookstores with an English-language section (see "Shopping from A to Z" in chapter 5). My own personal favorite is Shobunsha's Bilingual Map of Tokyo, listing chome and chome subsections for major areas; the waterproof compact folded map can be carried in a purse or backpack. If you plan to write a guidebook, consider Shobunsha's Tokyo Metropolitan Atlas, a book covering all 23 of Tokyo's wards with specific postal maps, as well as greater Tokyo and its vicinity, along with expressway and Tokyo-area road maps, or Kodansha International's Tokyo City Atlas, which has both Japanese- and English-language place names, along with rail and subway maps, district maps, and an index to important buildings, museums, and other places of interest.

TOKYO'S NEIGHBORHOODS IN BRIEF

Taken as a whole, Tokyo seems formidable and unconquerable. It's best, therefore, to think of it as nothing more than a series of villages scrunched together, much like the pieces of a jigsaw puzzle. Holding the pieces together, so to speak, is the Yamanote Line, a commuter train loop around central Tokyo that passes through such important stations as Yurakucho, Tokyo, Ueno, Ikebukuro, Shinjuku, Harajuku, Shibuya, and Shinagawa. Since 2001, several districts have witnessed massive redevelopment, including Shinagawa, both sides of Tokyo Station, and Roppongi.

Hibiya This is not only the business heart of Tokyo, but its spiritual heart as well. This is where the Tokugawa shogun built his magnificent castle, and was thus the center of old Edo. Today, Hibiya, in Chiyoda-ku Ward, is no less important as the home of the Imperial Palace, built on the ruins of Edo Castle and the residence of Japan's 125th emperor. Bordering the palace is the wonderful East Garden and Hibiya Park, both open free to the public.

Ginza Ginza is the swankiest and most expensive shopping area in all Japan. When the country opened to foreign trade in the 1860s, following 2 centuries of self-imposed seclusion, it was here that Western imports and adopted Western architecture were first displayed. Today, Ginza is where you'll find a multitude of department stores, boutiques, exclusive restaurants, hotels, art galleries, and drinking establishments. On the edge of Ginza is Kabukiza, venue for Kabuki productions.

Tsukiji Located only two subway stops from Ginza, Tsukiji was born from reclaimed land during the Tokugawa shogunate; its name, in fact, means "reclaimed land." Today it's famous for the Tsukiji Fish Market, one of the largest wholesale fish markets in the world. Nearby is Hama Rikyu Garden, one of Tokyo's most famous gardens.

Akihabara Two stops north of Tokyo Station on the Yamanote Line, Akihabara has long been Japan's foremost shopping destination for electronic and electrical appliances, with hundreds of shops offering a look at the latest in gadgets and gizmos, including Yodobashi Camera, Japan's largest appliance store. In recent years, Akihabara has also become a mecca for fans of anime and manga and is home of the Tokyo Anime Center. This is a fascinating area for a stroll, even if you aren't interested in buying anything. About a 12-minute walk to the west is Kanda, with many stores specializing in new and used books.

Asakusa In the northeastern part of central Tokyo, Asakusa served as the pleasure quarters for old Edo. Today it's known throughout Japan as the site of the famous Sensoji Temple, one of Tokyo's top and oldest attractions. It also has a wealth of tiny shops selling traditional Japanese crafts. When Tokyoites talk about old downtown (shitamachi), they are referring to the traditional homes and tiny narrow streets of the Asakusa and Ueno areas.

Ueno Located just west of Asakusa, on the northern edge of the JR Yamanote Line loop, Ueno is also part of the city's old downtown. Ueno boasts Ueno Park, a huge green space comprising a zoo and several acclaimed museums, including the Tokyo National Museum, which houses the largest collection of Japanese art and antiquities in the world. Ueno Station serves as a stop for major train lines heading north and eastward, including some lines of the Shinkansen bullet train. Under the train tracks of the JR Yamanote Line loop is a thriving market for food, clothing, and accessories.

Shinjuku Originating as a post town in 1698 to serve the needs of feudal lords and their retainers traveling between Edo and the provinces, Shinjuku was hardly touched by the 1923 Great Kanto Earthquake, making it an attractive alternative for businesses wishing to relocate following the destruction. In 1971, Japan's first skyscraper was erected with the opening of the Keio Plaza Hotel in western Shinjuku, setting a dramatic precedent for things to come. Today more than a dozen skyscrapers, including several hotels, dot the Shinjuku skyline, and with the opening of the Tokyo Metropolitan Government Office (TMG) in 1991 (with a tourist office and a great free observation floor), Shinjuku's transformation into the capital's upstart business district was complete. Separating eastern and western Shinjuku is Shinjuku Station, the nation's busiest commuter station, located on the western end of the Yamanote Line loop. Surrounding the station is a bustling shopping district, particularly the huge Takashimaya Times Square complex and the many discount electronics stores. Shinjuku is also known for its nightlife, especially in Kabuki-cho, one of Japan's most famous—and naughtiest—amusement centers; and in Shinjuku 2-cho, Tokyo's premier gay nightlife district. An oasis in the middle of Shinjuku madness is Shinjuku Gyoen Park, a beautiful garden for strolling.

Ikebukuro Located north of Shinjuku on the Yamanote Line loop, Ikebukuro is the working person's Tokyo, less refined and a bit rougher around the edges. Ikebukuro is where you'll find Seibu and Tobu, two of the country's largest department stores, as well as the Japan Traditional Craft Center with its beautifully crafted traditional items. The Sunshine City Building, one of Tokyo's tallest skyscrapers, is home to a huge indoor shopping center.

Harajuku The mecca of Tokyo's younger generation, Harajuku swarms throughout the week with teenagers in search of fashion and fun. At its center is Omotesando Dori, a fashionable tree-lined avenue flanked by trendy shops, sidewalk cafes, and restaurants. Nearby is Takeshita Dori, a narrow pedestrian lane packed with young people looking for the latest in inexpensive clothing. Harajuku is also the home of one of Japan's major attractions, Meiji Jingu Shrine, built in 1920 to deify Emperor and Empress Meiji. Another drawing card is the Oriental Bazaar, Tokyo's best shop for products and souvenirs of Japan.

Aoyama While Harajuku is for Tokyo's teeny-boppers, nearby chic Aoyama is its playground for trend-setting yuppies, boasting sophisticated restaurants, pricey boutiques, and more cutting-edge designer-fashion outlets than anywhere else in the city. It's located on the eastern end of Omotesando Dori (and an easy walk from Harajuku), centered on Aoyama Dori. The upscale Omotesando Hills shopping center on Omotesando Dori stretches from Harajuku to Aoyama.

Shibuya Located on the southwestern edge of the Yamanote Line loop, Shibuya serves as a vibrant nightlife and shopping area for the young. More subdued than Shinjuku, more down-to-earth than Harajuku, and less cosmopolitan than Roppongi, it's home to more than a dozen department stores specializing in everything from designer clothing to housewares and CDs. Don't miss the light change at Shibuya Crossing, reportedly Japan's busiest intersection, with its hordes of pedestrians, neon, and five video billboards that have earned it the nickname "Times Square of Tokyo" (and a spot in the movie Lost in Translation).

Ebisu One station south of Shibuya on the JR Yamanote Line, Ebisu was a minor player in Tokyo's shopping and nightlife league until the 1995 debut of Yebisu Garden Place, a smart-looking complex of apartments, concert halls, two museums, restaurants, a department store, and a first-class hotel, all connected to Ebisu Station via moving walkway. The vicinity east of Ebisu Station, once a sleepy residential and low-key shopping district, is now a small but thriving nightlife mecca popular with ex-pats who find Roppongi too crass or commercial.

Roppongi Tokyo's best-known nightlife district for young Japanese and foreigners, Roppongi has more bars and nightclubs than any other district outside Shinjuku, as well as a multitude of restaurants serving international cuisines. It's anchored by two new developments: the eye-popping, 11-hectare (28-acre) Roppongi Hills, Tokyo's largest urban development housing 230 shops and restaurants, a first-class hotel, a garden, apartments, offices, a cinema complex, and Tokyo's highest art museum, on the 53rd floor of Mori Tower; and the 10-hectare (25-acre) Tokyo Midtown, which boasts Tokyo's tallest building, a luxury hotel, medical center, 130 restaurants and fashion boutiques, apartments, offices, a garden, and art museum.

Akasaka With its several large hotels and small nightlife district, Akasaka caters mostly to businessmen but is otherwise of little interest to tourists. However, it does boast some good restaurants; in recent years, so many Korean restaurants and establishments have set up shop here that it has been dubbed "Little Korea."

Shinagawa Once an important post station on the old Tokaido Highway, Shinagawa remains an important crossroads due to Shinagawa Station, a stop on the Shinkansen bullet train route and on the southern end of the Yamanote Line loop. Home to several major hotels, it has also witnessed a major blossoming of office construction in recent years, making it a serious rival to Shinjuku's business district.

Odaiba This is Tokyo's newest district, constructed from reclaimed land in Tokyo Bay. Connected to the mainland by the Rainbow Bridge (famous for its chameleon colors after nightfall), the Yurikamome Line monorail, the Rinkai Line, and a vehicular harbor tunnel, Odaiba is home to hotels, Japan's largest convention space, several shopping complexes (including the fancy Venus Fort), the Museum of Maritime Science, the National Museum of Emerging Science and Innovation, a hot-spring public bath that harkens back to the Edo Era, a monolithic Ferris wheel, and Megaweb, a huge multimedia car amusement and exhibition center sponsored by Toyota. For young Japanese, it's one of Tokyo's hottest date spots.

2 Getting Around

The first rule of getting around Tokyo: It will always take longer than you think. For short-term visitors, calculating travel times in Tokyo is a tricky business. Taking a taxi is expensive and involves the probability of getting stuck interminably in traffic, with the meter ticking away. Taking the subway is usually more efficient, even though it's more complicated and harder on your feet: Choosing which route to take isn't always clear, and transfers between lines are sometimes quite a hike in themselves. If I'm going from one end of Tokyo to the other by subway, I usually allow anywhere from 30 to 60 minutes, depending on the number of transfers and the walking distance to my final destination. If you don't have to change trains, you can travel from one end of central Tokyo to the other in about 30 minutes or less. In any case, travel times to destinations within each line are posted on platform pillars, along with diagrams showing which train compartments are best for making quick transfers between lines.

Your best bet for getting around Tokyo is to take the subway or Japan Railways (JR) commuter train such as the Yamanote Line to the station nearest your destination. From there you can either walk, using a map and asking directions along the way, or take a taxi.

BY PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION

Each mode of transportation in Tokyo—subway, JR train (such as the Yamanote Line), and bus—has its own fare system and therefore requires a new ticket each time you transfer from one mode of transport to another. If you're going to be in Tokyo for a few days, it's much more convenient to purchase a Suica, a contactless card issued by JR East that automatically deducts fares and can be used on virtually all modes of transportation, including JR trains, private railways (such as the Rinkai Line to Odaiba or Minato Mirai Line to Yokohama), subways, and buses. It can even be used for purchases at designated vending machines, convenience stores, and fast-food outlets that display the Suica sign. First-time buyers must purchase the Suica from vending machines for ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50), which includes a ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) deposit. The Suica is rechargeable, at amounts ranging from ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) to ¥10,000 ($83/£42). Note, however, that when you return your Suica to get your deposit back, be sure that the card is depleted, or you'll be charged a ¥210 ($1.75/90p) handling fee for any remaining stored balance on the card. A similar card to the Suica is the Pasmo, which can also be used on various modes of transportation throughout Tokyo. Although there are other options available, including 1-day cards and metro-only cards, the Suica and the Pasmo are by far my favorites.

That being said, if you think you're going to be traveling a lot by public transportation on any given day, consider purchasing a Tokyo Free Kippu which, despite its name, costs ¥1,580 ($13/£6.50), but does allow unlimited travel for 1 day on all subways, JR trains, and Toei buses within Tokyo's 23 wards. It's available at all JR stations, JR View Plazas, and most subway stations.

Please note that all cellphones should be switched to silent mode (called “manner mode” in Japanese) on public conveyances.

BY SUBWAY

To get around Tokyo on your own, it's imperative to learn how to ride its subways. Fortunately, the Tokyo Metro system (which uses a symbol “M” vaguely reminiscent of McDonald's famous arches) is efficient, modern, clean, and easy to use; in fact, I think it's one of the most user-friendly systems on the planet. All station names are written in English. Many cars also display the next station in English on digital signs above their doors and announce stops in English.

Altogether, there are 13 underground subway lines crisscrossing the city, operated by two companies: Tokyo Metro (the bigger of the two) and Toei (which operates four lines). Each line is color-coded. The Ginza Line, for example, is orange, which means that all its trains and signs are orange. If you're transferring to the Ginza Line from another line, follow the orange signs and circles to the Ginza Line platform. Each line is also assigned a letter (usually its initial), so that the Ginza has the letter “G” and Hibiya the letter “H.” Additionally, each station along each line is assigned a number in chronological order beginning with the first station (Asakusa Station, for example, is G19, the 19th stop from Shibuya on the Ginza Line), so you always know how many stops to your destination. Before boarding, however, make sure the train is going in the right direction—signs at each station show both the previous and the next stop, so you can double-check you're heading in the right direction. Tokyo's newest line, Toei's Oedo Line, makes a zigzag loop around the city and is useful for traveling between Roppongi and Shinjuku; be aware, however, that it's buried deep underground and that platforms take a while to reach, despite escalators.

Remember, once you reach your destination, look for the yellow signs on station platforms designating which exit to take for major buildings, museums, and addresses. If you're confused about which exit to take, ask someone at the window near the ticket gate. Taking the right exit can make a world of difference, especially in Shinjuku, where there are some 60 station exits.

TICKETS Vending machines at all subway stations sell tickets; fares begin at ¥160 ($1.35/70p) for the shortest distance and increase according to how far you're traveling. Children under 6 ride free; children 6 to 11 pay half fare. Vending machines give change, and most accept ¥1,000, ¥2,000, ¥5,000, and ¥10,000 notes. To purchase your ticket, insert money into the vending machine until the fare buttons light up, and then push the amount for the ticket you want. Your ticket and change will drop onto a little platform at the bottom of the machine.

Fares are posted on a large subway map above the vending machines, but they're generally in Japanese only; major stations also post a smaller map listing fares in English, but you may have to search for it. An alternative is to look at the subway map contained in the “Tourist Map of Tokyo” issued by TIC—it lists stations in both Japanese and English. When you know what the Japanese characters look like, you may be able to locate your station and the corresponding fare. If you still don't know the fare, just buy a basic-fare ticket for ¥160 ($1.35/70p). When you exit at your destination, look for the fare adjustment machine; insert your ticket to find out how much more you owe, or look for a subway employee at the ticket window to tell you how much extra you owe.

Transfers on the Subway & Train

You can transfer between most subway lines without buying another ticket, and you can transfer between JR train lines on one ticket. However, your ticket or prepaid card does not allow a transfer between Tokyo's two subway companies (Metro and Toei), JR train lines, and private train lines connecting Tokyo with outlying destinations such as Nikko. You usually don't have to worry about this, though, because if you exit through a wicket and have to give up your ticket, you'll know you have to buy another one.

The general rule is that if your final destination and fare are posted above the ticket vending machines, you can travel all the way to your destination with only one ticket. But don't worry about this too much; the ticket collector will set you straight if you've miscalculated. Note, however, that if you pay too much for your ticket, the portion of the fare that's left unused is not refundable—so, again, the easiest thing to do if in doubt is to buy the cheapest fare. Even better, buy a Suica or Pasma.

In any case, be sure to hang onto your ticket, as you must give it up at the end of your journey. For more information on tickets, passes, and lines for the subway, as well as a detailed map and brochure, stop by Metro Information desks located at Ginza, Shinjuku, Harajuku, and other major stations in Tokyo. Or check the website www.tokyometro.jp.

HOURS Most subways run from about 5am to midnight, although the times of the first and last trains depend on the line, the station, and whether it's a weekday or weekend. Schedules are posted in the stations, and throughout most of the day, trains run every 3 to 5 minutes.

Avoid taking the subway during the weekday morning rush hour, from 8 to 9am; the stories you've heard about commuters packed into trains like sardines are all true. There are even "platform pushers," men who push people into compartments so that the doors can close. If you want to witness Tokyo at its craziest, go to Shinjuku Station at 8:30am—but go by taxi unless you want to experience the crowding firsthand. Most lines provide women-only compartments weekdays until 9:30am.

BY TRAIN

In addition to subway lines, electric commuter trains operated by the East Japan Railways Company (JR) run aboveground throughout greater Tokyo. These are also color-coded, with fares beginning at ¥130 ($1.10/55p). Buy your ticket from vending machines just as you would for the subway. If you think you'll be traveling a lot by JR lines on any given day, consider purchasing a 1-Day Tokunai Pass, which allows unlimited travel for ¥730 ($6.10/£3.05) on JR lines only.

The Yamanote Line (green-colored coaches) is the best-known and most convenient JR line. It makes an oblong loop around the city, stopping at 29 stations along the way, all of them announced in English and with digital signboards in each compartment. In fact, you may want to take the Yamanote Line and stay on it for a roundup view of Tokyo; the entire trip takes about an hour, passing such stations as Shinjuku, Tokyo, Akihabara, Ueno, Harajuku, and Shibuya on the way.

Another convenient JR line is the orange-colored Chuo Line; it cuts across Tokyo between Shinjuku and Tokyo stations, with both express (which doesn't make as many stops) and local trains available. The yellow-colored Sobu Line runs between Shinjuku and Akihabara and beyond to Chiba. Other JR lines serve outlying districts for the metropolis's commuting public, including Yokohama and Kamakura. Because the Yamanote, Chuo, and Sobu lines are rarely identified by their specific names at major stations, look for signs that say JR LINES.

For more information on JR lines and tickets, stop by one of JR's Information Centers at Tokyo Station, Ueno, Shinjuku, Shibuya, or Shinagawa or call the English-language JR East Infoline at ☎ 050/2016-1603 daily from 10am to 6pm. You can also check its website at www.jreast.co.jp/e.

BY BUS

Buses are not as easy to use as trains or subways unless you know their route, because only the end destination is written on the bus and routes listed at bus stops are usually not in English. In addition, many bus drivers don't speak English. Buses are sometimes convenient for short distances, however. If you're feeling adventurous, board the bus at the front and drop the exact fare (usually ¥200/$1.65/85p) into the box. If you don't have the exact amount, fare boxes accept coins or bills; your change minus the fare will come out below. Suica and Pasma cards are also accepted. A signboard at the front of the bus displays the next stop, usually in English. When you wish to get off, press one of the buttons on the railing near the door or the seats. You can pick up an excellent Toei bus map showing all major routes at one of the Tokyo Tourist Information Centers operated by the Tokyo Metropolitan Government (see "Visitor Information," earlier). Or check the Toei website at www.kotsu.metro.tokyo.jp.

BY TAXI

Taxis are shamefully expensive in Tokyo. Fares start at ¥660 ($5.50/£2.75) for the first 2km (1¼ miles) and increase ¥80 (65¢/35p) for each additional 274m (904 ft.) or 40 seconds of waiting time. Smaller, more compact taxis start out at slightly less—¥640 ($5.35/£2.65) for the first 2km (1¼ miles)—and their fare increases ¥80 (65¢/35p) for each additional 290m (957 ft.). Fares are posted on the back of the front passenger seat. If you're like me, however, you probably won't shop around—you'll gratefully jump into the first taxi that stops. Note: From 11pm to 5am, an extra 30% is added to your fare. Perhaps as an admission of how expensive taxis are, fares can also be paid by all major credit cards (though some companies require a minimum fare of ¥5,000/$42/£21).

With the exception of some major thoroughfares in the downtown area, you can hail a taxi from any street or go to a taxi stand or a major hotel. A red light above the dashboard shows if a taxi is free to pick up a passenger; a green light indicates that the taxi is occupied. Be sure to stand clear of the back left door—it swings open automatically. Likewise, it shuts automatically once you're in. Taxi drivers are quite perturbed if you try to maneuver the door yourself.

Unless you're going to a well-known landmark or hotel, it's best to have your destination written out in Japanese, as most taxi drivers don't speak English. But even that may not help. Tokyo is so complicated that even taxi drivers may not know a certain area, although they do have detailed maps and some even have GPS navigation systems. If a driver doesn't understand where you're going, he may refuse to take you. Otherwise, don't be surprised if he jumps out of the cab to ask for directions at a nearby shop—with the meter ticking.

There are so many taxis cruising Tokyo that you can hail one easily on most thoroughfares, except when you need it most: when it's raining; or just after 1am on weekends, after all subways and trains have stopped. To call a major taxi company for a pickup, try Nihon Kotsu (☎ 03/5755-2151) or Kokusai (☎ 03/3505-6001). Note, however, that only Japanese is spoken and you'll be required to pay extra (usually not more than ¥400/$3.35/£1.65 for the pickup). I have rarely telephoned for a taxi; as in the movies, one usually cruises by just when I raise my hand.

FAST FACTS: Tokyo

If you can't find answers to your questions here, check "Fast Facts: Japan," in chapter 2. If you still can't find an answer, call the Tourist Information Center (☎ 03/3201-3331) daily from 9am to 5pm or the city-run Tokyo Tourist Information Center (☎ 03/5321-3077) daily from 9:30am to 6:30pm. Another good source is the Foreign Residents' Advisory Center (☎ 03/5320-7744), which can answer questions on a wide range of topics from problems of daily life and emergency numbers to Japanese customs, Monday through Friday from 9:30am to noon and 1 to 5pm. Finally, if you're staying in a first-class hotel, another valuable resource is the concierge or guest-relations desk, where the staff can tell you how to reach your destination, answer general questions, and even make restaurant reservations.

American Express There is no public American Express office in Japan.

Area Code The area code for Tokyo is 3 if calling from abroad and 03 if calling from within Japan. For details on calling Tokyo from outside Japan, see "Staying Connected" in chapter 2.

Babysitters Most major hotels can arrange babysitting services, but expect to pay a minimum of ¥5,000 ($43/£22) for 2 hours. Some hotels have day-care centers for young children, though they are no less expensive. See individual hotel listings or "Family-Friendly Hotels" later in this chapter.

Business Hours See "Fast Facts: Japan" in chapter 2.

Currency Exchange See "Money & Costs," p. 39.

Dentists & Doctors Many first-class hotels offer medical facilities or an in-house doctor. Otherwise, your embassy can refer you to English-speaking doctors, specialists, and dentists. The AMDA International Medical Information Center (☎ 03/5285-8088; Mon–Fri 9am–5pm) can provide information on English-speaking staff. The following clinics have some English-speaking staff and are popular with foreigners living in Tokyo: Tokyo Midtown Medical Center, an affiliate of Johns Hopkins on the sixth floor of Midtown Tower, 9–7–1 Akasaka, Minato-ku, near Roppongi Station (☎ 03/5413-79110; Mon–Fri 9am–1pm and 2–7pm, Sat 9am–noon; accepts walk-ins, appointments, and emergencies); The International Clinic, 1–5–9 Azabudai, Minato-ku, within walking distance of Roppongi or Azabu Juban stations (☎ 03/3582-2646; Mon–Fri 9am–noon and 2–5pm, Sat 9am–noon; walk-ins only); and Tokyo Medical & Surgical Clinic, 32 Mori Building, 3–4–30 Shiba-koen, Minato-ku, near Kamiyacho, Onarimon, or Shiba-koen stations and across from Tokyo Tower (☎ 03/3436-3028; Mon–Fri 9am–11:30am and 2–4:30pm, Sat 9am–noon; appointments only). At the Tokyo Medical & Surgical Clinic, above, is the Tokyo Clinic Dental Office (☎ 03/3431-4225; Mon–Thurs 9am–6pm and Sat 9am–5pm). Just a 3-minute walk away is the United Dental Office, 2–3–8 Azabudai, Minato-ku (☎ 03/5570-4334; <http://uniteddentaloffice.com>; Mon–Fri 9am–6pm and Sat 9am–6pm). You can also make appointments to visit doctors at the hospitals listed below.

Drugstores There are no 24-hour drugstores (kusuri-ya) in Tokyo, but ubiquitous 24-hour convenience stores such as 7-Eleven, Lawson, and Family Mart carry things like aspirin. If you’re looking for specific pharmaceuticals, a good bet is the American Pharmacy, in the basement of the Marunouchi Building, 2–4–1 Marunouchi, Chiyoda-ku (☎ 03/5220-7716; Mon–Fri 9am–9pm, Sat 10am–9pm, and Sun and holidays 10am–8pm), which has many of the same over-the-counter drugs you can find at home (many of them imported from the United States) and can fill American prescriptions—but note that you must first visit a doctor in Japan before foreign prescriptions can be filled, so it’s best to bring an ample supply of any prescription medication with you.

Embassies & Consulates Visa or passport sections of most embassies are open only at certain times during the day, so it’s best to call in advance.

U.S. Embassy: 1–10–5 Akasaka, Minato-ku, near Toranomon subway station (☎ 03/3224-5000; <http://japan.usembassy.gov>; consular section Mon–Fri 8:30am–noon and 2–4pm; phone inquiries Mon–Fri 8:30am–1pm and 2–5:30pm).

Canadian Embassy: 7–3–38 Akasaka, Minato-ku, near Aoyama-Itchome Station (☎ 03/5412-6200; <http://geo.international.gc.ca/asia/main/japan/tokyo-en.asp>; consular section Mon–Fri 9:30am–noon; embassy Mon–Fri 9am–5:30pm).

British Embassy: 1 Ichibancho, Chiyoda-ku, near Hanzomon Station (☎ 03/3265-5511; www.uknow.or.jp/be_e; consular section Mon–Fri 9–11:30am and 2–4pm).

Embassy of Ireland: Ireland House, 2–10–7 Kojimachi, Chiyoda-ku, near Hanzomon Station, exit 3 (☎ 03/3263-0695; www.irishembassy.jp; Mon–Fri 10am–12:30pm and 2–4pm; phone inquiries Mon–Fri 9:30am–5:30pm).

Australian Embassy: 2–1–14 Mita, Minato-ku, near Azabu-Juban Station, exit 2 (☎ 03/5232-4111; www.australia.or.jp; consular section Mon–Fri 9am–5:30pm; embassy open Mon–Fri 9am–12:30pm and 1:30–5pm).

New Zealand Embassy: 20–40 Kamiyama-cho, Shibuya-ku, a 15-minute walk from Shibuya Station (☎ 03/3467-2271; www.nzembassy.com/japan; Mon–Fri 9am–5:30pm; call for consular hours).

Emergencies The national emergency numbers are ☎ 110 for police and ☎ 119 for ambulance and fire. You do not have to insert a coin or telephone card for an emergency number from a public phone. However, if using a green public telephone, it’s necessary to push a red button before dialing. If calling from a gray public telephone or one that accepts only prepaid cards, simply lift the receiver and dial. Be sure to speak slowly and precisely.

Hospitals Large hospitals in Japan are open only a limited number of hours (designated hospitals remain open for emergencies, however, and an ambulance will automatically take you there). Otherwise, you can make appointments at these hospital clinics to see a doctor: The International Catholic

Hospital (Seibo Byoin), 2-5-1 Naka-Ochiai, Shinjuku-ku, near Meiji Station on the Yamanote Line (☎ 03/3951-1111; clinic hours Mon-Sat 8-11am; closed third Sat each month; walk-ins accepted); St. Luke's International Hospital (Seiroka Byoin), 9-1 Akashi-cho, Chuo-ku, near Tsukiji Station on the Hibiya Line (☎ 03/3541-5151; Mon-Fri 8:30-11am; appointment necessary for some treatments); and Japan Red Cross Medical Center (Nihon Sekijujisha Iryo Center), 4-1-22 Hiroo, Shibuya-ku (☎ 03/3400-1311; Mon-Fri 8:30-11am; walk-ins only), whose closest subway stations are Roppongi, Hiroo, and Shibuya—from there, you should take a taxi.

Internet Access A good place to set up a temporary office is at the sophisticated Gran Cyber Café Bagus, on the 12th floor of the Roi Building, 5-5-1 Roppongi (☎ 03/5786-2280; Station: Roppongi). Open 24 hours, it offers individual cubicles with prices that depend on the chair you select: ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for the first hour for a straight-back chair, ¥530 ($4.40/£2.20) for a recliner, and ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for a massage chair. Unsurprisingly, given Tokyo's high taxi prices, it also offers a "night pack" in a reclining chair, available for a maximum of 6 hours between 11pm to 8am for ¥1,450 ($12/£6), as well as—brace yourself—booths for couples. You have to wonder how many people actually work. Ladies take note: There's a section just for you.

A few places offer free Internet access, though waits can be long: Marunouchi Café, Shin Tokyo Building, 3-3-1 Marunouchi (☎ 03/3212-5025; Station: Marunouchi, Tokyo), with six computers available Monday to Friday 8am to 9pm and Saturday and Sunday 11am to 8pm (you'll need to show your passport); and the Apple Store, 3-5-12 Ginza (☎ 03/5159-8200; Station: Ginza), with 18 Macs on the fourth floor offering free Internet access daily 10am to 9pm.

Although expensive, Kinko's has more than 30 locations throughout Tokyo, including one at Tokyo Station at the Yaesu north exit (☎ 03/3213-1811). Most Kinko's are open 24 hours and charge ¥210 ($1.75/90p) per 10 minutes of computer time.

Lost Property If you've forgotten something on a subway, in a taxi, or on a park bench, don't assume it's gone forever; if you're willing to trace it, you'll probably get it back. If you can remember where you last saw it, the first thing to do is telephone the establishment or return to where you left it, as there's a good chance it will still be sitting there. If you've lost something on the street, go to the nearest police box (koban); items found in the neighborhood will stay there for 3 days or longer.

For lost credit cards, see "Fast Facts: Japan" in chapter 2. If you've lost something in a taxi, have someone who speaks Japanese contact the Tokyo Taxi Center, 7-3-3 Minamisuma, Koto-ku (☎ 03/3648-0300). For JR trains, go to the nearest station master's office (usually near the exit) or call the JR East Infoline (☎ 050/2016-1603). Eventually, every unclaimed item in Tokyo ends up at the Central Lost and Found Office of the Metropolitan Police Board, 1-9-11 Koraku, Bunkyo-ku (☎ 03/3814-4151; Mon-Fri 8:30am-5:15pm; Station: Iidabashi).

Luggage Storage & Lockers At Narita International Airport, delivery service counters will send luggage to your hotel the next day (or from your hotel to the airport) for about ¥2,000 ($17/£8.35) per bag. Coin-operated lockers are located at all major JR stations, such as Tokyo, Shinjuku, and Ueno, as well as at most subway stations. Lockers cost ¥300 to ¥800 ($2.50–$6.65/£1.25–£3.35), depending on the size.

Police The national emergency telephone number is ☎ 110. The Metropolitan Police Department also maintains a telephone counseling service for foreigners at ☎ 03/3503-8484 Monday through Friday from 8:30am to 5pm.

Post Offices If your hotel cannot mail letters for you, ask the concierge where the nearest post office is. Although post offices are open Monday through Friday from 9am to 5pm, the Central Post Office, just southwest of Tokyo Station at 2–7–2 Marunouchi, Chiyoda-ku (☎ 03/3284-9527), and the Shibuya Central Post Office, 1–12–13 Shibuya (☎ 03/5469-9907; Station: Shibuya), have longer business hours than most: Monday through Friday 9am to 9pm; and Saturday, Sunday, and holidays 9am to 7pm. An after-hours counter at both post offices remains open throughout the night for mail and packages, making them the only 24-hour service facilities in town.

For English-language postal information, call ☎ 03/3560-1139 Monday through Friday between 9:30am and 4:30pm or check the website www.post.japanpost.jp. Also see “Mail” under “Fast Facts: Japan,” in chapter 2.

Restrooms If you need a restroom in Tokyo, your best bets are train and subway stations, big hotels, department stores, and fast-food chains like McDonald’s. For an explanation of using Japanese toilets, see “Fast Facts: Japan” in chapter 2.

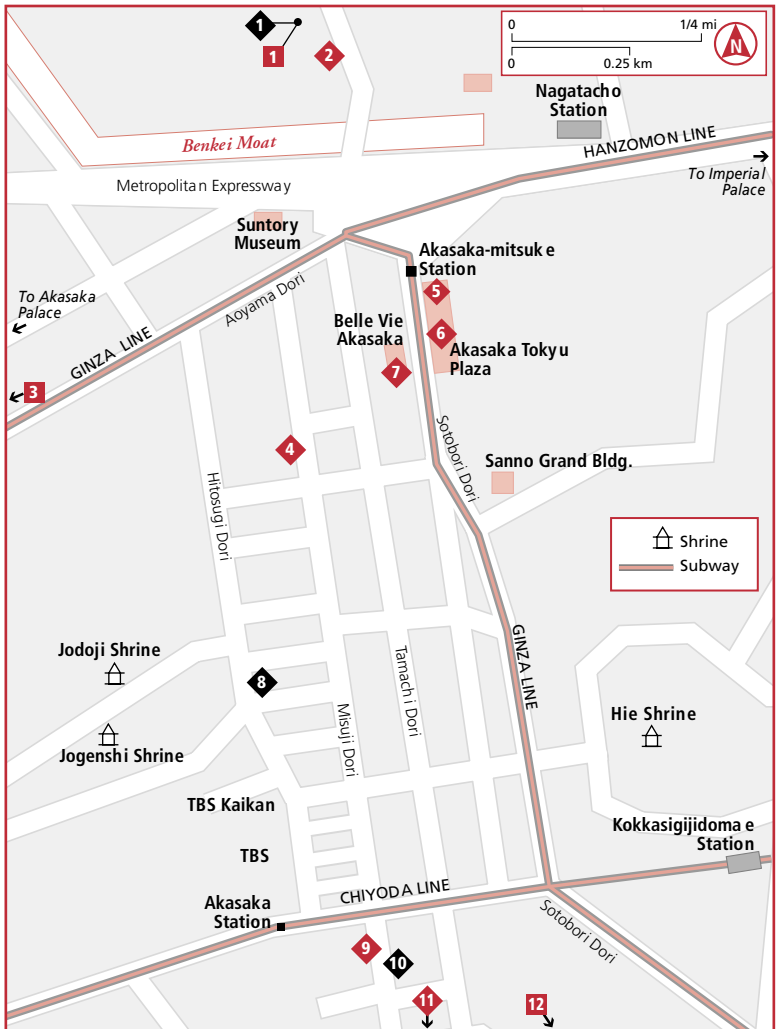

Safety Tokyo is one of the safest cities in the world. However, crime is on the increase, and there are precautions you should always take when traveling: Stay alert and be aware of your immediate surroundings. Be especially careful with cameras, purses, and wallets, particularly in crowded subways, department stores, or tourist attractions (such as the retail district around Tsukiji Fish Market), especially because pick-pocketing has been on the rise. Some Japanese also caution women against walking through parks alone at night.

Taxes In addition to the national 5% consumption tax, which is already included in the price of goods and services, Tokyo levies a local hotel tax on rooms costing ¥10,000 ($83/£42) and up per person per night: ¥100 (85¢/45p) per person per night on rooms costing ¥10,000 to ¥14,999 ($83–$125/£42–£62); rates ¥15,000 and up are taxed at ¥200 ($1.65/85p) per night per person. See “Fast Facts: Japan” in chapter 2.

Telephone For information on how to make calls or where to rent mobile phones in Japan, see “Staying Connected” in chapter 2. For directory assistance in Tokyo, dial ☎ 104.

3 Where to Stay

Tokyo has no old, grand hotels in the tradition of Hong Kong’s Peninsula or Bangkok’s Oriental; it has hardly any old hotels, period. But what the city’s hotels may lack in quaintness or old grandeur is more than made up for by excellent service—for which Japanese are legendary—as well as cleanliness and efficiency. Be prepared, however, for small rooms. Space is at a premium in Tokyo, so with the exception of some of the upper-range hotels, rooms seem to come in only three sizes: small, minuscule, and barely adequate.

Unfortunately, Tokyo also doesn't have many first-class ryokan, or Japanese-style inns. I suggest, therefore, that you wait for your travels around the country to experience a first-rate ryokan. Otherwise, there are moderate and inexpensive Japanese-style inns in Tokyo. In fact, if you're traveling on a tight budget, a simple Japanese-style inn is often the cheapest way to go, though don't expect much in the way of service or amenities. In addition, most of the upper-bracket hotels offer at least a few Japanese-style rooms, with tatami mats, a Japanese bathtub (deeper and narrower than the Western version), and a futon. Although these rooms tend to be expensive, they're usually large enough for four people.

For more on available types of accommodations, see "Tips on Accommodations" in chapter 2.

PRICE CATEGORIES The recommended hotels that follow are arranged first according to price, then by location. After all, because attractions are spread throughout the city, and Tokyo's public transportation service is fast and efficient (I've provided nearest subway or train stations for each listing)—and as this is one of the most expensive hotel cities in the world—the overriding factor in selecting accommodations will likely be cost. I've divided Tokyo's hotels into price categories based upon two people per night, including tax: Very Expensive hotels charge ¥50,000 ($416/£208) and above, Expensive hotels charge ¥30,000 to ¥50,000 ($250–$416/£125–£208), Moderate hotels offer rooms for ¥16,000 to ¥29,000 ($133–$242/£67–£121), and Inexpensive accommodations offer rooms for less than ¥16,000 ($133/£67). Unless otherwise indicated, units have private bathrooms.

TAXES & SERVICE CHARGES All hotel rates below include a 5% government tax. An additional local hotel tax will be added to bills that cost more than ¥10,000 ($83/£42) per person per night. ¥100 (85¢/45p) is levied per person per night for rates between ¥10,000 and ¥14,999 ($83–$125/£42–£62); rates of ¥15,000 and up are taxed at ¥200 ($1.65/85p). Furthermore, upper-class hotels and most medium-range hotels add a service charge of 10% to 15% (cheaper establishments do not add a service charge, because no service is provided). Unless otherwise stated, prices for accommodations include all taxes and service charge.

RESERVATIONS Although Tokyo doesn't suffer from a lack of hotel rooms during peak holidays (when most Japanese head for the hills and beaches), rooms may be in

Tips A Note on Prices

The prices quoted in this book were figured at ¥120 = US$1. However, because of fluctuations in the exchange rate of the yen, the U.S. dollar equivalents given will probably vary during the lifetime of this edition. Be sure to check current exchange rates when planning your trip. In addition, the rates given below may increase, so be sure to ask the current rate when making your reservation.

short supply at other times because of conventions and other events. If possible, avoid coming to Tokyo in mid-February unless you book well in advance; that's when university entrance exams bring aspiring high-school students and their parents flocking to the capital for a shot at one of the most prestigious universities in the country. And in summer, when most foreign tourists visit Japan, the cheaper accommodations are likely to fill up first.

It's always best, therefore, to make your hotel reservations in advance, especially if you're arriving in Japan after a long transoceanic flight and don't want the hassle of searching for a hotel room. See "Finding a Hotel or Inn" in chapter 2 for tips on securing rooms. If you arrive in Tokyo without reservations, stop by the Tourist Information Center (TIC; see "Visitor Information," earlier in this chapter), where its Welcome Inn Reservation Center will book an inexpensive room free of charge.

VERY EXPENSIVE NEAR TOKYO STATION

Four Seasons Hotel Tokyo at Marunouchi  Kids With only 57 rooms, this property offers the ultimate in service, privacy, and exclusivity. With a great location beside Tokyo Station (convenient to both the Shinkansen bullet train and Narita Airport) and within walking distance of the Ginza, it's buffered from the outside world with triple-glazed glass and a soothing, ultra-contemporary design that employs natural woods and color schemes of ecru and charcoal or off-white and black. Guests are escorted to rooms by guest-relations officers, and with good reason, as rooms are so high-tech it's almost impossible to figure out even such mundane tasks as double-locking the doors or engaging the bathtub stopper. At 44 sq. m (474 sq. ft.) and larger, the attractive rooms are large by Tokyo standards, with such standouts as wall-mounted 42-inch plasma-screen TVs with Internet connections, hookups for MP3 players with surround sound, leather-covered desks, bathrooms with separate tub and shower areas, and floor-to-ceiling windows. Unfortunately, the hotel's location on the lower levels of an office high-rise affords views only of Tokyo Station and its Shinkansen bullet trains or surrounding buildings, and at these prices, you have to wonder why there's no mini-TV in the bathroom. Still, this is a great place to stay—if you can get someone else to pay for it.

SHINJUKU

Park Hyatt Tokyo ★★☆☆ Located in West Shinjuku on the 39th to 52nd floors of Kenzo Tange's granite-and-glass Shinjuku Park Tower, the Park Hyatt has spurred lots of imitators since its 1994 opening, yet it remains among the most gorgeous and sophisticated hotels in Japan, a perfect reflection of high-tech, avant-garde Tokyo in the 21st century. If you can afford it, stay here. Check-in, on the 41st floor, is comfortably accomplished at one of three sit-down desks. Though it doesn't attract as much off-the-street foot traffic as Shinjuku's other hotels, the Park Hyatt's debut in Lost in Translation assures a steady stream of curious fans to its lounges and restaurants. Be sure to book early, therefore, for the 52nd-floor New York Grill, one of Tokyo's best restaurants, offering a spectacular setting (p. 154). All rooms average at least 45 sq. m (484 sq. ft.) and have original artwork, stunning and expansive views (including Mount Fuji on clear days), bathrooms to die for with deep tubs (plus separate showers), walk-in closets, remote-control curtains, and even Japanese/English dictionaries. Despite the competition posed by new hotels such as the Ritz-Carlton (p. 123), this hotel isn't worried, as it considers itself in a class of its own.

EBISU

Westin Tokyo ★★☆☆ Value A black marble floor, neoclassical columns and statuary, huge floral bouquets, and palm trees set this smart-looking hotel apart from other Tokyo hotels—in Hong Kong, it would fit right in. Opened in 1994 and set in the attractive Yebisu Garden Place (Tokyo's first planned community), it's still a hike from Ebisu Station, even with the aid of the elevated moving walkways. It's also far from Tokyo's business center. But the largely Japanese clientele (with North Americans accounting for 25% of hotel guests) favors it for its European ambience, relaxed atmosphere, Westin name, and Yebisu Garden Place with its shops and restaurants. The spacious, high-ceilinged rooms blend 19th-century Biedermeier styles with contemporary furnishings and boast Westin's trademark "Heavenly Beds" that are either king-size (in double rooms) or two double beds (in twins), oversize desks, separate lighted vanities, and large bathrooms with separate shower and tub areas. Rooms on higher floors cost more, with the best views of Tokyo Tower, though on clear days those facing west are treated to views of Mount Fuji.

Rates exclude service charge and hotel tax. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Ebisu (7 min. via Yebisu Sky Walk). Amenities: 5 restaurants; 2 bars; lounge; exercise room (fee: ¥1,000/$8.35/£4.20; free for Starwood Preferred Guest and Executive Club members); access to nearby health club w/heated indoor pool and gym (fee: ¥4,000/$33/£17; ¥2,000/$17/£8.50 for Starwood Preferred Guest members); spa; concierge; business center; 24-hr. room service; in-room massage; babysitting; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms; executive-level rooms. In room: A/C, cable TV w/on-demand pay movies and DVD players, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, iron.

ROPPONGI & AKASAKA

Grand Hyatt Tokyo ★★☆☆ Opened in 2003 and counting on the surrounding Roppongi Hills development with its 200-some shops and restaurants to act as a major draw, this ambitious hotel wows with a wide range of recreational and dining facilities of its own, as well as technically advanced rooms older hotels can only dream about. In contrast to sister Park Hyatt's subdued, sophisticated atmosphere that attracts bigwigs hoping to escape the limelight, the Grand Hyatt strives for a livelier clientele who relish being in the center of it all. Still, key cards inserted into elevators block public access to guest floors, and those seeking pampering can opt for the Grand Club floor. Rooms, at 42 sq. m (452 sq. ft.) among Tokyo's largest, feature Italian furnishings, large mahogany desks, blackout blinds, 30-inch flatscreen TVs, safes designed for laptops with plug-ins for recharging, and duvet-covered beds with focused reading lights. One-quarter of each unit's space is taken up by a huge bathroom equipped with separate shower and tub areas and a 13-inch flatscreen TV that swivels from the tub to the sink.

The Ritz-Carlton, Tokyo ★★☆☆ Of the several luxury hotels that have come online in Tokyo over the past few years, the Ritz-Carlton, opened in 2007, probably tops them all, including the fact that it occupies the lofty upper reaches of Tokyo's tallest building, making it the highest hotel in a city that prides itself on skyscraper hotels. The crowning glory of Roppongi's Tokyo Midtown, it boasts superlatives in almost every category you can think of, including Tokyo's largest rooms (starting at 52 sq. m/559 sq. ft.), its most expensive suite (¥2,100,000/$17,493/£8,746 in case you're considering it), and the city's highest ratio of nonsmoking rooms (80%). In contrast to the Ritz-Carlton in Osaka, which opts for an old-world atmosphere, the decor here is decidedly modern. Rooms, from the 47th to 53rd floors, provide eye-popping views of Tokyo in all its glory. Everything you'd expect from a top-rated hotel is here, including 40-inch TVs, king-size (the majority) or two double beds, wireless telephones you can take with you anywhere in the hotel, a safe with plug-ins to recharge laptops, a good working desk, and—great for couples—two large closets. Bathrooms, which account for a third of the room's space, are the best I've seen in Japan and are also geared to couples, with two sinks, each with its own counter, at opposite ends of the room, a separate shower and deep soaking tub, and a 20-inch flatscreen TV. It's hard to imagine a new hotel coming onto the scene with larger and higher rooms, but this being Tokyo, one undoubtedly will.

Family-Friendly Hotels

Four Seasons Hotel Tokyo at Marunouchi (p. 121) If money is no object (though children 18 and under can stay in their parents' room at no extra charge), little princes and princesses receive the royal treatment here, including a welcome amenity, child-size robes, children's menus, complimentary toiletries, and bedtime cookies and milk. And for those hard-to-please teenagers, there's even free use of TV video games. The Four Seasons Hotel Tokyo at Chinzan-So has a similar offer.

Hotel New Otani (p. 128) This huge hotel has both indoor and outdoor swimming pools, but best for parents is the babysitting room for children ages 1 month to 5 years. For a small fortune, you can even leave the darlings overnight.

Imperial Hotel (p. 125) Although oriented toward business travelers, this famous hotel makes it easier to bring the family along, with its day-care center for children ages 2 weeks to 6 years, its babysitting service, and an indoor pool.

Shinagawa Prince (p. 134) Japan's largest hotel boasts a children's day-care center, a cinema complex, an amusement arcade, indoor and outdoor pools, aquarium, bowling alley, sports center, and much more.

NEAR IKEBUKURO

Four Seasons Hotel Tokyo at Chinzan-So ★★☆☆ Finds Although inconveniently located in northwest Tokyo (about a 15-min. taxi ride from Ikebukuro), this Four Seasons, built in 1992, is a superb hotel set in the luscious 6.8-hectare (17-acre), 100-year-old Chinzan-So Garden, making it extremely inviting after a bustling day in Tokyo. It also has one of Tokyo's best spas, including a gorgeous glass-enclosed indoor pool surrounded by greenery with a glass ceiling that opens in summer, indoor and outdoor Jacuzzis (the outdoor one overlooks a small Japanese garden), and a Japanese hot-springs bath (the water is shipped in from Izu Peninsula), gym, and nine treatment rooms. In contrast to the starkly modern Four Seasons at Marunouchi, the luxurious interiors here make this one of the most beautiful European-style hotels in Japan. Because the hotel embraces the park, most rooms have peaceful garden views from their V-shaped bay windows (those that don't are cheaper, but the garden views are worth the splurge), and also have such high-tech features as 32-inch HDTVs, DVD/CD players (free DVDs available), hookups for MP3 players, and electric-powered drapes. Bathrooms have mini-TVs and separate shower and tub areas. Don't miss a stroll through the garden, which contains several charming, traditional Japanese restaurants, a pagoda, and stone monuments.

EXPENSIVEGINZA & HIBIYA

Imperial Hotel ★★☆☆ (Kids) Located across from Hibiya Park, within walking distance of the Ginza and Imperial Palace, this is one of Tokyo's best-known and most popular hotels, with foreigners (mostly business executives) making up about 40% of the guests. The Imperial's trademark is impeccable service: Guests are treated like royalty. The Imperial's history goes back to 1890, when it opened at the request of the Imperial family to house the many foreigners coming to Japan; it was rebuilt in 1922 by Frank Lloyd Wright, but the present hotel dates from 1970, with a 31-story tower added in 1983. Wright's legacy lives on in the hotel's Art Deco Old Imperial Bar and Wright-inspired designs and furniture in public spaces. (Part of Wright's original structure survives at Meiji-Mura, an architectural museum outside Nagoya). Because the grand lobby serves as a popular meeting place in Tokyo, a place to see and be seen, VIPs have a separate entrance.

A full range of facilities includes one of the few hotels with a children's day-care center. Rooms in the main building are quite large for Tokyo, while Tower rooms, slightly smaller, are higher up, have floor-to-ceiling bay windows, and offer fantastic views of either Imperial Palace grounds or, my preference, the Ginza and Tokyo Bay. All come with first-class amenities you'd expect from one of Tokyo's top hotels, as well as such appreciated extras as a hands-free phone, safes with plug-ins for laptops, and one-touch bedside controls for lights, drapes, and music. Tip: Become a member of the Imperial Club (membership is free), and you can use the small pool and gym free of charge.

NEAR TOKYO STATION

Marunouchi Hotel ★ Opened in 2004 as a modern replacement of a 1924 hotel, this low-key accommodation is well situated in the heart of Tokyo's business district; its location, just north of Tokyo Station's Marunouchi exit, makes it also convenient to both train and plane travel. Occupying the top 11 floors of the Marunouchi Oazo glass high-rise, it exudes an almost Zen-like solemnity, with bare wooden floors and shoji-like walls in a lobby that overlooks a rooftop garden that seems almost surreal. Key cards are required to access elevators to guest rooms, which are of standard size and decorated in warm browns. Small bathrooms have deep Japanese-style tubs with pillows for relaxing (the first I've seen in Japan). Roomy deluxe twins have "Japanese corners," a tatami area with a low table (and a "leg well" under the table for those errant limbs), but for the best view ask for a room facing Tokyo Station, where triple-pane glass allows you to watch bullet trains silently glide by. Though quite classy (and pricey), the Marunouchi is lacking in facilities and services, placing it more squarely in the business hotel category.

SHINJUKU

Hilton Tokyo ★★ Located on Shinjuku's west side next to the Hyatt Regency (see below), the 38-story Tokyo Hilton with its sensually curving facade opened in 1984 as the largest Hilton in the Asia/Pacific area. Today it keeps a lower profile than most of the other Shinjuku hotels, with a quiet, subdued lobby, and it remains popular with business and leisure travelers alike. Rooms are up-to-date and adequate in size. As with all Hiltons, the room decor reflects traditional native style, with shoji screens instead of curtains and simple yet elegant furnishings that include queen-size beds or larger in all rooms. Rates below are approximations only, as Hilton maintains "floating" rates that ebb with the law of demand. Tip: Join Hilton HHonors for free, and you also gain free entrance to the health club.

Hyatt Regency Tokyo ★ Located on Shinjuku's west side next to Shinjuku Chuo (Central) Park (popular with joggers), this least expensive and oldest of the Hyatt's three Tokyo properties celebrated its 25th anniversary in 2005 with renovated restaurants and rooms. Remaining is the hotel's impressive seven-story atrium lobby with three of the most massive chandeliers you're likely to see anywhere. Many foreigners (mostly American) pass through the hotel's doors, ably assisted by the excellent staff with the Hyatt's usual high standards. However, because this hotel is popular with both business and leisure groups, those searching for a quieter, more personalized experience will want to book elsewhere. Rates are based on size; even the cheapest units are adequate, but they do face another building and don't receive much sunshine. If you can afford it, spring for a more expensive room on a high floor with bay windows overlooking the park (in winter, you might have a view of Mount Fuji).

AKASAKA

Hotel New Otani ★★ Kids If you like small, quiet hotels, this monolith is not for you. Like a city unto itself, the New Otani is so big that two information desks are needed to assist lost souls searching for a particular restaurant or shop in the meandering arcade; there are even two check-in desks. The hotel's most splendid feature is its garden, the best of any Tokyo hotel—a 400-year-old Japanese garden that once belonged to a feudal lord, with 4 hectares (10 acres) of ponds, waterfalls, bridges, bamboo groves, and manicured bushes. The large outdoor pool, flanked by greenery, is also nice. A variety of rooms, in a main building and a newer tower, are available. Those in the main building are comfortable, with full-length windows to take advantage of city and garden views and sleek black and gold furniture. Tower rooms range from chic ones done in jade, black, and chrome to “fusui healing” rooms with such extras as in-room humidifier, foot bath, and compact CD/MD player. The tower also offers the best views—of the garden, the skyscrapers of Shinjuku, and, on clear days, Mount Fuji in the distance. As rates are the same no matter which way you face, be sure to request a room overlooking the garden. Parents appreciate the 24-hour Baby Room and the fact that the outdoor pool is free for those who become Hotel Club members (membership is free).

Hotel Okura ★★ Located across from the U.S. embassy and long considered one of Tokyo's most venerable hotels, the Okura is struggling to keep up with pricier—and newer—top-rated hotels in the city, recently adding a spa and renovating rooms to increase its appeal. It remains a favorite home-away-from-home of visiting U.S. dignitaries, and the service is gracious and impeccable. Rich decor elegantly combines ikebana and shoji screens with an old-fashioned Western spaciousness. The atmosphere is low key, almost Zen-like, with none of the flashiness inherent in some younger hotels. All rooms are comfortable, with clean, crisp furnishings, opaque windows designed to resemble shoji, TVs with keyboards for accessing the Internet, and gold colors offset by fuchsia or other bright-colored armchairs and pillows. My favorite rooms are in the main building facing the garden; some on the fifth floor here have balconies overlooking the garden and pool. Other rooms have views of a rooftop garden or Tokyo Tower, while “Grand Comfort rooms” offer free entrance to the spa. Tip: Hotel guests can use the health club and pools for free by becoming members of Okura Club International—membership is free and starts immediately upon filling out an application at the guest relations desk. (See “Roppongi” map on p. 163 for location.)

NEAR SHINAGAWA

Sheraton Miyako Hotel Tokyo ★★ Value This hotel is one of my favorites in Tokyo, for its calm peacefulness as well as its small-luxury-hotel service. Because it's a bit off the beaten path, it has a quieter, more relaxed atmosphere than those found at more centrally located hotels, evident the moment you step into its lobby lounge with its gas-flame fireplace (winter only) on one end and the lush greenery of a garden on its other. Attracting mostly Japanese guests but sure to attract more international guests since becoming a Sheraton in 2007, it offers average-size rooms, with good bedside reading lamps and beds so comfortable you'd sneak them into your luggage if you could. The best rooms are on higher floors with huge floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking the hotel's own lush garden, a famed garden next door, or Tokyo Tower.

ODAIBA

Hotel Nikko Tokyo ★★ This is by far the most un-Tokyo-like hotel in the city. Opened in 1996 as the first hotel on Odaiba, reclaimed land in Tokyo Bay with a convention center, shopping malls, and sightseeing attractions, this grand, elegant lodging is surrounded by parks and sea which give it a relaxed, resort-evoking atmosphere. Billing itself as an “urban resort,” it's especially popular with young well-to-do Japanese in search of an exotic weekend getaway. A curved facade assures waterfront views from most rooms, which have the added benefit of private balconies with two chairs. The most expensive rooms offer commanding views of Tokyo Bay, Rainbow Bridge, and the city skyline (impressive at night); the least expensive rooms, smaller in size, face another hotel or the Maritime Museum and Haneda Airport across the bay. This is a great choice if you want to get away from the bustle of Tokyo, but the location can be a disadvantage; it's served only by the expensive monorail Yurikamome Line, the JR Saikyo Line to Shibuya, and the inconvenient Rinkai Fukutoshin Line, all of which can be quite crowded on weekends, as can bus and taxi travel via the Rainbow Bridge or harbor tunnel.

MODERATE GINZA & HIBIYA

Courtyard by Marriott Tokyo Ginza Hotel ★ This small, classy, and personable hotel, located on Showa Dori behind the Ginza Matsuzakaya department store and within easy walking distance of shopping and the Kabuki theater, attracts a foreign clientele as high as 60%, thanks mainly to its association with Marriott. Primarily a business hotel, it has limited facilities—you are clearly paying for location here. Rooms are contemporary but small, including small windows (there's nothing to see anyway) and small bathrooms. Pick up the hotel's sightseeing leaflets at the concierge's desk.

Ginza Washington Hotel ★★ Value You can't beat the room rates and prime Ginza location offered by this budget hotel, opened in 2006 just off Chuo Dori behind Matsuzakaya department store. Part of a business hotel chain targeting downtown metropolises, it offers tiny rooms smartly decorated in beige and red, with duvet-covered beds, unit bathrooms, and clothes racks filling in for closets. Female travelers may opt for the Lady's Floor, which features wooden floors (in the belief that walking barefoot makes one feel more relaxed) and amenities geared toward women, while those looking for an upgrade can try the Executive Floor, which has the advantage of TVs that double as computers.

Hotel Monterey La Soeur ★ The Monterey chain targets female travelers with its feminine decor, and this hotel, designed by a woman, is no exception. A small, boutique-like property with a slight European ambience (note the display of Art Deco perfume bottles in the tiny lobby), it rises above the ordinary business hotel with small but comfortable rooms that demonstrate a woman's touch without being fussy. If rooms here are full, try the nearby sister Hotel Monterey Ginza (☎ 03/3544-7111), with the same boutique-hotel concept and similar prices.

Mitsui Urban Hotel Ginza Because of its great location, convenient to the Ginza, Shimbashi, and Hibiya shopping and business centers, this attractive hotel caters mostly to business travelers, but tourists like it, too. The lobby, on the second floor, has a friendly staff. Rooms, from the 3rd to 11th floors, are tiny but pleasant, with the more expensive rooms sporting comfortable leather chairs, good-size desks, espresso machines, a TV with headphones, and duvet-covered beds (but no closets). Note that the cheapest rooms (also without closets) don't have desks or space to unpack, a good example of what $208/£104 buys in Tokyo. I suggest asking for a room away from the highway overpass beside the hotel.

Park Hotel Tokyo ★★ finds Opened in 2003 and occupying the top 10 floors of a building it shares with international media organizations, this hotel boasts a 25th-story lobby bathed in natural light afforded by its 10-story atrium topped with an opaque ceiling. Complying with the hotel theme of “nature and health,” restaurants follow a natural-foods concept, using organic ingredients. The front desk is one of the most dramatic I've seen, backed by nothing but great views of Tokyo Tower and the city. Rooms are simply decorated, with blonde wood furniture and original art; they also provide views, the best of which can be found on the 30th floor and above facing Hama Rikyu garden and Tokyo Bay or Tokyo Tower (and Mount Fuji on clear winter days). The hotel even has a trained “pillow fitter,” who can take your measurements and provide one made to fit, at no extra cost. In short, this hotel is a fine choice in the Shiodome district of downtown Tokyo, just a few minutes' walk from the Ginza.

ASAKUSA

Asakusa View Hotel This is the only upper-bracket, modern hotel in the Asakusa area, and it looks almost out of place rising 28 stories above this famous district's older buildings. It's a good place to stay if you want to be in Tokyo's old downtown but don't want to sacrifice any creature comforts. The medium-size guest rooms are pleasant, with contemporary furnishings and bay windows that let in plenty of sunshine (and smaller windows that can be opened, a rarity in Tokyo); rooms facing the front have views over the famous Sensoji Temple.

Hotel Sunroute Asakusa Located on Kokusai Dori, this modern, pleasant hotel opened in 1998 as a business hotel but is a good choice for leisure travelers as well. Not only does it boast a good location near the sightseeing attractions of Asakusa, but it is also classier than most business hotels, with Miró reprints in the lobby and modern artwork in each guest room. Though small, the (mostly single) rooms come with all the comforts, with slightly larger beds and bathrooms than those found at most business hotels. The hotel's one coffee shop, a chain called Jonathan's serving both Japanese and Western food, is open daily 24 hours, a huge plus if you're suffering from jet lag.

SHINJUKU

Hotel Century Southern Tower ★★☆☆ Finds This chic, modern hotel is located just south of Shinjuku Station and just a footbridge away from the huge Takashimaya Times Square shopping complex. Because it occupies the top floors of a sleek white building, it seems far removed from the hustle and bustle of Shinjuku below. Its 20th-floor lobby, with free wireless access, is simple and uncluttered and boasts almost surreal views of Tokyo stretching in the distance. Ask for a room on a higher floor. Rooms facing east or south are considered best (and are therefore pricier), especially at night when neon is in full regalia. Rooms facing west have views of Shinjuku's skyscrapers and, on clear days (mostly in winter), of Mount Fuji. A playful touch: Maps in each room outline the important buildings visible from your room.

ROPPONGI

Hotel Ibis Once the only hotel in Roppongi, this is still as close as you can get to the night action of Roppongi, just a minute's walk away from Roppongi Crossing. It caters to both businessmen and couples who come to Roppongi's discos and don't make (or don't want to make) the last subway home. The lobby, with public computers available for accessing the Internet (¥500/$4.75/£2.40 for 25 min.), is on the fifth floor, with the guest rooms above. Tiny but comfortable, the rooms feature modern furniture and windows that you can open—though with a freeway nearby, I'm not sure you'd want to. The cheapest doubles come with semi-double-size beds, just slightly wider than a single. On the 13th floor is a reasonably priced Italian restaurant, Sabatini, with views of the city.

SHIBUYA

Shibuya Excel Hotel Tokyo ★★ Across from bustling Shibuya Station and connected by a footbridge and underground passage, this busy, modern hotel has an excellent location above Mark City shopping mall (reception, with free wireless access, is on the fifth floor). It tries hard to appeal to everyone: For business travelers, “Excel” single and twin rooms offer use of a computer free of charge. For female travelers, there are two women-only floors accessed by a special key and with special in-room amenities such as face cream and jewelry boxes. Rooms are available for visitors with disabilities, and 50% of all rooms are for nonsmokers. SHINAGAWA

Hotel Pacific Tokyo ★ This aging hotel across the street from Shinagawa Station occupies grounds that once belonged to Japan’s Imperial family, a reminder of which remains in the peaceful, tranquil garden with pond and waterfall that serves as a dramatic backdrop for the lobby lounge. Approximately 50% of the hotel’s guests are foreigners, mostly French, German, and American. Its location on the Yamanote Line makes it convenient for travel in the city, while trains to Kamakura and other points west and south, as well as the Shinkansen bullet train, make it convenient for travel farther afield. I also like its glass-enclosed coffee shop, serving buffet meals and with views of the garden. Room rates are based mostly on room size, with those facing the front slightly larger and offering partial views of Tokyo Bay between buildings. Smaller rooms at the back are a bargain, as they face the garden and are quieter. In any case, rooms offer nothing out of the ordinary, and most bathrooms are surprisingly small, with almost no counter space to speak of. Tip: The outdoor pool’s fee is for use of a locker; forgo that, and you can use the pool free of charge.

With a glass-enclosed garden and waterfall centered in its lobby, it's the only airport hotel that imparts an Asian flair. Facilities include three restaurants, a health club with gym and outdoor pool, and 548 good-size rooms with all the amenities you'd expect. Rates average ¥20,000 ($167/£83) for one person and ¥24,000 to ¥29,000 ($200–$242/£100–£121) for two.

Facilities include a coffee shop, Chinese restaurant, and health club with indoor pool and gym. A good budget choice is the 142-room downtown Comfort Hotel Narita, near the Keisei and JR Narita stations at 968 Hanazaki-cho (☎ 0476/24-6311; www.choicehotels.com). If you have 3 hours to spare, consider an excursion to downtown Narita (10 min. by train from the airport; most airport hotels also offer shuttle buses), a quaint village with a winding, shop-lined street leading to Naritasan Temple, an impressive complex consisting of a main hall, several pagodas, and a nice park.

to students and family vacationers on weekends and holidays. Rooms vary widely depending on which building you select: The 17-story East Tower has only very small singles, at the cheapest rates; the 17-story North Tower has singles, twins, and doubles in a medium price range; the 39-story Main Tower features renovated rooms (mostly twins) with the ubiquitous brown color scheme, Internet access, and duvet-colored beds (those on the highest floors have views of Tokyo Bay); the upscale Annex, with only doubles, has smart-looking rooms, Internet connections, and correspondingly high prices. Assuming you can find it, be sure to have a drink or meal at the 39th-floor Top of Shinagawa; its views of Tokyo Bay and the city are among the best in town. With its many diversions, this hotel is like a resort getaway but is too big and busy for my taste.

OTHER NEIGHBORHOODS

The Hilltop Hotel (Yama-no-Ue Hotel) ★★ Finds This is a delightfully old-fashioned, unpretentious (some might say dowdy) hotel with character. Opened in 1937 and boasting an Art Deco facade, it was once the favorite haunt of writers, including novelist Mishima Yukio. Avoid the cheaper, more boring rooms in the annex unless you spring for the higher-priced Art Septo rooms on the seventh floor with their flower boxes outside the windows, black leather furnishings, LCD TV with CD player, and fancier bathrooms. Otherwise, rooms in the main building have such endearing, homey touches as fringed lampshades, doilies, cherrywood furniture (and mahogany desks), velvet curtains, vanity tables, and old-fashioned heaters with intricate grillwork. Some twins even combine a tatami area and shoji with beds; the most expensive twin overlooks its own Japanese garden. Don't be surprised if the reception desk remembers you by name. Although the Hilltop is not as centrally located or up-to-date as other hotels, nearby Meiji University brings lots of young people and liveliness to the area.

INEXPENSIVE
NIHOMBASHI

Hotel Kitcho ★ Finds This great-value hotel is located in a charming, old-fashioned neighborhood called Ningyo-cho, near Suitengu Shrine (popular with expectant mothers hoping for a safe delivery). During cherry-blossom season, try to get a room facing the front with its tree-lined median. Rooms, mostly singles and twins, are tiny but tidy, but there is also one Japanese-style room (¥12,000/$100/£50 for one or two persons). The hotel provides a small library, free use of bikes (reserve in advance), and even a choice of pillows.

ASAKUSA

Ryokan Shigetsu ★ Finds Whenever a foreigner living in Tokyo, soon to play host to first-time visitors to Japan, asks me to recommend a moderately priced ryokan in Tokyo, this is the one I most often suggest, due to its great location in Asakusa just off Nakamise Dori, a colorful, shop-lined pedestrian street leading to the famous Sensoji Temple—an area that gives you a feel for the older Japan. A member of the Japanese Inn Group, it represents the best of modern yet traditional Japanese design: simple yet elegant, with shoji, unadorned wood, and artwork throughout. Traditional Japanese music or the recorded chirping of birds plays softly in the public spaces. Two public Japanese baths have views of the nearby five-storied pagoda. There are eight Western-style rooms, but I prefer the 15 slightly more expensive Japanese-style tatami rooms, which include Japanese-style mirrors and comfortable chairs for those who don't like relaxing on the floor. This establishment costs no more than a regular business hotel but has much more class. What a pity the front-desk staff can be brusque.

UENO

Annex Katsutarō ★★ Finds Opened in 2001, this thoroughly modern concrete ryokan is a standout for its simple yet chic designs, spotless Japanese-style rooms (all with bathroom), and location—right in the heart of Yanaka with its old-fashioned neighborhood and about a 20-minute walk northwest of Ueno Park. The Keisei Skyliner from Narita Airport stops at nearby Nippori Station. If you have your own laptop and LAN card, you can tap into the Internet free of charge from your room; or you can use a public computer for free. If the ryokan is full, don't let management talk you into taking a room in its much older main Ryokan Katsutarō; it's not nearly as nice as the annex.

Homeikan ★★★ Finds Although a bit of a hike from Ueno Park (about 30 min.) and not as conveniently located as the other ryokan, this lovely place is my number-one choice if you want to experience an authentic, traditional ryokan in a traditional neighborhood. It consists of three separate buildings acquired over the last century by the present owner's grandfather. Homeikan, the main building (Honkan), was purchased almost 100 years ago; today it is listed as a Tangible Cultural Property and is used mainly by groups of students and seniors. Across the street is Daimachi Bekkan, built after World War II to serve as the family home. A beautiful, 31-room property, it boasts a private Japanese garden with a pond, public baths (including one open 24 hr.), and wood-inlaid and pebbled hallways leading to nicely detailed tatami rooms adorned with such features as gnarled wood trim and sitting alcoves, as well as simpler tatami rooms for budget travelers. This is where most foreigners stay. If you opt for meals, they will be served in your room in true ryokan fashion. The third building, Morikawa Bekkan, about a 5-minute walk away, was built as an inn about 45 years ago and, with 35 rooms, is the largest. The owner Koike-san, who speaks excellent English, points out that travelers who need the latest in creature comforts (including private bathrooms) should go elsewhere; those seeking a traditional ryokan experience, however, will not be disappointed.

Ryokan Sawanoya ★ Although this family-run, smoke-free ryokan, open since 1949, is relatively modern looking and unexciting, it's delightfully located in a wonderful residential area of old Tokyo, northwest of Ueno Park and within walking distance of the park's many attractions and Nezu Shrine. Upon your arrival, the owner, English-speaking Sawa-san (usually with his 30-year-old cockatiel, Leon, perched on his shoulder), will give you a short tour of the establishment before taking you to your tatami room; throughout the ryokan are written explanations to help the novice. The owner also gives you a map outlining places of interest in the vicinity. Several times a month, Sawa-san's son provides guests with a special treat: a traditional Japanese lion dance, free of charge. His daughter-in-law sometimes gives demonstrations of the tea ceremony. In short, this is a great place to stay thanks to Sawa-san's enthusiastic devotion to his neighborhood, which he readily imparts to his guests (he's even written a book, available in English, about his years as an innkeeper). Highly recommended.

SHINJUKU

Tokyo International Hostel  This spotless hostel, operated by the Tokyo Metropolitan Government and situated in a high-rise, is definitely the best place to stay in its price range; it offers fantastic Tokyo views. Even the public baths boast good views (especially at night). All beds are dormitory style, with two, four, or five bunk beds to a room. Rooms are very pleasant, with big windows, and each bed has its own curtain for privacy. If there are vacancies, you can stay longer than the normal 6-day maximum. In summer, it's a good idea to reserve about 2 months in advance. The hostel is closed from 10am to 3pm and locked at 11pm (lights out also at 11pm).

ROPPONGI & AKASAKA

Arca Torre  This smart-looking, 10-story property looks expensive from the outside but is actually a business hotel. Opened in 2002, it has a great location on Roppongi Dori, between Roppongi Crossing and Roppongi Hills, making it popular with both business types and tourists on a budget. Its (mostly single) rooms are small but cheerful, with flat-panel TVs and complimentary bottled water in the otherwise empty fridge. Rooms facing the back are quiet but face another building. If you opt for a room facing the front, ask for a high floor above the freeway; otherwise, your view will be of cars and, at certain times of the day, traffic jams.

Asia Center of Japan   Great rates make this a top choice if you're looking for inexpensive Western-style accommodations in the center of town (it's wise to reserve months in advance). Everyone—from businessmen to students to travelers to foreigners teaching English—stays here; I know one teacher who lived here for years.

Resembling a college dormitory, the Asia Center is popular with area office workers for its inexpensive cafeteria with outdoor seating. Accommodations are basic, with few frills, and in the singles you can almost reach out and touch all four walls. The cheapest doubles are actually single rooms with small, semi-double-size beds (not quite full size but larger than single/twin size). Avoid rooms on the ground floor—windows can open, and in Japan there are no screens. Tucked on a side street off Gaien-Higashi Dori not far from Aoyama Dori, the center is a 15-minute walk to the nightlife of Roppongi or Akasaka, one station away by subway.

SHINAGAWA

Toyoko Inn Shinagawa-Eki Takanawaguchi ★ Value I like this hotel chain for its clean functional rooms, complimentary breakfast of coffee and pastries served in the lobby, free use of dataports, free wireless access in the lobby (and for those who don't have their own laptops, free use of computers in the lobby), and complimentary movies (only occasionally in English). Rooms are all very small singles and doubles.

IKEBUKURO

Kimi Ryokan ★ Finds This has long been a Tokyo favorite for inexpensive Japanese-style lodging. Spotlessly clean and with such Japanese touches as sliding screens, a cypress public bath, flower arrangements in public spaces, and traditional Japanese music playing softly in the hallways, it caters almost exclusively to foreigners (mostly 20-somethings) and is so popular there's sometimes a waiting list. A bulletin board and newsletter lists rental apartments and job opportunities (primarily teaching English); a lounge with cable TV is a favorite hangout and a good place to network with other travelers. Rooms are Japanese style, with single and the cheapest double the size of four and one-half tatami mats, and the larger double the size of six tatami mats (a single tatami measures 1m×1.8m/3 ft.×6 ft.). Note that there's a 1am curfew.

4 Where to Dine

From stand-up noodle shops and pizzerias to exclusive kaiseki restaurants and sushi bars, there are at least 80,000 restaurants in Tokyo—which gives you some idea of how fond Japanese are of eating out. In a city where apartments are so small and cramped that entertaining at home is almost unheard of, restaurants serve as places for socializing, meeting friends, and wooing business associates—as well as great excuses for drinking a lot of beer, sake, and whiskey.

HOW TO DINE IN TOKYO WITHOUT SPENDING A FORTUNE I know people in Tokyo who claim they haven't cooked in years—and they're not millionaires. They simply take advantage of one of the best deals in Tokyo—the fixed-price lunch, usually available from 11 am to 2 pm. Called a teishoku in a Japanese restaurant, a fixed-price meal is likely to include soup, a main dish such as tempura or whatever the restaurant specializes in, pickled vegetables, rice, and tea. In restaurants serving Western food, the fixed-price lunch is variously referred to as a set lunch, seto course, or simply course, and usually includes an appetizer, a main course with one or two side dishes, coffee or tea, and sometimes dessert. Even restaurants listed under Very Expensive—where you'd otherwise spend at least ¥13,000 ($108/£54) or more per person for dinner, excluding drinks—and Expensive—where you can expect to pay ¥9,000 to ¥13,000 ($75–$108/£37–£54) for dinner—usually offer set-lunch menus, allowing you to dine in style at very reasonable prices. To keep your costs down, therefore, try having your biggest meal at lunch, avoiding, if possible, the noon-to-1 pm weekday crush when Tokyo's army of office workers flood area restaurants. Because Japanese tend to order fixed-price meals rather than a la carte, set dinners are also usually available (though they're not as cheap as set lunches). All-you-can-eat buffets (called viking in Japanese), offered by many hotel restaurants, are also bargain meals for hearty appetites.

So many of Tokyo's good restaurants fall into the Moderate category that it's tempting to simply eat your way through the city—and the range of cuisines is so great you could eat something different at each meal. A dinner in this category will average ¥4,000 to ¥9,000 ($33–$75/£17–£37). Lunch is likely to cost half as much.

Many of Tokyo's most colorful, noisy, and popular restaurants fall into the Inexpensive category, where meals usually go for less than ¥4,000 ($33/£17); indeed, many offer meals for less than ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) and lunches for ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) or less. The city's huge working population heads to these places to catch a quick lunch or to socialize with friends after hours. There are also many excellent yet inexpensive French bistros, Italian trattorie, and ethnic restaurants, particularly those serving Indian, Chinese, and other Asian cuisines. Hotel restaurants are good bargains for inexpensive set lunches and buffets. Finally, see “Tokyo After Dark,” in chapter 5, for suggestions on inexpensive drinking places that serve food. And because I can cover only a limited number of cheap restaurants in each neighborhood, I also suggest you ask your concierge or hotel manager for recommendations; there might be a great little place just around the corner.

OTHER DINING NOTES The restaurants listed below are organized first by neighborhood and then by price category. For information on Japanese food, refer to “Tips on Dining, Japanese Style,” in chapter 2.

Note that the 5% consumption tax is now included in menu prices. However, many first-class restaurants, as well as hotel restaurants, will add a 10% to 15% service charge to the bill. Unless otherwise stated, the prices given below include the tax but not the service charge.

Note that restaurants that have no signs in English letters are preceded by a numbered icon, which is keyed to a list of Japanese characters in appendix C.

Finally, keep in mind that the last order is taken at least 30 minutes before the restaurant’s actual closing time, sometimes even an hour before closing at the more exclusive restaurants.

GINZA & HIBIYA

EXPENSIVE

Kamon ★★☆☆☆ TEPPANYAKI Kamon, which means “Gate of Celebration,” has an interior that could be a statement on Tokyo itself—traditionally Japanese yet ever so high-tech. Located on the 17th floor of the Imperial Hotel, the restaurant offers seating at one of several large counters (some with views over Hibiya) centered around grills where expert chefs prepare excellent teppanyaki before your eyes. Japanese sirloin steaks or filets, cooked to perfection, are available, as well as seafood ranging from fresh prawns and scallops to crabmeat and fish, and seasonal vegetables. The service is, of course, imperial.

Ten-ichi ★☆☆☆☆ TEMPURA In this restaurant, located on Namiki Dori in the heart of Ginza’s nightlife, you can sit at a counter and watch the chef prepare your meal. This is the main outlet of a 77-year-old restaurant chain that helped the tempura style of cooking gain worldwide recognition by serving important foreign customers. Today Ten-ichi still has one of the best reputations in town for serving the most delicately fried foods, along with its special sauce (or, if you prefer, you can dip the morsels in lemon juice with a pinch of salt).

Other Ten-ichi restaurants in Tokyo are in the Imperial Hotel’s Tower basement (☎ 03/3503-1001; Station: Hibiya); Akasaka Tokyo Plaza (☎ 03/3581-2166; Station: Akasaka-mitsuke); and Isetan department store, 3-14-1 Shinjuku (☎ 03/5379-3039; Station: Shinjuku Sanjome).

① Donto ★★☆☆☆ Finds VARIED JAPANESE Located in Hibiya on Harumi Dori in the basement of an unlikely looking office building, this is a great place for lunch. Popular with the local working crowd (and therefore best avoided noon–1pm), it’s pleasantly decorated in a rustic style with shoji screens, wooden floors, and an open kitchen. Take off your shoes at the entryway and put them into one of the wooden lockers. Choose what you want from the plastic display case, which shows various teishoku and set meals. Tips A Note on Establishments with Japanese Signs

Many establishments and attractions in Japan do not have signs in Roman (English-language) letters. Those that don't are indicated in this guide by an oval with a number that corresponds to a number in appendix C showing the Japanese equivalent. Thus, to find the Japanese kanji, or alphabet, for Rangetsu (below), refer to no. 4 in appendix C.

kaiseki is available. Unfortunately, the best deals are daily specials written in Japanese only; ask about them or look around at what others are eating.

There's another Donto on the 49th floor of the Sumitomo Building in Shinjuku (📍 03/3344-6269; Station: Tochomae; see "Shinjuku" map on p. 126), open the same hours.

Yurakucho Denki Building basement, 1-7-1 Yurakuchoi. 📍 03/3201-3021. Set dinners ¥3,500–¥4,500 ($29–$38/£15–£19); set lunches ¥800–¥950 ($6.65–$7.90/£3.35–£3.95). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11am–2pm and 5–11pm. Closed holidays. Station: Hibiya (1 min.). On Harumi Dori.

② Ginza Daimasu KAISEKI/OBENTO This 90-year-old restaurant has a simple, modern decor with Japanese touches. Experienced, kimono-clad waitresses serve artfully arranged set meals from the English-language menu. The Fukiyose-zen obento—many delicate dishes served in three courses—includes beautiful tempura delicacies and a menu (in Japanese) explaining what you're eating for ¥3,675 ($31/£15). A plastic-food display in the front window will help you recognize the restaurant. Set lunches are served until 4pm.

6-9-6 Ginza. 📍 03/3571-3584. Reservations required for kaiseki. Kaiseki ¥5,250–¥12,600 ($44–$105/£22–£52); obento ¥2,415–¥3,675 ($20–$31/£10–£15); set lunches ¥2,100–¥2,950 ($17–$24/£18–£12). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–8:30pm (last order). Station: Ginza (2 min.). Across from Matsuzakaya department store on Chuo Dori.

Kihachi ★ FUSION-CROSSOVER With a cool, crisp interior accented with Art Nouveau trimmings, this restaurant offers an interesting French-influenced menu that combines flavors of the West with Japanese and Asian ingredients, creations of its French-trained chef. Past choices on the English-language menu have included starters such as seared foie gras and bamboo shoot with miso mustard sauce; mains have included braised beef with red wine and miso sauce, and fried veal crusted with spicy sesame and black peppers with hot vegetable salad. The hardest part of dining here? Limiting yourself to one meal—you just might have to come back.

2-2-6 Ginza. 📍 03/3567-6281. Main dishes ¥1,800–¥2,730 ($15–$23/£7.50–£11); set dinners ¥6,300–¥10,500 ($52–$87/£26–£43); set lunches ¥2,625–¥6,300 ($22–$52/£11–£26). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2:30pm and 6-9:30pm (last order). Station: Yurakucho (5 min.). Near the Tourist Information Center and Printemps department store.

③ Ohmatsuya ★★ Finds JAPANESE GRILL Enter this second-floor restaurant of a nondescript building and you're instantly back in time: After you're greeted by waitresses clad in traditional country clothing, you'll find yourself enveloped in an old farmhouse atmosphere. (Part of the decor is from a 17th-century samurai house in northern Japan.) Even the style of cooking is traditional, as customers grill their own food over a hibachi. Sake, served in a length of bamboo, is drunk from bamboo cups. Dinner menus (in English) include such delicacies as grilled fish, skewered meat, and vegetables. This true find—and easy to find at that—is located on Sony Street, the small side street behind the Sony Building.

Sal Imperial Viking ★ INTERNATIONAL No, this has nothing to do with Scandinavian invaders; rather, viking is the Japanese word for “all-you-can-eat buffet.” Although lots of Tokyo hotels now offer such spreads, this 17th-floor restaurant was the first and has been serving buffets for more than 40 years. It offers more than 40 mostly European and some international dishes, which vary according to seasonal food promotions spotlighting a country’s cuisine, from Indonesian to Swiss. Views are of the Ginza and Hibiya Park, and there’s live jazz in the evenings. This restaurant has enjoyed great popularity for decades, making reservations a must.

Zipangu VARIED JAPANESE Just outside the Ginza and located high in the sky—on the 47th floor of the Caretta Shiodome Building with shimmering views over Tokyo Bay—this contemporary Japanese restaurant offers set meals for lunch that are difficult to describe; the constantly changing presentations border on nouvelle Japanese cuisine, with international influences. In the evenings, the stone-and-wood venue is more of a drinking bar, with an à la carte menu offering charcoal-grilled steak, yakitori, dim sum, and dishes that go well with wine. In any case, this is a great choice if you’re visiting nearby Hama Rikyu Garden.

Caretta Shiodome, 1–8–1 Higashi-Shimbashi. ㊦ 03/6215-8111. Reservations required. Main dishes ¥1,260–¥4,536 ($10–$38/£5–£19); set lunches ¥2,727–¥6,825 ($23–$57/£11–£28). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2:30pm and 5–10pm (last order). Station: Shiodome (2 min.) or Shimbashi (5 min.).

In addition to the restaurants here, a number of restaurants on the eighth floor of Matsuya Ginza department store serve everything from French and Chinese food to sushi, tempura, noodles, and more.

For atmospheric dining, head to an arch underneath the elevated Yamanote railway tracks located about halfway between Harumi Dori and the Imperial Hotel Tower; it has a handful of tiny yakitori stands, each with a few tables and chairs (see bullet no. 9 on the “Ginza & Hibiya” map, on p. 144). They cater to a rather boisterous working-class

Family-Friendly Restaurants

Cafe Creperie Le Bretagne (p. 159) If sweet bean paste is not your child's idea of dessert, then perhaps the crepes at this casual establishment will do the trick, filled with fruit, chocolate, and other yummy concoctions. The galettes are equally delicious, filled with ham, cheese, and other filling ingredients.

Hard Rock Cafe (p. 166) This internationally known establishment should pacify grumbling teenagers. They can munch on hamburgers, gaze at famous guitars and other rock-'n'-roll memorabilia and, most importantly, buy that Hard Rock Cafe T-shirt.

Kua' Aina (p. 160) When your kids start asking for "real food," take them here for some of the best burgers in town.

Sometaro (p. 152) This traditional restaurant specializes in Japanese-style pancakes filled with meat and vegetables and fried noodles that you cook yourself at your table, which might delight more adventuresome little eaters, especially because they get to pick their own ingredients.

clientele, mainly men. The atmosphere, unsophisticated and dingy, harks back to pre-war Japan, somewhat of an anomaly in the otherwise chic Ginza. Stalls are open from about 5pm to midnight Monday through Saturday.

Andy's Shin Hinomoto  VARIED JAPANESE Occupying its own arch underneath the Yamanote tracks, this Japanese-style pub is owned by Andy, a Brit, who buys all his seafood and vegetables fresh daily at Tsukiji market. The upstairs is the place to be, with its arched ceiling and mixed foreign and Japanese crowd. If you don't have reservations, you'll be shunted into the less ambient downstairs, where you'll feel like a refugee in a fallout shelter as you sit elbow-to-elbow with local office workers at long tables under fluorescent lighting. Sashimi, grilled fish, tempura, sautéed vegetables, deep-fried chicken, tofu, salad, and much more is offered on the English-language menu.

2-4-4 Yurakucho. ☎ 03/3214-8021. Main dishes ¥500-¥1,600 ($4.15-$13/£2.20-£6.50). No credit cards. Daily 5pm-midnight. Station: Yurakucho or Ginza (1 min.). Underneath the Yamanote elevated tracks, across from the Yurakucho Denki Building.

La Boheme ITALIAN The food is passable, but what sets La Boheme apart is that it's open every day until 5am, making it a good bet for a late-night meal. I also like its huge, open kitchen in the middle of the room, surrounded by a U-shaped counter that provides a ringside view of the action. The pasta ranges from spaghetti with eggplant and tomato sauce to spaghetti Bolognese, along with Japanese-style versions like steamed breast of chicken with Japanese baby leek, spinach, and sesame oil.

You'll find other La Boheme restaurants at many popular spots around Tokyo, including the Ginza at 1-2-3 Ginza (☎ 03/5524-3616); in Aoyama at 7-11-4 Minami Aoyama (☎ 03/3499-3377), 6-2-2 Minami Aoyama (☎ 03/6418-4242), and 3-6-25 Kita-Aoyama (☎ 03/5766-1666); in Harajuku at 5-8-5 Jingumae (☎ 03/5467-5666); in Nishi Azabu at 2-25-18 Nishi Azabu (☎ 03/3407-1363); in Shibuya at 1–6–8 Jinnan (☎ 03/3477-0481); and on the fourth floor of Mediage on Odaiba (☎ 03/3599-4801). All are open daily from 11:30am to 3:30am or later.

6–4–1 Ginza. ☎ 03/3572-5005. www.boheme.jp. Pizza and pasta ¥550–¥1,400 ($4.60–$12/£2.30–£6); set lunches ¥900–¥1,300 ($7.50–$11/£3.75–£5.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–5am. Station: Hibiya (5 min.) or Ginza (10 min.). Behind Mosaic, on a corner.

Manpuku (Value) YAKITORI This yakitori restaurant differs from the others under the Yamanote tracks in that it offers tables along a covered passageway where you can watch office workers bustling by. Decorated with old posters inside and out, it has a slight post–World War II retro feel; its sign even boasts RETRO DINING. Manpuku offers an English-language menu of yakitori, deep-fried chicken with sweet chili sauce, braised tofu with meat, noodles, and other pub grub, along with more unusual choices such as stir-fried garlic horse meat.

2–4–1 Yurakucho. ☎ 03/3211-6001. Main dishes ¥504–¥1,134 ($4.20–$9.45/£2.10–£4.70). No credit cards. 24 hr., except Sat–Mon night when it's closed nightly 1am–11am. Station: Yurakucho or Hibiya (1 min.). On Harumi Dori, underneath the elevated Yamanote tracks between the Sony and Yurakucho Denki buildings.

⑤ Shabusen (Value) SHABU-SHABU Located on the second floor of a fashion department store just a stone's throw from Ginza 4–chome Crossing (the Harumi Dori–Chuo Dori intersection), this is a fun restaurant where you can cook your own sukiyaki or shabu-shabu in a boiling pot as you sit at a round counter. It's also one of the few restaurants that caters to individual diners (shabu-shabu is usually shared by a group). Orders are shouted back and forth among the staff, service is rapid, and the place is lively. There's an English-language menu complete with cooking instructions, so it's user-friendly. The special shabu-shabu dinner for ¥4,147 ($35/£17), with appetizer, tomato (“super dressing”) salad, beef, vegetables, noodles or rice porridge, and dessert, is enough for most voracious appetites. You'll find a branch of Shabusen in the basement of the same building (☎ 03/3572-3806).

Core Building 2F, 5–8–20 Ginza. ☎ 03/3571-1717. Set dinners ¥2,310–¥5,880 ($19–$49/£9.50–£24); set lunches ¥1,155–¥3,150 ($9.60–$26/£4.80–£13). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Station: Ginza (1 min.). On Chuo Dori next to the Nissan Building.

⑥ Tsukiji Sushi Sen SUSHI Too brightly lit and possessing as much charm as an interrogation room, this second-floor Ginza branch nevertheless offers fresh sushi at bargain prices, served at a counter or tables overlooking busy Harumi Dori. If you find yourself hungry in the Ginza in the dead of night, this is a good choice, as it's open 24 hours.

5–9–1 Ginza. ☎ 03/5537-2878. Sushi a la carte ¥52–¥514 (45¢–$4.30/25p–£2.15); set lunches from ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50); set dinners from ¥3,000 ($25/£12). AE, MC, V. Daily 24 hrs. Station: Higashi Ginza or Ginza (2 min.). On the south side of Harumi Dori, between Chuo Dori and Showa Dori.

Zest Cantina TEX-MEX You can probably find better Mexican restaurants at home, but this will do for a quick fix, especially once the margaritas kick in. It offers chicken and cheese burritos, shrimp enchiladas, tacos, and other Tex-Mex fare, as well as steaks, hamburgers, and very good salads in a rustic, cowboy-themed setting. This restaurant is actually one of four restaurants ensconced under a freeway in a nifty dining complex called G-Zone. Southeast Asian fare is offered in Monsoon (☎ 03/5524-3631); pizza and pasta in Italian-themed La Boheme (☎ 03/5524-3616; see above); and Japanese food in Gonpachi (☎ 03/5524-3641; see p. 165 for a review). English-language menus, inexpensive food, friendly and polished staff, and late opening hours make these restaurants winners whether you're a Tokyo novice or a pro.

You'll find other Zest Cantinas in Shibuya at 1–6–8 Jinnan (☎ 03/5489-3332); in Ebisu at 1–22–19 Ebisu (☎ 03/5475-6291); and in Odaiba on the fourth floor of Mediage (☎ 03/3599-4803).

Aux Amis Tokyo ★ FRENCH This small, tony restaurant specializing in creative French cuisine is one of several on the top two floors of the Marunouchi Building (called Maru Biru by locals), located on the Marunouchi (west) side of Tokyo Station. Sweeping views make it a dining hot spot (reserve one of the few coveted window seats), as do an extensive wine list and a changing French/Japanese menu that might include such entrees as roast lamb with shiitake mushrooms, pork filet in a red-wine sauce, or fish of the day. It's also a great spot for lunch, but note that the rather bare dining room fails to absorb the constant chatter of this popular venue. Other restaurants on the top two floors of the Maru Biru serve shabu-shabu, sushi, tempura, and kaiseki, as well as Italian, Thai, French, and Chinese cuisines. There are many more inexpensive eateries in the basement.

Marunouchi Building, 35th floor, 2–4–1 Marunouchi. ☎ 03/5220-4011. Main dishes ¥3,675–¥5,040 ($31–$42/£15–£21); set dinners ¥6,300–¥12,600 ($52–$105/£26–£52); set lunches ¥2,940–¥7,140 ($24–$59/£12–£30). AE, DC, MC, V. TSUKIJI

As Tsukiji is home to the nation's largest wholesale fish market, it's not surprising that this area abounds in sushi and seafood restaurants. In addition to the recommendations here, don't neglect the many stalls in and around the market where you can eat everything from noodles to fresh sashimi.

6–16–6 Tsukiji. ☎ 03/3541-3881. Fugu dishes ¥1,050–¥4,090 ($8.75–$34/£4.35–£17); fugu set courses ¥4,800–¥13,500 ($40–$112/£20–£56); set lunches ¥840–¥1,050 ($7–$8.75/£3.50–£4.40). AE, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–9:30pm (last order). Station: Tsukiji (7 min.). From the Harumi Dori/Shinohashi intersection, walk on Harumi Dori in the opposite direction of Ginza; the restaurant is on the left just before the Kachidoki-bashi bridge in a modern building.

⑧ Edogin SUSHI There are two Edogin sushi restaurants in Tsukiji, both within walking distance of one another. Because they're close to the famous fish market, you can be sure that the fish will be fresh. There's nothing aesthetic about the main Edogin, first established about 80 years ago; the lights are bright, it's packed with the locals, and it's noisy and busy. It's particularly crowded during lunch- and dinnertime because the food is dependably good and plentiful. The menu is in Japanese only, but an illustrated menu outside displays some of the set meals, with most prices ¥3,700 ($31/£15) or less. There are also sushi platters for ¥1,600 to ¥4,200 ($13–$35/£6.50–£17). As an alternative, look at what the people around you are eating or, if it's lunchtime, order the teishoku (served until 2pm). The nigiri-zushi teishoku for ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) offers a variety of sushi, along with soup and pickled vegetables; if you're really hungry, a more plentiful nigiri-zushi teishoku is available for ¥1,470 ($12/£6).

4–5–1 Tsukiji. ☎ 03/3543-4401. Set meals ¥3,700–¥7,350 ($31–$61/£15–£30); lunch teishoku ¥1,050–¥1,470 ($8.75–$12/£4.40–£6). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11am–9:30pm; Sun and holidays 11am–9pm. Station: Tsukiji (3 min.). Located near the Harumi and Shinohashi Dori intersection behind McDonald's; anyone in the neighborhood can point you in the right direction.

⑨ Sushi Dai ★ SUSHI Located right in the Tsukiji Fish Market, this sushi bar boasts some of the freshest fish in town (and often a long line of people queuing to get in; waits can be up to an hour). The easiest thing to do is order the seto, a set sushi course that usually comes with tuna, eel, shrimp, and other morsels, plus six rolls of tuna and rice in seaweed (onigiri). You won't get plates here—food is served directly on the raised counter in front of you.

Tsukiji Fish Market. ☎ 03/3547-6797. Sushi a la carte ¥220–¥1,000 ($1.85–$8.35/95p–£4.15); sushi seto ¥2,100–¥3,760 ($17–$31/£8.50–£15). No credit cards. Mon–Sat 5am–2pm. Closed Wed if the market is closed, and on holidays. Station: Tsukijijo (2 min.) or Tsukiji (10 min.). Located in a row of barracks housing other restaurants and shops beside the covered market, in Building 6 in the 3rd alley (just past the mailbox); it's the 3rd shop on the right.

ASAKUSAMODERATE

⑩ China ★ Value SHABU-SHABU/SUKIYAKI Established in 1880, China is an old sukiyaki restaurant with a new home in a seven-story building to the left of Kaminarimon Gate, adjacent to its own butcher shop. The entrance to this place is open-fronted; all you'll see is a man waiting to take your shoes and a hostess in a kimono ready to lead you to one of the tatami-floored dining areas above. China offers very good shabu-shabu and sukiyaki set lunches for ¥4,300 ($36/£18), available until 3pm and including an appetizer, soup, and side dishes. Otherwise, dinner set meals of shabu-shabu or sukiyaki, including sashimi, rice, and soup, begin at ¥5,500 ($46/£23). The English-language menu includes instructions, making this a good bet for the sukiyaki/shabu-shabu novice.

1–3–4 Asakusa. ☎ 03/3841-0010. www.china.co.jp. Set meals ¥5,500–¥12,000 ($46–$100/£23–£50). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11:45am–9:15pm (last order 7pm); Sun and holidays 11:30am–9pm. Station: Asakusa (1 min.). On Kaminarimon Dori; located to the left of the Kaminarimon Gate if you stand facing Asakusa Kannon Temple (look for the SUKIYAKI sign).

⑪ Komagata Dojo ★ Finds DOJO This is a restaurant very much out of the Edo Period. Following a tradition spanning 200 years and now in its sixth generation of owners, this old-style dining hall specializes in dojo, a tiny, sardinelike river fish that translates as “loach.” It’s served in a variety of styles, from grilled to stewed. Easiest is to order one of the set meals, which includes a popular dojo nabe, cooked on a charcoal burner in front of you (dojo nabe ordered a la carte costs ¥1,650/$14/£7). Otherwise, look around and order what someone else is eating. The dining area is a single large room of tatami mats, with ground-level boards serving as tables, and waitresses in traditional dress moving quietly about.

1–7–12 Komagata, Taito-ku. ☎ 03/3842-4001. Reservations recommended for dinner. Dojo dishes ¥1,250–¥1,650 ($10–$14/£5–£7); set meals ¥2,300–¥7,100 ($19–$59/£9.50–£30). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–9pm. Station: Asakusa (3 min.). Walk south on Edo Dori (away from Kaminarimon Gate/Sensoji Temple); the restaurant—a large, old-fashioned wood house on a corner, with blue curtains at its door—is on the right side of the street, about a 5-min. walk from Kaminarimon Gate, past the MUJI Bank.

La Ranarita Azumabashi 🌟 ITALIAN The Asahi Beer Tower may not mean anything to you, but if I mention the building with the golden hops poised on top, you’ll certainly know it when you see it (the building was designed by Philippe Starck). The Asahi Beer Tower is the high-rise beside the golden hops, looking like . . . a foaming beer mug? On the top floor (in the foam), this Italian restaurant has soaring walls and great views of Asakusa. It’s a perfect perch from which to watch barges on the river or the sun set over Asakusa as you dine on everything from pizza to pasta to grilled scampi. The set lunches, which begin at ¥1,800 ($15/£7.50), include an antipasto, salad, a main dish, and coffee. If you want a ringside seat, make a reservation at least 3 days in advance or avoid weekends and holidays.

Asahi Beer Tower (on the opposite side of the Sumida River from Sensoji Temple), 22nd floor, 1–23–1 Azumabashi. ☎ 03/5608-5277. Reservations recommended on weekends. Pizza and pasta ¥1,300–¥1,800 ($11–$15/£5.50–£7.50); main dishes ¥2,200–¥5,000 ($18–$42/£9–£21); set dinners ¥6,000–10,000 ($50–$83/£25–£41); set lunches ¥1,800–¥4,800 ($15–$40/£7.50–£20). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11:30am–2pm and 5–9pm; Sun and holidays 11:30am–3pm and 5–9pm (last order). Station: Asakusa (4 min.).

⑫ Mugitoro YAM/KAISEKI Founded about 60 years ago but now housed in a newer building, this restaurant specializes in tororo-imo (yam) kaiseki and has a wide following among middle-age Japanese women. Popular as a health food, the yams used here are imported from the mountains of Akita Prefecture and are featured in almost all the dishes. If you’re on a budget or want a quick meal, come for the weekday lunch buffet offered until 1pm; it includes a main dish like fish or beef, yam in some form, vegetable, soup, and rice—just deposit ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) into the pot on the table and help yourself.

2–2–4 Kaminarimon. ☎ 03/3842-1066. Reservations recommended. Set dinners ¥5,250–¥10,500 ($44–$87/£22–£43); set lunches weekends/holidays ¥2,650–¥3,675 ($22–$31/£11–£15). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 11:30am–9pm; Sat–Sun and holidays 11am–9pm (last order). Station: Asakusa (2 min.). From Sensoji Temple, walk south (with your back to Kaminarimon Gate) until you reach the 1st big intersection with the stoplight. Komagata-bashi Bridge will be to your left; Mugitoro is right beside the bridge on Edo Dori, next to a tiny temple.

⑬ Waentei-Kikko 🌟🌟🌟 finds KAISEKI Just southeast of Sensoji Temple, Waentei-Kikko is actually a tiny, traditional house tucked behind a tiny garden. Inside, it’s like a farmhouse in the countryside with its flagstone entry, wooden rafters, and tatami seating. A warm and friendly husband-and-wife team manage it, but what makes this establishment especially compelling are the shamisen performances by the husband, Fukui Kodai, who plays with the fervor of a rock star, as well as performances of other traditional Japanese music (performances are at 12:15, 1:30, 6:30, and 8pm). Of course, the food shines, too, with obento lunch boxes and kaiseki dinners that change with the seasons. Fugu kaiseki dinners, beginning at ¥9,975 ($83/£41), are also available with advance reservations. This place is a true find.

2–2–13 Asakusa. ☎ 03/5828-8833. www.waentei-kikko.com. Reservations recommended. Obento lunches ¥2,500 and ¥3,500 ($21–$29/£10–£15); kaiseki dinners ¥6,825–¥14,175 ($57–$118/£28–£59). AE, DC, MC, V. Thurs–Tues 11:30am–2pm and 5–10pm. Station: Asakusa (5 min.). Walk on Nakamise Dori toward Sensoji Temple, turning right after the last shop; go past the 2 stone Buddhas and then turn right again at the tiny Benten-do Temple with the large bell; the restaurant is on the right side of the street across from the playground.

Kamiya Bar VARIOUS JAPANESE/WESTERN This inexpensive restaurant, established in 1880 as the first Western bar in Japan, serves both Japanese and Western fare on its three floors. The first floor is the bar, popular with older, tobacco-smoking Japanese men. The second floor offers Western food of a sort (that is, the Japanese version of Western food), including fried chicken, smoked salmon, spaghetti, fried shrimp, and hamburger steak; the third floor serves Japanese food ranging from udon noodles and yakitori to tempura and sashimi. I personally prefer the third floor for both its food and its atmosphere. Although the menus are in Japanese only, extensive plastic-food display cases show set meals of Japanese food costing ¥1,500 to ¥3,500 ($13–$29/£6.50–£15). This is a very casual restaurant, very much a place for older locals, and it can be quite noisy and crowded.

1–1–1 Asakusa. ☎ 03/3841-5400. Main dishes ¥610–¥1,500 ($5.10–$13/£2.55–£6.50). MC, V (2nd/3rd floors only). Wed–Mon 11:30am–9:30pm (last order). Station: Asakusa (1 min.). Located on Kaminarimon Dori in a plain, brown-tiled building between Kaminarimon Gate and the Sumida River.

⑭ Namiki Yabusoba ★ NOODLES Asakusa's best-known noodle shop, founded in 1913, offers plain buckwheat noodles in cold or hot broth as well as more substantial tempura with noodles, all listed on an English-language menu. Seating is at tables or on tatami mats, and it's a small place, so you won't be able to linger if people are waiting.

2–11–9 Kaminarimon. ☎ 03/3841-1340. Dishes ¥650–¥1,600 ($5.40–$13/£2.70–£6.50). No credit cards. Fri–Wed 11:30am–7:30pm. Station: Asakusa (2 min.). From Kaminarimon Gate, walk south (away from Sensoji Temple) 1 min.; Namiki is on the right side of the street, a brown building with bamboo trees, a small maple, and a stone lantern by the front door.

⑮ Sansado TEMPURA Located right beside Kaminarimon Gate, next to the Kurodaya paper shop, this simple tempura restaurant specializes in Edo-style tempura, fried in a light oil. On the first floor, seating is either at tables or on tatami, while the upstairs is more traditional with tatami seating; one room overlooks the temple gate. Sansado is run by an army of very able grandmotherly types, and because the menu is in Japanese only, they're more than happy to go outside with you to help you make a selection from the plastic display case.

1–2–2 Asakusa. ☎ 03/3841-3400. Set meals ¥1,260–¥2,940 ($11–$25/£5.50–£12). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–9pm (last order). Station: Asakusa (1 min.). East of Kaminarimon Gate, with entrances beside Kurodaya paper shop and on Kaminarimon Dori.

⑯ Sometaro ★ Kids OKONOMIYAKI/YAKISOBA This very atmospheric neighborhood restaurant specializes in okonomiyaki, a working-class meal that is basically a Japanese pancake filled with beef, pork, and vegetables, and prepared by the diners themselves as they sit on tatami at low tables inset with griddles. Realizing that some foreigners may be intimidated by having to cook an unfamiliar meal, this restaurant makes the process easier with an English-language menu complete with instructions. The busy but friendly staff can also help you get started. In addition to okonomiyaki, yakisoba (fried noodles) with meat or vegetables and other do-it-yourself dishes are available. This is a fun, convivial way to enjoy a meal, especially for kids who might like to try their own hand in cooking their meal (and selecting their own ingredients). Before entering the restaurant, be sure to deposit your shoes in the proffered plastic sacks by the door.

2–2–2 Nishi-Asakusa. ☎ 03/3844-9502. Main dishes ¥588–¥750 ($4.90–$6.25/£2.45–£3.10); set meals ¥1,575 ($13/£6.50). No credit cards. Daily noon–10pm (last order). Station: Tawaramachi (2 min.) or Asakusa (5 min.). Just off Kokusai Dori, on the side street that runs between the Drum Museum and the police station, in the 2nd block on the right.

Grill Fukushima ★ CLASSIC FRENCH Parent company Seiyoken opened one of Japan's first restaurants serving Western food in 1876. Its restaurant here, ensconced in a nondescript building dating from the 1950s, is nonetheless the classiest place to eat in Ueno Park, serving pricey but quite good French cuisine, with a relaxing view of greenery outside its large windows and classical music playing softly in the background. The a-la-carte menu, in French and Japanese, includes seafood such as lobster in an orange sauce and meat dishes ranging from filet mignon in red-wine sauce to roast lamb, but most people order one of the many fixed-price meals. There's a varied selection of French wines as well as wines from Germany, California, and Australia. The Grill is located to the right as you enter the building and is not to be confused with the much cheaper utilitarian restaurant to the left.

In Ueno Park between Kiyomizu Temple and Toshogu Shrine. ☎ 03/3821-2181. Main dishes ¥4,200–¥7,875 ($35–$66/£17–£33); set dinners ¥7,350–¥18,900 ($61–$157/£30–£79); set lunches ¥4,800–¥10,500 ($40–$87/£20–£44). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–8pm (last order). Station: JR Ueno (6 min.).

①7 Izu'ei EEL Put aside all your prejudices about eels and head for this modern yet traditionally decorated multistoried restaurant with a 260-year history dating back to the Edo Period and views of Shinobazu Pond. Because eels are grilled over charcoal, the Japanese place a lot of stock in the quality of the charcoal used, and this place boasts its own furnace in the mountains of Wakayama Prefecture, which is said to produce the best charcoal in Japan. Unagi donburi (rice topped with strips of eel), tempura, and sushi are available, as well as set meals. There's no English-language menu, but there is a display case outside and the menu has some pictures.

2–12–22 Ueno. ☎ 03/3831-0954. Reservations recommended. Main dishes ¥1,595–¥5,250 ($13–$44/£6.50–£22); set meals ¥2,100–¥10,500 ($17–$87/£8.50–£44). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–9:30pm (last order). Station: JR Ueno (3 min.). On Shinobazu Dori, across the street from Shinobazu Pond and the Shitamachi Museum, next to KFC.

Tokori KOREAN BARBECUE One of three restaurants in a modern concrete building called Bamboo Garden (the other two restaurants serve Chinese and Japanese food), this friendly establishment offers Korean-style barbecued meats, which you grill yourself at your table, as well as salads, kimchi (spicy Korean cabbage), Korean-style pancakes, rice porridge, and soups from an English-language menu with photographs. Set lunches feature one-pot meals or grilled beef, along with side dishes of soup, salad, and kimchi.

1–52 Ueno Park. ☎ 03/5807-2255. Set lunches ¥880–¥2,200 ($7.35–$18/£3.70–£9); set dinners ¥3,500–¥7,000 ($29–$58/£15–£29). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–11:30pm. Station: JR Ueno (2 min.). On a steep hillside west of JR Ueno Station, in Ueno Park.

In addition to the restaurant below, try Hard Rock Cafe Ueno, located in JR Ueno Station (☎ 03/5826-5821); see p. 166 for a review.

Mantra INDIAN Decorated in pink with etched mirrors and lots of brass, this tiny, spotless restaurant offers curries and tandoori at inexpensive prices. A good way for lone diners to try a variety of dishes is the all-you-can-eat lunch buffet served from 11am to 3pm; or try one of the meat or vegetarian set meals (thali). Another good choice for budget travelers: a set dinner for ¥2,395 ($20/£10) that's all you can eat within 90 minutes; add ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) for all you can drink.

Nagafuji Building Annex, 3rd floor, 4-9-6 Ueno. ☎ 03/3835-0818. Main dishes ¥890 – ¥1,680 ($7.40–$14/£3.70–£7); set meals ¥1,980 – ¥3,300 ($16–$27/£8–£14); lunch buffet ¥998 ($8.30/£4.15) weekdays, ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50) weekends and holidays. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–9:30pm (last order). Station: JR Ueno (2 min.). From the south end of Ueno Park, look for the modern Nagafuji Building on Chuo Dori; the annex is in the back, facing the north end of Ameyokocho shopping street.

SHINJUKU

In addition to the suggestions below, be sure to check out the restaurant floors of several buildings in Shinjuku, where you can find restaurants in all price categories serving a variety of Japanese and international cuisine, some with very good views. These include the 29th and 30th floors of the N. S. Building where, in addition to Hakkaku (described below), there are restaurants serving tempura, tonkatsu, teppanyaki, sushi, and Italian fare; the top four floors of the Sumitomo Building where, in addition to Donto (p. 142), you'll find more than 20 outlets offering everything from tempura to Chinese cuisine; and the 12th, 13th, and 14th floors of Takashimaya Times Square where there are restaurants serving sushi, tonkatsu, noodles, and more.

New York Grill ★★ AMERICAN On the 52nd floor of one of Tokyo's most exclusive hotels, the New York Grill has remained the place to dine ever since its 1994 opening; some swear it's the most sophisticated restaurant in all of Japan. Surrounded on four sides by glass, it features stunning views (especially at night), artwork by Valerio Adami, live jazz in the evenings, and a 1,600-bottle wine cellar (with an emphasis on California wines). The restaurant backs up its dramatic setting with generous portions of steaks, seafood, and other fare ranging from delectable roast duck to rack of "certified organically raised" lamb, all prepared in an open kitchen. Both the set lunch and the weekend and holiday brunches are among the city's best and most sumptuous (reservations required)—and are great options for those who don't want to pawn their belongings to eat dinner here. I wouldn't miss it.

Park Hyatt Hotel, 3-7-1-2 Nishi-Shinjuku. ☎ 03/5322-1234. www.parkhyatttokyo.com. Reservations required. Main dishes ¥4,800 – ¥9,000 ($40–$75/£20–£37); set lunch ¥4,800 ($40/£20); set dinners ¥11,000 – ¥21,000 ($92–$175/£46–£87); Sat–Sun and holiday brunch ¥6,200 ($52/£26). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2:30pm and 5:30–10:30pm. Station: Shinjuku (west exit, a 13-min. walk or a 5-min. free shuttle ride), Hatsudai on the Keio Line (7 min.), or Tochomae on the Oedo Line (8 min.).

In addition to the listing here, there's a branch of the famous tempura restaurant Ten-ichi on the seventh floor of Isetan department store, 3-14-1 Shinjuku (☎ 03/5379-3039; see p. 142 for a review).

⑱ Kakiden ★★ KAISEKI Although it's located on the eighth floor of a rather uninspiring building, Kakiden has a relaxing teahouse atmosphere with low chairs, shoji screens, bamboo trees, and soothing traditional Japanese music playing softly in the background. Sibling restaurant to one in Kyoto founded more than 260 years ago as a catering service for the elite, this kaiseki restaurant serves set meals that change with the seasons according to what's fresh and available. An English-language menu lists the set meals, but it's probably best to simply pick a meal to fit your budget. The set lunch is available until 3pm. Set dinners include box kaiseki starting at ¥5,250 ($44/£22), mini-kaiseki for ¥8,400 ($70/£35), and kaiseki courses ranging from ¥8,400 to ¥15,750 ($70–$131/£35–£66). Some of the more common dishes here include fish, seasonal vegetables, eggs, sashimi, shrimp, and mushrooms, but don't worry if you can't identify everything—I've found that even the Japanese don't always know what they're eating.

3–37–11 Shinjuku, 8th floor. ☎ 03/3352-5121. Reservations recommended for lunch. Set dinners ¥5,250–¥15,750 ($44–$131/£22–£66); set lunches ¥4,200–¥6,300 ($35–$52/£17–£26). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–9pm (last order). Station: Shinjuku (east exit, 1 min.). Next to Shinjuku Station's east side.

In addition to the suggestions here, an excellent choice for nouvelle Japanese cuisine is daidaiya (p. 169), located next to the east exit of Shinjuku station on the third floor of the Nowa Building, 3–37–12 Shinjuku (☎ 03/5362-7173), open daily 5pm to midnight.

19 Ban-Thai THAI One of Tokyo's longest-running Thai restaurants and credited with introducing authentic Thai food to the Japanese, Ban-Thai still prepares excellent Thai fare, with 90 mouthwatering items listed on the menu. My favorites are the cold and spicy meat salad, the chicken soup with coconut and lemongrass, and the pad Thai. Note that set dinners are available only for parties of two or more; also, portions are not large, so if you order several portions and add beer, your tab can really climb. Finally, the service is indifferent. Yet this place is packed every time I come here.

1–23–14 Kabuki-cho, 3rd floor. ☎ 03/3207-0068. Reservations recommended. Main dishes ¥1,200–¥1,800 ($10–$15/£5–£7.50); set dinners ¥2,500–¥6,000 ($21–$50/£10–£25); set lunches ¥630–¥1,365 ($5.25–$11/£2.60–£5.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 11:30am–3pm and 5–11pm; Sat–Sun and holidays 11:30am–11pm (last order). Station: Shinjuku (east exit, 7 min.). In East Shinjuku in the seediest part of Kabuki-cho (don't worry, the interior is nicer than the exterior) on the west side of a neon-lit pedestrian street running from Yasukuni Dori (look for the red neon archway and Pronto coffee shop) to Koma Stadium, a Kabuki-cho landmark.

20 Hayashi ★★ Finds JAPANESE GRILL This restaurant specializes in Japanese set meals cooked over your own hibachi grill. It's small and cozy, with only five grills and a woman in kimono overseeing the cooking operations, taking over if customers seem the least bit hesitant. The rustic interior was imported intact from the mountain region of Takayama. Four set meals are offered (vegetarian meals are available on request). My ¥5,250 ($44/£220) meal came with sashimi, yakitori, tofu steak, scallops cooked in their shells, shrimp, and vegetables, all grilled one after the other. Watch your alcohol intake—drinks can really add to your bill.

Jojoen Daini Shinjuku Building, 2–22–5 Kabuki-cho. ☎ 03/3209-5672. Reservations recommended. Set dinners ¥4,200–¥7,350 ($35–$61/£17–£30). AE, MC, V. Mon–Sat 5–11:30pm. Closed holidays. Station: Shinjuku (east exit, 10 min.). On the northern edge of Kabuki-cho; you'll know you're getting close when you see Godzilla hanging from a building; the restaurant is just a bit farther to the north, on a corner.

21 Tsunahachi TEMPURA Inside a small, old-fashioned brown building in the heart of fashionable East Shinjuku is the main branch of a restaurant that has been serving tempura since 1923. Now there are more than 40 outlets in Japan, including one on the 13th floor of Takashimaya Times Square (☎ 03/5361-1860), but this is the largest outlet, and though it has an English-language menu, the easiest option is to order the teishoku, the least expensive of which includes six pieces of tempura, including deep-fried shrimp, cuttlefish, white fish, green pepper, conger eel, and Japanese pickles.

3-31-8 Shinjuku. ☎ 03/3352-1012. Reservations recommended. Tempura la carte ¥470 – ¥1,200 ($3.90–$10/£1.95–£5); teishoku ¥1,365 – ¥6,300 ($11–$52/£5.50–£26). AE, DC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Station: Shinjuku Sanchome (2 min.) or Shinjuku (east exit, 5 min.). Off Shinjuku Dori on the side street that runs along the east side of Mitsukoshi department store.

②② Hakkaku ★ Finds VARIED JAPANESE/ROBATAYAKI This lively, crowded establishment has a lot going for it: a corner location in a skyscraper with expansive views over Yoyogi Park, inexpensive dishes and meals on an English menu, and Kirin beer on tap. Its decor and food resemble those of a bar. During lunch only set meals are available; choose grilled fish, hirekatsu (breaded pork cutlet), or from the display case. Dinner offers a wider range of possibilities, including sashimi, grilled fish, nikujaga (a very tasty beef and potato stew), fried noodles, and salads. Yakitori, beginning at ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) per two skewers, includes asparagus wrapped in bacon and tsukune (chicken meatballs), two of my favorites. There's also a robatayaki counter, where you can point at various dishes, watch them be prepared on the open grill, and then receive them from a wooden paddle passed in your direction.

N. S. Building, 29th floor (be sure to take the dedicated SKY RESTAURANT elevator), 2-4-1 Nishi-Shinjuku. ☎ 03/3345-1848. Main dishes ¥580 – ¥1,780 ($4.85–$15/£2.40–£7.50); set lunches ¥780 – ¥850 ($6.50–$7.10/£3.25–£3.55). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–2:30pm and 5–9:30pm. Station: Tochomae (3 min.) or Shinjuku (west exit, 8 min.).

Tokyo Catering VARIED JAPANESE This is probably the cheapest place in town for a meal with a view. Located on the 32nd floor in the north tower of the Tokyo Metropolitan Government Office (TMG), which offers a free observation room on its 45th floor, this cafeteria is for public employees but is open to everyone. Choose your meal—which may include the likes of pork cutlet, fried fish, sushi, or noodles—from the display case, where every item is identified by a number. You then purchase your selections from a vending machine and take your tickets to the cafeteria window. The cafeteria lacks charm, but if you can get a table by the window, you'll have a good view of Tokyo.

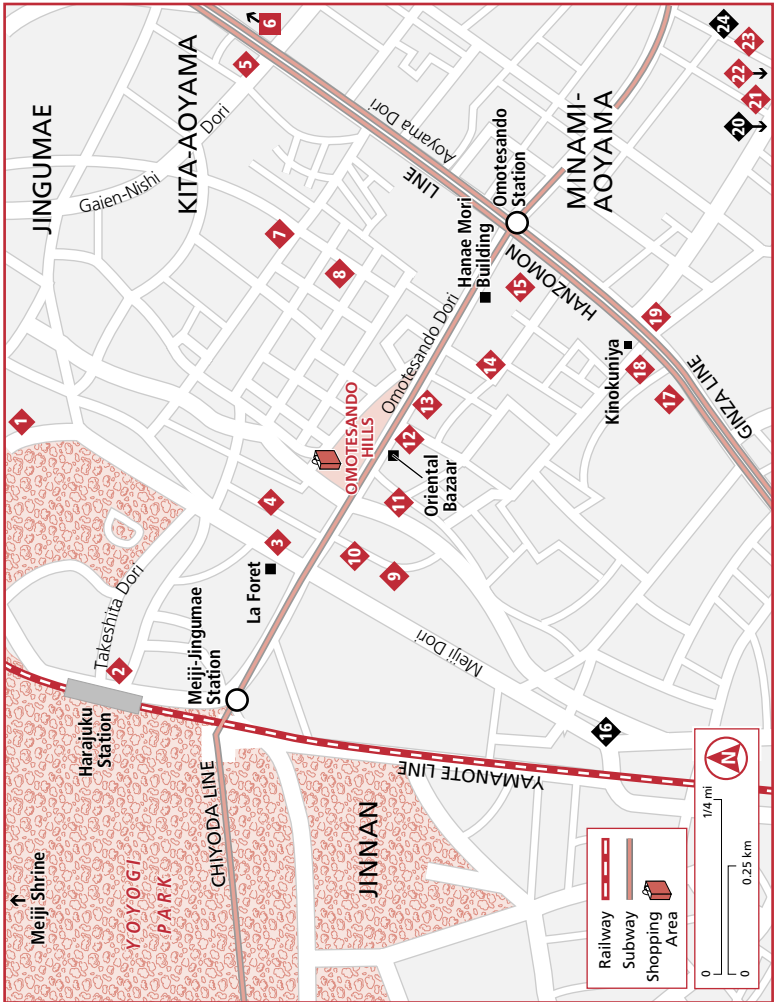

TMG, 32nd floor of North Tower, 2-8-1 Nishi-Shinjuku. ☎ 03/5320-7510. Set meals ¥550 – ¥660 ($4.60–$5.50/£2.30–£2.75). No credit cards. Mon–Fri 11:20am–2pm and 5–7pm. Station: Tochomae (1 min.), Shinjuku (10 min.), or Nishi-Shinjuku (5 min.).

Casita ★★ ★ Finds PACIFIC RIM/FUSION-CROSSOVER One of the reasons I'm a great fan of Casita's is that I feel truly pampered here. Who wouldn't, with a staff that proffers flashlights to the aged among us who have difficulty reading menus in dim lighting, stands ready to carry out every whim, and, on chilly nights, tucks us in under electric blankets so we can enjoy after-dinner drinks on the deck before we head over to the massage chairs? Casita aims to please, carving its own niche in Tokyo's fiercely competitive market by creating a tropical, resortlike atmosphere bolstered by great service and a year-round outdoor deck that's heated in winter and covered when

Of course, none of that matters if the food falls short, but Casita turns out dishes that border on awesome, whether it's the Caesar salad with serious shavings of Parmesan, the caramelized foie gras with balsamic sauce, the grilled lobster, or the Japanese braised beef cheeks with pureed celery. Sabatini ★ ITALIAN This restaurant, with its Italian furniture and tableware and strolling musicians, seems as if it has been moved intact from the Old World. In fact, the only thing to remind you that you're in Tokyo is your Japanese waiter. The Italian family that opened Sabatini (no relation to the Sabatini restaurants in the Ginza and Roppongi) has had a restaurant in Rome for more than 40 years, and many of the ingredients—olive oil, ham, salami, tomato sauce, and Parmesan—are flown in fresh from Italy. The menu includes seafood, veal, steak, lamb, and a variety of vegetables. Naturally, there's a wide selection of Italian wines.

Daini's Table ★★ NOUVELLE CHINESE This elegant Chinese restaurant, located next to the Blue Note jazz club off Kotto Dori, serves intriguing dishes that are nicely presented one dish at a time rather than all at once as in most Chinese restaurants. Its English-language menu offers both traditional dishes (roast Peking duck, boiled prawns with red chili sauce, and hot-and-sour Peking-style soup) and more unusual combinations that change with the seasons. Everything I've had here has been delicious, though note that set dinners (described only in Japanese) require a two-person minimum. Lone diners, therefore, should come for lunch.

6-3-14 Minami Aoyama. ☎ 03/3407-0363. Reservations recommended. Main dishes ¥1,800–¥3,800 ($15–$32/£7.50–£16); set dinners ¥5,250–¥15,750 ($44–$131/£22–£66); set lunches ¥1,100–¥3,000 ($9.15–$25/£4.60–£12). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 11:30am–2pm; daily 5:30–10pm (last order). Station: Omotesando (6 min.).

Fujimamas ★ PACIFIC RIM/FUSION This airy restaurant employs lots of wood to impart a beach-shack atmosphere, but naturally at Tokyo prices. The culinary crossroad of cuisines presented on the changing English-language menu may include salads like a Thai-style Caesar salad with crispy calamari croutons, or a shrimp and Julienne vegetable salad with yuzu (a tangy citrus fruit) and truffle dressing. Main dishes may include such tempting choices as seared lamb with tomatoes and mint; or grilled swordfish with orange, red onion, and dill salad with ponzu dressing. Lunch offers lighter fare, including sandwiches, stir-fries, and curries, including vegetarian choices like stir-fried tofu with tomatoes, leeks, and basil with steamed white rice.

Mon–Sat 11:30am–11pm; Sun 11:30am–10pm (last order). Station: Omotesando (5 min.). From Omotesando Dori, take the side street opposite the Hanae Mori Building (the one between McDonald's and Ito Hospital, with a HARAJUKU sign above it), walk to the end of the block, turn left and then immediately right; it's past 7-Eleven, on a corner on the left.

Fonda de la Madrugada MEXICAN Serving what is probably Tokyo's most authentic Mexican food, this dark basement restaurant has a cavernous main dining room, several small and cozy offshoots, and a strolling mariachi band, making it seem like you're dining in a Mexican villa. Shrimp marinated in tequila, chicken mole, and soft-tortilla tacos served with chicken, fish, beef, or pork are just some of the items on the trilingual (Japanese/Spanish/English) menu, along with the requisite Mexican beers; tequila shots and shooters; margaritas; rum and vodka cocktails; and wine from Mexico, Chile, and Argentina.

2-33-12 Jingumae. ☎ 03/5410-6288. Main dishes ¥1,050 – ¥3,045 ($8.75–$25/£4.35–£12). AE, DC, MC, V. Sun–Thurs 5:30pm–2am; Fri–Sat 5pm–5am. Station: Meiji-Jingumae (10 min.). From the Meiji Dori/Omotesando intersection, walk north on Meiji Dori (toward Shinjuku); it will be on your right after the pedestrian overpass.

23 Harajuku Gyoza Lou ★ GYOZA If you like pork dumplings (gyoza), you owe yourself a meal here. Unlike most greasy spoons that specialize in fast-food Chinese (and tend to be on the dingy side), this restaurant in the heart of Harajuku is hip yet unpretentious and draws a young crowd with its straightforward menu posted on the wall. Only four types of gyoza are offered: boiled (sui-gyoza) or fried (yaki-gyoza), and with or without garlic (nimmiku). A few side dishes, such as cucumber, boiled cabbage with vinegar, sprouts with a spicy meat sauce, and rice, are available, as are beer and sake. A U-shaped counter encloses the open kitchen, giving diners something to watch as they chow down on the very good gyoza.

6-2-4 Jingumae. ☎ 03/3406-4743. Gyoza ¥290 ($2.40/£1.20) for a plate of 6. No credit cards. Mon–Sat 11:30am–4:30am; Sun and holidays 11:30am–10:30pm (last order). Station: Meiji-Jingumae (3 min.) or Harajuku (5 min.). From the Meiji/Omotesando Dori intersection, walk on Omotesando Dori toward Aoyama and take the 3rd right (just before Kiddy Land); it's at the end of this street, on the right.

24 Heirokuzushi SUSHI Bright (a bit too bright), clean, and modern, this is one of those fast-food sushi bars where plates of food are conducted along a conveyor belt on the counter. Customers help themselves to whatever strikes their fancy. To figure your bill, the cashier counts the number of plates you took from the conveyor belt: green plates cost ¥105 (90¢/45p), blue ones ¥136 ($1.15/55p), red ones ¥168 ($1.40/70p), silver ones ¥231 ($1.90/85p), gold ones ¥249 ($2.05/£1.05), and brown ones ¥346 ($2.90/£1.45). You can order takeout; you might want to eat in nearby Yoyogi Park.

5-8-5 Jingumae. ☎ 03/3498-3968. Plates of sushi ¥105-¥346 (87¢-$2.90/45p-£1.40). No credit cards. Daily 11am-9pm. Station: Meiji-Jingumae (2 min.) or Omotesando (5 min.). On Omotesando Dori close to the Oriental Bazaar.

Hiroba JAPANESE HEALTH FOOD/VEGETARIAN Located in the basement of the Crayon House, which specializes in Japanese children's books, this natural-food restaurant offers a buffet lunch of organic veggies, fish, brown rice, and other health foods. For dinner, an English-language menu offers varied fare, including seasonal fish grilled with herbs, tandoori chicken, and stir-fried pork with soy sauce and ginger. The dining hall is very simple (its atmosphere reminds me of a potluck supper in a church basement), and because of the upstairs bookstore, there are likely to be families here.

Crayon House, 3-8-15 Kita-Aoyama. ☎ 03/3406-6409. Lunch buffet ¥1,260 ($11/£5.50); main dishes ¥840-¥1,750 ($7-$15/£3.50-£7.50). No credit cards. Daily 11am-2pm and 5-10pm. Station: Omotesando (2 min.). Off Omotesando Dori on the side street to the right of the Hanae Mori Building.

Kua' Aina ★ Kids AMERICAN/HAMBURGERS/SANDWICHES How far will you go for a great burger? Quite simply, one of the best burgers in town makes this Hawaiian import a smashing success. In fact, if you come at mealtime you'll probably have to wait for a table in one of the tiny upstairs dining rooms. Burgers come as third- and (whopping) half-pounders. There are also sandwiches ranging from BLTs with avocado to roast beef to tuna. A good carnivore fix.

Branches can be found at 1-10-4 Shibuya (☎ 03/3409-3200), in the Marunouchi Building across from Tokyo Station at 2-4-1 Marunouchi (☎ 03/5220-2400), and in Aqua City on Odaiba (☎ 03/3599-2800).

5-10-21 Minami Aoyama. ☎ 03/3407-8001. Burgers and sandwiches ¥610-¥1,300 ($5.10-$11/£2.55-£5.50). No credit cards. Mon-Sat 11am-11pm; Sun 11am-10pm. Station: Omotesando (2 min.). On Aoyama Dori (heading toward Shibuya), at its busy intersection with Kotto Dori.

25 Maisen ★ Finds TONKATSU Extremely popular with the locals, this restaurant has been dishing out tonkatsu (deep-fried breaded pork cutlet) for more than 20 years and is especially known for its black pork, originally from China and prized for its sweet, intense flavor. But what makes this restaurant a real standout is that it occupies a former pre-World War II public bathhouse; its main dining hall was once the changing room and it sports a high ceiling and original architectural details. There's an English-language menu, but lunch specials (available until 6pm) are listed in Japanese only, though there are photos. It's easiest to order a set meal.

4-8-5 Jingumae. ☎ 03/3470-0071. Set meals ¥1,260-¥1,732 ($11-$14/£5.50-£7); set lunches ¥735-¥1,260 ($6.10-$11/£3.05-£5.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am-10pm (last order). Station: Omotesando (4 min.). Take the A2 exit and turn right on the side street between Ito Hospital and McDonald's (the one with HARAJUKU above it); take the 1st left and then an immediate right. It will be in the next block on the left.

Pariya ★ VARIED JAPANESE/INTERNATIONAL What a clever concept: Design a chic, airy restaurant sure to draw in the fashionable Aoyama crowd, and then keep 'em coming with set lunches that change weekly. Diners compose their own meals from choices of a main course, one side dish, a salad, genmai (unpolished brown rice) or hakumai (polished white rice), soup, and coffee and tea. Ethnic-influenced offerings have included grilled chicken, salmon, and sukiyaki beef, while side dishes have ranged from sweet potatoes to pasta. At dinner, the establishment is a combination bar/restaurant, with an English-language menu listing salads (a standout is the Asian Caesar salad with fried sea eel and poached egg, as well as the compose-your-own salads), noodle and rice dishes (recommended are the gyoza with leek or the pumpkin gnocchi with porcini cream sauce), pizza, and other fare that changes with the season.

3-12-14 Kita-Aoyama. ☎ 03/3486-1316. Set lunches ¥1,150 ($9.60/£4.80) with genmai, ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.35) with hakumai; dinner main courses ¥1,155–¥1,260 ($9.60–$11/£4.80–£5.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11:30am–3pm and 6–10pm; Sun 11:30–3pm and 6–9pm (last order). Station: Omotesando (4 min.). Heading toward Shibuya on Aoyama Dori, turn right at the corner with BLENZ coffee shop.

26 Toriyoshi VARIED JAPANESE/INTERNATIONAL Open and airy and decorated like a traditional warehouse (kura) with its gleaming woods, shoji screens, and tatami seating (with leg wells for those errant legs), this chain has an English-language menu listing a variety of Japanese and Asian pub fare, including salads, yakitori, tofu (I love the black sesame tofu, called kuroi gomadofu), chicken dishes, kimchi, and more. A good place for a convivial evening.

There are more than a dozen branches in Tokyo, including 3-18-16 Minami Aoyama (☎ 03/3403-7720), 6-1-3 Roppongi (☎ 03/5775-0290), and 3-34-16 Shinjuku (☎ 03/3225-1922; see “Shinjuku” map on p. 126).

4-28-21 Jingumae. ☎ 03/3470-3901. Main dishes ¥620–¥1,500 ($5.15–$13/£2.10–£6.25). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 5–11pm; Sat–Sun 4–11pm (last order). Station: Meiji-Jingumae (3 min.). From the Meiji Dori/Omotesando intersection, walk on Omotesando toward Aoyama and take the 1st left (there’s a Wendy’s here); Toriyoshi is down this street, on the right side beside a willow tree. Look for its lit signboard with photos.

Venire Venire ITALIAN You’ll have to see for yourself how inexpensive doesn’t necessarily mean drab. This tall-ceilinged trattoria, on the fifth floor of the Y.M. Square building in Harajuku, is light and airy, with a large outdoor terrace affording sweeping views over the surrounding rooftops. It offers mostly pizzas and pastas, like linguine with shrimp and asparagus or pizza topped with prosciutto ham and mozzarella cheese, as well as a handful of main dishes such as grilled chicken or pork with rosemary. During lunch you can compose your own meal, selecting a pasta, pizza, or the day’s fish or meat for ¥840 to ¥1,365 ($7–$11/£3.50–£5.50), and then adding items of your choosing. Adding ¥210 ($1.75/90p), for example, gets you bread and a drink, while ¥840 ($7/£3.50) adds bread, a drink, the salad bar, and dessert.

Y.M. Square, 4-31-10 Jingumae. ☎ 03/5775-5333. Pizza and pasta ¥924–¥1,365 ($7.70–$11/£3.85–£5.50); main dishes ¥1,680–¥2,520 ($14–$21/£7–£11); set dinner ¥3,500 ($29/bp)14. AE, DC, MC, V. On Meiji Dori, just north of Gap and across from La Foret.

Wolfgang Puck Express AMERICAN This is the most casual and least expensive of Puck’s invasion of eateries in Japan. It concentrates on burgers, pizza, pasta, roast chicken, salads, and other fast foods. What I like about this location is that it’s right at the top of Takeshita Dori (Harajuku’s most popular shopping street) across from the station, and it’s more stylish than other fast-food competitors that shall remain nameless. Fast service, pop music, and beer—what more could you ask for?

1-17-1 Jingumae. ☎ 03/5786-4690. Main dishes ¥1,030–¥1,980 ($8.60–$16/£4.30–£8); set lunches ¥980–¥1,480 ($8.15–$12/£4.10–£6) weekdays, ¥1,380–¥1,700 ($12–$14/£6–£7) weekends and holidays. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–11pm. Station: Harajuku (1 min.). Across the street from Harajuku Station’s north exit, at the top of Takeshita Dori.

27 Yai Yai OKONOMIYAKI Instead of having to cook your own okonomiyaki, all you have to do here is order, whereupon the young staff sets to work cooking your meal on a griddle in front of you. You choose your toppings—such as pork or scallops, together with vegetables like green onions or kimchi—which are then added to the pancakelike base, cabbage, and egg. Fried noodles and udon, also cooked with a choice of toppings, are also available.

6–8–7 Jingumae. ☎ 03/3406-8181. Okonomiyaki or fried noodles ¥880–¥1,390 ($7.35–$12/£3.70–£6). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 5pm–3am; Sat noon–3am; Sun and holidays noon–11pm. Station: Meiji-Jingumae (3 min.) or Hara-juku (7 min.). From the Meiji Dori/Omotesando intersection, walk on Omotesando toward Aoyama and take the 1st right; it will be on the left.

ROPPONGI

Because Roppongi is such a popular nighttime hangout for young Tokyoites and foreigners, it boasts a large number of both Japanese and Western restaurants. To find the location of any of the Roppongi addresses below, stop by the tiny police station on Roppongi Crossing (Roppongi's main intersection of Roppongi Dori and Gaien-Higashi Dori), where you'll find a map of the area. If you still don't know where to go, ask one of the policemen.

About a 10-minute walk west of Roppongi (via Roppongi Dori in the direction of Shibuya) is another popular nighttime area: Nishi Azabu. Once primarily a residential neighborhood, Nishi Azabu has slowly changed over the years as it began absorbing the overflow of Roppongi. It has restaurants and bars yet remains mellower and much less crowded than Roppongi. Between Roppongi Crossing and Nishi Azabu is Roppongi Hills, a sprawling urban development with many choices in dining. Tokyo Midtown, Tokyo's newest urban development and attracting huge crowds, also offers dining, but good luck in securing a seat.

②8 Inakaya ★★ ROBATAYAKI Whenever I'm playing hostess to first-time foreign visitors in Tokyo, I always take them to this festive restaurant, and they've never been disappointed. Although tourist-oriented and over-priced, it's still great fun; the drama of the place alone is worth it. Customers sit at a long U-shaped counter, and on the other side are mountains of fresh vegetables, beef, and seafood. And in the middle of all that food, seated in front of a grill, are male chefs—ready to cook whatever you point to in the style of robatayaki. Orders are yelled out by your waiter and are repeated in unison by all the other waiters, resulting in ongoing, excited yelling. Sounds strange, I know, but actually it's a lot of fun. Food offerings may include yellowtail, red snapper, sole, scallops, king crab legs, giant shrimp, steak, meatballs, ginkgo nuts, potatoes, eggplant, and asparagus, all piled high in wicker baskets and ready for the grill. There's a nearby branch at 5–3–4 Roppongi (☎ 03/3408-5040), open daily 5pm to 5am, as well as a branch in the Ginza at 8–7–4 Ginza (☎ 03/3569-1708), open daily 5 to 11pm. Meals, including drinks, average ¥15,000 ($125/£62) per person.

4–10–11 Roppongi. ☎ 03/5775-1012. www.roppongiinakaya.jp. Grilled vegetables ¥650 – ¥900 ($5.40–$7.50/£2.70–£3.75); grilled seafood and meats ¥1,050–¥4,700 ($8.75–$39/£4.40–£18). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 5–11pm. Station: Roppongi (2 min.). Off Gaien-Higashi Dori on a side street opposite Ibis Hotel; from Roppongi Crossing, walk on Gaien-Higashi Dori in the direction of Midtown and take the 2nd right.

②9 Takamura ★★ ★ (Finds) KAISEKI Takamura is a must for anyone who can afford it. Located at the edge of Roppongi, this wonderful 60-year-old house, perched on a hill and hidden by greenery, is a peaceful oasis that time forgot. You'll dine in one of eight private tatami rooms, each one different. Charcoal hearths in the rooms are built into the floors, and windows look out onto miniature gardens. Takamura has a very Japanese feeling, which intensifies proportionately with the arrival of your meal—seasonal kaiseki food arranged so artfully you almost hate to destroy it. Your pleasure increases, however, as you savor the various textures and flavors of the food. Specialties may include quail, sparrow, or duck, grilled on the hearth in your private tatami room. Seating is on the floor, as it is in most traditional Japanese restaurants, but with leg wells. The price of dinner here usually averages about ¥27,000 to ¥33,000 ($225–$275/£112–£137) by the time you add drinks, service charge, and table charge (¥2,000/$17/£8.50 per person). Dinner is for parties of two or more, while lunch is available only for parties of four or larger.

3–4–27 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3585-6600. Reservations required (3 days in advance for lunch, a week in advance for dinner, at which time you must order your meal). Set dinners ¥17,850, ¥21,000, and ¥26,250 ($149/£74, $175/£85, and $219/£108); set lunches ¥15,750, ¥17,850, and ¥21,000 ($131/£65, $149/£74, and $175/£85). AE, DC, MC, V. Tues–Sat noon–3pm and Mon–Sat 5–10:30pm. Closed holidays, for lunch the day following a holiday, end of Dec through 1st week in Jan, and 1 week in mid-Aug. Station: Roppongi (4 min.). The restaurant has 2 entrances, each marked by a wooden gate with a little roof. The sign on the restaurant is in Japanese only, but look for the credit card signs. From Roppongi Crossing, take Roppongi Dori in the direction of Kasumigaseki; at the bottom of the hill, turn right on the side street between HMV and Somerset Roppongi residential building.

5–7–8 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3402-4116. www.roppongifukuzushi.com. Reservations recommended, especially for dinner. Set dinners ¥6,300–¥8,400 ($52–$70/£26–£35); set lunches ¥2,625–¥4,725 ($22–$39/£11–£18). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11:30am–1:30pm and 5:30–10pm (last order); holidays 5:30–9pm. Closed 1 week in mid-Aug. Station: Roppongi (4 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, walk toward Tokyo Tower on Gaien-Higashi Dori, turning right after McDonald's, left in front of Hard Rock Cafe, and then right.

MODERATE

Erawan ★★ THAI Perched 13 floors above the Roppongi madness and offering cool, aloof views on three sides (ask to be seated on the Tokyo Tower side), this restaurant is massive but well divided into intimate dining areas that create a pleasant Thai aura with dark gleaming woods, woodcarvings, plants, bamboo screens, and a smiling Thai staff. The food lives up to its reputation, with plenty of seafood and curry selections, including deep-fried prawns with chili sauce, steamed whitefish with Thai sauce, and red curry with beef and eggplant.

Roi Building, 13th floor, 5–5–1 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3404-5741. Main dishes ¥1,200–¥2,000 ($10–$17/£5–£8.50); set dinners ¥3,800–¥5,500 ($32–$46/£16–£23). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 5:30–11:30pm; Sat–Sun and holidays 5–11:30pm. Station: Roppongi (3 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, Erawan is on the right side of Gaien-Higashi Dori (the road leading to Tokyo Tower), just past McDonald's.

Kushinobo KUSHIKATSU First opened in Osaka in 1950, this small and cozy restaurant specializing in kushikatsu (deep-fried skewers of food) is ensconced in Roppongi Hills. Every day it prepares more than 40 different kinds of meat, seafood, and vegetable kushikatsu, drawn from more than 100 in-house recipes. A progression of skewers are served one at a time until you say stop (if you like one especially well, you can ask for it again), along with the restaurant's own special tartar sauce, miso sauce, sweet-and-sour sauce, and other sauces for dipping. Most people average about 16 skewers, which cost about ¥4,500 ($37/£19) including a side dish and dessert. By the way, this is the first restaurant I've seen that charges a 10% "night charge," levied to those entering after 10pm or departing after 11pm. Still, I really like kushikatsu and wish there were more restaurants serving it in Tokyo.

Roppongi Hills, 5th floor of West Walk, 6-10-1 Roppongi. ☎ 03/5771-0094. Set dinners ¥3,780–¥4,500 ($31–$37/£15–£19); set lunches ¥1,575–¥4,500 ($13–$37/£6.50–£19). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11am–4am; Sun and holidays 11am–10pm (last order). Closed holidays. Station: Roppongi (3 min.).

La Colina ★ MEXICAN Since Tokyo Midtown's 2007 opening, it's been abuzz with curious sightseers, most of whom seem more than willing to brave long queues for the privilege of dining in one of its posh restaurants. A marked contrast to its sister restaurant Fonda de la Madrugada in Harajuku (see p. 159 for a review), this stylish restaurant with its modern decor and outdoor terrace might offer a better hope than most for securing a seat if you haven't made a reservation, simply because Mexican food remains unknown to many Japanese. In any case, the food is more creative and refined (and pricier) than at its sister restaurant, offering the likes of tuna with a crust of pumpkin and sesame seeds served with a bean sauce, pork ribs cooked in tequila and honey, or grilled fish with chili and orange sauce. To be honest, I don't understand the fuss about Midtown; I prefer Roppongi Hills, both for its architecture and its facilities.

Tokyo Midtown, Garden Terrace (shop D-0118), 1st floor, 9-7-4 Roppongi. ☎ 03/5413-0092. Reservations strongly recommended. Main dishes ¥2,420–¥3,050 ($20–$25/£10–£12); set dinners ¥6,830–¥8,930 ($57–$74/£28–£37); set lunches ¥1,890–¥4,730 ($16–$39/£8–£18). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–11pm (last order). Station: Roppongi (Oedo exit, 2 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, walk on Gaien-Higashi Dori to Midtown and then head to Garden Terrace.

INEXPENSIVE

In addition to the recommendations below, La Boheme, 2-25-18 Nishi Azabu (☎ 03/3407-1363; p. 147), serves pizza and pasta, while Toriyoshi, 6-1-3 Roppongi (☎ 03/5775-0290; p. 161), is a chain known for its varied pub fare.

③1 Ganchan ★ YAKITORI This is one of my favorite yakitori-ya. Small and intimate, it's owned by a friendly and entertaining man who can't speak English worth a darn but keeps trying with the help of a worn-out Japanese-English dictionary he keeps behind the counter. His staff is young and fun-loving. There's an eclectic cassette collection—I never know whether to expect Japanese pop tunes or American oldies. Seating is along a single counter with room for only a dozen or so people. Though there's an English-language menu, it's easiest to order the yakitori seto, a set course that comes with salad and soup and eight skewers of such items as chicken, beef, meatballs, green peppers, and asparagus rolled with bacon. There's a table charge of ¥600 ($5/£2.50) per person, but it includes an appetizer.

6-8-23 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3478-0092. Yakitori skewers ¥263–¥525 ($2.20–$4.35/£1.10–£2.20); yakitori set course ¥2,625 ($22/£11). AE, MC, V. Daily 5:30pm–1:30am. Station: Roppongi (7 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, take the small street going downhill to the left of the Almond Coffee Shop; Ganchan is at the bottom of the hill on the right.

Gonpachi ★★ Value VARIED JAPANESE Housed in a re-created kura (traditional Japanese warehouse) with a high ceiling and a central, open kitchen, this is one of Tokyo's most imaginative inexpensive Japanese restaurants. It offers a wide variety of dishes, including yakitori (such as skewered albacore with Gorgonzola tartar sauce), fish (such as miso-glazed black cod), sushi (on the third floor), noodles, tempura, and more. From the outside, you'd expect this place to be much more exclusive than it is—and you probably will be excluded if you fail to make reservations for dinner.

There are branches of Gonpachi at the G-Zone, 1–2–3 Ginza (☎ 03/5524-3641; see “Ginza & Hibiya” map on p. 144); in Shibuya on the 14th floor of E-Space Tower, 3–6 Maruyama-cho (☎ 03/5784-2011); and at Mediage on Odaiba (☎ 03/3599-4807), all open from 11:30am to 3:30am or later. However, they don't match the Nishi Azabu location's atmosphere.

1–13–11 Nishi Azabu. ☎ 03/5771-0170. www.gonpachi.jp. Reservations recommended for dinner. Yakitori ¥250–¥1,200 ($2.10–$10/£1.15–£5); main dishes ¥980–¥2,300 ($8.15–$19/£4.10–£9.50); set lunches ¥700–¥1,200 ($5.85–$10/£2.90–£5). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–5am. Station: Roppongi (10 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, walk toward Shibuya on Roppongi Dori. It will be on your right, at Gaien-Nishi Dori.

Hard Rock Cafe  AMERICAN Founded by two American expatriates in London in 1971, Hard Rock Cafe now has half a dozen locations in Japan; this was the first. If you have disgruntled teenagers in tow, bring them to this world-famous hamburger joint dedicated to rock 'n' roll to ogle the memorabilia on the walls, chow down on burgers, and look over the T-shirts for sale. In addition to hamburgers, the menu includes salads, sandwiches, steak, barbecued ribs, barbecued chicken, fish of the day, and fajitas. The music, by the way, is loud.

A branch is located in JR Ueno Station at 7–1–1 Ueno (☎ 03/5826-5821), open daily 7am to 11pm.

5–4–20 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3408-7018. www.hardrockjapan.com. Main dishes ¥1,470–¥3,780 ($12–$31/£6–£15). AE, DC, MC, V. Sun–Thurs 11:30am–2am; Fri–Sat 11:30am–4am. Station: Roppongi (3 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, walk on Gaien-Higashi Dori toward Tokyo Tower and take a right at McDonald's.

32 Honoji   VARIED JAPANESE A plain wooden facade and a stark interior of concrete walls with wire-mesh screens set the mood for good, home-style Japanese cooking. Although it looks small at first glance (an open kitchen takes up half the space), quiet back-room nooks give diners a sense of privacy as they enjoy grilled fish, sashimi, yakitori, grilled eggplant with miso, stir-fried dishes like cabbage with oyster sauce, and seasoned pork with potatoes. Honoji serves the kinds of food offered by neighborhood nomiya (drinking establishments) all over Japan, which isn't exactly the kind of fare you'd expect to find in trendy Roppongi (you might, however, wish to steer clear of the grilled cow diaphragm with salt and the whale or horse sashimi listed on the English-language menu). Still, the crowds that wait at the door, especially on weekend nights, attest to its success. Note that there's a dinner table charge of ¥380 ($3.15/£1.60), though I was told it will be waived if foreigners don't like the snack that comes with it. The lunch teishoku, available for ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) and the only item offered for lunch, draws Japanese from all walks of life.

3–4–33 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3588-1065. Main dishes ¥480–¥1,000 ($4–$8.35/£2–£4.35). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 11:30am–1:30pm; Mon–Sat 5:30–11pm (last order). Closed holidays. Station: Roppongi (3 min.). On the right side of Roppongi Dori as you walk from Roppongi Crossing in the direction of Akasaka, at the bottom of the hill just past 7-Eleven.

33 Ichioku  JAPANESE ORIGINALS This is one of my favorite restaurants in Roppongi for casual dining. It's a tiny, cozy place with only eight tables, and you fill out your order yourself using the English-language menu—complete with pictures—which is glued underneath the clear glass tabletop. The food, featuring organically grown vegetables, can best be called nouvelle Japanese, with original creations offered at very reasonable prices. About 25 dishes are available, including tuna and ginger sauté, mushroom sauté, shrimp spring rolls, Thai curry, asparagus salad, fried potatoes, sautéed eggplant, and a dish of grated radish and tiny fish. I personally like the tofu steak (fried tofu and flakes of dried fish) and the cheese gyoza (fried pork dumpling topped with melted cheese).

4-4-5 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3405-9891. Main dishes ¥780-¥2,450 ($6.50-$20/£3.15-£10). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon-Fri 11:30am-2pm and 5pm-12:30am; Sat 5pm-1am; holidays 5-11pm (last order). Station: Roppongi (4 min.). On a side street in the neighborhood behind the police station.

Kamakura YAKITORI Much more refined than most yakitori-ya, this basement establishment is decorated with paper lanterns and sprigs of fake but cheerful spring blossoms, with traditional koto music playing softly in the background. The English-language menu lists yakitori set courses, and a la carte sticks are skewered with shrimp, meatballs, ginkgo, squid, eggplant, or mushrooms.

4-10-11 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3405-4377. Yakitori skewers ¥180-¥280 ($1.50-$2.35/75p-£1.20); set dinners ¥2,300-¥4,300 ($19-$36/£9.50-£18). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon-Sat 5-11:30pm. Station: Roppongi (2 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, walk on the right side of Gaien-Higashi Dori in the direction of Tokyo Midtown and take the 2nd right.

Kitchen Five ★ Finds MEDITERRANEAN/ETHNIC If it's true that love is the best spice for cooking, then perhaps that's why Yuko Kobayashi's 23-year-old, 18-seat restaurant is so popular. She goes to market every morning to fetch ingredients for a dozen main dishes, which may include stuffed eggplant, lasagna, moussaka, and other casseroles and curries and are spread on a counter along with their prices. Every summer Kobayashi goes off to search for recipes in Sicily, South America, northern Africa, and other countries that feature garlic, tomatoes, and olive oil in their cuisine. The love for what she does shines in her eyes as she cooks, serves, and walks you through the menu of daily dishes displayed. A word of warning: The food is so delicious, it's tempting to over-order. Highly recommended.

4-2-15 Nishi Azabu. ☎ 03/3409-8835. Dishes ¥1,300-¥1,900 ($11-$16/£5.50-£8). No credit cards. Tues-Sat 6-9:30pm (last order). Closed holidays, Golden Week, and late July to early Sept. Station: Hiroo (7 min.) or Roppongi (15 min.). Opposite Gaien-Nishi Dori from the gas station, down a side street.

Roti AMERICAN A casual brasserie with both indoor (nonsmoking) and outdoor seating, Roti counts many ex-pats among its loyal customers, due in part to its quiet, tucked-away location just a minute's walk from Roppongi Hills and also to its bilingual staff and modern American fare, which includes free-range rotisserie chicken, grilled steaks, burgers, serious Caesar salads, and delectable New York cheesecake. More than 90 bottles of New World, Australian, and New Zealand wines (all lovingly described on the English-language menu), as well as American ales and Belgian microbrews, are on offer.

AKASAKA VERY EXPENSIVE

Sekishin Tei ★★ TEPPANYAKI Nestled in the New Otani's 400-year-old garden (which is the reason this is the hotel's most popular restaurant), this glass-enclosed teppanyaki pavilion has an English-language menu for Kobe beef, fish, lobster, and vegetables, cooked on a grill right in front of you. If you order a salad, try the soy sauce dressing; it's delicious. You'll eat surrounded by peaceful views, making this place a good lunchtime choice.

Hotel New Otani, 4-1 Kioi-cho, Chiyoda-ku. ☎ 03/3238-0024. www.newotani.co.jp/en. Reservations required. Set dinners ¥15,750–¥29,400 ($131–$245/£65–£122); set lunches ¥4,500–¥8,400 ($37–$70/£18–£35). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 11:30am–2pm and 6–9pm; Sat–Sun and holidays 11:30am–3pm and 6–9pm. Station: Nagatacho or Akasaka-mitsuke (3 min.).

EXPENSIVE

In addition to the recommendations here, there's a branch of Ten-ichi, specializing in tempura, in Akasaka Tokyu Plaza, 2-14-3 Nagata-cho (☎ 03/3581-2166; p. 142), open daily 11am to 9:30pm.

③4 Hayashi ★★☆☆ Finds JAPANESE GRILL/DONBURI One of the most delightful old-time restaurants I've been to in Tokyo, this cozy, rustic-looking place serves home-style country cooking and specializes in grilled food that you prepare over your own square hibachi. There are only a handful of grills in this small restaurant, some of them surrounded by tatami mats and some by wooden stools or chairs. As the evening wears on, the one-room dining area can get quite smoky, but that adds to the ambience. Other nice touches are the big gourds and memorabilia hanging about and the waiters in traditional baggy pants. Hayashi serves three set menus, which change with the seasons. The ¥6,300 ($52/£26) meal—which will probably end up being closer to ¥8,000 ($67/£33) by the time you add drinks and service charge—may include such items as sashimi and vegetables, chicken, scallops, and ginkgo nuts, which you grill yourself. At lunch, only oyakodonburi is served: literally, “parent and child,” a simple rice dish topped with egg and chicken.

Sanno Kaikan Building, 4th floor, 2-14-1 Akasaka. ☎ 03/3582-4078. www.sumiyakihayashi.jp. Reservations required for dinner. Set dinners ¥6,300, ¥8,400, and ¥10,500 ($60/£52, $70/£35, and $87/£43); set lunches ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 11:30am–2pm and 5:30–11pm; Sat 5:30–11pm. Closed holidays. Station: Akasaka (exit 2, 1 min.). Just south of Misuji Dori on the 4th floor of a nondescript, improbable-looking building.

Ninja ★ VARIED JAPANESE At this themed restaurant, diners enter the secret world of the ninja as soon as they step inside the darkened entrance, where costumed waiters appear out of nowhere to lead the hungry through a series of twisting passages to private dining nooks. A scroll unrolls to reveal an English-language menu listing various set dinner menus that may include shabu-shabu, as well as a la carte items like sweet-and-sour pork with asparagus, sole baked with herbs in saffron sauce, and grilled tenderloin beef and foie gras wrapped in yuba (soymilk skin). A fun place for a meal, but book early to reserve a seat.

Akasaka Tokyu Plaza, 1st floor, 2-14-3 Nagata-cho. ☎ 03/5157-3936. Reservations required. Main dishes ¥2,000–¥3,500 ($17–$29/£8.50–£14); set dinners ¥7,777–¥30,000 ($65–$250/£32–£125). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 5pm–2am; Sun and holidays 5–11pm. Station: Akasaka-mitsuke (1 min.). In the candy cane–striped building, below the Akasaka Excel Tokyu Hotel.

Nobu Tokyo ★★☆☆ NOUVELLE JAPANESE/PACIFIC RIM FUSION Sister restaurant to New York's Nobu (and now with 18 locations worldwide), this classy, modern establishment is the place to see and be seen—and you can count on being seen since the efficient, black-clad staff yells “Irashaimase!” (“Welcome!”) the moment anyone is ushered into the large dining room. The food, beautifully presented and served one dish at a time, is a unique blend of Pacific Rim ingredients (not quite Japanese) with decidedly American/Latin influences. Sushi and sashimi are served, as well as sushi rolls like California rolls (with avocado) and soft-shell-crab rolls. Other dishes include the roast fish of the day with jalapeño dressing, black cod with miso, baby squid with ginger salsa, wagyu steak with a choice of sauce, and sautéed scallops with wasabi pepper sauce. If ordering is too much of a chore, you can leave your meal to the discretion of Chef Matsuhisa by ordering the omakase, a complete chef's-choice dinner starting at ¥12,000 ($100/£50). Prices are less expensive at lunch. Nobu has an unlikely location in an obscure office building, but the Hotel Okura across the street and the nearby U.S. embassy assure it a steady stream of moneyed customers.

Toronomon Towers Office, 4-1-28 Toronomon. ☎ 03/5733-0070. www.nobutokyo.com. Reservations recommended. Sushi and sashimi (per piece) ¥500-¥1,000 ($4.15-$8.35/£2.10-£4.20); set dinners ¥4,800-¥25,000 ($40-$208/£20-£104); set lunches ¥2,300-¥10,000 ($19-$83/£9.50-£41). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon-Fri 11:30am-3pm; Mon-Sat 6-11:30pm; Sun and holidays 6-11pm. Closed for lunch holidays. Station: Kamiyacho (6 min.) or Tameike Sanno (8 min.). Behind Hotel Okura.

MODERATE

Aux Bacchanales FRENCH This brasserie made a name for itself as the best people-watching sidewalk cafe in Harajuku, but then it abandoned teenybopper paradise for this grown-up location, where it does a booming trade with area business types. It still has a sidewalk of sorts, on a back terrace of the Ark Hills complex, but the parade is not nearly as interesting. Inside it's a faithful brasserie replica, with booths, a tiled floor, and a long bar, making it equally popular for a drink after work. Lunch features specials written on a blackboard, along with such mainstays as croque-monsieur, quiche Lorraine, and hot dog Parisian (though it's hard to imagine there is such a thing), while dinner offers more substantial fare such as sautéed scallops, grilled loin of lamb, fricassee of veal, and roast duckling. There's a second location in Akasaka, in front of the Hotel New Otani at 4-1 Kioicho (☎ 03/5276-3422), open the same hours.

Ark Hills, 1st floor, 1-12-33 Akasaka. ☎ 03/3582-2225. Main dishes ¥2,470-¥3,150 ($21-$26/£11-£13); set dinner ¥4,000 ($33/£16). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 10am-11pm. Closed 1 day a month (usually 2nd Sun). Station: Tameiko Sanno (3 min.). At the back of the Ark Mori Building, off Roppongi Dori.

daidaiya ★ (Finds) VARIED JAPANESE/NOUVELLE JAPANESE Upon exiting the elevator, you'll be forgiven for confusedly thinking you've landed in a nightclub rather than a restaurant—daidaiya's dark, theatrical entrance is the first clue that this is not your ordinary Japanese restaurant. The dining room, a juxtaposition of modern and traditional with a slate stone floor, shoji screens, warm woods, and black furniture, is rather like the cuisine—a curious mix of traditional Japanese food and original nouvelle creations, all mouthwateringly good. Pop music or jazz plays in the background, and for dinner, gauzy sheets of fabric are hung from the ceiling to create tiny, tête-à-tête dining cubicles for couples. Tatami seating is also available, with views over Akasaka. An English-language seasonal menu lists such intriguing entrees as deep-fried soft tuna, grilled Hokkaido white fish, and fried shrimp dumpling with lotus root. Lunch sets, including obento, are equally satisfying. I love this place.

There's a branch located on the third floor of the Nowa Building, 3-37-12 Shinjuku (☎ 03/5362-7173).

Bellevie Akasaka Building, 9th floor, 3-1-6 Akasaka. ☎ 03/3588-5087. Reservations recommended for dinner. Main dishes ¥880-¥3,800 ($7.35-$32/£3.70-£16); set dinners ¥6,000-¥8,000 ($50-$67/£25-£33); set lunches ¥1,200-¥3,500 ($10-$29/£5-£14). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon-Fri 11:30am-2pm and 5pm-midnight; Sat-Sun 11:30am-3pm and 5-10pm (last order). Station: Akasaka-mitsuke (1 min., underneath the Bellevie Akasaka Building).

INEXPENSIVE

Gyu-Kaku KOREAN BARBECUE Akasaka is known for its Korean restaurants, but this one is easier than most with an English-language menu that describes each dish in almost encyclopedic detail. There are various kinds of meats—beef, pork, chicken—which you grill yourself on charcoal briquettes at your table, along with side dishes ranging from salad and kimchi (spicy cabbage) to roasted garlic wrapped in foil. This is a fun, boisterous place, popular with groups of office workers and couples unwinding and letting loose.

3-10-10 Akasaka. ☎ 03/5572-6129. Meat dishes ¥714–¥1,029 ($5.95–$8.55/£3–£4.30). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 5pm–midnight. Station: Akasaka-mitsuke (2 min.). On Misuji Dori, on the second floor.

Exploring Tokyo

Tokyo hasn't fared very well over the centuries. Fires and earthquakes have taken their toll, old buildings have been torn down in the zeal of modernization, and World War II left most of the city in ruins. The Tokyo of today has very little remaining of historical significance. Save your historical sightseeing for places such as Kyoto, Nikko, and Kamakura, and consider Tokyo your introduction to the newest of the new in Japan, the showcase of the nation's accomplishments in the arts, technology, fashion, pop art, and design. It's also the best place in the world to take in Japan's performing arts, such as Kabuki, and such diverse activities as the tea ceremony, flower arranging, and sumo. Tokyo also has more museums than any other city in Japan, as well as a wide range of other attractions, including parks and temples. In Tokyo you can explore mammoth department stores, experiment with restaurants, walk around the various neighborhoods, revel in kitsch, and take advantage of glittering nightlife. There's so much to do in Tokyo that I can't imagine ever being bored there—even for a minute.

SEEING THE CITY BY GUIDED TOUR With the help of this book and a good map, you should be able to visit Tokyo's major attractions easily on your own. Should you be pressed for time, however, consider taking one of several group tours of Tokyo and its environs offered by the Japan Travel Bureau (JTB); ☎ 03/5796-5454; www.jtb.co.jp/sunrisetour) or Japan Gray Line (☎ 03/

3595-5939; www.jgl.co.jp/inbound/index.htm). Day tours may include Tokyo Tower, the Imperial Palace district, Asakusa Sensoji Temple, Meiji Jingu Shrine, a harbor or river cruise, and the Ginza. There are also specialized tours that take in local festivals, the Ghibli Museum, Kabuki, Tsukiji Fish Market, sumo wrestling, or Tokyo's nightlife. Be warned, however, that tours are very tourist-oriented and are more expensive than touring Tokyo on your own. Prices range from about ¥4,000 ($33/£16) for a half-day tour to about ¥12,000 ($100/£50) for a full-day tour including lunch. You can easily book tours through most tourist hotels and travel agencies.

Although they cover less ground, 10 tours offered by the Tokyo Metropolitan Government concentrate on specific areas or themes, such as Japanese gardens, Asakusa, or Harajuku. Lasting 2 to 3 hours, they are conducted mostly on foot or utilize public transportation and vary in price from free to ¥3,540 ($29/£14), plus admission costs of the volunteer guides. Tours depart from the Tokyo Tourist Information Center in the TMG building in Shinjuku at 1pm Monday through Friday; pre-registration is required and tour participants must be at least 20 years old. For more information, go to www.tourism.metro.tokyo.jp/english (click on "self-guided walking tour") or contact the tourist office (see chapter 4 for location and open hours).

Volunteer guides are also on hand at the Ueno Green Salon in Ueno Park every Wednesday, Friday, and Sunday for free 90-minute walking tours departing at 10:30am and 1:30pm; and at the Asakusa Information Center every Sunday for 1-hour tours departing at 11am and 2pm (for the location of the latter, refer to my walking tour of Asakusa beginning on p. 188). No registration is required. For more information, call ☎ 03/3842-5566.

Free guided tours are also offered through www.tokyofreeguide.com, staffed by volunteers. You're expected to pay for the guide's entrance to museums, meals, and transportation fees if applicable, but you get to choose what you'd like to see; because many of these volunteers work, weekends are the best days to book a tour.

Otherwise, one tour I especially like is a boat trip on the Sumida River ★★ between Hama Rikyu Garden and Asakusa. Commentary during the 40-minute trip is provided in Japanese and English (be sure to pick up the English leaflet, too). You'll get descriptions of the 12 bridges you pass along the way and views of Tokyo you'd otherwise miss. Boats depart Hama Rikyu Garden hourly or more frequently between 10:35am and 4:15pm, with the fare to Asakusa costing ¥720 ($6/£3) one-way. There are also other cruise routes, including those between Hinode Pier (closest Station: Hinode, about a 1-min. walk) and Asakusa (fare: ¥760/$6.35/£3.15), Asakusa and Odaiba (fare: ¥1,520/$13/£6.50), and Hinode Pier and Odaiba (fare: ¥460/$3.85/£1.90). For more information, contact the Tokyo Cruise Ship Co. (☎ 0120-977311; www.suijobus.co.jp).

Finally, for personalized, one-on-one tours of Tokyo, contact Jun's Tokyo Discovery Tours, managed by Tokyoite Junko Matsuda, which offers tailored sightseeing trips to Tsukiji, Asakusa, Yanaka, Harajuku, Aoyama, Shibuya, and Shinjuku, as well as shopping trips and special trips designed to fit your interests. Tours are especially useful if you wish to communicate with shopkeepers and the locals, want to learn more about what you're seeing, or are timid about finding your way on public transportation (if you wish, you'll be met at your hotel). The cost is ¥25,000 ($208/£104) for 1 day (7 hr.) for up to four adults or a family. Reserve tours at least 3 days in advance (1 week preferred) by fax (03/5477-6022) or e-mail (me2@gb3.so-net.ne.jp), stating the desired tour date and what you'd like to see; messages can also be left at ☎ 090/7734-0079 (if you're calling from abroad, drop the initial 0).

1 The Top Attractions

There are two things to remember when planning your sightseeing itinerary: The city is huge, and it takes time to get from one end to the other. Plan your days so you cover Tokyo neighborhood by neighborhood, coordinating sightseeing with dinner and evening plans. The suggestions below will guide you to the most important attractions, but note that some attractions are closed 1 day of the week.

Edo-Tokyo Museum (Edo-Tokyo Hakubutsukan) ★★ ★ Kids The building housing this impressive museum is said to resemble a rice granary when viewed from afar, but to me it looks like a modern torii, the entrance gate to a shrine. This is the metropolitan government's ambitious attempt to present the history, art, disasters, science, culture, and architecture of Tokyo from its humble beginnings in 1590—when the first shogun, Tokugawa Ieyasu, made Edo (old Tokyo) the seat of his domain—to 1964, when Tokyo hosted the Olympics. All in all, the museum's great visual displays create a vivid portrayal of Tokyo through the centuries. I wouldn't miss it. Plan on spending 2 hours here.

After purchasing your ticket and taking a series of escalators to the sixth floor, you'll enter the museum by walking over a replica of Nihombashi Bridge, the starting point for all roads leading out of old Edo. Exhibits covering the Edo Period portray the lives of the shoguns, merchants, craftsmen, and townspeople. The explanations are mostly in Japanese only, but there's plenty to look at, including a replica of an old Kabuki theater, a model of a daimyo's (feudal lord's) mansion, portable floats used during festivals, maps and photographs of old Edo, and—perhaps most interesting—a row-house tenement where Edo commoners lived in cramped quarters measuring only 10 sq. m (108 sq. ft.). Other displays cover the Meiji Restoration, the Great Kanto Earthquake of 1923, and the bombing raids of World War II (Japan's own role as aggressor is disappointingly glossed over), with plenty of old-style conveyances—from a palanquin to a rickshaw—for kids to climb in and have parents take their picture.

If you wish, take advantage of a free museum tour offered by volunteers daily 10am to 3pm (last tour). Most tours last 1 to 2 hours, depending on the level of visitor interest, and are insightful for their explanations of the Japanese-only displays. However, tours are necessarily rushed and focus on particular displays; you may wish to tour the museum afterward on your own.

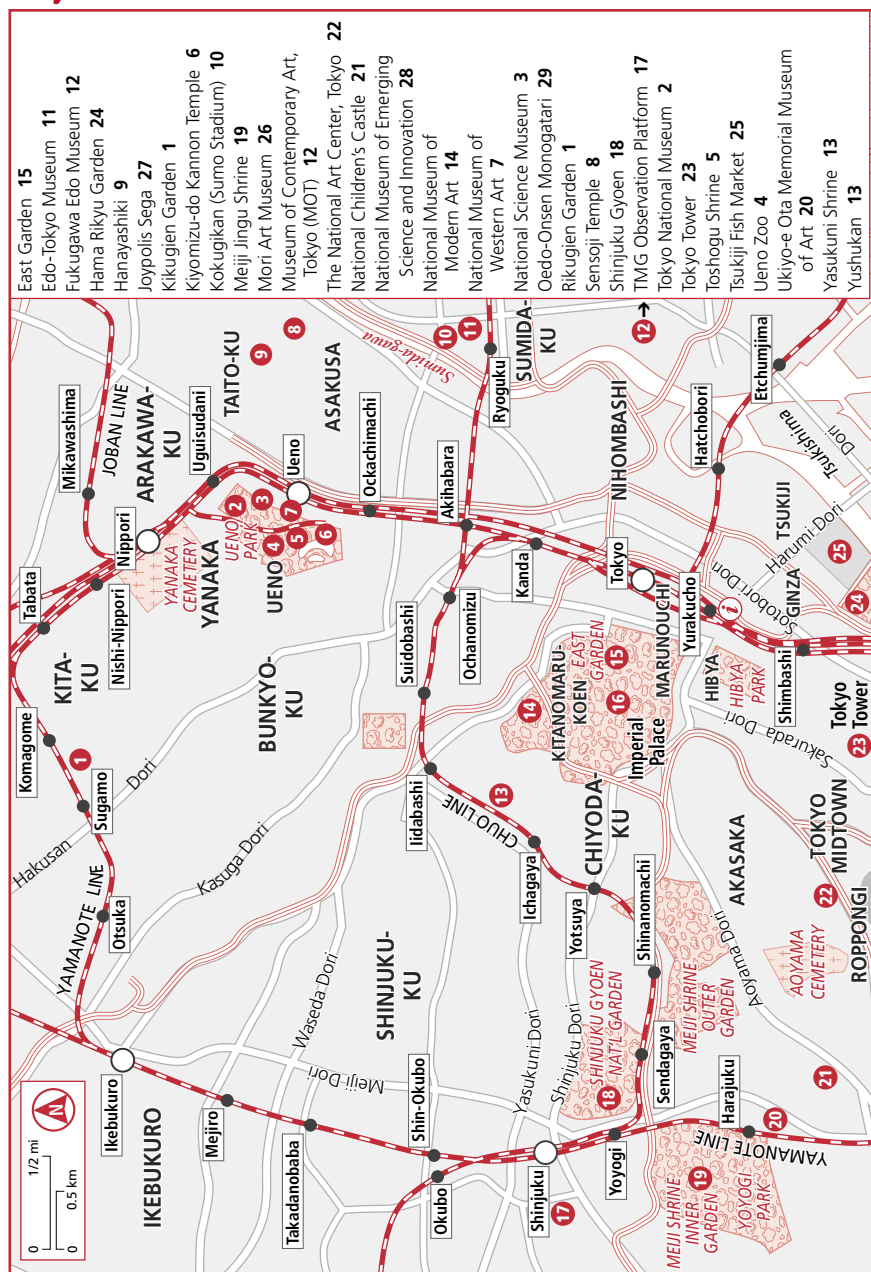

1-4-1 Yokoami, Sumida-ku. ☎ 03/3626-9974. www.edo-tokyo-museum.or.jp. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥480 ($4/£2) college students, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) seniors and junior high/high school students, free for children. Tues-Sun 9:30am-5:30pm (to 7:30pm Sat). Station: Ryogoku on the JR Sobu and Oedo lines (2 min.).

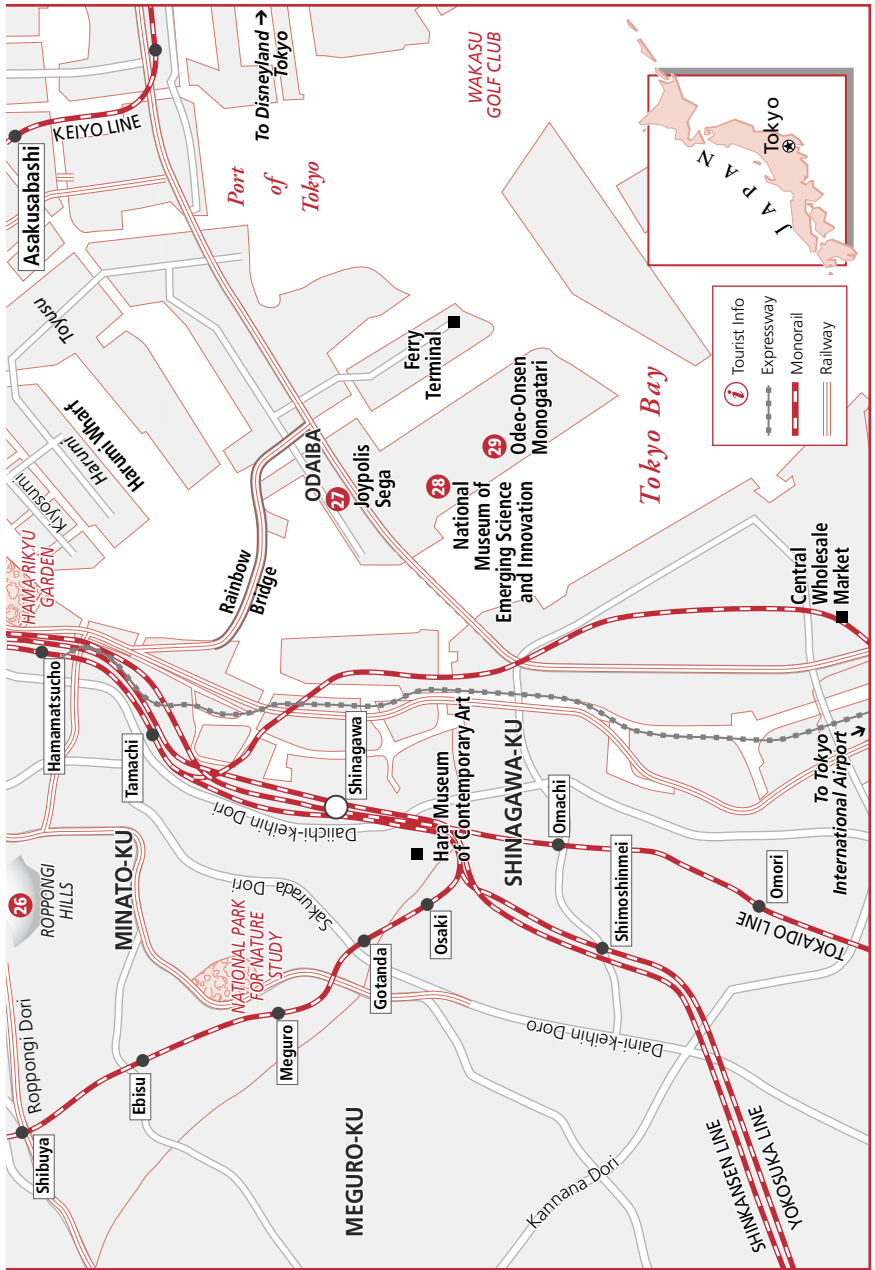

The Imperial Palace (Kyokyo) ★ The Imperial Palace, home of the imperial family, is the heart and soul of Tokyo. Built on the very spot where Edo Castle used to stand during the days of the Tokugawa shogunate, it became the imperial home upon its completion in 1888 and is now the residence of Emperor Akihito, 125th emperor of Japan. Destroyed during air raids in 1945, the palace was rebuilt in 1968 using the principles of traditional Japanese architecture. But don't expect to get a good look at it; most of the palace grounds' 114 hectares (284 acres) are off-limits to the public, with the exception of 2 days a year when the royal family makes an appearance before the throngs: January 2 and December 23 (the emperor's birthday). Or you can visit imperial grounds on free guided tours Monday through Friday at 10am and 1:30pm (1:30pm tour not available July 21-Aug 31), but you must register at least 1 day in advance (reservations are accepted up to 1 month in advance) by calling ☎ 03/3213-1111 and then stopping by the Imperial Household (located at the Sakashita-mon Gate, on the east side of the palace grounds) to show your passport number and provide nationality, name, age, occupation, and address in Tokyo. You can also reserve online at <http://sankan.kunaicho.go.jp>, at least 4 days before the tour. Tours, conducted in Japanese but with English audio guides available, last about 75 minutes and lead past official buildings, the inner moat and historic fortifications, and Nijubashi Bridge. I recommend this tour only if you have time to spare and have already seen Tokyo's other top attractions.

Otherwise, you'll have to console yourself with a camera shot of the palace from the southeast side of Nijubashi Bridge, where the moat and the palace turrets show above the trees. Most Japanese tourists make brief stops here to pay their respects. The wide moat, lined with cherry trees, is especially beautiful in the spring. You might even want to spend an hour strolling the 4.8km (3 miles) around the palace and moat. But the most important thing to do in the palace's vicinity is visit its Higashi Gyoen (East Garden), where you'll find what's left of the central keep of old Edo Castle, the stone foundation; see "Parks & Gardens," later in this chapter.

Hibiya Dori Ave. Station: Nijubashi-mae (1 min.) or Hibiya (5 min.).

Tokyo Attractions

Frommer's Favorite Tokyo Experiences

Strolling through Asakusa Asakusa conveys the atmosphere of old Tokyo better than any other place in the city. Sensoji Temple is the city's oldest and most popular temple, and Nakamise Dori, the pedestrian lane leading to the temple, is lined with open-fronted stalls selling souvenirs and traditional Japanese goods.

Taking in the Early Morning Action at Tsukiji Fish Market Get up early your first morning in Japan (you'll probably be wide awake with jet lag anyway) and head straight for the country's largest fish market, where you can watch the tuna auctions, browse through stalls of seafood, and sample the freshest sushi you'll ever have.

Spending an Evening in a Yakitori-ya There's no better place to observe Tokyo's army of office workers at play than at a yakitori-ya, a drinking place that serves skewered foods and bar snacks. They're fun and noisy.

Watching a Kabuki Play at the Kabukiza Theater Kabuki has served as the most popular form of entertainment for the masses since the Edo Period. Watch the audience members as they yell their approval; watch the stage for gorgeous costumes, stunning stage settings, and easy-to-understand dramas of love, duty, and revenge.

Viewing the Treasures at the Tokyo National Museum There's a feast for the eyes at the world's largest museum of Japanese art, packed with everything from samurai armor and lacquerware to kimono and woodblock prints. If you visit only one museum in Tokyo, this should be it. The surrounding Ueno Park contains other noteworthy attractions as well, including museums, a shrine, and a temple.

Hanging Out in Harajuku on Sunday Start with brunch, and then stroll Omotesando Dori for people-watching. Shop the area's boutiques, visit a couple of museums and the Meiji Shrine, or just sit back and take in all the action from a sidewalk cafe.

Meiji Jingu Shrine ★★ This is Tokyo's most venerable Shinto shrine, opened in 1920 in honor of Emperor and Empress Meiji, who were instrumental in opening Japan to the outside world more than 120 years ago. Japan's two largest torii (the traditional entry gate of a shrine), built of cypress more than 1,700 years old, give dramatic entrance to the grounds, once the estate of a daimyo (feudal lord). The shaded pathway is lined with trees, shrubs, and dense woods. In late May/June, the Iris Garden is in spectacular bloom (separate admission fee charged). About a 10-minute walk from the first torii, the shrine is a fine example of dignified and refined Shinto architecture. It's made of plain Japanese cypress and topped with green-copper roofs. Meiji Jingu Shrine is the place to be on New Year's Eve, when more than two million people crowd onto the grounds to usher in the New Year.

Meiji Shrine Inner Garden, 1-1 Kamizono-cho, Yoyogi, Shibuya-ku. ☎ 03/3379-5511. Free admission. Daily sunrise-sunset (until 4:30pm in winter). Station: Harajuku (2 min.).

Seeing Sumo Nothing beats watching huge sumo wrestlers (most weigh well over 135kg/300 lb.) throw each other around. Matches are held in Tokyo in January, May, and September; catch one on TV if you can't make it in person.

Shopping the Department Stores Tokyo's department stores are huge, spotless, and filled with merchandise, some of which you never knew existed; many also have first-rate art galleries. Shibuya and Ginza boast the greatest concentration of department stores. Tobu, in Ikebukuro, is the city's largest—a virtual city in itself. Be there when the doors open in the morning and you can witness a sight you'll never see back home: employees lined up in a row, bowing to incoming customers.

Hunting for Bargains at Flea Markets You never know what treasure you might find at Tokyo's weekend outdoor flea markets, where vendors sell everything from used kimono to curios and antiques. Go early and be sure to bargain.

Soaking in Hot-Spring Baths at Oedo-Onsen Monogatari This Edo-themed public bath features hot-spring waters pumped up from the deep outdoor tubs, massage, souvenirs, and restaurants, making this a standout for soaking away urban stress.

Taking a Spin through Kabuki-cho Shinjuku's Kabuki-cho has the craziest nightlife in all of Tokyo, with countless strip joints, porn shops, restaurants, bars, and the greatest concentration of neon you're likely to see anywhere. It's a fascinating place for an evening stroll.

Clubbing in Roppongi You can dance and party the night away in the madness that's Roppongi; most revelers party 'til dawn.

Sensoji Temple ★★ Also popularly known as Asakusa Kannon, this is Tokyo's oldest and most popular temple, with a history dating from 628. That was when, according to popular lore, two brothers fishing in the nearby Sumida River netted the catch of their lives: a tiny golden statue of Kannon, the Buddhist goddess of mercy and happiness who is empowered with the ability to release humans from all suffering. Sensoji Temple was erected in her honor, and although the statue is housed here, it's never shown to the public. Still, through the centuries, worshipers have flocked here seeking favors of Kannon; and when Sensoji Temple burned down during a 1945 bombing raid, the present structure was rebuilt with donations from the Japanese people.

Colorful Nakamise Dori, a pedestrian lane leading to the shrine, is lined with traditional shops and souvenir stands, while nearby Demboin Garden remains an insider's favorite as a peaceful oasis away from the bustling crowds. Asakusa is one of my favorite neighborhoods, and you can easily spend half a day here; see the walking tours below for more on this fascinating part of old Tokyo.

Tokyo National Museum (Tokyo Kokuritsu Hakubutsukan) ★★ The National Museum not only is the largest and oldest museum in Japan, it also boasts the largest collection of Japanese art in the world. This is where you go to see antiques from Japan's past—old kimono, samurai armor, priceless swords, lacquerware, metalwork, pottery, scrolls, screens, ukiyo-e (woodblock prints), calligraphy, ceramics, archaeological finds, and more. Items are shown on a rotating basis with about 4,000 on display at any one time—so no matter how many times you visit the museum, you'll always see something new. Schedule at least 2 hours to do the museum justice.

The museum is composed of five buildings. The Main Gallery (Honkan), straight ahead as you enter the main gate, is the most important one, devoted to Japanese art. Here you'll view Japanese ceramics; Buddhist sculptures dating from about A.D. 538 to 1192; samurai armor, helmets, and decorative sword mountings; swords, which throughout Japanese history were considered to embody spirits all their own; textiles and kimono; lacquerware; ceramics; and paintings, calligraphy, ukiyo-e, and scrolls. Be sure to check out the museum shop in the basement; it sells reproductions from the museum's collections as well as traditional crafts by contemporary artists.

The Gallery of Eastern Antiquities (Toyokan) houses art and archaeological artifacts from everywhere in Asia outside Japan. There are Buddhas from China and Gandhara, stone reliefs from Cambodia, embroidered wall hangings, and cloth from India, Iranian and Turkish carpets, Thai and Vietnamese ceramics, and more. Chinese art—including jade, paintings, calligraphy, and ceramics—makes up the largest part of the collection, illustrating China's tremendous influence on Japanese art, architecture, and religion. You'll also find Egyptian relics, including a mummy dating from around 751 to 656 B.C. and wooden objects from the 20th century B.C.

The Heiseikan Gallery is where you'll find archaeological relics of ancient Japan, including pottery and Haniwa clay burial figurines of the Jomon Period (10,000 B.C.–400 B.C.) and ornamental, keyhole-shaped tombs from the Yayoi Period (400 B.C.–A.D. 300). The Gallery of Horyuji Treasures (Horyuji Homotsukan) displays priceless Buddhist treasures from the Horyuji Temple in Nara, founded by Prince Shotoku in 607. Although the building's stark modernity (designed by Taniguchi Yoshio, who also designed the expansion of the New York Museum of Modern Art) seems odd for an exhibition of antiquities, the gallery's low lighting and simple architecture lend dramatic effect to the museum's priceless collection of bronze Buddhist statues, ceremonial Gigaku masks used in ritual dances, lacquerware, and paintings. The Hyoikeikan, built in 1909 to commemorate the marriage of Emperor Taisho, holds special exhibitions.

Tsukiji Fish Market ★★ This huge wholesale fish market—the largest in Japan and one of the largest in the world—is a must for anyone who has never seen such a market in action. And the action here starts early: At about 3am, boats begin arriving from the seas around Japan, from Africa, and even from America, with enough fish to satisfy the demands of a nation where seafood reigns supreme. To give you some idea of its enormity, this market handles almost all the seafood—about 450 kinds of seafood—consumed in Tokyo. The king is tuna, huge and frozen, unloaded from the docks, laid out on the ground, and numbered. Wholesalers walk up and down the rows, jotting down the numbers of the best-looking tuna, and by 5:30am, the tuna auctions are well underway (however, the presence of too many tourists prompted authorities to close tuna auctions to visitors, except for a small viewing area for visitors, open from about 5:30 to 6am). The entire auction of sea products takes place about 4:40 to 6:30am, with auctions of vegetables at a corner of the market starting at 6:30am (refrain from photographing auctions). The wholesalers then transfer what they've bought to their own stalls in the market, subsequently selling fish and produce to their regular customers, usually retail stores and restaurants.

The market is held in a cavernous, hangarlike building, which means you can visit it even on a dismal rainy morning. There's a lot going on—men in black rubber boots rushing wheelbarrows and carts through the aisles, hawkers shouting, knives chopping and slicing. Wander the aisles and you'll see things you never dreamed were edible. This is a good place to bring your camera (but avoid flash photos). The floors are wet, so leave your fancy shoes at the hotel.

Tsukiji is also a good place to come if you want sushi for breakfast. Alongside the covered market are rows of barracks-like buildings divided into sushi restaurants and shops related to the fish trade. In addition, if you walk the distance between the Tsukiji subway station and the fish market, you'll find yourself in a delightful district of tiny retail shops and stalls where you can buy the freshest seafood in town, plus dried fish and fish products, seaweed, vegetables, knives, and other cooking utensils. Known as Jogai, this outer market is where Tokyoites shop for special occasions. Warning: While walking through Jogai, my friend and I were warned several times by local shopkeepers to watch our purses, advice we didn't take lightly. Apparently, pickpockets have been at work here on unsuspecting tourists.

5–2–1 Tsukiji, Chuo-ku. ☎ 03/3542-1111. Free admission. Mon–Sat 5–11am (best time 5:30–9am). Closed some Wed, holidays, Dec, New Year's, and Aug 15–17. Station: Tsukijishijo (exit A2, 2 min.) or Tsukiji (Honganji Temple exit, 10 min.).

2 Five Unforgettable Ways to Immerse Yourself in Japanese Culture

Just walking down the street could be considered a cultural experience in Japan, but there are more concrete ways to learn more about this country's cultural life: The best is by participating in some of its time-honored rituals and traditions. For some background information on Japanese flower arranging, the tea ceremony, and other activities recommended below, see “Cultural Snapshots: Japanese Arts in a Nutshell,” in appendix A.

IKEBANA Instruction in ikebana, or Japanese flower arranging, is available at several schools in Tokyo, a few of which offer classes in English on a regular basis. (Note that you should call beforehand to enroll.) Sogetsu Ikebana School, 7–2–21 Akasaka (☎ 03/3408-1151; www.sogetsu.or.jp; Station: Aoyama-Itchome, a 5-min. walk from exit 4), offers instruction in English on Monday from 10am to noon (closed in Aug). The cost of one lesson for first-time participants is ¥3,800 ($32/£16), including flowers. The Ohara Ikebana School, 5–7–17 Minami Aoyama (☎ 03/5774-5097; www.oharyu.or.jp; Station: Omotesando, 3-min. walk from exit B1), offers 2-hour instruction in English at 10am on Wednesday and 10am and 1:30pm on Thursday, charging ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) for instruction, plus ¥1,500 to ¥2,500 ($12/£6 to $21/£11) extra for flowers (no classes July 25–Sept 6).

If you wish to see ikebana, ask at the Tourist Information Office whether there are any special exhibitions. Department stores sometimes have special ikebana exhibitions in their galleries. Another place to look is Yasukuni Shrine, located on Yasukuni Dori northwest of the Imperial Palace (Station: Ichigaya or Kudanshita). Dedicated to Japanese war dead, the shrine is also famous for ongoing ikebana exhibitions.

TEA CEREMONY Several first-class hotels hold tea-ceremony demonstrations in special tea-ceremony rooms. Reservations are usually required, and because ceremonies are often booked by groups, you'll want to call in advance to see whether you can participate. Seisei-an, on the seventh floor of the Hotel New Otani, 4-1 Kioicho, Chiyoda-ku (☎ 03/3265-1111, ext. 2443; Station: Nagatacho or Akasaka-mitsuke, a 3-min. walk from both), holds 20-minute demonstrations Thursday through Saturday from 11am to 4pm. The cost is ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40), including tea and sweets. Chosho-an, on the seventh floor of the Hotel Okura, 2-10-4 Toranomon, Minato-ku (☎ 03/3582-0111; Station: Toranomon or Kamiyacho, a 10-min. walk from both), gives 40-minute demonstrations anytime between 11am and noon and between 1 and 4pm Monday through Saturday except holidays. The cost is ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) for tea and sweets. At Toko-an, on the fourth floor of the Imperial Hotel, 1-1-1 Uchisaiwaicho, Chiyoda-ku (☎ 03/3504-1111; Station: Hibiya, 1 min.), demonstrations are given from 10am to 4pm Monday through Saturday except holidays. The fee is ¥1,500 ($12/£6) for tea and sweets.

ACUPUNCTURE & SHIATSU Although most Westerners have heard of acupuncture, they may not be familiar with shiatsu (Japanese pressure-point massage). Most first-class hotels in Japan offer shiatsu in the privacy of your room. There are acupuncture clinics everywhere in Tokyo, and the staff of your hotel may be able to tell you of one nearby. As it's not likely the clinic's staff will speak English, it might be a good idea to have the hotel guest relations officer not only make the reservation but specify the treatment you want. Otherwise, English is spoken at Yamate Acupuncture Clinic, second floor of the ULS Nakameguro Building, 1-3-3 Higashiyama, Meguro-ku (☎ 03-3792-8989; Station: Nakameguro, 6 min.), open Monday to Friday 9am to 8pm and Saturday 9am to 2pm. It charges ¥3,000 ($25/£13) for a specific treatment or ¥5,000 ($42/£21) for the entire body, plus a ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) initial fee. English is also spoken at Tani Clinic, third floor of the Taishoseimei Hibiya Building, 1-9-1 Yurakucho, Chiyoda-ku (☎ 03/3201-5675; Station: Hibiya, 1 min.), open Monday to Wednesday and Friday 9am to noon and 2 to 5pm and Saturday 8:30am to noon and 2 to 4:30pm. It charges ¥10,500 ($87/£44) for the first visit, ¥6,300 ($52/£26) for subsequent visits.

PUBLIC BATHS Tokyo has more than 1,000 senjo (public baths)—which may sound like a lot but is nothing compared to the 2,687 the city used to have in the 1970s. Easily recognizable by a tall chimney and shoe lockers just inside the door, a senjo sells just about anything you might need at the bathhouse: soap, shampoo, towels, even underwear. Keep in mind, however, that people with tattoos are prohibited at many public and hot-spring baths, because tattoos are associated with the Japanese mafia.

For a unique bathing experience, nothing beats a 3- or 4-hour respite at the Oedo-Onsen Monogatari, 2-57 Aomi on Odaiba (☎ 03/5500-1126; Station: Telecom Center Station, 2 min.), which tapped mineral-rich hot-spring waters 1,380m (4,600 ft.) below ground to supply this re-created Edo-era bathhouse village. After changing into a yukata (cotton robe) and depositing your belongings in a locker (your key is bar-coded so there's no need to carry any money), you'll stroll past souvenir shops and restaurants on your way to massage rooms, sand baths (extra fee charged), and onsen (hot-spring baths) complete with outdoor baths, Jacuzzi, steam baths, and saunas. Because as many as 6,500 bathers pour into this facility on weekends, try to come on a weekday, and because signs in English are virtually nonexistent, observe gender before entering bathing areas (a hint: women's baths usually have pink or red curtains, men's blue). Open daily 11am to 9am the next day. Admission is ¥2,827 ($24/£12) for adults and ¥1,575 ($13/£6.50) for children, with reduced prices after 6pm.

ZAZEN A few temples in the Tokyo vicinity occasionally offer sitting meditation with instruction in English. You should call in advance to make a reservation and arrive 30 minutes early for instructions. The Toshoji International Zen Center, 4-5-18 Yutaka-machi, Shinagawa-ku (☎ 03/3781-4235; Station: Togoshikoen, 5 min.), offers free Zazen at 5am every morning (except Sun and holidays), as well as Zen training meetings Saturday from 6 to 8pm, including Zazen, a lecture, and tea. Accommodations are also available to those who wish to stay for longer periods to practice Zen. Sounin Temple, 4-1-12 Higashi-Ueno, Taito-ku (☎ 03/3844-3711; Station: Ueno, 5 min.), holds Zazen the second Sunday (and preceding Sat) from 7 to 8:30pm, followed by a talk and tea.

3 Parks & Gardens

Although Japan's most famous gardens are not in Tokyo, most of the places listed below use traditional principles of landscaping, which gives visitors an idea of the scope and style of Japanese gardens. (Nearby skyscrapers, however, often detract from their charm; there ought to be a law.) Ueno Park, is Tokyo's largest city park and contains a number of museums and attractions, making it one of the city's most visited places. More information on parks and gardens is available at www.tokyo-park.or.jp.

East Garden (Higashi Gyoen) ★★ The 21 hectares (53 acres) of the formal Higashi Gyoen—once the main grounds of Edo Castle and located next to the Imperial Palace—are a wonderful respite in the middle of the city. Yet surprisingly, this garden is hardly ever crowded (except when cherry trees, azaleas, and other blossoms are in full bloom or at lunch time when obento-eating office workers fill the benches).

Ninomaru ★★★, my favorite part, is laid out in Japanese style with a pond, stepping-stones, and winding paths; it's particularly beautiful when the wisteria, azaleas, irises, and other flowers are at their peak. Near Ninomaru is the Sannomaru Shozokan, with free changing exhibitions of art treasures belonging to the imperial family.

On the highest spot of Higashi Gyoen is the Honmaru (inner citadel), where Tokugawa's main castle once stood. Built in the first half of the 1600s, the castle was massive, surrounded by a series of whirling moats and guarded by 23 watchtowers and 99 gates around its 16km (10-mile) perimeter. At its center was Japan's tallest building at the time, the five-story castle keep, soaring 50m (168 ft.) above its foundations and offering an expansive view over Edo. This is where Tokugawa Ieyasu would have taken refuge, had his empire ever been seriously threatened. Although most of the castle was a glimmering white, the keep was black with a gold roof, which must have been quite a sight in old Edo as it towered above the rest of the city. All that remains today of the shogun's castle are a few towers, gates, stone walls, moats, and the stone foundations of the keep.

1-1 Chiyoda, Chiyoda-ku. ☎ 03/3213-1111. Free admission. Tues–Thurs and Sat–Sun 9am–5pm (to 4:30pm Mar to mid-Apr and Sept–Oct; to 4pm Nov–Feb). You must enter 30 min. before closing. Closed Dec 23 and Dec 28–Jan 3; open other national holidays. Station: Otemachi, Takebashi, or Nijubashi-mae.

Hama Rikyu Garden  Overrated Considered by some to be the best garden in Tokyo (but marred, in my opinion, by new skyscrapers in Shiodome that detract from its charm), this urban oasis has origins stretching back 300 years, when it served as a retreat for a former feudal lord and as duck-hunting grounds for the Tokugawa shoguns. In 1871, possession of the garden passed to the imperial family, who used it to entertain such visiting dignitaries as Gen. Ulysses S. Grant. Come here to see how the upper classes enjoyed themselves during the Edo Period. The garden contains an inner tidal pool, spanned by three bridges draped with wisteria (views from the south end of the garden are the most picturesque). There are also other ponds; a refuge for ducks, herons, and migratory birds; a promenade along the bay lined with pine trees; a 300-year-old pine; moon-viewing pavilions; and teahouses (powdered green tea and a sweet costs ¥500/$4.15/£2.10). Plan on at least an hour's stroll to see everything, but the best reason for coming here is to board a ferry from the garden's pier bound for Asakusa, with departures every hour (or more often) between 10:35am and 4:15pm; the fare is ¥720 ($6/£3) one-way.

1-1 Hamarikyuteien, Chuo-ku.  03/3541-0200. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/60p) seniors, free for children under 13. Daily 9am-5pm. Station: Shiodome (exit 5, 5 min.) or Tsukiji-shijo (7 min.).

Rikugien Garden  Finds Though not as centrally located nor as easy to reach as Tokyo's other famous gardens, this one is a must for fans of traditional Japanese gardens and is probably my favorite. It was created in 1702 by a trusted confidante of the shogun, who began as a page and rose to the highest rank as a feudal lord. During the Meiji Era, the founder of Mitsubishi took it over for his second residence and later donated it to the city. What I like most about the garden is that it's dominated by a pond in its center, complete with islands and islets, viewing hills, and strolling paths around its perimeter, providing enchanting views. The garden is especially famous for its changing maple leaves in autumn. As it takes some effort to reach, you'll probably want to enjoy at least an hour here.

6-16-3 Hon-Komagome, Bunkyo-ku.  03/3941-2222. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/60p) seniors, free for children under 13. Daily 9am-5pm. Station: Komagome (8 min.) or Sengoku (10 min.).

Shinjuku Gyoen  Kids Formerly the private estate of a feudal lord and then of the imperial family, this is considered one of the most important parks of the Meiji Era. It's wonderful for strolling because of the variety of its planted gardens; styles range from French and English to Japanese traditional. This place amazes me every time I come here. The park's 58 hectares (144 acres) make it one of the city's largest, and each bend in the pathway brings something completely different: Ponds and sculpted bushes give way to a promenade lined with sycamores that opens onto a rose garden. Cherry blossoms, azaleas, chrysanthemums, and other flowers provide splashes of color from spring through autumn. The Japanese garden, buried in the center, is exquisite. There are also wide grassy expanses, popular for picnics and playing, and a greenhouse filled with tropical plants. You could easily spend a half-day of leisure here, but for a quick rejuvenation, 1½ hours will do.

11 Naitocho, Shinjuku-ku.  03/3350-0151. Admission ¥200 ($1.65/80p) adults, ¥50 (40¢/20p) children. Tues-Sun 9am-4:30pm. Station: Shinjuku Gyoen-mae (2 min.) or Sendagaya (5 min.).

Ueno Park Ueno Park—on the northeast edge of the Yamanote Line—is one of the largest parks in Tokyo and one of the most popular places in the city for Japanese families on a day's outing. It's a cultural mecca with a number of attractions, including the prestigious Tokyo National Museum; the National Museum of Western Art; the delightful Shitamachi Museum with its displays of old Tokyo; Ueno Zoo; and Shinobazu Pond, a bird sanctuary. For a map of the Ueno area, see p. 174.

A landmark in the park is the small Toshogu Shrine. Erected in 1651, Tokyo's only shrine that's been designated a National Treasure is dedicated to Tokugawa Ieyasu, founder of the Tokugawa shogunate. Stop here to pay respects to the man who made Edo (present-day Tokyo) the seat of his government and thus elevated the small village to the most important city in the country. The pathway to the shrine is lined with massive stone lanterns, as well as 50 copper lanterns donated by daimyo (feudal lords) from all over Japan. Entrance to the shrine itself is to the left of the main building, where you can see examples of exquisite art, including murals by a famous Edo artist, Kano Tan-yu, and samurai armor worn by Ieyasu. The shrine is open daily from 9am to 6pm (to 4:30pm in winter); admission is ¥200 ($1.65/80p).

Also in the park is Kiyomizu Kannon-do Temple, completed in 1631 as a copy of the famous Kiyomizu Temple in Kyoto (but on a much less grand scale). It enshrines Kosodate Kannon, protector of childbearing and child-raising. Women hoping to become pregnant come here to ask for the goddess's blessing; those whose wishes have been fulfilled return to pray for their children's good health and protection. Many leave behind dolls as symbols of their children. Once a year, a requiem service is held for all the dolls at the temple, after which they are cremated.

The busiest time of the year at Ueno Park is April, during the cherry-blossom season, when people come en masse to celebrate the birth of the new season. It's not the spiritual communion with nature that you might think, however. On weekends and in the evenings during cherry-blossom time (which only lasts for a few days), havoc prevails as office workers break out of their winter shells. Entire companies converge on the park to sit under the cherry trees on plastic or cardboard, and everyone drinks sake and beer and gets drunk and rowdy and—worst of all—sings karaoke, seemingly oblivious to the fragile pink blossoms shimmering above. At any rate, visiting Ueno Park during cherry-blossom season is an experience no one should miss. More than likely, you'll be invited to join one of the large groups—and by all means, do so.

Taito-ku. Free admission to the park; separate admissions to each of its attractions. Daily 24 hr. Station: Ueno (1 min.).

4 More Museums

In addition to the museums listed below, Tokyo has a wealth of small museums specializing in everything from woodblock prints to architecture; for a more complete list of Tokyo museums, see Frommer's Tokyo. For details on the Tokyo National Museum and the Edo-Tokyo Museum, see p. 178 and p. 172.

Fukagawa Edo Museum (Fukagawa Edo Shiryokan) ★ Kids This is the Tokyo of your dreams, the way it appears in all those samurai flicks on Japanese TV: a reproduction of a 19th-century neighborhood in Fukagawa, a prosperous community on the east bank of the Sumida River during the Edo Period. This delightful museum is located off Kiyosumi Dori on a pleasant tree-lined, shop-filled street called Fukagawa Shiryokan Dori. The museum's hangarlike interior contains 11 full-scale replicas of traditional houses, vegetable and rice shops, a fish store, two inns, a fire watchtower, and tenement homes, all arranged to resemble an actual neighborhood. There are lots of small touches and flourishes to make the community seem real and believable—a cat sleeping on a roof, a snail crawling up a fence, a dog relieving itself on a pole, sounds of birds, and a vendor shouting his wares. The village even changes with the seasons (with trees sprouting cherry blossoms in spring and threatened by thunderstorms in summer) and, every 45 minutes or so, undergoes a day's cycle from morning (roosters crow, lights brighten) to night (the sun sets, the retractable roof closes to make everything dark). Of Tokyo's museums, this one is probably the best for children; plan on spending about an hour here. Don't confuse this museum with the much larger Edo-Tokyo Museum, which traces the history of Tokyo.

1–3–28 Shirakawa, Koto-ku. ☎ 03/3630-8625. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥50 (40¢/20p) children 6–14. Daily 9:30am–5pm. Closed 2nd and 4th Mon of each month. Station: Kiyosumi-Shirakawa (3 min.).

Miraikan—National Museum of Emerging Science and Innovation (Nippon Kagaku Miraikan) ★★ Kids

Opened in 2001 on Odaiba, this fascinating, educational museum provides hands-on exploration of the latest developments in cutting-edge science and technology, including interactions with robots, virtual-reality rides, a planetarium, and displays that suggest future applications such as non-invasive medical procedures and an environmentally friendly home. Everything from nanotechnology to genomes are explained in detail; touch-screens in English and a volunteer staff eager to assist in demonstrations and answer questions catapult this to one of the most user-friendly technology museums I've seen. A great place to get your brain cells up and running, whether you're 4 years old or 80, this museum deserves at least 3 hours.

2–41 Aomi, Koto-ku, Odaiba. ☎ 03/3570-9151. www.miraikan.jst.go.jp. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/80p) children. Wed–Mon 10am–5pm. Station: Telecom Center or Fune-no-Kagakukan (5 min.).

Mori Art Museum (Mori Bijutsukan) ★

This is Tokyo's highest museum, on the 53rd floor of the Roppongi Hills Mori Tower. Opened in 2003, it features state-of-the-art galleries with 6m-tall (20-ft.) ceilings, controlled natural lighting, and great views of Tokyo. Innovative exhibitions of emerging and established artists from around the world are shown four times a year, with past shows centering on contemporary Asian, African, and Japanese art. Although the installations are alone worth a visit, an extra incentive is the attached Tokyo City View observatory, usually included in the museum admission and providing eye-popping views over Tokyo. Plan on spending at least 90 minutes up here.

Roppongi Hills Mori Tower, 6–10–1 Roppongi, Minato-ku. ☎ 03/5777-8600. www.mori.art.museum/eng/index.html. Admission varies according to the exhibit but averages ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) adults, ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) students, and ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) children. Wed–Mon 10am–10pm; Tues 10am–5pm. Station: Roppongi (Roppongi Hills exit, 1 min.).

Tips Museum Holidays

Most museums in Tokyo are closed on Mondays and for New Year's, generally the last day or two in December and the first 1 to 3 days of January. If Monday happens to be a national holiday, most national and municipal museums will remain open but will close Tuesday instead. Some of the privately owned museums, however, may also be closed on national holidays, as well as for exhibition changes. Call beforehand to avoid disappointment. Remember, too, that you must enter museums at least 30 minutes before closing time. For a listing of current special exhibitions, including those being held at major department stores, consult Metropolis, an English-language weekly available in hotels, restaurants, and bars around town as well as online at www.metropolis.co.jp.

Museum of Contemporary Art, Tokyo (MOT; Tokyo-to Gendai Bijutsukan) ★

The MOT is inconveniently located but is well worth the trek if you're a fan of the avant-garde (you'll pass the Fukagawa Edo Museum, described above, on the way, so you may wish to visit both). This modern structure of glass and steel, with a long corridor entrance that reminds me of railroad trestles, houses both permanent and temporary exhibits of Japanese and international postwar art in large rooms that lend themselves to large installations. Although temporary exhibits, which occupy most of the museum space, have ranged from Southeast Asian art to a retrospective of Jasper Johns, the smaller permanent collection presents a chronological study of 50 years of contemporary art, beginning with Japanese postwar avant-garde and continuing with anti-artistic trends and pop art in the 1960s, minimalism, and art after the 1980s, with about 100 works displayed on a rotating basis. Included may be works by Andy Warhol, Gerhard Richter, Roy Lichtenstein, David Hockney, Frank Stella, Sandro Chia, and Julian Schnabel. Depending on the number of exhibits you visit, you'll spend anywhere from 1 to 2 hours here. Bonus: A computer room lets you surf the Internet for free.

4-1-1 Miyoshi, Koto-ku. ☎ 03/5245-4111. www.mot-art-museum.jp. Admission to permanent collection ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) college students, ¥250 ($2/£1) high school students and seniors, free for children; special exhibits cost more. Tues-Sun 10am-6pm. Station: Kiyosumi-Shirakawa (exit A3, 13 min.). On Fukagawa Shiroyokan-dori St., just off Mitsume Dori.

The National Art Center, Tokyo ★

Japan's newest national museum doesn't have a collection of its own. Rather, its purpose is to exhibit works organized by Japanese artists' associations, its own curators, and joint efforts by mass media companies and other art institutions. The range of changing exhibitions, therefore, can be staggering, with past exhibitions showing masterworks from the Rijksmuseum Amsterdam; fashion and architecture organized by The Museum of Contemporary Art, Los Angeles; works by Monet; and a retrospective on Japanese government-sponsored art exhibitions held the past 100 years. Even the building itself—with an undulating, seductive facade of glass—attracts crowds with its Paul Bocuse restaurant, museum shop, and changing exhibitions by national artists' associations. This museum, the nearby Mori Art Museum, and the Suntory Museum of Art in Tokyo Midtown, all within walking distance of one another, have been dubbed Art Triangle Roppongi.

7-22-2 Roppongi, Minato-ku. ☎ 03/5777-8600. www.nact.jp. Admission ¥500-¥1,500 ($4.15-$13/£2.10-£6.25) for most exhibitions. Wed-Mon 10am-6pm (to 8pm Fri). Station: Nogizakai (exit 6, 1 min.) or Roppongi (exit 4a or 7, 5 min.).

National Museum of Modern Art (Tokyo Kokuritsu Kindai Bijutsukan) ★★

This museum houses the largest collection of modern Japanese art under one roof, including both Japanese- and Western-style paintings, prints, watercolors, drawings, and sculpture, all dating from the Meiji Period through the 20th century. Names to look for include Munakata Shiko, Kuroda Seiki, and Yokoyama Taikan. Expect to spend about 1½ hours here.

3 Kitanomaru Koen Park, Chiyoda-ku. ☎ 03/3214-2561. www.momat.go.jp. Admission ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75) adults, ¥130 ($1.10/55p) college students, ¥70 (60¢/30p) high school students, free for children; special exhibits cost more. Tues-Sun 10am-5pm (to 10pm Fri). Station: Takebashi (5 min.).

National Museum of Western Art (Kokuritsu Seiyō Bijutsukan) ★

Japan's only national museum dedicated to Western art is housed in a main building designed by Le Corbusier and in two more recent additions. It presents a chronological study of sculpture and art from the end of the Middle Ages through the 20th century, beginning with works by old masters, including Lucas Cranach the Elder, Rubens, El Greco, Murillo, and Tiepolo. French painters and Impressionists of the 19th and 20th centuries are well represented, including Delacroix, Monet (with an entire room devoted to his work), Manet, Renoir, Pissarro, Sisley, Courbet, Cézanne, and Gauguin. The museum's 20th-century collection includes works by Picasso, Max Ernst, Miró, Dubuffet, and Pollock. The museum is also famous for its 50-odd sculptures by Rodin, one of the largest collections in the world, encompassing most of his major works including The Kiss, The Thinker, Balzac, and The Gates of Hell. Plan on spending at least an hour here.

Ueno Park, Taito-ku. ☎ 03/3828-5131. www.nmwa.go.jp. Admission ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75) adults, ¥130 ($1.10/55p) college students, ¥70 (60¢/30p) high school students, free for children and seniors; special exhibits require separate admission fee. Free admission to permanent collection 2nd and 4th Sat of the month. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5pm (to 8pm Fri). Station: Ueno (4 min.).

National Science Museum (Kokuritsu Kahaku Hakubutsukan) ★ Kids Japan's largest science museum covers everything from the evolution of life to Japanese inventions and technology, in expansive, imaginative displays, with plenty of exhibits geared toward children. A highlight is an entire arena of 100-some taxidermic animals from around the world, including a polar bear, camel, gorilla, tiger, bear, and other creatures (some are animals that died at Ueno Zoo). Other highlights include a dinosaur display, a hands-on discovery room for children exploring sound, light, magnetism, and other scientific phenomena, re-created wood and marine habitats, a Japanese mummy from the Edo Period curled up in a burial jar, Hachiko (stuffed, on the second floor of the main building; there's a famous statue of the dog at Shibuya Station), and an extensive exhibition that allows visitors to stroll through some 4 billion years of evolutionary history. You'll want to spend about 2 hours here, more if you have children in tow or you opt for the audio guide (¥200/$1.65/80p extra), recommended as English explanations are limited.

Ueno Park, Taito-ku. ☎ 03/3822-0111. www.kahaku.go.jp. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, free for children. Tues–Sun 9am–5pm (to 8pm Fri). Station: Ueno (5 min.).

Ukiyo-e Ota Memorial Museum of Art (Ota Kinen Bijutsukan) ★ Finds This great museum features the private ukiyo-e (woodblock print) collection of the late Ota Seizo, who early in life recognized the importance of ukiyo-e as an art form and dedicated himself to its preservation. Although the collection contains 12,000 prints, only 80 to 100 are displayed at any given time, in thematic exhibitions that change monthly and include English-language descriptions. The museum itself is small but delightful, with such traditional touches as bamboo screens and stone pathways. You can tour the museum in about 30 minutes.

1–10–10 Jingumae, Shibuya-ku. ☎ 03/3403-0880. www.ukiyoe-ota-muse.jp. Admission ¥700–¥1,000 ($5.85–$8.35/£2.90–£4.15) adults, ¥500–¥700 ($4.15–$5.85/£2.10–£2.90) high school and college students, ¥200–¥400 ($1.65–$3.35/80p–£1.70) junior high students, free–¥200 ($1.65/80p) children; price depends on the exhibit. Tues–Sun 10:30am–5:30pm (enter by 5pm). Closed from the 27th to end of each month. Station: Harajuku (2 min.) or Meiji-Jingumae (1 min.). Near the Omotesando Dori and Meiji Dori intersection, behind La Forêt.

Yushukan ★ Located on the grounds of Yasukuni Shrine, built in 1869 to commemorate some 2.5 million Japanese war dead, this war memorial museum chronicles the rise and fall of the samurai, Sino-Japanese War, Russo-Japanese War, and World Wars I and II, though English-language explanations are rather vague and Japan's military aggression in Asia is glossed over. Still, a fascinating 90 minutes can be spent here gazing at samurai armor, uniforms, tanks, guns, and artillery, as well as such thought-provoking displays as a human torpedo (a tiny submarine guided by one occupant and loaded with explosives) and a suicide attack plane. But the most chilling displays are the seemingly endless photographs of war dead, some of them young teenagers. In stark contrast to the somberness of the museum, temporary exhibits of beautiful ikebana (Japanese flower arrangements) and bonsai are often held on shrine grounds in rows of glass cases. The shrine is also famous for its cherry blossoms. Yasukuni Shrine is most well known, however, for the controversy that erupts every August 15 when World War II memorials are held and top government officials stop by, causing outrage among Japan's Asian neighbors.

Yasukuni Shrine, 3-1-1 Kudan-kita, Chiyoda-ku. ☎ 03/3261-8326. www.yasukuni.or.jp. Admission ¥800 ($6.65/£3.30) adults, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) high school and college students, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Daily 9am-5:30pm (to 5pm Oct-Mar). Station: Kudanshita (3 min.); Ichigayaumae or Iidabashi (7 min.). On Yasukuni Dori.

5 Spectacular City Views

Tokyo Metropolitan Government Office (TMG) ★★☆☆ Kids Tokyo's city hall—designed by one of Japan's best-known architects, Kenzo Tange—is an impressive addition to the skyscrapers of west Shinjuku. The complex comprises three buildings—TMG no. 1, TMG no. 2, and the Metropolitan Assembly Building—and together they contain everything from Tokyo's Disaster Prevention Center to the governor's office. Most important for visitors is TMG no. 1, the tall building to the north that offers one of the best views of Tokyo. This 48-story, 240m (800-ft.) structure, the tallest building in Shinjuku, boasts two observatories located on the 45th floors of both its north and south towers, with access from the first floor. Both observatories offer the same spectacular views—on clear winter days you can even see Mount Fuji—as well as a small souvenir shop and coffee shop. In expensive Tokyo, this is one of the city's best bargains, and kids love it. On the first floor is a Tokyo Tourist Information Center, open daily 10am to 6:30pm.

2-8-1 Nishi-Shinjuku. ☎ 03/5321-1111. Free admission. Daily 9:30am-10:30pm. Closed Dec 29-Jan 3. Station: Tochomae (1 min.), Shinjuku (10 min.), or Nishi-Shinjuku (5 min.).

Tokyo Tower ★ Overrated Japan's most famous observation tower was built in 1958 and was modeled after the Eiffel Tower in Paris. Lit up at night, this 330m (1,099-ft.) tower, a relay station for TV and radio stations, is a familiar and beloved landmark in the city's landscape; but with the construction of skyscrapers over the past few decades (including the TMG, above, with its free observatory), it has lost some of its appeal as an observation platform and seems more like a relic from the 1950s. With its tacky souvenir shops and assorted small-time attractions, this place is as about as kitsch as kitsch can be.

The tower has two observatories: the main one at 149m (495 ft.) and the top observatory at 248m (825 ft.). The best time of year for viewing is said to be during Golden Week at the beginning of May. With many Tokyoites gone from the city and most factories and businesses closed down, the air at this time is thought to be the cleanest and clearest. There are several offbeat tourist attractions in the tower's base building, including a wax museum (where you can see the Beatles, a wax rendition of Leonardo's Last Supper, Hollywood stars, and a medieval torture chamber), a small aquarium, a museum of holography, a Guinness World Records Museum, and a trick art gallery, all with separate admission fees and appealing mainly to children.

4-2 Shiba Koen, Minato-ku. ☎ 03/3433-5111. www.tokyotower.co.jp. Admission to both observatories ¥1,420 ($12/£6) adults, ¥860 ($7.15/£3.60) children. Daily 9am-10pm. Station: Onarimon or Kamiyacho (6 min.).

6 City Strolls

WALKING TOUR 1

SEARCHING FOR OLD EDO: A WALKING TOUR OF ASAKUSA

- Start: Hama Rikyu Garden (Shiodome Station) or Asakusa Station (exit 1 or 3).
Finish: Kappabashi Dori (Station: Tawaramachi).
Time: Allow approximately 5 hours, including the boat ride.
Best Times: Tuesday through Friday, when the crowds aren't as big, or Sunday, when you can join a free tour of Asakusa, but:
Worst Times: Sunday, when the shops on Kappabashi Dori are closed.

If anything remains of old Tokyo, Asakusa is it. This is where you'll find narrow streets lined with small residential homes, women in kimono, Tokyo's oldest and most popular temple, and quaint shops selling boxwood combs, fans, kitchen knives, sweet pastries, and other products of yore. With its temple market, rickshaw drivers vying for the tourist trade, old-fashioned amusement park, traditional shops, and restaurants, Asakusa preserves the charm of old downtown Edo better than anyplace else in Tokyo. For many older Japanese, a visit to Asakusa is like stepping back to the days of their childhood; for tourists, it provides a glimpse of the way things were.

Pleasure-seekers have been flocking to Asakusa for centuries. Originating as a temple town back in the 7th century, it grew in popularity during the Tokugawa regime as merchants grew wealthy and entirely new forms of popular entertainment arose to cater to them. Theaters for Kabuki and Bunraku flourished in Asakusa, as did restaurants and shops. By 1840, Asakusa had become Edo's main entertainment district. In stark contrast to the solemnity surrounding places of worship in the West, Asakusa's temple market had a carnival atmosphere reminiscent of medieval Europe, complete with street performers and exotic animals. It retains some of that festive atmosphere even today.

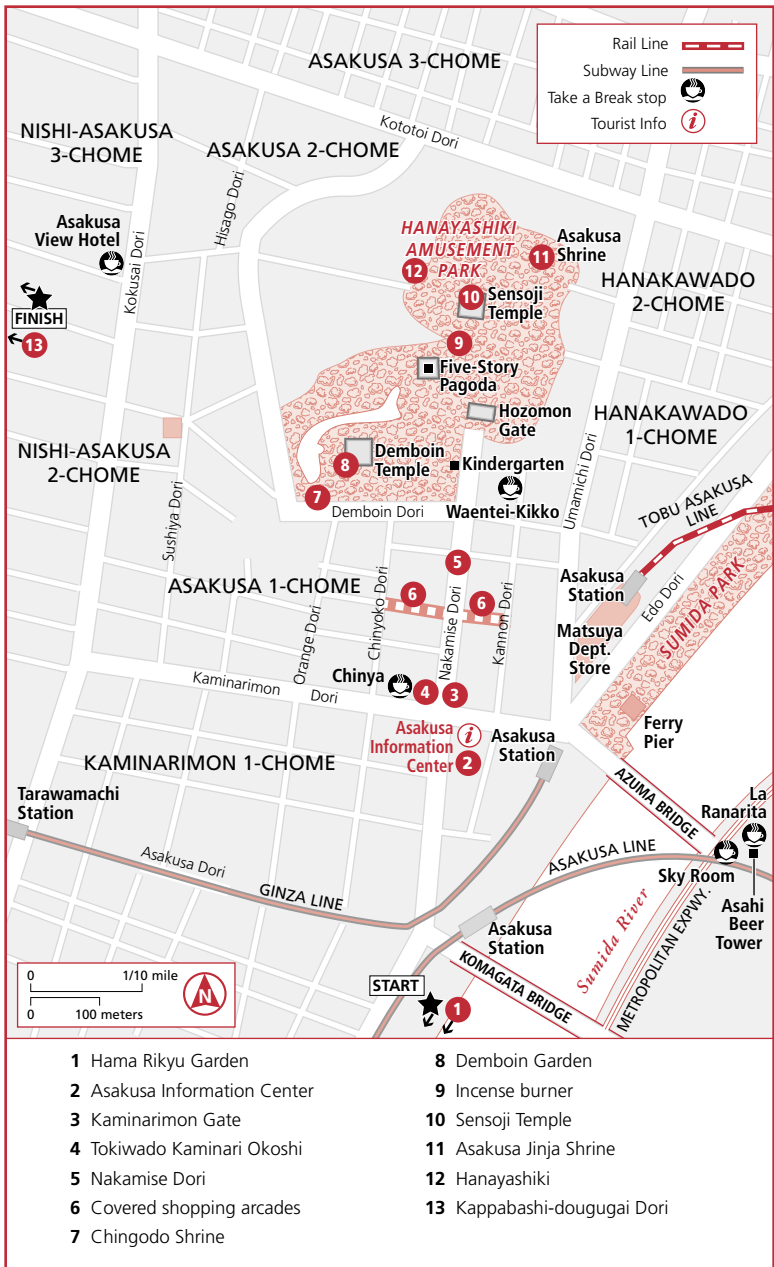

The most dramatic way to arrive in Asakusa is by boat from Hama Rikyu Garden (see stop no. 1 below), just as people used to arrive in the olden days. If you want to forgo the boat ride, take the subway to Asakusa Station and start your tour from there. Otherwise, head to:

1 Hama Rikyu Garden

Located at the south end of Tokyo (Station: Shiodome, exit 5, then a 5-min. walk), this garden was laid out during the Edo Period in a style popular at the time, in which surrounding scenery was incorporated into its composition. Today, the only surrounding scenery you'll see is an overabundance of skyscrapers, but it does contain an inner tidal pool, bridges draped with wisteria, moon-viewing pavilions, and teahouses. (See p. 182 for more details.)

Boats depart the garden to make their way along the Sumida River hourly or so between 10:35am and 4:15pm, with the fare to Asakusa costing ¥720 ($6/£3). Although much of what you see along the working river today is only concrete embankments, I like the trip because it affords a different perspective of Tokyo—barges making their way down the river, high-rise apartment buildings with laundry fluttering from balconies, warehouses, and superhighways. The boat passes under approximately a dozen bridges during the 40-minute trip, each one completely different. During cherry blossom season, thousands of cherry trees lining the bank make the ride particularly memorable.

Walking Tour 1: Asakusa

Upon your arrival in Asakusa, walk away from the boat pier a couple of blocks inland, where you'll soon see the colorful Kaminarimon Gate on your right. Across the street on your left is the:

2 Asakusa Information Center

Located at 2-18-9 Kaminarimon (☎ 03/3842-5566), the center is open daily from 9:30am to 8pm and is staffed by English-speaking volunteers from 10am to 5pm. Stop here to pick up a map of the area, use the restroom, and ask directions to restaurants and sights. On Sundays, volunteers give free guided tours of Asakusa at 11am and 2pm (arrive 10 min. earlier). Note the huge Seiko clock on the center's facade; every hour on the hour from 10am to 7pm, mechanical dolls reenact scenes from Asakusa's most famous festivals.

Then it's time to head across the street to the:

3 Kaminarimon Gate

The gate is unmistakable with its bright red colors and 100-kilogram (220-lb.) lantern hanging in the middle. The statues inside the gate are the god of wind to the right and the god of thunder to the left, ready to protect the deity enshrined in the temple. The god of thunder is particularly fearsome: He supposedly has an insatiable appetite for navels.

To the left of the gate, on the corner, is:

4 Tokiwado Kaminari Okoshi

This open-fronted confectionery has been selling rice-based sweets (okoshi) for 250 years and is popular with visiting Japanese buying gifts for the folks back home. It's open daily from 9am to 9pm.

Once past Kaminarimon Gate, you'll find yourself immediately on a pedestrian lane called:

5 Nakamise Dori

The lane leads straight to the Sensoji Temple. Nakamise means "inside shops," and historical records show that vendors have sold wares here since the late 17th century. Today Nakamise Dori is lined on both sides with tiny stall after tiny stall, many owned by the same family for generations.

If you're expecting austere religious artifacts, however, you're in for a surprise: sweets, shoes, barking toy dogs, Japanese crackers (called sembei), bags, umbrellas, Japanese dolls, T-shirts, fans, masks, and traditional Japanese accessories are all sold. How about a brightly colored straight hairpin—and a black hairpiece to go with it? Or a temporary tattoo in the shape of a dragon? This is a great place to shop for souvenirs, gifts, and items you have no earthly need for—a little bit of unabashed consumerism on the way to spiritual purification.

If you're hungry for lunch, there are a number of possibilities in the neighborhood. China (p. 150), 1-3-4 Asakusa, just west of Kaminarimon Gate on Kaminarimon Dori, has been serving sukiyaki and shabu-shabu since 1880. North-east of Kaminarimon Gate is Waentei-Kikko (p. 151), 2-2-13 Asakusa, offering obento lunch boxes and shamisen performances. For Western food, head to the other side of the Sumida River, where on the 22nd floor of the Asahi Beer Tower is La Ranarita Azumabashi (p. 151), 1-23-1 Azumabashi, a moderately priced Italian restaurant with great views of Asakusa; and the utilitarian Sky Room (p. 218) with inexpensive beer, wine, and snacks.

Before reaching the end of Nakamise Dori, there are a couple interesting side streets worth exploring. Just 2 blocks north of Kaminarimon Gate are two:

6 Covered shopping arcades

Stretching both to the right and left of Nakamise Dori, these pedestrian-only covered lanes are typical of what you'll see everywhere in Japan—regular streets that became instant shopping centers by covering them with roofs and banning vehicular traffic. This is where locals come to shop, with stores selling clothing, household goods, souvenirs, and more.

Farther along Nakamise Dori, turn left onto Demboin Dori (you'll pass some interesting shops selling antiques here). In just a minute's walk you'll see a small red gate on your right. This is:

7 Chingodo Shrine

Dedicated to Chingodo, the so-called raccoon dog and guardian against fires and burglary, it affords a partial view of a garden through a fence. This is:

8 Demboin Garden

This peaceful oasis in the midst of bustling Asakusa was designed in the 17th century by Enshu Kobori, a tea-ceremony master and famous landscape gardener who also designed a garden for the shogun's castle. Alas, it used to be open to the public, but no longer, so you'll have to content yourself with a glimpse of it here.

Return to Nakamise Dori and resume your walk north to the second gate, which opens onto a square filled with pigeons and a large:

9 Incense Burner

This is where worshipers "wash" themselves to ward off or help cure illness. If, for example, you have a sore throat, be sure to rub some of the smoke over your throat for good measure.

The building dominating the square is:

10 Sensoji Temple

Sensoji is Tokyo's oldest temple. Founded in the 7th century and therefore already well established long before Tokugawa settled in Edo, Sensoji Temple is dedicated to Kannon, the Buddhist goddess of mercy, and is therefore popularly called the Asakusa Kannon Temple. According to legend, the temple was founded after two fishermen pulled a golden statue of Kannon from the sea. The sacred statue is still housed in the temple, carefully preserved inside three boxes; even though it's never on display, an estimated 20 million people flock to the temple annually to pay their respects.

Within the temple is a counter where you can buy your fortune by putting a 100-yen coin into a wooden box and shaking it until a long bamboo stick emerges from a small hole. The stick will have a Japanese number on it, which corresponds to one of the numbers on a set of drawers. Take the fortune, written in both the English language and Japanese, from the drawer that has your number. But don't expect the translation to clear things up; my fortune contained such cryptic messages as "Getting a beautiful lady at your home, you want to try all people know about this" and "Stop to start a trip." If you find that your fortune raises more questions than it answers or you simply don't like what it has to say, you can conveniently negate it by tying it to one of the wires provided for this purpose just outside the main hall.

If you walk around the temple to the right, on the northeast corner of the grounds is the small orange:

11 Asakusa Jinja Shrine

This shrine was built in 1649 by Iemitsu Tokugawa, the third Tokugawa shogun, to commemorate the two fishermen who found the statue of Kannon and their village chief. Its architectural style, called Gongen-zukuri, is the same as the style of Toshogu Shrine in Nikko. West of Sensoji Temple is a gardenlike area of lesser shrines and memorials, flowering bushes, and a stream filled with carp (tip: the most picturesque photos of Sensoji Temple can be taken from here).

Farther west still is:

12 Hanayashiki

This is a small and corny amusement park that first opened in 1853 and still draws in the little ones. (See p. 196 for more details.)

Most of the area west of Sensoji Temple (the area to the left if you stand facing the front of the temple) is a small but interesting part of Asakusa popular among Tokyo's older working class. This is where several of Asakusa's old-fashioned pleasure houses remain, including bars, restaurants, strip shows, traditional Japanese vaudeville, and so-called "love hotels," which rent rooms by the hour.

If you keep walking west, past the Asakusa View Hotel, within 10 minutes you'll reach:

⑬ Kappabashi-dougugai Dori

This district, generally referred to as Kappabashi Dori, is Tokyo's wholesale district for restaurant items. Shop after shop sells pottery, chairs, tableware, cookware, lacquerware, rice cookers, noren (short curtains hung outside shops and restaurants to signify they are open), and everything else needed to run a restaurant. And yes, you can even buy those models of plastic food you've been drooling over in restaurant displays. Ice cream, pizza, sushi, mugs foaming with beer—they're all here, looking like the real thing. (Stores close about 5pm and are closed Sun.)

WINDING DOWN

The Asakusa View Hotel, on Kokusai Dori Avenue between Sensoji Temple and Kappabashi Dori, has several restaurants and bars. In the basement is the clubby Ice House, the hotel's main bar.

WALKING TOUR 2

IN THE HEART OF TRENDY TOKYO: A STROLL THROUGH HARAJUKU & AOYAMA

- Start: Meiji Jingu Shrine (Station: Harajuku).
Finish: Aoyama (Station: Omotesando).
Time: Allow approximately 4 hours.
Best Times: The first Sunday of every month, when there's an antiques flea market at Togo Shrine.
Worst Times: Monday, from the 27th to the end of every month (when the Ota Memorial Museum of Art is closed), and Thursday (when the Oriental Bazaar is closed).

Harajuku is one of my favorite neighborhoods in Tokyo, though I'm too old to really fit in. In fact, anyone over 25 is apt to feel ancient here, as this is Tokyo's most popular hangout for Japanese high-school and college students. The young come here to see and be seen; you're sure to spot Japanese punks, girls decked out in the fashions of the moment, and young couples out on dates. I like Harajuku for its vibrancy, its sidewalk cafes, its street hawkers, and its trendy clothing boutiques. It's also the home of Tokyo's most important Shinto shrine, as well as a delightful woodblock-print museum and an excellent souvenir shop of traditional Japanese items. If you have teenagers in tow, you'll definitely want to make Harajuku a top priority.

Nearby is Aoyama, a yuppified version of Harajuku, where the upwardly mobile dine and shop for designer clothing. Connecting Harajuku and Aoyama is Omotesando Dori, a wide, tree-lined, European-style shopping boulevard that forms the heart of this area; its many sidewalk cafes make it a popular promenade for people-watching.

From Harajuku Station, take the south exit (the one closer to Shibuya) and turn right over the bridge, where you will immediately see the huge cypress torii marking the entrance to:

① Meiji Jingu Shrine

Dedicated to Emperor and Empress Meiji, Meiji Jingu Shrine (p. 176) opened in 1920 and remains the most venerable shrine in Tokyo. If it's June, stop off at the Iris Garden, located halfway on the 10-minute tree-shaded path to the shrine.

Walking Tour 2: Harajuku & Aoyama

- 1 Meiji Jingu Shrine
- 2 Takeshita Dori
- 3 Togo Shrine
- 4 La Forêt
- 5 Ukiyo-e Ota Memorial Museum of Art
- 6 Chicago
- 7 Condomania
- 8 Kiddy Land
- 9 Oriental Bazaar
- 10 Omotesando Hills
- 11 Hanae Mori Building
- 12 Issey Miyake
- 13 Comme des Garçons
- 14 Prada
- 15 Yohji Yamamoto

If the hike to Meiji Shrine has made you thirsty, stop off at the rustic Café Mori no Terrace outdoor pavilion just inside the entryway to the shrine grounds. Open daily 9am to sunset, it offers coffee, beer, pastries, and ice cream. For something more substantial, wait until you get to Takeshita Dori (described below), where you'll find a Wolfgang Puck Express, 1-17-1 Jingumae, good for burgers and pizza (p. 161).

After visiting the shrine, retrace your steps to Harajuku Station. If it's Sunday, you'll see groups of teenagers—many bizarrely dressed—gathered on the bridge over the train tracks. They're all that's left of the masses of teens that used to congregate on nearby Yoyogi Dori back when it was closed to vehicular traffic on Sundays. Sadly, authorities decided to open Yoyogi and Omotesando Dori streets to traffic, thereby putting an end to Tokyo's most happening Sunday scene.

At Harajuku Station, continue walking north beside the station to its north exit. Across the street from Harajuku Station's north exit is:

2 Takeshita Dori

This pedestrian-only street is lined non-stop with stores that cater to teenagers. It's packed—especially on Sunday afternoons—with young people hunting for bargains on inexpensive clothing, shoes, music, sunglasses, jewelry, watches, cosmetics, and more. One shop worth pointing out is Harajuku Daiso (☎ 5775-9641; daily 10am–9pm) on the left, one of many bargain variety stores to hit Japan after the recession. It offers four floors of kitchenware, tableware, cosmetics, office supplies, and more, most priced at ¥100 (85¢/40p).

After inching your way through the flow of humanity along this narrow lane, you'll eventually find yourself on a busy thoroughfare, Meiji

Dori. If it's the first Sunday of the month, turn left (north) onto Meiji Dori; in a couple of minutes, on your left you'll see:

3 Togo Shrine

Dedicated to Admiral Heihachiro Togo, who was in charge of the fleet that defeated the Russian navy in 1905 in the Russo-Japanese War, the shrine nowadays is most popular for its flea market held the first Sunday of every month to 2pm. Everything from old chests, dolls, porcelain, and kimono are for sale, spread out on a tree-shaded sidewalk that meanders around the shrine.

Head back south on Meiji Dori. To your right, just before the big intersection, is:

4 La Forêt

La Forêt is filled with trendy shoe and clothing boutiques. The less expensive boutiques tend to be on the lower floors; the more exclusive are higher up. (See “Shopping,” later in this chapter, for details on many of the shops and department stores listed in this walking tour.)

Behind La Forêt is one of my favorite museums, the:

5 Ukiyo-e Ota Memorial Museum of Art

Located at 1-10-10 Jingumae, this museum features the private woodblock prints (ukiyo-e) collection of the late Ota Seizo. Exhibitions of the museum's 12,000 prints change monthly and are always worth checking out (p. 186).

Across Omotesando Dori is:

6 Chicago

This store specializes in used American clothing but also stocks hundreds of used and new kimono and yukata in a corner of its basement.

Near La Forêt is Harajuku's major intersection, Meiji Dori and Omotesando Dori. Here, at the intersection at 6-30-1 Jingumae, is one of Harajuku's more unusual shops:

7 Condomania

Condoms are for sale here in a wide range of sizes, colors, and styles, from glow-in-the-dark to scented. It's open daily 11am to 11pm.

Heading east on Omotesando Dori (away from Harajuku Station), you'll soon see, to your right:

8 Kiddy Land

Located at 6–1–9 Jingumae, this store sells gag gifts and a great deal more than just toys, including enough to amuse less-discerning adults. You could spend an hour browsing here, but the store is so crowded with teenagers that you may end up rushing for the door.

Continue east on Omotesando Dori (where sidewalk vendors selling jewelry and ethnic accessories set up shop on weekends); to your right will soon be Harajuku's most famous store:

9 Oriental Bazaar

Located at 5–9–13 Jingumae, this is Tokyo's best one-stop shopping spot for Japanese souvenirs. Four floors offer antiques, old and new kimono, Japanese paper products, fans, jewelry, woodblock prints, screens, chinaware, and much more at reasonable prices. I always stock up on gifts here for the folks back home.

On the other side of Omotesando Dori is the new:

10 Omotesando Hills

This posh commercial and residential shopping center, designed by Tadao Ando, houses upscale clothing and accessory shops, as well as restaurants. Unique is (35) Hasegawa Sake Shop (☎ 03/5785-0833), with selected offerings from sake breweries across Japan. Its standup bar allows you to sample sake for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) a cup.

Back on Omotesando Dori and continuing east, you'll pass shops dedicated to the wares of Gucci, Armani, Louis Vuitton, and Tod's, but none have been here as long as the:

11 Hanae Mori Building

Near the end of Omotesando Dori to the right, it was designed in 1978 by Japanese architect Kenzo Tange (who also designed the Akasaka Prince Hotel and the TMG City Hall in Shinjuku). It houses the entire collection of Hanae Mori, from casual wear to evening wear. In the basement is the pricey Antique Market, where stalls sell china, jewelry, and items from the 1930s, mostly from Europe.

Harajuku and Aoyama have more sidewalk cafes than any other part of Tokyo. Most conspicuous is the fancy Anniversaire Café, 3–5–30 Kita-Aoyama, across from the Hanae Mori Building (see no. 11, above). Café hors et dans, 4–11–6 Jingumae (☎ 03/5775-5433), just east of Omotesando Hills on Omotesando Dori, has a second-floor outdoor terrace. Montoak, next to Kiddy Land (see no. 8, above) at 6–1–9 Jingumae (☎ 03/5468-5928), is a hip multi-level bar/coffee shop with comfy chairs and a small second-floor balcony.

At the end of Omotesando Dori, where it connects with Aoyama Dori, is Omotesando Station. You can board the subway here or, for more shopping, cross Aoyama Dori and continue heading east, where you'll pass a number of designer shops. First, on the left at 3–18–11 Minami-aoyama, is:

12 Issey Miyake

The clothes here are known for their richness in texture and fabrics.

To the right, at 5–2–1 Minami-Aoyama, is:

13 Comme des Garçons

Rei Kawakubo's designs for both men and women are showcased here.

Farther down the street, on the right at 5–2–6 Minami-Aoyama, is:

14 Prada

By far the most interesting design on the block, the building looks like a giant bug eye (to me, at least), with its dome structure comprising hundreds of glass bubbles.

Just past Prada, on the right at 5-3-6 Minami-Aoyama, is:

15 Yohji Yamamoto

As with all Yamamoto shops, this store has an interesting avant-garde interior.

Return to Aoyama Dori, where you'll find the Omotesando subway station.

WINDING DOWN

Between Comme des Garçons and Yohji Yamamoto is Yoku Moku, easy to find at 5-3-3 Minami-Aoyama (☎ 03/5485-3330) with its bright blue exterior and terrace. It's famous for its pastries and desserts. For more sinful pleasures, head to Berry Café, 5-10-19 Minami-Aoyama (☎ 03/5774-7130), on the left side of Aoyama Dori in the direction of Shibuya. Its berry-topped cakes have to be seen to be believed; even its plastic-food displays look good enough to eat.

7 Especially for Kids

In addition to its observatories, Tokyo Tower (p. 187) contains a few other attractions that might be worth a visit if you have children in tow, including a small aquarium and a wax museum. Other attractions listed earlier that are good for children include the Edo-Tokyo Museum, Fukagawa Edo Museum, National Museum of Emerg-ing Science and Innovation, National Science Museum, and the observatory of the Tokyo Metropolitan Government Office.

Hanayashiki Opened in 1853, this small and rather corny amusement park is Japan's oldest. It offers a small roller coaster, a kiddie Ferris wheel, a carousel, a haunted house, a 3-D theater, and other diversions that appeal to children. Note, however, that after paying admission, you must still buy tickets for each ride; tickets are ¥100 (85¢/40p) each, and most rides require two to four tickets.

2-28-1 Asakusa (northwest of Sensoji Temple), Taito-ku. ☎ 043/3842-8780. Admission ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) children 5-12 and seniors, free for children 4 and under. Wed-Mon 10am-6pm (to 5pm in winter). Station: Asakusa (5 min.).

Joypolis Sega Bored teenagers in tow, grumbling at yet another temple or shrine? Bring them to life at Tokyo's most sophisticated virtual amusement arcade, outfitted with the latest in video games and high-tech virtual-reality attractions, courtesy of Sega. Video games include bobsledding and car races, in which participants maneuver curves utilizing virtual-reality equipment, as well as numerous aeronautical battle games. There's also a 3-D sightseeing tour with seats that move with the action on the screen, several virtual reality rides (sky diving, anyone?), and much, much more. Most harmless are the Print Club machines, which will print your face on stickers with the background (Mount Fuji, perhaps?) of your choice. If you think your kids will want to try everything, buy them a passport for ¥3,300 ($27/£15).

There's a smaller Sega on Dogenzaka slope in Shibuya at 2-6-16 Dogenzaka (☎ 03/5458-2201; Station: Shibuya, 2 min.), open daily 10am to midnight and offering arcade and virtual-reality games, but note that children under 16 aren't allowed after 6pm.

Tokyo Decks, 3rd floor, Odaiba. ☎ 03/5500-1801. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children; individual attractions an additional ¥300-¥600 ($2.50-$5/£1.25-£2.50) each. Daily 10am-11pm. Station: Odaiba Kaihin Koen (2 min.).

National Children's Castle (Kodomo-no-Shiro) 🌳 Here's a great place to bring the kids. Conceived by the Ministry of Health and Welfare to commemorate the International Year of the Child in 1979, the Children's Castle holds various activity rooms for children of all ages (though most are geared to elementary-aged kids and younger). The third floor, designed for spontaneous and unstructured play, features a large climbing gym, a computer playroom, building blocks, a playhouse, dolls, books, and a teen corner with table tennis and other age-appropriate games; there's also an art room staffed with instructors to help children with projects suitable for their ages. On the fourth floor is a music room with instruments the kids are invited to play, as well as a video room with private cubicles where visitors can make selections from a library of Japanese- and English-language videos. On the roof is an outdoor playground, complete with tricycles; while in the basement is a swimming pool (¥300/$2.50/£1.25 for adults, ¥200/$1.65/80p for children). Various programs are offered throughout the week, including puppet shows, fairy tales, and origami presentations.

5-53-1 Jingumae, Shibuya-ku. 📞 03/3797-5666. www.kodomonono-shiro.or.jp. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) children 3-17, free for children under 3. Tues-Fri 12:30-5:30pm; Sat-Sun and holidays (including school holidays) 10am-5:30pm. Station: Omotesando (exit B2, 8 min.) or Shibuya (10 min.). On Aoyama Dori between Omotesando and Shibuya stations.

Tokyo Disneyland and Tokyo DisneySea 🌟🌟🌟 Virtually a carbon copy of Disneyland back home, this one also boasts the Jungle Cruise, Pirates of the Caribbean, the Haunted Mansion, and a newly revamped Space Mountain. Other hot attractions include Toontown, a wacky theme park where Mickey and other Disney characters work and play; MicroAdventure, which features 3-D glasses and special effects; and Star Tours, a thrill adventure created by Disney and George Lucas.

Opened in 2001 adjacent to Disneyland, DisneySea, a theme park based on ocean legends and myths, offers seven distinct "ports of call," including the futuristic Port Discovery marina with its StormRider which flies straight into the eye of a storm; the Lost River Delta with its Indiana Jones Adventure; Mermaid Lagoon based on the film The Little Mermaid; the Arabian Coast, with its Sindbad's Seven Voyages boat ride; and the American Waterfront with its Tower of Terror. Because DisneySea is unique to Tokyo, I personally think this is the one to see; its installations are a class act.

1-1 Maihama, Urayasu-shi, Chiba. 📞 047/310-0733. www.tokyodisneyresort.co.jp. 1-day passport to either Disneyland or DisneySea, including entrance to and use of all attractions, ¥5,800 ($48/£24) adults, ¥5,100 ($42/£21) seniors, ¥5,000 ($42/£21) children 12-17, ¥3,900 ($32/£16) children 4-11, free for children under 4. Daily 8 or 9am-10pm, with slightly shorter hours in winter. Station: Maihama Station on the JR Keiyo Line from Tokyo Station (1 min.).

Ueno Zoo Founded in 1882, Japan's oldest zoo is small by today's standards but remains one of the most well-known zoos in Japan, due in part to its giant panda, donated by the Chinese government to mark the reestablishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries following World War II. A vivarium houses amphibians, fish, and reptiles, such as Komodo dragons, green tree pythons, and dwarf crocodiles. Personally, I can't help but feel sorry for some of the animals in their small spaces, but children will enjoy the Japanese macaques, polar bears, California sea lions, penguins, gorillas, giraffes, zebras, elephants, deer, and tigers. Expect a minimum of 2 hours here.

Ueno Park, Taito-ku. 📞 03/3828-5171. www.tokyo-zoo.net/english. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) seniors, ¥200 ($1.65/80p) children 12-14, free for children under 12. Tues-Sun 9:30am-5pm (enter by 4pm). Closed some holidays. Station: Ueno (4 min.).

For It's Ichi, Ni, San Strikes You're Out . . .

Japanese are so crazy about baseball, you'd think they invented the game. Actually, it was introduced to Japan by the United States way back in 1873. Today, it's as popular among Japanese as it is among Americans. Even the annual high-school playoffs keep everyone glued to the TV set.

As with other imports, Japanese have added their own modifications: Some of the playing fields are smaller (though newer ones tend to have American dimensions) and, borrowing from American football, each team has its own cheerleaders. There are several American players who have proved very popular with local fans; but according to the rules, no more than four foreigners may play on any one team. On the other hand, recent years have also seen an exodus of top Japanese players defecting to Major League Baseball teams, including the hugely popular and successful Ichiro Suzuki, leadoff hitter and right fielder for the Seattle Mariners and the 2007 MLB All-Star MVP; and Hideki Matsui, a power-hitting outfielder with the New York Yankees. In fact, Japanese fans have been so mesmerized by the Mariners and Yankees (whose games are broadcast on Japanese TV) that television ratings for Japanese games have fallen.

Although playing one's hardest is at a premium in the United States, in Japan, any attempt at excelling individually is frowned upon. As in other aspects of life, it is the group, the team that counts. To what extent that's so may be illustrated by the case of an American player: When he missed opening day at training camp due to a life-or-death operation on his son at a hospital, his contract was immediately canceled. And, rather than let a foreign player excel by breaking the hitting record set by a Japanese, American Randy Bass was thrown only balls and walked.

There are two professional leagues, the Central and the Pacific, which play from April to October and meet in the final Japan Series playoffs. In Tokyo, the home teams are the Yomiuri Giants, who play at the Tokyo Dome (☎ 03/5800-9999; Station: Korakuen), and the Yakult Swallows, who play at Jingu Stadium (☎ 03/5470-8915; Station: Gaienmae). Other teams playing in the vicinity are the Chiba Lotte Marines, who play at Chiba Marine Stadium in Chiba (☎ 043/296-8900), and the Yokohama Bay Stars, who play in downtown Yokohama Stadium (☎ 045/661-1251). Advance tickets go on sale Friday, 2 weeks prior to the game, and can be purchased at Ticket Pia (☎ 0570/02-9999), except for the Giants, where tickets can be purchased only at Tokyo Dome. Prices for Tokyo Dome and Jingu Stadium range from ¥1,800 ($15/£7.50) for an unreserved seat in the outfield to ¥6,000 ($50/£25) for seats behind home plate. The Giants are so popular, however, that tickets are hard to come by.

(www.metroplis.co.jp). Tickets for many events, including baseball and sumo, can be purchased at Ticket Pia (☎ 0570/02-9999), as well as convenience stores like Lawson, Family Mart, and 7-Eleven.

SUMO Sumo matches are held in Tokyo at the Kokugikan, 1–3–28 Yokoami, Sumida-ku (☎ 03/3623-5111; Station: Ryogoku, then a 1-min. walk). Matches are held in January, May, and September for 15 consecutive days, beginning at around 9:30am and lasting until 6pm; the top wrestlers compete after 3:30pm. The best seats are ringside box seats, but they're bought out by companies and by friends and families of sumo wrestlers. Usually available are balcony seats, which can be purchased at Ticket Pia and JTB travel agencies. You can also purchase tickets directly at the Kokugikan ticket office beginning at 9am every morning of the tournament. Prices range from about ¥2,100 ($17/£8.50) for an unreserved seat (sold only on the day of the event at the stadium, with about 400 seats available) to ¥8,200 ($68/£34) for a good reserved seat.

If you can't make it to a match, watching on TV is almost as good. Tournaments in Tokyo, as well as those that take place annually in Osaka, Nagoya, and Fukuoka, are broadcast on the NHK channel from 4 to 6pm daily during matches. For more information on sumo, see appendix A.

9 Shopping

It won't take you long to become convinced that shopping is the number-one pastime in Tokyo. Women, men, couples, and even entire families go on buying expeditions in their free time, making Sunday the most crowded shopping day of the week.

THE SHOPPING SCENE

BEST BUYS Tokyo is the country's showcase for everything from the latest in camera, computer, or music equipment to original woodblock prints and designer fashions. Traditional Japanese crafts and souvenirs that make good buys include toys (both traditional and the latest in technical wizardry), kites, Japanese dolls, carp banners, swords, lacquerware, bamboo baskets, ikebana accessories, ceramics, pottery, iron teakettles, chopsticks, fans, masks, knives, scissors, sake, incense, and silk and cotton kimono. And you don't have to spend a fortune: You can pick up handmade Japanese paper (washi) products, such as umbrellas, lanterns, boxes, stationery, and other souvenirs, for a fraction of what they would cost in import shops in the United States. In Harajuku, it's possible to buy a fully lined dress of the latest fashion craze for $80/£40, and I can't even count the number of pairs of fun, casual shoes I've bought in Tokyo for a song. Used camera equipment can be a good buy, reproductions of famous woodblock prints make great inexpensive gifts, and many items—from pearls to electronic video and audio equipment—can be bought tax-free (see "Taxes," below).

Japan is famous for its electronics, but if you're buying new, you can probably find these products just as cheaply, or even more cheaply, in the United States. If you think you want to shop for electronic products while you're in Tokyo, it pays to do some comparison shopping before you leave home so you can spot a deal when you see one. On the other hand, one of the joys of shopping for electronics in Japan is discovering new, advanced models; you might decide you want that new Sony camcorder simply because it's the coolest thing you've ever seen, no matter what the price.

GREAT SHOPPING AREAS Another enjoyable aspect of shopping in Tokyo is that specific areas are often devoted to certain goods, sold wholesale but also available to the individual shopper. Kappabashi Dori (Station: Tawaramachi), for example, is where you'll find shops specializing in kitchenware, while Kanda (Station: Jimbocho) is known for its bookstores. Akihabara (Station: Akihabara) is packed with stores selling the latest in electronics, as well as anime-related objects. Ginza (Station: Ginza) is the chic address for high-end international designer brands as well as art galleries. Aoyama (Station: Omotesando) boasts the city's largest concentration of Japanese designer clothing stores, while nearby Harajuku (stations: Harajuku, Meiji-Jingumae, or Omotesando) and Shibuya (Station: Shibuya) are the places to go for youthful, fun, and inexpensive fashions.

SALES Department stores have sales throughout the year, during which you can pick up bargains on everything from electronic goods and men's suits to golf clubs, toys, kitchenware, food, and lingerie; there are even sales for used wedding kimono. The most popular sales are for designer clothing, usually held twice a year in July and December or January. Here you can pick up fantastic clothing at cut-rate prices—but be prepared for the crowds. Sales are generally held on one of the top floors of the department store in what's usually labeled the "Exhibition Hall" or "Promotion Hall" in the store's English-language brochure. Stop by the department store's information desk, usually located near the main entrance, for the English-language brochure as well as flyers listing current sale promotions.

TAXES A 5% consumption tax is included in the price of marked goods, but all major department stores in Tokyo will refund the tax to foreign visitors if total purchases amount to more than ¥10,001 ($83/£42) on that day. Exemptions include food, beverages, tobacco, pharmaceuticals, cosmetics, film, and batteries. When you've completed your shopping, take the purchased goods and receipts to the tax refund counter in the store. There are forms to fill out (you will need your passport). Upon completion, a record of your purchase is placed on the visa page of your passport and you are given the tax refund on the spot. When you leave Japan, make sure you have your purchases with you (pack them in your carry-on); you may be asked by Customs to show them, though I've never been asked.

SHIPPING IT HOME Many first-class hotels in Tokyo provide a packing and shipping service. In addition, most large department stores, as well as tourist shops such as the Oriental Bazaar and antiques shops, will ship your purchases overseas.

If you wish to ship packages yourself, the easiest method is to go to a post office and purchase an easy-to-assemble cardboard box, available in various sizes (along with the necessary tape). Keep in mind that packages mailed abroad cannot weigh more than 20kg (about 44 lb.) and that only the larger international post offices accept packages to be mailed overseas. Remember, too, that mailing packages from Japan is expensive. Ask your hotel concierge for the closest international post office.

SHOPPING FROM A TO Z

ANTIQUES & CURIOS

In recent years, it has become a buyer-beware market in Japan, with fake antiques produced in China infiltrating the Japanese market. You shouldn't have any problems with the reputable dealers listed here, but if you're buying an expensive piece, be sure to ask whether there are any papers of authenticity.

In addition to the listings here, other places to look for antiques include the Oriental Bazaar (p. 203) and Tokyo's outdoor flea markets (see later in this section).

Antique Mall Ginza Japanese, European, and some American antiques, collectibles, and odds and ends crowd three floors of Tokyo's largest antiques mall, where you could spend hours browsing among furniture, jewelry, watches, porcelain, pottery, dolls, scrolls, glassware, kimono, folk art, and much more. Open Thursday to Tuesday 11am to 7pm. 1-13-1 Ginza, Chuo-ku. ☎ 03/3535-2115. www.antiques-jp.com. Station: Ginza-Itchome or Kyobashi (3 min.). Between Chuo Dori and Showa Dori.

Fuji-Torii Open since 1948, this small, one-room shop in Harajuku specializes in traditional Japanese works of art and antiques, mainly screens, scrolls, woodblock prints, and ceramics. Open Wednesday to Monday from 11am to 6pm; closed the third Monday of the month. 6-1-10 Jingumae, Shibuya-ku. ☎ 03/3400-2777. Station: Meiji-jingumae (2 min.). On Omotesando Dori, next to Kiddy Land.

Kurofune Finds Located in a large house in Roppongi, Kurofune is owned by American John Adair, who for more than 25 years has specialized in Japanese antique furniture in its original condition. The largest collection here is of mid- to top-quality pieces, but browsing is a delight even if you can't afford to buy; stock in addition to furniture includes hibachi, fabrics, prints, maps, lanterns, screens, folk art, and the country's largest collection of Japanese baskets. Open Monday to Saturday 10am to 6pm. 47-7-4 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3479-1552. www.kurofuneantiques.com. Station: Roppongi (5 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, walk away from Tokyo Tower on Gaien-Higashi Dori, take the diagonal street to the left (across from Tokyo Midtown), and then take a right at 7-Eleven.

ARCADES & SHOPPING MALLS

UNDERGROUND ARCADES Underground shopping arcades are found around several of Tokyo's train and subway stations; the biggest are at Tokyo Station (the Yaesu side) and Shinjuku Station (the east side). They often have great sales and bargains on clothing, accessories, and electronics. My only complaint is that once you're in them, it sometimes seems like you'll never find your way out again.

SHOPPING MALLS Sunshine City (Station: Higashi Ikebukuro or Ikebukuro) is one of Tokyo's oldest shopping malls, with more than 200 shops and restaurants spread through several adjoining buildings. Its popularity, however, is now challenged by newer and grander shopping centers, including chic Omotesando Hills (Station: Harajuku, Omotesando, or Meiji-Jingumae) with a varied mix of boutiques and restaurants; Roppongi Hills (Station: Roppongi), an urban renewal project with approximately 130 shops spread throughout several buildings and along tree-lined streets; and Tokyo Midtown (Station: Roppongi) with its mix of tony shops, restaurants, and offices. In the harbor, on man-made island Odaiba (Station: Odaiba Kaihin Koen), is Palette Town, an amusement/shopping center that contains the sophisticated, upscale Italian-themed Venus Fort, an indoor mall that evokes scenes from Italy with its store-fronted lanes, painted sky, fountains, plazas, and Italian name-brand boutiques. Nearby Tokyo Decks targets Japanese youths with its international goods, including imports from the United States, Europe, China, and Hong Kong; I especially like its Daiba 1-chome Syoutengai section (on the fourth floor of Tokyo Deck's "Seaside Mall" section), a remake of mid-1900s Japan, with crafts, food, and an old-fashioned games arcade, and the Daiba Little Hong Kong department with its Chinese accessories, souvenirs, and restaurants (on the sixth and seventh floors of the "Island Mall" section of Tokyo Decks).

BOOKS

Yasukuni Dori in Jimbocho-Kanda (Station: Jimbocho) is lined with bookstores selling both new and used books, with several dealing in English-language books. Keep in mind, however, that English-language books are usually more expensive in Japan than back home. Still, no bibliophile should pass this street up. Stores are closed on Sunday; most are closed holidays as well. The largest English-language bookstore is Kitazawa (☎ 03/3263-0011), boasting an overwhelming selection, including the most recently published novels, American and English-language classic literature, topical books ranging from history to politics, books on Japan, and antiquarian books. Nearby Ohya Shobo (☎ 03/3291-0062), established in 1882, doesn't have any English-language books but it does claim to have the world's largest stock of 18th- and 19th-century Japanese illustrated books, woodblock prints, and maps, including maps from the Edo Period. (Credit cards are not accepted.)

Kinokuniya This is one of Tokyo's best-known bookstores, with one of the city's largest selections of English-language books and magazines—including books on Japan, dictionaries and textbooks for students of Japanese, and novels—on its sixth floor. Open daily 10am to 8pm; closed some Wednesdays. Takashimaya Annex, Takashimaya Times Sq. complex. ☎ 03/5361-3301. Station: Shinjuku (south exit, 2 min.).

Maruzen This is Japan's oldest bookstore, founded in 1869 but recently ensconced in the Oazo building across from Tokyo Station's Marunouchi exit. Its English-language section, on the fourth floor, is huge and well laid out, with everything from dictionaries to travel guides to special-interest books on Japan. It also carries books on science, politics, and history, as well as magazines and paperbacks. If you're searching for a specific title, you'll probably want to come here first. Open daily 9am to 9pm. 1-6-4 Marunouchi. ☎ 03/5288-8881. Station: Tokyo (1 min.). Take the Marunouchi exit from Tokyo Station and turn right (north); it's across the street.

Tower Records and Books My friends in Tokyo don't shop anywhere else for their books and magazines, as prices are usually lower here than elsewhere. The seventh floor is devoted to imported publications, with a good selection of English-language books, more than 3,000 different kinds of magazines, and—available via computer printout for a fee—more than 300 newspapers from around the world. Open 10am to 11pm. 1-22-14 Jinnan. ☎ 03/3496-3661. Station: Shibuya (Hachiko exit, 5 min.).

CRAFTS & TRADITIONAL JAPANESE PRODUCTS

If you want to shop for traditional Japanese folk crafts in a festival-like atmosphere, nothing beats Nakamise Dori (Station: Asakusa), a pedestrian lane leading to Sensoji Temple in Asakusa. It's lined with stall after stall selling souvenirs galore, from wooden geta shoes and hairpins worn by geisha to T-shirts, fans, umbrellas, toy swords, and dolls. Most are open from 10am to 6pm; some may close 1 a week.

Another good place to search for traditional crafts are department stores, which usually have sections devoted to ceramics, pottery, bambooware, flower-arranging accessories, and fabrics.

Japan Sword Coming here is like visiting a museum. Established more than 100 years ago, this is the best-known sword shop in Tokyo, with a knowledgeable staff and an outstanding collection of fine swords, daggers, sword guards, fittings, and other sword accessories, as well as antique samurai armor. It also sells copies and souvenir items of traditional swords at prices much lower than those of the very expensive historic swords. Note that antique and modern swords require permission to export, which takes about 2 weeks (the company can ship purchases to you), but you can take replicas with you—just be sure to pack them in checked bags. Open Monday to Friday 9:30am to 6pm; Saturday 9:30am to 5pm. Closed holidays. 3–8–1 Toranomon, Minato-ku. ☎ 03/3434-4321. www.japanword.co.jp. Station: Toranomon (exit 2, 5 min.) or Kamiyacho (exit 3, 5 min.).

Japan Traditional Craft Center (Zenkoku Dentoteki Kogeiin Senta) (Finds)

This store is worth a trip even if you can't afford to buy anything. Established to distribute information on Japanese crafts and promote the country's artisans, this two-story center is a great introduction to both traditional and contemporary Japanese design, with explanations in English. It sells various top-quality crafts from all over Japan on a rotating basis, so there are always new items on hand. Crafts for sale usually include lacquerware, ceramics, textiles, paper products, bamboo items, calligraphy brushes, ink stones, fans, metalwork, knives, furniture, and sometimes even stone lanterns or Buddhist family altars. Prices are high, but rightfully so. Unfortunately, its location in out-of-the-way Ikebukuro makes a trip here feasible only if you have the time; otherwise, you're probably better off shopping in the crafts section of a department store. Open daily from 11am to 7pm. 1st floor of Metropolitan Plaza Building, 1–11–1 Nishi-Ikebukuro. ☎ 03/5954-6066. Station: Ikebukuro (1 min.).

Oriental Bazaar If you have time for only one souvenir shop in Tokyo, this should be it. This is the city's best-known and largest souvenir/crafts store, selling products at reasonable prices and offering four floors of souvenir and gift items, including cotton yukata, kimono (new and used), woodblock prints, paper products, fans, chopsticks, Imari chinaware, sake sets, Japanese dolls, pearls, books on Japan and a large selection of antique furniture. It will also ship things home for you. Open Friday to Wednesday 10am to 7pm. 5–9–13 Jingumae, Shibuya-ku. ☎ 03/3400-3933. Station: Meiji-Jingumae (3 min.), Harajuku (4 min.), or Omotesando (5 min.). On Omotesando Dori in Harajuku; look for an Asian-looking facade of orange and green.

Sakai Kokodo Gallery This gallery claims to be the oldest woodblock print shop in Japan. The first shop was opened in 1870 in the Kanda area of Tokyo by the present owner's great-grandfather, and altogether four generations of the Sakai family have tended the store. Open daily 11am to 6pm, it's a great place for original prints, as well as for reproductions of such great masters as Hiroshige. (If you're really a woodblock-print fan, you'll want to visit the Sakai family's excellent Japan Ukiyo-e Museum in the small town of Matsumoto in the Japan Alps; see p. 256.) 1–2–14 Yurakucho, Chiyoda-ku (across from the Imperial Hotel's Tower). ☎ 03/3591-4678. Station: Hibiya (1 min.).

DEPARTMENT STORES

Japanese department stores are institutions in themselves. Usually enormous, well-designed, and chock-full of merchandise, they have about everything you can imagine, including museums and art galleries, pet stores, rooftop playgrounds or greenhouses, travel agencies, restaurants, grocery markets, and flower shops. You could easily spend an entire day in a department store—eating, attending cultural exhibitions, planning your next vacation, having your neck massaged, and, well, shopping.

One of the most wonderful aspects of the Japanese department store is the courteous service. If you arrive at a store as its doors open at 10 or 10:30am, you'll witness a daily rite: Lined up at the entrance are staff who bow in welcome. Some Japanese shoppers arrive just before opening time so as not to miss this favorite ritual. Sales clerks are everywhere, ready to help you. In some stores, you don't even have to go to the cash register once you've made your choice; just hand over the product, along with your money, to the sales clerk, who will return with your change, your purchase neatly wrapped, and an "Arigatoo gozaimashita" ("Thank you very much"). Many department stores will also ship your purchases home for you, send them to your hotel, or hold them until you're ready to leave the store. A day spent in a Japanese department store could spoil you for the rest of your life.

The basement of the store is usually devoted to foodstuffs: fresh fish, produce, and prepared snacks and dinners. There are often free samples of food; if you're feeling slightly hungry, walking through the food department can do nicely for a snack. Many department stores include boutiques by such famous Japanese and international fashion designers as Issey Miyake, Rei Kawakubo (creator of Comme des Garçons), Hanae Mori, Takeo Kikuchi, Vivienne Westwood, and Paul Smith, as well as a department devoted to the kimono. Near the kimono department may also be the section devoted to traditional crafts, including pottery and lacquerware. To find out what's where, stop by the store's information booth located on the ground floor near the front entrance and ask for the floor-by-floor English-language pamphlet. Be sure, too, to ask about sales on the promotional floor—you never know what bargains you may chance upon.

Hours are generally from 10 or 10:30am to 7:30, or 8pm. Department stores used to close 1 day a week, but now they rarely close or close irregularly, but always on the same day of the week (say, on Tues) but in no apparent pattern. One month they may be closed the second and third Tuesday of the month, but the next month only the first or not at all. In any case, you can always find department stores that are open, even on Sundays and holidays (major shopping days in Japan). All major credit and charge cards are accepted.

Isetan Isetan is a favorite among foreigners living in Tokyo. It has a good line of conservative work clothes, as well as contemporary and fashionable styles, including designer goods by Issey Miyake, Yohji Yamamoto, Hanae Mori, Comme des Garçons, Marc Jacobs, and Salvatore Ferragamo; also large dress sizes (on the second floor). It has a great kimono section along with all the traditional accessories (obi, shoes, and purses). An annex offers eight floors of men's clothing and accessories. Open daily 10am to 8pm. 3-14-1 Shinjuku, Shinjuku-ku. ☎ 03/3352-1111. Station: Shinjuku Sanchoime (1 min.) or Shinjuku (east exit, 6 min.). On Shinjuku Dori, east of Shinjuku Station.

Matsuya This is one of my favorite department stores in Tokyo; if I were buying a wedding gift, Matsuya is one of the first places I'd look. It has a good selection of Japanese folk crafts items, kitchenware, kimono, and beautifully designed contemporary household goods, in addition to the usual designer clothes and accessories. I always make a point of stopping by the seventh floor's Design Collection, which displays items from around the world selected by the Japan Design Committee as examples of fine design, from the Alessi teapot to Braun razors. Open daily 10am to 8pm. 3-6-1 Ginza, Chuo-ku. ☎ 03/3567-1211. Station: Ginza (2 min.). On Chuo Dori Ave., just a long block north of Ginza 4-chome Crossing.

Mitsukoshi This Nihombashi department store is one of Japan's oldest and grandest, founded in 1673 by the Mitsui family as a kimono store. In 1683, it became the first store in the world to deal only in cash sales; it was also one of the first stores in Japan to display goods on shelves rather than have merchants fetch bolts of cloth for each customer, as was the custom of the time. It was one of the first shops to employ female clerks. Today, housed in a building dating from 1914, it remains one of Tokyo's loveliest department stores, with a beautiful and stately Renaissance-style facade and an entrance guarded by two bronze lions, replicas of the lions in Trafalgar Square. The store carries many name-brand boutiques, from Chanel to Christian Dior. Its kimono, by the way, are still hot items. Open daily 10am to 7:30pm.

Another branch, located at, Ginza 4-chome Crossing (☎ 03/3562-1111; Mon–Sat 10am–8pm; Sun 10am–7:30pm), is popular with young shoppers. 1–4-1 Nihombashi Muromachi, Chuo-ku. ☎ 03/3241-3311. Station: Mitsukoshimae (1 min.).

Seibu Once the nation's largest department store—and still one of the biggest—Seibu has 47 entrances, thousands of sales clerks, dozens of restaurants, 12 floors, 31 elevators, and an average of 170,000 shoppers a day. Two basement floors are devoted to foodstuffs—you can buy everything from taco shells to octopus to seaweed there. Dishes are set out so you can nibble the food as you move along, and hawkers yelling out their wares give the place a marketlike atmosphere. Fast-food counters sell salads, grilled eel, chicken, sushi, and other ready-to-eat dishes. The rest of the floors offer clothing, furniture, art galleries, kitchenware, and a million other things. Loft, Seibu's department for household goods and interior design, and Wave, Seibu's CD department, occupy the top four floors of the main building. Many of the best Japanese and Western designers have boutiques here; it also carries large, tall, and petite sizes.

There's another Seibu in Ginza near the elevated tracks of the JR Yamanote Line (☎ 03/3286-0111; open Mon–Tues 11:30am–8pm, Wed–Fri 11am–9pm, Sat–Sun 11am–8pm; Station: Yurakucho, 1 min.). It specializes mostly in women's clothing and accessories, from casual to formal wear. Next to it is Hankyu, another large department store. Also look for Seibu in Shibuya at 21-1 Udagawacho (☎ 03/3462-0111; open Sun–Wed 10am–8pm, Thurs–Sat 10am–9pm; Station: Shibuya, Hachiko exit, 2 min.). Similar to the main store in Ikebukuro, this Seibu consists of two buildings connected by pedestrian skywalks, with lots of designer boutiques like Issey Miyake, Comme des Garçons, Tsumori Chisato, Vivienne Westwood, and Vivienne Tam. Nearby are Loft, with household goods, and Movida, a fashion department store with fun young fashions for waifs.

Open Sunday to Wednesday 10am to 8pm; Thursday to Saturday 10am to 9pm. 1-28-1 Minami Ikebukuro, Toshima-ku. ☎ 03/3981-0111. Station: Ikebukuro (underneath the store).

Takashimaya This department store provides stiff competition for Mitsukoshi, with a history just as long. It was founded as a kimono shop in Kyoto during the Edo Period and opened in Tokyo in 1933. Today it's one of the city's most attractive department stores, with white-gloved elevator operators whisking customers to eight floors of shopping and dining. Naturally, it features boutiques by such famous designers as Chanel, Louis Vuitton, Gucci, Issey Miyake, and more. Its sale of used kimono (look for advertisements in the Japan Times) draws huge crowds. Daily 10am to 8pm. 2-4-1 Nihombashi (on Chuo Dori Ave.), Chuo-ku. ☎ 03/3211-4111. Station: Nihombashi (1 min.).

Takashimaya Times Square Since its opening in 1996, Takashimaya Times Square has been the number-one draw in Shinjuku and is packed on weekends. Much larger than Takashimaya's Nihombashi flagship, this huge complex is anchored by the Takashimaya department store, which boasts 10 floors of clothing and restaurants (lower floors target the affluent elderly, while upper floors appeal to younger shoppers and families; petite and “queen-size” clothing are on the sixth floor). There's also Tokyu Hands with everything imaginable for the home hobbyist, and Kinokuniya bookstore with English-language books on the sixth floor. Open daily 10am to 8pm; closed some Wednesdays. 5–24–2 Sendagaya, Shinjuku-ku. ☎ 03/5361-1122. Station: Shinjuku (1 min.). Across the street from Shinjuku Station's south exit.

Wako This is one of Ginza's smallest department stores but also one of its classiest, housed in one of the few area buildings that survived World War II. It was erected in 1932, and now is famous for its distinctive clock tower, graceful curved facade, and innovative window displays. The owners are the Hattori family, founders of the Seiko watch company. The store's ground floor carries a wide selection of Seiko watches and handbags, while the upper floors carry imported and domestic fashions and luxury items with prices to match. It caters to older, well-to-do customers; you won't find hordes of young Japanese girls shopping here. Open Monday to Saturday 10:30am to 6pm; closed holidays. 4–5–11 Ginza (at Ginza 4-chome Crossing), Chuo-ku. ☎ 03/3562-2111. Station: Ginza (1 min.).

ELECTRONICS

The largest concentration of electronics and electrical-appliance shops in Japan is in an area of Tokyo called Akihabara Electric Town (Denkigai), also known simply as Akiba and centered around Chuo Dori (Station: Akihabara). Although you can find good deals on video and audio equipment elsewhere (especially just west of Shinjuku Station, where Yodobashi—see “Cameras” below—dominates with several stores devoted to electronics), Akihabara is a must-see simply for its sheer volume. With more than 600 multilevel stores, shops, and stalls, Akihabara accounts for one-tenth of the nation's electronics and electrical-appliance sales. An estimated 50,000 shoppers come here on a weekday, 100,000 per day on a weekend. Even if you don't buy anything, it's great fun walking around. If you do intend to buy, make sure you know what the item would cost back home. Or, you may be able to pick up something that's unavailable back home. Most of the stores and stalls are open-fronted, and many are painted neon green and pink. Salespeople yell out their wares, trying to get customers to look at their cellular phones, computers, video equipment, digital cameras, CD and DVD players, TVs, calculators, watches, and rice cookers. This is the best place to see the latest models of everything electronic; it's an educational experience in itself.

If you are buying, be sure to bargain and don't buy at the first place you go to. One woman I know who was looking for a portable music device bought it at the third shop she went to for ¥4,000 ($33/£17) less than what was quoted to her at the first shop. Make sure, too, that whatever you purchase is made for export—that is, with instructions in English, an international warranty, and the proper electrical connectors. All the larger stores have duty-free floors where products are made for export, and most shops are open daily from about 10am to 8pm or later.

The largest store is Yodobashi Camera, just east of JR Akihabara Station at 1–1 Hanaoka-cho (☎ 03/5209-1010), which offers much more than cameras on its six floors, including computers, games, rice cookers, bicycles, and more (some people fear this newcomer will put independent shop owners out of business). Other reputable stores include Laox, 15–3 Soto-Kanda (☎ 03/3255-5301) and AKKY International, 1–12–5 Soto-Kanda (☎ 03/5207-5027). If you're serious about buying, check these stores first.

In recent years, Akihabara has also earned a reputation as a center for Japanese pop culture, including anime, manga, and cosplay (short for “costume play,” or dress-up clothes). Animate, on Chuo Dori at 4–3–2 Soto-Kanda (☎ 03/5992-1234), is a huge draw for manga lovers, but it's also worth popping into ³⁶ Don Quixote just a bit farther north (☎ 03/5298-5411), which has to be seen to appreciate its jumble of everyday goods too numerous to mention, including maid costumes (a perennial favorite) and even a maid cafe where waitresses are dressed as maids on the fifth floor. Anime fans will also want to stop by the free Tokyo Anime Center, just north of the JR Akihabara Station on the fourth floor of UDX (☎ 03/5298-1188; www.animecenter.jp; open Tues–Sun 11am–7pm), with an information desk, a merchandise shop, and a 3-D theater (admission charged for the theater).

For more information on Akihabara, go to www.akihabara-tour.com; at press time, free 2-hour tours of Akihabara were offered every Saturday at 1pm.

Cameras

You can purchase cameras at many duty-free shops, including those in Akihabara, but if you're serious about photographic equipment, make a trip to a shop dealing specifically in cameras, including Yodobashi Camera, above. If a new camera is too formidable an expense, consider buying a used camera. New models come out so frequently in Japan that older models can be snapped up for next to nothing.

Bic Camera This huge, eight-floor store near the Ginza offers not only single-lens reflex, large and medium format, and digital cameras, but also computers, DVD and MP3 players, video cameras, watches, toys, and much more. Note, however, that it caters primarily to Japanese; English-speaking sales clerks are scarce, and export models are limited. Ask for the English-language brochure, and if you're buying sensitive equipment, make sure it will work outside Japan and comes with English-language instructions. Open daily 10am to 10pm. There's a branch in Shibuya at 1–24–12 Shibuya (☎ 03/5466-1111; daily 10am–8pm; Station: Shibuya, 2 min.). 1–11–1 Yurakucho, Chiyoda-ku. ☎ 03/5221-1112. Station: Yurakucho (1 min.).

37 Lemon Its name doesn't inspire confidence, but this company specializes in used and new cameras from around the world. On the eighth floor are both new and used Japanese and foreign cameras, including digital cameras and large-format models. Leica, Hasselblad, Rolleiflex, Canon, and Nikon are just some of the brands available, along with watches and eyeglasses. A camera buff's paradise. Open Monday to Saturday 11am to 8pm, Sunday 11am to 5pm. 4–2–2 Ginza, Chuo-ku. ☎ 03/3567-3131. Station: Ginza (1 min.). In a green glazed-brick building also housing a church.

Yodobashi Camera Shinjuku is the photographic equipment center for Tokyo, and this store, 1 block west of the station, is the biggest in the area. It ranks as one of the largest discount camera shops in the world (though the new Yodobashi in Akihabara, above, now surpasses it), with around 30,000 items in stock, and it reputedly sells approximately 500 to 600 cameras daily. Prices are marked, but you can bargain here. In addition to cameras, it sells watches, calculators, computers, and other electronic equipment, though if you're interested specifically in watches, clocks, audio/video equipment, games, and other wares, nearby branches specialize in all of these (ask at the main shop for a map of the area). Open daily 9:30am to 10pm. 1–11–1 Nishi-Shinjuku, Shinjuku-ku. ☎ 03/3346-1010. Station: Shinjuku (west exit, 3 min.).

FASHIONS

The department stores and shopping malls listed earlier are all good places to check out the latest trends. For inexpensive, basic clothing (think Japanese version of Gap), look for one of the 40 Uniqlo shops in Tokyo selling T-shirts, jeans, socks, shirts, and other clothing for the entire family. A convenient location is 5–7–7 Ginza, on Chuo Dori (☎ 03/5569-6781; Station: Ginza). Another popular chain, selling cotton clothing in basic colors, is Muji, with its flagship located next to the Tourist Information Center at 3–8–3 Marunouchi (☎ 03/5208-8241; Station: Yurakucho).

Otherwise, Harajuku and Shibuya are the places to go for hundreds of small shops selling inexpensive designer knockoffs, as well as fashion department stores—multi-storied buildings filled with concessions of various designers and labels. The stores below are two of the best known and largest.

La Forêt This is not only the largest store in Harajuku but also one of the most fashionable, appealing mostly to teenage and 20-something shoppers. Young and upcoming Japanese designers are here as well as established names, in boutiques spread on several floors. There's so much to see—from pink frilly dresses to Goth—you can easily kill a few hours here. Open daily 11am to 8pm. 1–11–6 Jingumae, Shibuya-ku. ☎ 03/3475-0411. Station: Meiji-Jingumae (1 min.) or Harajuku (3 min.). Just off Harajuku's main intersection of Omotesando Dori and Meiji Dori.

Parco A division of Seibu, Parco is actually three buildings clustered together and called Parco Part 1, Part 2, and Part 3. Parco Part 1 is the place to go for designer boutiques for men and women, with clothes by Japanese designers like Yohji Yamamoto and Tsumori Chisato and such foreign designers as Anna Sui and Vivienne Westwood. Part 2 has furniture and household goods, while Part 3 is devoted to casual, young fashions. Parco has two sales a year that you shouldn't miss if you're here—one in January and one in July. Open daily 10am to 9pm. 15–1 Udagawacho, Shibuya-ku. ☎ 03/3464-5111. Station: Shibuya (Hachiko exit, 4 min.).

Designer Boutiques

Ginza is home to international designer names, including Prada, Cartier, Chanel, and Louis Vuitton. For top Japanese designers, the block between Omotesando Crossing and the Nezu Museum (currently undergoing renovation) in Aoyama (Station: Omotesando, 2 min.) is the Rodeo Drive of Japan. Even if you can't buy here (steep prices for most pocketbooks), a stroll is de rigueur for clothes hounds and those interested in design. Most shops are open daily from 11am to 8pm.

Issey Miyake (☎ 03/3423-1408), on the left side as you walk from Aoyama Dori, offers two floors of cool, spacious displays of Miyake's interestingly structured designs for men and women. (His very popular Pleats Please line is around the corner on Aoyama Dori, 3–13–21 Minami Aoyama; ☎ 03/5772-7750.) Across the street is Comme des Garçons (☎ 03/3406-3951), Rei Kawakubo's showcase for her daring—and constantly evolving—men's and women's designs. The goddess of Japanese fashion and one of the few females in the business when she started, Kawakubo has remained on the cutting edge of design for more than 2 decades. Of the many non-Japanese designers to have invaded this trendy neighborhood in recent years, none stands out as much as Prada (☎ 03/6418-0400), a bubble of convex/concave windows on the right side of the street. One of Japan's newer designers, Tsumori Chisato, has a shop on the left side of the street (☎ 03/3423-5170). Also worth seeking out is Yohji Yamamoto on the right (☎ 03/3409-6006), where Yamamoto's unique, classically wearable clothes are sparingly hung, flaunting the avant-garde interior space.

On the other side of Aoyama Dori, on Omotesando Dori, is Hanae Mori (☎ 03/3400-3301), the grande dame of Japanese design, with everything from separates and men's golf wear to haute couture and wedding gowns on display on three floors of a building designed by Japanese architect Kenzo Tange.

FLEA MARKETS

Flea markets are good opportunities to shop for antiques as well as delightful junk. You can pick up secondhand kimono at very reasonable prices, as well as kitchenware, vases, cast-iron teapots, small chests, dolls, household items, and odds and ends. (Don't expect to find any good buys in furniture.) The markets usually begin as early as dawn or 6am and last until 3 or 4pm or so, but go early if you want to pick up bargains. Bargaining is expected. Note that because most are outdoors, they tend to be canceled if it rains.

Togo Shrine, on Meiji Dori in Harajuku (near Meiji-Jingumae and Harajuku stations), has an antiques market on the first Sunday of every month from 4am to 2pm. Great for used kimono as well as small furniture and curios, it's one of my favorites. Nogi Shrine, a 1-minute walk from Nogizaka Station, has an antiques flea market from dawn to about 2pm the second Sunday of each month except November.

Hanazono Shrine, near the Yasukuni Dori/Meiji Dori intersection east of Shinjuku Station (a 5-min. walk from Shinjuku Sancho Station), has a flea market every Sunday from dawn to about 2pm (except in May and Nov due to festivals). But it's Oedo Antique Fair, held in the courtyard of the Tokyo International Forum beside Yurakucho Station, that claims to be Tokyo's largest fair of international antiques. Held the first and third Sunday of the month from 8am to 5pm, it features Western antiques (at highly inflated prices), as well as Japanese furniture, ceramics, furniture, kimono, woodblock prints, and more. If you hit only one flea market, this should be it.

Finally, the closest thing Tokyo has to a permanent flea market is Ameya Yokocho (also referred to as Ameyokocho or Ameyacho), a narrow street near Ueno Park that runs along and underneath the elevated tracks of the JR Yamanote Line between Ueno and Okachimachi stations. There are about 400 stalls here selling discounted items ranging from fish, seaweed, and vegetables to handbags, tennis shoes, cosmetics, watches, and casual clothes. The scene retains something of the shitamachi spirit of old Tokyo. Although housewives have been coming here for years, young Japanese recently discovered the market as a good bargain spot for fashions, accessories, and cosmetics. Some shops close on Wednesdays, but hours are usually daily from 10am to 7pm; early evening is the most crowded time. Don't even think of coming here on a holiday—it's a standstill pedestrian traffic jam.

KIMONO

Chicago, on Omotesando Dori in Harajuku (☎ 03/3409-5017; Station: Meiji-Jingumae, 1 min., or Harajuku, 2 min.), is a good place for used kimono. It stocks hundreds of affordable used kimono, cotton yukata, and obi (sashes) back in the far left corner of the basement shop, past the used American clothes. It's open daily from 11am to 8pm. The nearby Oriental Bazaar (p. 203) also has a decent selection of new and used kimono at affordable prices, including elaborate wedding kimono. On weekends and holidays, there's a secondhand kimono stand on the corner of Meiji Dori and Omotesando Dori in Harajuku from 11am to 5pm, with very good prices.

In addition, department stores sell new kimono, notably Takashimaya and Mitsukoshi in Nishinomiya and Isetan in Shinjuku. They also hold sales for rental wedding kimono. Flea markets are also good for used kimono and yukata, particularly the antiques market at Togo Shrine.

Established in 1913, Hayashi Kimono (☎ 03/3501-4012), in the International Arcade (near the Imperial Hotel under the elevated JR Yamamoto train tracks; Station: Hibiya), sells all manner of kimono, including antique kimono, cotton yukata, and tanzen (the heavy winter overcoat that goes over the yukata), as well as used and antique kimono. If you're buying a gift for someone back home, this is a good place to start. Open daily from 10am to 7pm (to 6pm on Sun).

KITCHENWARE & TABLEWARE

In addition to the department stores listed above, the best place to shop for items related to cooking and serving is Kappabashi-dougugai Dori (Station: Tawaramachi), popularly known as Kappabashi; this is Japan's largest wholesale area for cookware. There are approximately 150 specialty stores here selling cookware, including sukiyaki pots, woks, lunch boxes, pots and pans, aprons, knives, china, lacquerware, rice cookers, plastic food (the kind you see in restaurant display cases), and disposable wooden chopsticks in bulk. Although stores are wholesalers selling mainly to restaurants, you're welcome to browse and purchase as well. Stores are closed on Sunday but are otherwise open from about 10am to 5pm.

PEARLS

Mikimoto, on Chuo Dori not far from Ginza 4-chome Crossing, past Wako department store (☎ 03/3535-54611; Station: Ginza, 1 min.), is Japan's most famous pearl shop. It was founded by Mikimoto Koichi, the first to produce a really good cultured pearl, in 1905. Open Thursday to Tuesday 11am to 7:30pm. Also, there's a Mikimoto branch (☎ 03/3591-5001) in the Imperial Hotel Arcade, under the Imperial Hotel (Station: Hibiya), where you'll also find Asahi Shoten (☎ 03/3503-2528), with a good selection in the modest-to-moderate price range; and Uyeda Jeweller (☎ 03/3503-2587), with a wide selection of pearls in many price ranges.

10 Tokyo After Dark

By day, Tokyo is arguably one of the least attractive cities in the world. Come dusk, however, Tokyo comes into its own. The drabness fades, the city blossoms into a profusion of giant neon lights and paper lanterns, and its streets fill with millions of overworked Japanese out to have a good time. If you ask me, Tokyo at night is one of the craziest cities in the world, a city that never gives up and never seems to sleep. Entertainment districts are as crowded at 3am as they are at 10pm, with many establishments open until the first subways start running after 5am. Whether it's jazz, reggae, gay bars, sex shows, dance clubs, mania, or madness that you're searching for, Tokyo has it all.

GETTING TO KNOW THE SCENE Tokyo has several nightlife districts spread throughout the city, each with its own atmosphere, price range, and clientele. Most famous are probably Kabuki-cho in Shinjuku, and Roppongi. Before visiting any of the locales suggested below, be sure to just walk around one of these neighborhoods and absorb the atmosphere. The streets will be crowded, the neon lights will be overwhelming, and you never know what you might discover on your own.

Although there are many bars, discos, and clubs packed with young Japanese of both sexes, nightlife in Japan for the older generations is still pretty much a man's domain, just as it has been for centuries. At the high end of this domain are the geisha bars, concentrated primarily in Kyoto. All Japanese cities, however, have so-called hostess bars; in Tokyo these are concentrated in Ginza, Roppongi, Shinjuku, and Akasaka. A woman will sit at your table, talk to you, pour your drinks, listen to your problems, and boost your ego. You buy her drinks as well, which is one reason the tab can be so high. Hostess bars in various forms have been a part of Japanese society for centuries. Most of you will probably find the cost of visiting a hostess bar not worth the price, as hostesses usually speak Japanese only, but such places provide Japanese males with sympathetic ears and the chance to escape the world of both work and family. Men usually have their favorite hostess bar, often a small place with just enough room for regular customers. In the more exclusive hostess bars, only those customers with an introduction are allowed entrance.

The most popular nightlife spots are drinking establishments, where the vast majority of Japan's office workers, college students, and expatriates goes for an evening out. These places include Western-style bars as well as Japanese-style watering holes, called nomi-ya. Yakitori-ya, restaurant-bars that serve yakitori and other snacks, are included in this group. Dancing and live-music venues are also hugely popular with young Tokyoites. At the low end of the spectrum are Tokyo's topless bars, strip shows, massage parlors, and porn shops, with the largest concentration of such places in Shinjuku's Kabuki-cho District.

In addition to the establishments listed below, be sure to check the restaurants listed in the inexpensive category under "Where to Dine" in chapter 4 for a relatively cheap night out on the town. Many places serve as both eateries and watering holes, especially yakitori-ya.

EXTRA CHARGES & TAXES One more thing you should be aware of is the "table charge" that some bars and many cocktail lounges charge their customers. Included in the table charge is usually a small appetizer—maybe nuts, chips, or a vegetable. For this reason, some places call it an otsumami, or a snack charge. At any rate, the charge is usually between ¥300 and ¥500 ($2.50–$4.15/£1.25–£2.10) per person. Some establishments levy a table charge only after a certain time in the evening; others may add it only if you don't order food from the menu. If you're not sure and it matters to you, be sure to ask before ordering anything. Remember, too, that there's a 5% consumption tax, though most menus already include it in their price. Higher-end establishments, especially nightclubs, hostess bars, and some dance clubs, will also add a 10% to 20% service charge.

FINDING OUT WHAT'S ON Keep an eye out for Metropolis (www.metropolis.co.jp), a free weekly which carries a nightlife section covering concerts, theaters, and events and is available at bars, restaurants, and other venues around town. The Japan Times and Daily Yomiuri also have entertainment sections.

GETTING TICKETS FOR EVENTS If you're staying in one of the higher-class hotels, the concierge or guest-relations manager can usually get tickets for you. Otherwise, you can always head to the theater or hall itself. It's easier, however, to go through a ticket service such as Ticket PIA (☎ 0570/02-9999), which has many outlets around town, including the Sony Building in the Ginza (5-3-1 Ginza) and Ise-tan department store annex in Shinjuku.

THE PERFORMING ARTS

For descriptions of Japanese traditional performance arts such as Kabuki and Noh, see "Cultural Snapshots: Japanese Arts in a Nutshell," in appendix A. In addition to the performance art listings below, Tokyo also has occasional shows of more avant-garde or lesser-known performance art productions, including highly stylized Butoh dance performances from such companies as Sankai Juku and percussion demonstrations by Kodo drummers and other Japanese drum groups. See one of the publications listed above for complete listings.

KABUKI Tokyo's most prestigious Kabuki theater is Kabukiza (★☆☆, 4-12-15 Ginza (☎ 03/5565-6000 for advance reservations; www.shochiku.co.jp/play/kabukiza/theater). Conveniently located within easy walking distance of the Ginza 4-chome Crossing (directly above the Higashi-Ginza Station), this impressive theater with a Momoyama-style facade (influenced by 16th-c. castle architecture) is a remake of the 1924 original building. It seats almost 2,000 and features the usual Kabuki stage fittings, including a platform that can be raised above and lowered below the stage for dramatic appearances and disappearances of actors, a revolving stage, and a runway stage extending into the audience.

The Kabukiza stages about eight or nine Kabuki productions a year. Each production begins its run between the first and third of each month and runs about 25 days (no shows in Aug). Usually, two different programs are shown; matinees run from about 11 or 11:30am to 4pm and evening performances from about 4:30 or 5pm to about 9pm. It's considered perfectly okay to come for only part of a performance.

Of course, you won't be able to understand what's being said, but that doesn't matter; the productions themselves are great entertainment. For an outline of the plot, you should rent English-language earphones for ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70), plus a ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) refundable deposit—these provide a running commentary on the story, music, actors, stage properties, and other aspects of Kabuki. Renting earphones will add immensely to your enjoyment of the play.

Tickets generally range from ¥3,000 to ¥22,000 ($25–$183/£13–£92), depending on the program and seat location. Advance tickets can be purchased at the Advance Ticket Office to the right side of Kabukiza's main entrance from 10am to 6pm. You may also make advance reservations by phone (same-day bookings are not accepted). Otherwise, tickets for each day's performance are placed on sale 1 hour before the start of each performance.

If you don't have time for an entire performance or if you wish to view Kabuki only for a short while, it's possible to watch a single act (makumi). One-acts generally last about 1 or 1½ hours, with tickets per act costing ¥800 to ¥1,300 ($6.65–$11/£3.35–£5.50) depending on the time of day and length of the show. English-language earphones here cost ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for one act. Note that seats are a bit far from the stage, on the very top two rows of the theater (on the fourth floor; there is no elevator). On the other hand, I have seen several acts this way, sometimes simply dropping by when I'm in the area; it's a marvelous midday break from the rigors of shopping. These tickets, sold at the smaller entrance to the left of the main entrance, are available on a first-come, first-served basis and go on sale 20 minutes prior to each act. If you liked the act so much that you wish to remain for the next one, it's possible to do so if the act is not sold out; tickets in these cases are usually available on the fourth floor.

If there are no shows at Kabukiza, you may be able to see Kabuki at the National Theater of Japan (Kokuritsu Gekijo), 4-1 Hayabusacho, Chiyoda-ku (☎ 03/3230-3000; www.ntj.jac.go.jp; Station: Hanzomon, 6 min.). Kabuki is scheduled throughout the year except during February, May, August, and September, when Bunraku (see below) is staged. Matinees usually begin at 11am or noon, and afternoon performances at 2:30 or 5pm. Most tickets range from about ¥1,500 to ¥3,800 ($13–$32/£6.25–£16), with earphones available for ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) plus a ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) deposit.

NOH Noh is performed at a number of locations in Tokyo, but most famous is the National Noh Theater (Kokuritsu Nohgakudo), 4-18-1 Sendagaya, Shibuya-ku (☎ 03/3423-1331; Station: Sendagaya, 5 min.). Opened in 1983, it is dedicated to presenting classical Noh and kyogen, with about three to five performances monthly. Tickets range from about ¥2,600 to ¥4,800 ($22–$40/£11–£20) but are often sold out in advance. However, about 30 tickets are held back to be sold on the day of the performance. In addition, privately sponsored Noh performances are also held here, for which the admission varies. Check the Japan Times or Daily Yomiuri for performance dates and times.

BUNRAKU Although the main Bunraku theater in Japan is in Osaka, the National Theater of Japan (see above for information) stages about four Bunraku plays a year (in Feb, May, Aug, and Sept). There are usually two to three performances daily, beginning at 11am, with tickets costing ¥1,500 to ¥6,500 ($13–$54/£6.25–£27). Earphones with English-language explanations are available for ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70), plus a ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) deposit.

TAKARAZUKA KAGEKIDAN This world-famous, all-female troupe stages elaborate musical revues with dancing, singing, and gorgeous costumes, with performances ranging from Japanese versions of Broadway hits to original Japanese works based on local legends. The first Takarazuka troupe, formed in 1912 at a resort near Osaka, gained instant notoriety because all its performers were women, in contrast to the all-male Kabuki. When I went to see this troupe perform, I was surprised to find that the audience also consisted almost exclusively of women; indeed, the troupe has an almost cultlike following.

Performances, with story synopses available in English, are generally held in March, April, July, August, November, December, and sometimes in June, at Tokyo Takarazuka Gekijo, 1–1–3 Yurakucho (☎ 03/5251-2001; Station: Hibiya, 1 min.). Tickets, available at the box office or through Ticket Pia (☎ 0570/02-9999), usually range about ¥3,500 to ¥10,000 ($29–$83/£14–£42).

KINGYO ♠ This sophisticated nightclub stages one of the most high-energy, visually charged acts I've ever seen: nonstop action of ascending and receding stages and stairs, fast-paced choreography, elaborate costumes, and loud music. There are a few female dancers, but most of the dancers are males assuming female parts, just like in Kabuki. In fact, many of the performances center on traditional Japanese themes with traditional dress and kimono, but the shows take place in a technically sophisticated setting. There are also satires: One past performance included a piece on Microsoft vs. Apple; another featured aliens from outer space—great fun. It's located in the Roppongi nightlife district at 3–14–17 Roppongi (☎ 03/3478-3000; Station: Roppongi, 4 min.), near the Roppongi cemetery. (From Roppongi Crossing, walk toward Tokyo Tower on Gaien-Higashi Dori and take the second left; it's on the right) Cover is ¥4,000 ($33/£16) for daily shows at 7:20 and 9:50pm, with additional shows Friday and Saturday at 1:20am. Reservations are recommended.

THE CLUB & MUSIC SCENE

THE MAJOR ENTERTAINMENT DISTRICTS

GINZA A chic and expensive shopping area by day, Ginza transforms itself into a dazzling entertainment district of restaurants, bars, and first-grade hostess bars at night. It's the most sophisticated of Tokyo's nightlife districts and is also one of the most expensive. Some of the Japanese businessmen you see out carousing in Ginza are paying by expense account; prices can be ridiculously high.

Because I'm not wealthy, I prefer Shinjuku and Roppongi. However, because Ginza does have some fabulous restaurants and several hotels, I've included some reasonably priced recommendations for a drink in the area if you happen to find yourself here after dinner. The cheapest way to absorb the atmosphere in Ginza is simply to wander about, particularly around Namiki Dori and its side streets.

SHINJUKU Northeast of Shinjuku Station is an area called Kabuki-cho, which undoubtedly has the craziest nightlife in all of Tokyo, with block after block of strip joints, massage parlors, pornography shops, peep shows, bars, restaurants, and, as the night wears on, lots of drunk revelers. A world of its own, it's sleazy, chaotic, crowded, vibrant, and fairly safe. Despite its name, Shinjuku's primary night hot spot has nothing to do with Kabuki. At one time, there was a plan to bring some culture to the area by introducing a Kabuki theater; the plan never materialized but the name stuck. Although Kabuki-cho used to be the domain of businessmen out on the town, nowadays young Japanese, including college-age men and women, have claimed parts of it as their own; the result is a growing number of inexpensive drinking and live-music venues well worth a visit.

To the east of Kabuki-cho, just west of Hanazono Shrine, is a smaller district called Goruden Gai, which is "Golden Guy" mispronounced. It's a warren of tiny alleyways leading past even tinier bars, each consisting of just a counter and a few chairs. Many of these closet-size bars are closed to outsiders, catering to regular customers, though others welcome strangers as well. Although many thought Goruden Gai would succumb to land-hungry developers in the 1980s, the economic recession brought a stay of execution and now Goruden Gai has experienced a revival, with more than 100 tiny drinking dens lining the tiny streets. Still, it occupies such expensive land that I still fear for the life of this tiny enclave, one of Tokyo's most fascinating.

Even farther east is Shinjuku 2-chome (pronounced "nee-chomay"), officially recognized as the gay-bar district of Shinjuku. Its lively street scene of mostly gays and some straights of all ages (but mostly young) make this one of the most vibrant nightlife districts. It's here that I was once taken to a host bar featuring young men in crotchless pants. The clientele included both gay men and groups of young, giggling office girls. That place has since closed down, but Shinjuku is riddled with other spots bordering on the absurd.

The best thing to do in Shinjuku is to simply walk about. In the glow of neon light, you'll pass everything from smoke-filled restaurants to hawkers trying to get you to step inside so they can part you from your money. If you're looking for strip joints, topless or bottomless coffee shops, peep shows, or porn, I leave you to your own devices, but you certainly won't have any problems finding them. In Kabuki-cho alone there are an estimated 200 sex businesses in operation, including bathhouses where women are available for sex at a high price. Although prostitution is illegal in Japan, everyone seems to ignore what goes on behind closed doors. Just be sure you know what you're getting into; your bill may end up much higher than you bargained for.

A word of warning for women traveling alone: Forgo the experience of strolling around Kabuki-cho. The streets are crowded and therefore relatively safe, but you may not feel comfortable with so many inebriated men stumbling around. If there are two of you, however, go for it. I took my mother to Kabuki-cho for a spin around the neon, and we escaped relatively unscathed. You're also fine walking alone to any of this guidebook's recommended restaurants.

ROPPONGI To Tokyo's younger crowd, Roppongi is the city's most fashionable place to hang out. It's also a favorite with the foreign community, including models, business types, and English-language teachers. Roppongi has more than its fair share of live-music houses, restaurants, dance clubs, ex-patriate bars, and pubs. Some Tokyoites complain that Roppongi is too crowded, too crass, and too commercialized (and has too many foreigners), but for the casual visitor I think Roppongi offers an excellent opportunity to see what's new and hot in the capital city, and it's easy to navigate because nightlife activity is so concentrated.

The center of Roppongi is Roppongi Crossing (the intersection of Roppongi Dori and Gaien-Higashi Dori), at the corner of which sits the garishly pink Almond Coffee Shop. The shop itself has mediocre coffee and desserts at terribly inflated prices, but the sidewalk in front of the store is the number-one meeting spot in Roppongi.

If you need directions, there's a conveniently located police box (koban) catty-corner from the Almond Coffee Shop and next to a bank. It has a big map of the Roppongi area showing the address system, and someone is always there to help.

If the buzz of Roppongi is too much, a quieter, saner alternative is neighboring Nishi-Azabu, which has restaurants and bars catering to both Japanese and foreigners. The center of Nishi-Azabu is the next big crossroads, Nishi-Azabu Crossing (the intersection of Roppongi Dori and Gaien-Nishi Dori). Nishi Azabu is about a 10-minute walk from Roppongi Station, past Roppongi Hills in the direction of Shibuya. Roppongi Hills is a massive urban development with many restaurants and some bars of its own, while the newest kid on the block, Tokyo Midtown, has brought gentrification—and an influx of affluent customers—to Roppongi's nightlife.

LIVE MUSIC

The live-music scene exploded in the 1990s and is now located throughout the metropolis. In addition to the dedicated venues below, several bars offer live music most nights of the week, including What the Dickens (see "The Bar Scene," below).

Bauhaus Since 1981, this small club has the same great house band that plays mostly 1970s and 1980s British and American hard rock (Led Zeppelin, Queen, Jimi Hendrix, The Who, Aerosmith, The Eagles, Van Halen, Santana), with music beginning at 8pm. The band puts on quite a show—a bit raunchy at times, but very polished. Hours are Monday to Saturday 7pm to 1am. Closed holidays. Reine Roppongi, 2nd floor, 5-3-4 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3403-0092. Cover ¥2,835 ($24/£12). Station: Roppongi (3 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, walk toward Tokyo Tower on Gaien-Higashi Dori and turn right at McDonald's. It's ahead to the right of the parking lot.

Birdland Open since the 1970s and moving from Roppongi to Akasaka in 2007, this music club features jazz (with an emphasis on 1940s swing performed by Japanese musicians), as well as other types of music, including Hawaiian folk 2 to 3 nights a week. It attracts an older, knowledgeable, and appreciative crowd. The official cover price is ¥3,600 ($30/£15), but management will let you in for most shows for ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) if you show them this guide. Open Monday to Saturday 6pm to midnight (music begins at 7pm). Akasaka KT Building, 5th floor, 3-16-7 Akasaka. ☎ 03/3583-3546. www.birdland-tokyo.jp. Cover ¥3,600 ($30/£15) plus ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) drink minimum and 10% service charge. Station: Akasaka (2 min.) or Akasaka-mitsuke (5 min.). On Hitosuji Dori, across from a shrine.

Blue Note Tokyo's most expensive, elegant jazz venue is cousin to the famous Blue Note in New York. The musicians are top-notch; Oscar Peterson, Sarah Vaughan, Tony Bennett, Chick Corea, David Sanborn, and the Milt Jackson Quartet have all performed here. However, the 300-seat establishment follows the frustrating practice of selling tickets good for only one set. There are usually two sets nightly, generally at 7 and 9:30pm. 6-3-16 Minami Aoyama. ☎ 03/5485-0088. www.bluenote.co.jp. Cover ¥7,350-¥8,400 ($61-$70/£30-£35) for most performances, more for top names. Station: Omotesando (8 min.). Off Kotto Dori.

Cavern Club If you know your Beatles history, you'll know Cavern is the name of the Liverpool club where the Fab Four got their start. The Tokyo club features Beatles memorabilia and house bands performing Beatles music exclusively and very convincingly at that. Close your eyes—and you'll swear you're listening to the real thing. Extremely popular with both Japanese and foreigners, it's packed on weekends; expect long lines, or call to reserve a table. Hours are Monday to Saturday 6pm to 2:30am; Sunday and holidays 6pm to midnight. 5-3-2 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3405-5207. Cover ¥1,890 ($16/£8) for men, 1,575 ($13/£6.50) for women, plus a 1 drink minimum and 10% service charge. Station: Roppongi (4 min.). Take the side street going downhill on the left side of Almond Coffee Shop and then take the 1st left; the club will be on the right.

Crocodile Popular with a young Japanese crowd, the eclectic Crocodile describes itself as a casual rock-'n'-roll club, with live bands ranging from rock and blues to jazz-fusion, reggae, soul, experimental, and even country and Hawaiian; it's a good place to check out new Japanese bands (a live-action video of the performing band at the front door helps you decide if it's a band you want to see). The club has an interesting interior and a good, laid-back atmosphere. Open daily 6pm to 2am; music starts at 8pm. 6-18-8 Jingumae. ☎ 03/3499-5205. Cover ¥2,000-¥3,000 ($17-$25/£8.50-£13), occasionally more for big acts. Station: Meiji-Jingumae or Shibuya (10 min.). On Meiji Dori halfway between Harajuku and Shibuya.

Liquidroom This is the most happening place in Ebisu (if not all of Tokyo) for live events, with concerts, well-known DJs, and stage events most nights of the week. Lots of groups kick off their world tours here, in a huge, cavernous room where the energy is so pervasive the floor vibrates. Adjoining Liquidroom is Tower Café (managed by Tower Records), open Monday to Friday 11:30am to 10:30pm and Saturday and Sunday from 3 to 10:30pm. Liquidroom usually opens around 6pm, with live events from about 7 to 10pm or later. 3-16-6 Higashi. ☎ 03/5464-0800. Cover ¥3,000-6,000 ($25-$50/£13-£25). Station: Ebisu (3 min.). Take the west exit, cross Komazawa Dori and turn right, then left at Meiji Dori; it will be on your left.

New York Bar This is one of Tokyo's most sophisticated venues, boasting Manhattan-style jazz and breathtaking views of glittering west Shinjuku. Unfortunately, it's also one of the city's smallest. Consider coming for dinner in the adjacent New York

Grill (p. 154); it costs a small fortune, but you'll save the cost of the cover. Hours are daily from 5pm, with live music 8pm to midnight. Park Hyatt Hotel, 52nd floor, 3-7-1-2 Nishi-Shinjuku. ☎ 03/5322-1234. Cover ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50). Station: Shinjuku (13 min.), Hatsudai on the Keio Line (7 min.), or Tochomae (8 min.).

Ruby Room I've seen living rooms larger than this second-floor venue, home to local acts, open mic on Tuesdays, house and techno DJs, and other events. The crowd depends on the music, but because there's no room to move, people just dance where they are, and the band is close, close, close—any closer and you'd be in the drummer's lap. Hours are Monday to Saturday from 7pm to 5am. 2-25-17 Dogenzaka, Shibuya-ku. ☎ 03/3780-3022. www.rubyroomtokyo.com. Cover ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) Fri-Sat only, including 1 drink. Station: Shibuya (Hachiko exit, 4 min.). Walk up Dogenzaka to Royal Host and take the 1st right; keep to the left at the Y intersection.

Shinjuku Pit Inn This is one of Tokyo's most famous and longest-running jazz, fusion, and blues clubs, featuring both Japanese and foreign musicians. There are two programs daily—from 2:30 to 5pm and from 7:30pm—making it a great place to stop for a bit of music in the middle of the day. 2-12-4 Shinjuku, southeast of the Yasukuni Dori/Meiji Dori intersection. ☎ 03/3354-2024. www.pit-inn.com. Cover from ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50) for the 2:30pm show (¥2,500/$21/£11 weekends and holidays); ¥3,000-¥4,000 ($25-$33/£13-£17) for the evening shows. Station: Shinjuku Sanchoe (4 min.).

DANCE CLUBS & DISCOS

Discos lost popularity after their 1980s heyday, but with the rise of almost cult-figure DJs, dance clubs have witnessed resurgence, with Roppongi still boasting more clubs than anywhere else in the city. Sometimes the cover charge includes drinks, which makes for an inexpensive way to spend an evening. Keep in mind, however, that prices are usually higher on weekends and are sometimes higher for men than for women. Although clubs are required by law to close at midnight, many of them ignore the rule and stay open until dawn. Finally, you must be at least 20 years old (the legal drinking age in Japan) to enter most clubs.

Code Known for its frequent trance and techno events, Kabuki-cho's largest club brings in both Japanese and foreign DJs to keep things hopping on its massive dance floor. Open Friday to Wednesday 7pm to 1am, though Fridays through Mondays it often reopens at 5am for all-night revelers who just can't call it quits. Shinjuku Toho-Kaikan, 4th floor, 1-19-2 Kabuki-cho. ☎ 03/3209-0702. Cover ¥3,000-¥3,500 ($25-$29/£13-£14), including 1 drink. Station: Shinjuku (east exit, 10 min.). Beside Koma Stadium, a Kabuki-cho landmark.

El Café Latino All the smooth Latin moves make their way to the tiny dance floor of this happening club. It's fun to watch, even if you don't know how to perform the salsa, rumba, or other Latin dances. Open Tuesday to Saturday 6pm to 5am, Sunday 6pm to midnight. 3-15-24 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3402-8989. www.elcafelatino.com. Cover (Fri-Sat only) ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50), including 1 drink. Station: Roppongi (4 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, walk toward Tokyo Tower on Gaien-Higashi Dori, turning left at Hamburger Inn and right at Gaspanic.

Kento's Kento's was one of the first places to open when the wave of 1950s nostalgia hit Japan in the 1980s; it has even been credited with creating the craze. This is the place to come to if you feel like dancing the night away to tunes of the 1950s and 1960s played by live bands. Although there's hardly room to dance, that doesn't stop the largely over-30 Japanese audience from twisting in the aisles to the tunes of Elvis, Little Richard, The Temptations, Chuck Berry, and others. Hours are Monday to Saturday from 6pm to 2:30am; Sunday and holidays from 6pm to midnight. (Also at 6–7–12 Ginza, ☎ 03/3572-9161; and in east Shinjuku at 3–18–4 Shinjuku, ☎ 03/3355-6477.) Daini Reine Building, 5–3–1 Roppongi. ☎ 03/3401-5755. Cover ¥1,890 ($16/£8) for men, 1,575 ($13/£6.50) for women, plus 10% service charge and 1 drink minimum. Station: Roppongi (4 min.). Take the side street going downhill on the left side of Almond Coffee Shop and then take the 1st left; the club will be on the right.

Yellow Closed on and off by the boys in blue during its infant rebellious years, this is the closest thing Tokyo has to a true underground disco, staging the city's most progressive events from Butoh performances (a modern minimalist form of dance) to gay nights. Guest DJs from abroad make appearances, playing a variety of music from jazz and reggae to hip-hop, soul, and techno. Only those in the know are supposed to come here, so there's no sign—just a blank, yellow neon square. Hours are daily 10pm to 2 or 4am, but it's often closed for private functions on weekdays, so call ahead. 1–10–11 Nishi-Azabu. ☎ 03/3479-0690. Cover ¥2,500–¥4,000 ($21–$33/£11–£17) including 1 drink, depending on the DJ and the event. Station: Roppongi (10 min.). From Roppongi Crossing, head toward Shibuya on Roppongi Dori. Turn right at the next-to-last street before Gaien-Nishi Dori; it's in the 2nd block on the right.

THE BAR SCENE

GINZA If you're looking for a quiet place for a drink, you can't do better than (38) Lupin ★, 5–5–11 Ginza (☎ 03/3571-0750; Station: Ginza, 2 min.), located in a tiny alley between Namiki and Ginza West 5th Street. This tiny basement bar first opened back in 1928, and little has changed over the decades. Even the staff looks like they've been here since it opened. Because no music is played, it's a good place to come if you want to talk. Note that there's a ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) snack/table charge. The bar is closed Sunday and Monday. Another good bar is the Old Imperial in the Imperial Hotel (☎ 03/3504-1111; Station: Hibiya, 1 min.); the bar is the hotel's tribute to its original architect, Frank Lloyd Wright, and is the only place in the hotel with some Wright originals, including an Art Deco terra-cotta wall and a mural. With its low lighting and comfortable chairs and tables that are copies of Wright originals, it has a clubby, masculine atmosphere. Try a Mount Fuji, the bar's own cocktail original.

Sapporo beer is the draw at Ginza Sapporo Lion, a large beer hall with a mock Gothic ceiling and kitschy decor, on Chuo Dori not far from Matsuzakaya department store (☎ 03/3571-2590; Station: Ginza, 3 min.). A large display of plastic foods and an English-language menu help you choose from snacks ranging from yakitori to sausage and spaghetti.

ASAKUSA Sky Room, on the 22nd floor of the Asahi Beer Tower, across the Sumida River from Sensoji Temple and next to the building that looks like a mug of beer (☎ 03/5608-5277; Station: Asakusa, 4 min.), is a great place for an inexpensive drink after an active day in historic Asakusa. A simple cafeteria-type place, it offers great views as well as different kinds of Asahi beer, wine, coffee, and other drinks, all priced at only ¥550 ($4.60/£2.30) or less. It can be crowded on weekends, and note that the last order is taken at 8:30pm.

SHINJUKU Tiny Albatross, 1–1–7 Kabuki-cho (☎ 03/3203-3699; Station: Shinjuku Sanjome, 8 min.), located up a narrow flight of stairs with room for only a handful of patrons, is typical of a multitude of miniature establishments that line the alleyways of Goruden Gai (see “The Major Entertainment Districts,” earlier in this section). Also near Hanazono Shrine, on the eighth floor of the Oriental Wave building on Yasukuni Dori, is one of weirdest theme bars I've seen in Tokyo, Christon

Café, 5-17-13 Shinjuku (☎ 03/5287-2426; Station: Shinjuku Sancho-me, 5 min.). Decorated like a church with its stained-glass windows, vaulted ceiling, organ music, crosses, and a statue of Jesus, it's packed to the rafters despite the ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) cover charge. What to order? A bloody mary, of course. More down-to-earth is Dubliners Irish Pub, behind Mitsukoshi on the second floor above Lion, 3-28-9 Shinjuku (☎ 03/3352-6606; Station: Shinjuku, 3 min.), which attracts a mixed Japanese/ex-pat crowd.

Although most of Shinjuku's night action is east of the station, Vagabond, 1-4-20 Nishi-Shinjuku on the second floor in the second alley behind—north of—Odakyu Halc (☎ 03/3348-9109; Station: Shinjuku, west exit, 2 min.), is on the west side. It features a jazz pianist nightly and is popular with foreigners (especially Brits, who come for the Guinness). The place has been in operation for more than 25 years and is now managed by the original owner's son, Matsuoka Takahiko. Closed on Sunday. Just down the street is (39) Volga, 1-4-18 Nishi Shinjuku (☎ 03/3342-4996; Station: Shinjuku, west exit, 2 min.), a yakitori-ya in an ivy-covered, two-story brick building on the corner. Its unrefined atmosphere has changed little since its opening in the 1950s; the place is popular with middle-aged and older Japanese. Closed on Sunday.

EBISU Ebisu's most popular bar (especially with ex-pats) is What the Dickens, 1-13-3 Ebisu Nishi (☎ 03/3780-2088; Station: Ebisu, west exit, 2 min.), which features free live bands nightly, English and Irish beer, and British pub grub. Take the side street that runs between Wendy's and KFC; the bar is at the end of the second block on the left on the fourth floor. It's closed on Monday. Personally, my favorite bar is the inimitable Enjoy House, 2-9-9 Ebisu Nishi (☎ 03/5489-1591; Station: Ebisu, west exit, 3 min.), with its 1960s-reminiscent decor, efficient yet relaxed and funky staff, friendly atmosphere, and tiny dance floor. Everyone here seems high and happy; the place is aptly named. Closed on Monday.

ROPPONGI Gaspanic Bar, 3-15-24 Roppongi (☎ 03/3405-0633; Station: Roppongi, 3 min.), epitomizes Roppongi frenzy, attracting foreign and Japanese 20-somethings. The music is loud, and after midnight, this place can get so crowded that women have been known to dance on the countertops. Thursdays are especially crowded because all drinks go for only ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70). From Roppongi Crossing, walk toward Tokyo Tower on Gaien-Higashi Dori, turning left at Family Mart. In the basement is Club 99, open only Thursday to Saturday for dancing, while nearby Gaspanic Club, on Gaien-Higashi Dori across from the Roi Building at 3-10-5 Roppongi (☎ 03/3402-7054), is open nightly for dancing. All offer the same Thursday and happy-hour drink specials. Large bouncers at all the doors serve as clues that these places can get rough.

I'm more partial to Geronimo, 7-14-10 Roppongi (☎ 03/3478-7449; Roppongi, 1 min.), on Roppongi Dori opposite Almond Coffee Shop. A tiny place with a bar in the middle and ex-pats practically two-deep everywhere else, it's the kind of place where people dance, drink way too much, and party 'til they can't party anymore. When the gong rings, it means someone is buying shots for everyone at the bar. I also like the more upscale Heartland, 6-10-1 Roppongi (☎ 03/5772-7600; Roppongi, 3 min.), on Roppongi Dori just past Roppongi Hills on the left. Attracting everyone from bankers to artistic types, it offers cocktails and its own Heartland microbrew and is packed with ex-pats on the prowl. For an icy reception, head to Absolut Icebar

Tokyo, in Nishi-Azabu on Gaien Nishi Dori, 4-2-4 Nishi-Azabu (☎ 03/5464-2160), where everything, right down to walls, chairs, and even the glasses, are made of ice imported from Sweden. To keep the ice from melting, only 50 customers are allowed in at a time, and even then only for 45 minutes (you'll be given a cape to bundle up against the chill).

Tequila fans gravitate to Agave, on Roppongi Dori at 7-15-10 Roppongi (☎ 03/3497-0229; Station: Roppongi, 3 min.), a cellar bar boasting Japan's largest selection of tequila (more than 350 kinds), as well as cigars from the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Honduras, Mexico, and Jamaica. Closed on Sunday. And if you yearn for a chance in the spotlight, head to Fiesta International Karaoke Bar, 7-9-3 Roppongi (☎ 03/5410-3008; Roppongi, 3 min.), on the small diagonal street across from Tokyo Midtown. For ¥3,150 ($26/£13) you get three drinks and all the songs you care to sing from the 10,000 English-language song menu. Closed on Sunday.

AKASAKA If your idea of a wild night is relaxing over a drink in a sophisticated lounge, head to the Garden Lounge at the Hotel New Otani (☎ 03/3265-1111; Station: Nagatacho or Akasaka-mitsuke, 3 min.) before sunset. The bonus here is a view of a 400-year-old Japanese landscape garden, complete with a waterfall, a pond, bridges, and manicured bushes. For a more casual setting, try Hobgoblin Tokyo Brewery Pub and Restaurant, 2-13-19 Akasaka (☎ 03/3585-3681; Station: Akasaka, exit 2, 2 min.), a British chain offering nine brews on tap, major sporting events from its satellite TVs, darts, and hearty pub meals.

GAY & LESBIAN BARS

Shinjuku Ni-chome (pronounced “nee-chomay”), southeast of the Yasukuni-Gyoen Dori intersection (Station: Shinjuku Sanchoe), is Tokyo's gay and lesbian quarter, with a lively street scene and countless establishments catering to a variety of age groups and preferences. The following are good starting points, but you'll find a lot more in the immediate area by exploring on your own. Attracting both gays and straights, Advocates, 2-18-1 Shinjuku (☎ 03/3358-3988), is a crowded, small bar open to the street with a few sidewalk tables, making this a good vantage point from which to watch the street action. It's also a good place to network and find out about neighboring bars. Kinsmen, on the second floor at 2-18-5 Shinjuku (☎ 03/3354-4949), welcomes customers of all persuasions. It's a pleasant oasis, small and civilized. It's closed on Monday. The casual, laid-back, women-only Kinswomyn, 2-15-10 Shinjuku (☎ 03/3354-8720), attracts a regular clientele of mainly Japanese lesbians and has a friendly, welcoming atmosphere. It's closed on Tuesday.

Side Trips from Tokyo

If your stay in Tokyo is long enough, you should consider taking an excursion or two. Kamakura and Nikko rank as two of the most important historical sites in Japan, while the Fuji-Hakone-Izu National Park serves as a huge recreational playground for the residents of Tokyo. Yokohama, with its thriving port, waterfront development, and several museums and attractions, is an interesting day trip from Tokyo. For overnight stays, I recommend Hakone or Izu Peninsula, because these resorts boast Japanese-style inns (ryokan) where you'll be able to experience the atmosphere of old Japan.

Before departing Tokyo, stop by the Tourist Information Center (TIC) for pamphlets on Kamakura, Nikko, Hakone, and the Mount Fuji area, some of which give train schedules and other useful information; see "Visitor Information," in chapter 4, for the TIC location.

1 Kamakura, Ancient Capital ★★

51km (32 miles) S of Tokyo

If you take only one day trip outside Tokyo, it should be to Kamakura, especially if you're unable to include the ancient capitals of Kyoto and Nara in your travels. (If you're going to Kyoto and Nara, I would probably choose Nikko, below.) Kamakura is a delightful hamlet with no fewer than 65 Buddhist temples and 19 Shinto shrines spread throughout the village and surrounding wooded hills. Most of these were built centuries ago, when a warrior named Yoritomo Minamoto seized political power and established his shogunate government in Kamakura in 1192. Wanting to set up his seat of government as far away as possible from what he considered to be the corrupt imperial court in Kyoto, Yoritomo selected Kamakura because it was easy to defend. The village is enclosed on three sides by wooded hills and on the fourth by the sea—a setting that lends a dramatic background to its many temples and shrines.

Although Kamakura remained the military and political center of the nation for a century and a half, the Minamoto clan was in power for only a short time. After Yoritomo's death, both of his sons were assassinated, one after the other, after taking up military rule. Power then passed to the family of Yoritomo's widow, the Hojo family, who ruled until 1333, when the emperor in Kyoto sent troops to crush the shogunate government. Unable to stop the invaders, 800 soldiers retired to the Hojo family temple at Toshiji, where they all disemboweled themselves in ritualistic suicide known as seppuku.

Today a thriving seaside resort with a population of 173,000, Kamakura—with its old wooden homes, temples, shrines, and wooded hills—makes a pleasant 1-day trip from Tokyo. (There's also a beach in Kamakura called Yuigahama Beach, but I find it unappealing; it's often litter-strewn and unbelievably crowded in summer. Skip it.)

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE Take the JR Yokosuka Line bound for Zushi, Kurihama, or Yokosuka; it departs every 10 to 15 minutes from the Yokohama, Shinagawa, Shim-bashi, and Tokyo JR stations. The trip takes almost 1 hour from Tokyo Station and costs ¥890 ($7.40/£3.70) one-way to Kamakura Station. From Shinjuku, take the JR Shonan-Shinjuku Line 1 hour to Kamakura for the same price.

VISITOR INFORMATION In Kamakura, there's a tourist information window (☎ 0467/22-3350; www.city.kamakura.kanagawa.jp; daily 9am–5:30pm, to 5pm in winter) immediately to the right outside Kamakura Station's east exit in the direction of Tsurugaoka Hachimangu Shrine. It sells a color brochure with a map of Kamakura for ¥200 ($1.65/85p); there's also a free map (in both English and Japanese), but it's not always in stock. Ask here for directions on how to get to the village's most important sights and restaurants.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Kamakura's major sights are clustered in two areas: Kamakura Station, the town's downtown with the tourist office, souvenir shops spread along Komachi Dori and Wakamiya Oji, restaurants, and Tsurugaoka Hachimangu Shrine; and Hase, with the Great Buddha and Hase Kannon Temple. You can travel between Kamakura Station and Hase Station via the Enoden Line, a wonderful small train, or you can walk the distance in about 20 minutes. Destinations are also easily reached by buses departing from Kamakura Station.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

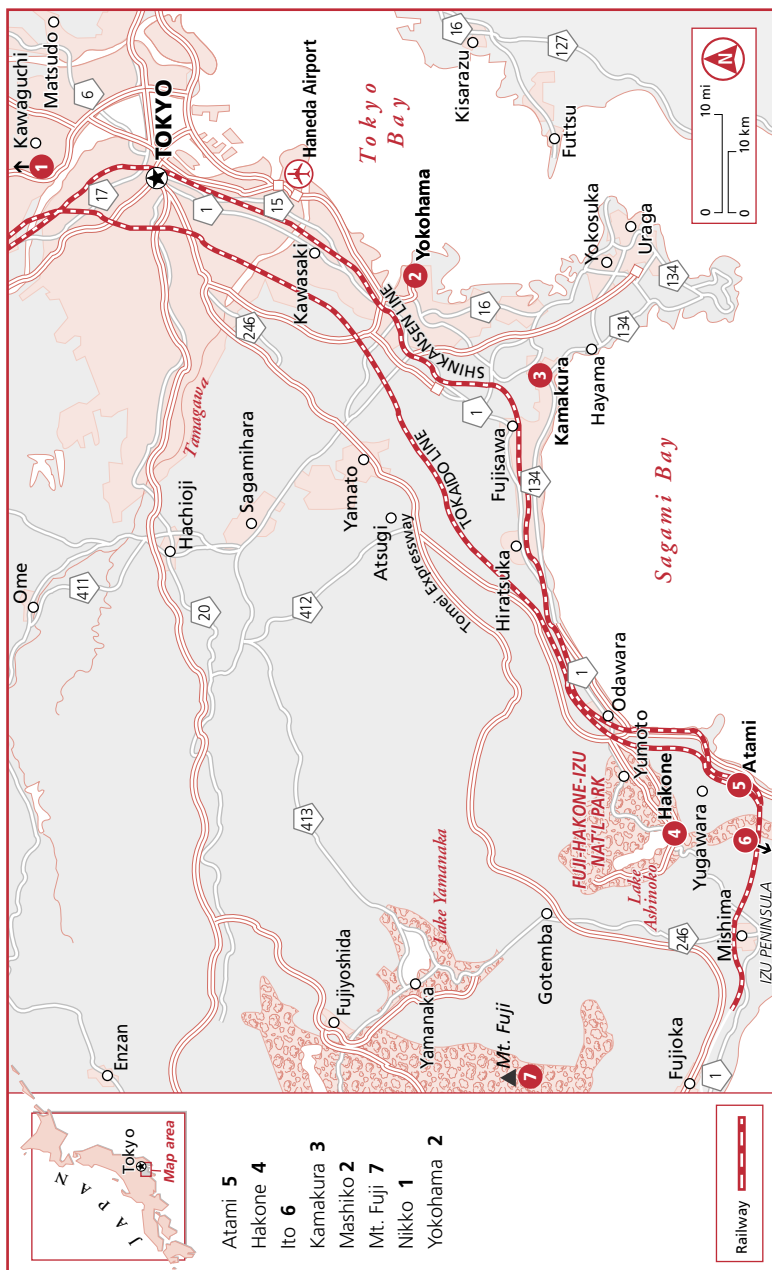

Keep in mind that most temples and shrines open at about 8 or 9am and close between 4 and 5pm.

AROUND KAMAKURA STATION About a 10-minute walk from Kamakura Station, Tsurugaoka Hachimangu Shrine ★★ (☎ 0467/22-0315) is the spiritual heart of Kamakura and one of its most popular attractions. It was built by Yoritomo and dedicated to Hachiman, the Shinto god of war who served as the clan deity of the Minamoto family. The pathway to the shrine is along Wakamiya Oji, a cherry tree-lined pedestrian lane that was also constructed by Yoritomo in the 1190s so that his oldest son's first visit to the family shrine could be accomplished in style with an elaborate procession. The lane stretches from the shrine all the way to Yuigahama Beach, with three massive torii gates set at intervals along the route to signal the approach to the shrine. On both sides of the pathway are souvenir and antiques shops selling lacquerware, pottery, and folk art (I suggest you return to Kamakura Station via Komachi Dori, a fun pedestrian shopping lane that parallels Wakamiya Oji to the west).

At the top of the stairs, which afford a panoramic view toward the sea, is the vermilion-colored shrine with its small shrine museum, not worth the ¥100 (85¢/45p) admission. However, you can get your fortune in English for ¥100 (85¢/45p) by shaking out a bamboo stick with a number on it and giving it to the attendant. You can also buy a charm to assure good luck in health, driving a car, business, or other ventures. Shrine grounds are always open, free to the public.

AROUND HASE STATION To get to these attractions, you can go by bus, which departs from in front of Kamakura Station (take any bus from platform 1 or 6 to the Daibutsuen-mae stop). Or, for a more romantic adventure, you can go by the JR Enoden Line, a tiny train that putt-putts its way seemingly through backyards on its way from Kamakura Station to Hase and beyond. As it's mostly only one track, trains have to take turns going in either direction. I suggest that you take the bus from Kamakura Station directly to the Great Buddha, walk to Hase Shrine, and then take the Enoden train back to Kamakura Station.

Probably Kamakura's most famous attraction is the Great Buddha ★★ (© 0467/22-0703), called the Daibutsu in Japanese and located at Kotokuin Temple. Eleven meters (37 ft.) high and weighing 93 tons, it's the second-largest bronze image in Japan. The largest Buddha is in Nara, but in my opinion, the Kamakura Daibutsu is much more impressive. For one thing, the Kamakura Buddha sits outside against a dramatic backdrop of wooded hills. Cast in 1252, the Kamakura Buddha was indeed once housed in a temple like the Nara Buddha, but a huge tidal wave destroyed the wooden structure—and the statue has sat under sun, snow, and stars ever since. I also prefer the face of the Kamakura Buddha; I find it more inspiring and divine, as though with its half-closed eyes and calm, serene face it's above the worries of the world. It seems to represent the plane above human suffering, the point at which birth and death, joy and sadness merge and become one. Open daily from 7am to 6pm (to 5:30pm in winter). Admission is ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for adults and ¥150 ($1.25/60p) for children; your entry ticket is a bookmark, a nice souvenir. If you want, you can pay an extra ¥20 (15¢/10p) to go inside the statue—it's hollow.

About a 10-minute walk from the Daibutsu is Hase Kannon Temple (Hasedera) ★★ (© 0467/22-6300; www.hasedera.jp), located on a hill with a sweeping view of the sea. This is the home of an 11-headed gilt statue of Kannon, the goddess of mercy, housed in the Kannon-do (Kannon Hall). More than 9m (30 ft.) high and the tallest wooden image in Japan, it was made from a single piece of camphor wood back in the 8th century. The legend surrounding this Kannon is quite remarkable. Supposedly, two wooden images were made from the wood of a huge camphor tree. One of the images was kept in Hase, not far from Nara, while the second was given a short ceremony and then duly tossed into the sea to find a home of its own. The image drifted 483km (300 miles) eastward and washed up on shore but was thrown back in again because all who touched it became ill or incurred bad luck. Finally, the image reached Kamakura, where it gave the people no trouble. This was interpreted as a sign that the image was content with its surroundings, and Hase Kannon Temple was erected at its present site. Note how each face has a different expression, representing the Kannon's compassion for various kinds of human suffering. In the Kannon-do, you'll also find a museum with religious treasures from the Kamakura, Heian, Muromachi, and Edo periods.

Another statue housed here is of Amida, a Buddha who promised rebirth in the Pure Land to the West to all who chanted his name. It was created by order of Yoritomo Minamoto upon his 42nd birthday, which is considered an unlucky year for men. You'll find it housed in the Amida-do (Amida Hall) beside the Kannon-do to the right. Also of interest is the Kyozo, with rotating book racks containing sutras (if you give the book racks a spin, it's considered just as auspicious as reading the sutras). Benten-kutsu Cave contains many stone images, including one of Benzaiten (seated, with a lute).

As you climb the steps to the Kannon-do, you'll encounter statues of a different sort. All around you will be likenesses of Jizo, the guardian deity of children. Although parents originally came to Hase Temple to set up statues to represent their children in hopes the deity would protect and watch over them, through the years the purpose of the Jizo statues changed. Now they represent miscarried, stillborn, or aborted infants. More than 50,000 Jizo statues have been offered here since the war,

Tips A Note on Japanese Symbols

Many establishments and attractions in Japan do not have signs in Roman (English-language) letters. Those that don't are indicated in this guide by an oval with a number that corresponds to a number in appendix C showing the Japanese symbols. Thus, to find the Japanese symbol for, say, Miyokawa (below), refer to no. 40 in appendix C.

but the hundreds or so you see now will remain only a year before being burned or buried to make way for others. Some of the statues, which can be purchased on the temple grounds, are fitted with hand-knitted caps and sweaters. The effect is quite chilling.

Hase Temple is open daily 8am to 5pm (to 4:30pm in winter); admission is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults, ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children.

WHERE TO DINE

MODERATE

 Miyokawa MINI-KAISEKI/OBENTO This modern, casual restaurant specializes in kaiseki (artfully prepared multicourse meals), including beautifully prepared mini-kaiseki set meals that change with the seasons. It also offers great obento (traditional box meals) lunches (my favorite is served in a gourdlike container for ¥2,415/$20/£10), as well as set meals. Color photos show the options.

1-16-17 Hase.  0467/25-5556. Reservations recommended. Mini-kaiseki ¥5,775-¥10,500 ($48-$87/£24-£43); obento and set meals ¥1,995-¥3,990 ($17-$33/£8.50-£16). AE, MC, V. Daily 11am-8:30pm. Station: Hase (5 min.). On the main road (east side) from Hase Station to the Great Buddha (about a 5-min. walk from each).

INEXPENSIVE

In addition to the suggestions below, a simple restaurant at Hase Temple, described above, serves noodles, beer, and soft drinks, with both indoor and outdoor seating. It offers a great view, making it a good place for a snack on a fine day.

Milano a Riccione ITALIAN This is the Japanese branch of a Milan restaurant known for its handmade pasta, seafood, and good selection of wines. Although located in a basement, it opens onto a subterranean courtyard, making it brighter and more cheerful than you would expect. There's an English-language seasonal menu, but the best bargain is the daily set lunch for ¥1,365 ($11/£5.50), which includes an appetizer, a choice of pasta or pizza, and coffee, espresso, or tea. It's the quickest meal you can order; but if you're in a hurry, you should dine elsewhere, as care and time are devoted to the preparation of such meals as grilled scallops with leeks, and sautéed chicken with basil and tomato sauce.

2-12-30 Komachi.  0467/24-5491. Reservations required for lunch. Pizza and pasta ¥1,050-¥1,680 ($8.75-$14/£4.40-£7); main dishes ¥1,785-¥2,205 ($15-$18/£7.50-£9); set dinners ¥3,990-¥4,725 ($33-$39/£16-£20); set lunches ¥1,365-¥2,625 ($11-$22/£5.50-£11). AE, DC, MC, V. Thurs-Tues 11:30am-3pm and 5:30-9:30pm (last order). Station: Kamakura (6 min.). On the left side of Wakamiya Oji when walking from Kamakura Station to Tsurugaoka Hachimangu Shrine.

 Raitei    Finds NOODLES/OBENTO Though it's a bit inconveniently located, this is the absolute winner for a meal in Kamakura. Visiting Raitei is as much fun as visiting the city's temples and shrines. The restaurant is situated in the hills on the edge of Kamakura, surrounded by verdant countryside, and the wonder is that it serves inexpensive soba (Japanese noodles) as well as priestly kaiseki feasts, which you must reserve in advance. If you're here for soba or one of the obento lunch boxes, go down the stone steps on the right to the back entry, where you'll be given an English-language menu with such offerings as noodles with chicken, mountain vegetables, tempura, and more. The pottery used here comes from the restaurant's own kiln, and you'll sit on roughly hewn wood stools or on tatami. If you opt for kaiseki, you'll dine upstairs in a refined traditional setting with great views. The house, once owned by a wealthy landowner, was moved to this site in 1929.

Moments A Special Stroll

When you've finished your meal at Raitei, be sure to walk the loop through the garden past a bamboo grove, stone images, and a miniature shrine. The stroll takes about 20 minutes, unless you stop for a beer at the refreshment house, which has outdoor seating and a view of the countryside.

Takasago. ☎ 0467/32-5656. Reservations required for kaiseki. Noodles ¥900–¥1,200 ($7.50–$10/£3.75–£5); obento lunch boxes ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50); soba set meals ¥2,500 ($21/£11); kaiseki feasts from ¥6,000 ($50/£25). Entry fee ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10), which counts toward the price of your meal. AE, DC. Daily 11am–sundown (about 7pm in summer). Bus: 6 from platform 6 at Kamakura Station or Daibutsuen-mae to Takasago stop (or a 15-min. taxi ride).

④2 Sometaro Value OKONOMIYAKI Located near the approach to Hase Temple, this small, second-floor restaurant offers okonomiyaki (a kind of Japanese pancake) stuffed with cabbage, bean sprouts, and a choice of a main ingredient like beef, pork, or shrimp. It also serves yakisoba (fried noodles) and teppanyaki, all from an English-language menu.

3–12–11 Hase. ☎ 0467/22-8694. Reservations recommended for lunch. Main dishes ¥900–¥1,200 ($7.50–$10/£3.75–£5). No credit cards. Thurs–Tues 11:30am–9pm (last order). Station: Hase (2 min.). On the slope leading to the entrance of Hase Temple, at the beginning on the left side.

2 Shogun Country: Nikko

150km (93 miles) N of Tokyo

Since the publication of James Clavell's novel Shogun, many people are familiar with Tokugawa Ieyasu, the powerful real-life shogun of the 1600s on whom Clavell's fictional shogun was based. Quashing all rebellions and unifying Japan under his leadership, Tokugawa established such a military stronghold that his heirs continued to rule Japan for the next 250 years without serious challenge.

If you'd like to join the millions of Japanese who through the centuries have paid homage to this great man, head north of Tokyo to Nikko, where Toshogu Shrine  was constructed in his honor in the 17th century and where Tokugawa's remains were entombed in a mausoleum. Nikko means "sunlight"—an apt description of the way the sun's rays play upon this sumptuous shrine of wood and gold leaf. In fact, nothing else in Japan matches Toshogu Shrine for its opulence. Nearby is another mausoleum containing Tokugawa's grandson, as well as a temple, a shrine, and a garden. Surrounding the sacred grounds, known collectively as Nikko Sannai and designated a World Heritage Site by UNESCO in 1999, are thousands of majestic cedar trees in the 80,000-hectare (200,000-acre) Nikko National Park . Another worthwhile sight is the Nikko Tamozawa Imperial Villa, built in 1899.

I've included a few recommendations for an overnight stay. Otherwise, you can see Nikko in a very full day. Plan on 4 to 5 hours for round-trip transportation, 2½ hours to see Toshogu Shrine and vicinity, and 1 hour to see the imperial villa.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE The easiest, fastest, and most luxurious way to get to Nikko is on the privately owned Tobu Line's Limited Express, called the Spacia, which departs every hour or more frequently from Asakusa Station. The cost is ¥2,620 ($22/£11) one-way for the 1-hour-and-50-minute trip on weekdays and ¥2,720 ($23/£12) on weekends and holidays (most trains require a transfer at Shimo-Imaichi Station). All seats are reserved, which means you are guaranteed a seat; if you're traveling on a holiday or a summer weekend, you may wish to purchase and reserve your ticket in advance. Another plus is that there's usually an English-speaking hostess on board who passes out pamphlets on the area and can answer sightseeing questions about Nikko.

Otherwise, you can reach Nikko on Tobu's slower rapid train from Asakusa, which costs ¥1,320 ($11/£5.50) one-way and takes 2 hours and 10 minutes, with trains departing every hour or more frequently. There are no reserved seats, which may mean you have to stand if trains are crowded.

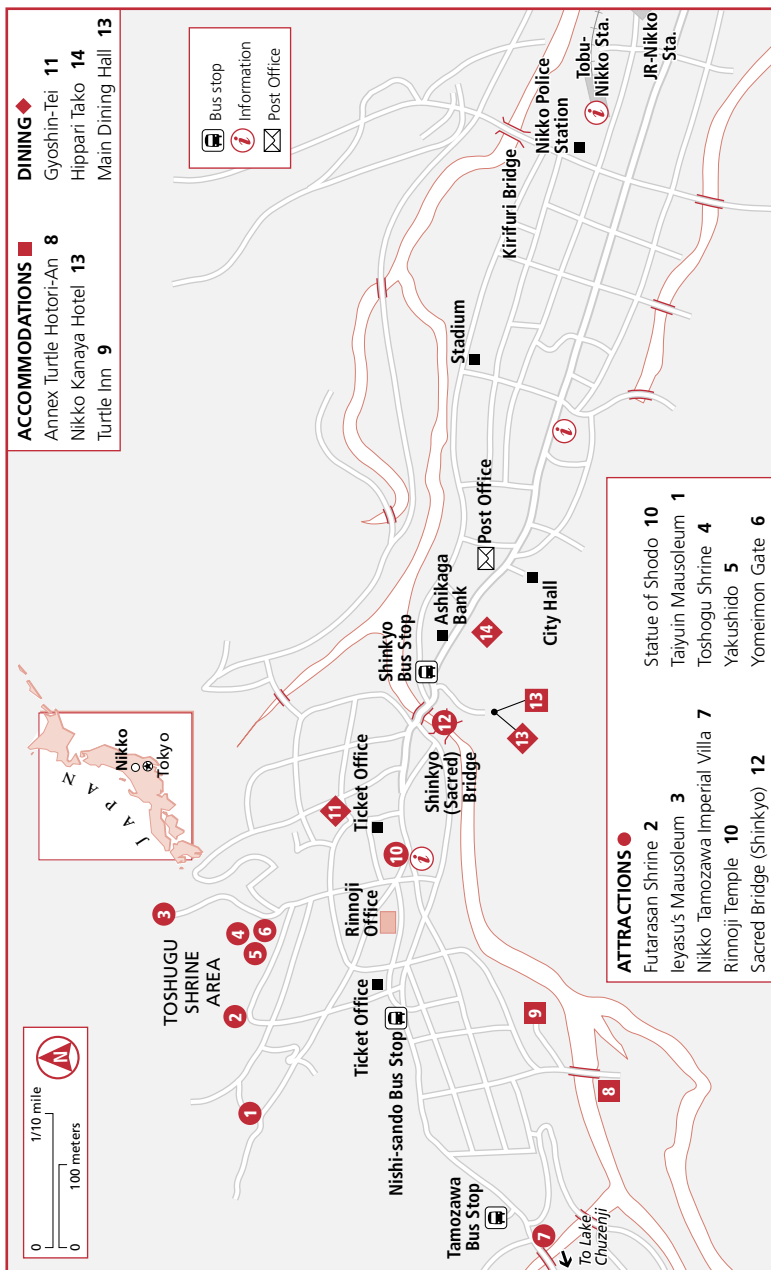

If you have a Japan Rail Pass, take the Tohoku Shinkansen bullet train from Tokyo Station to Utsunomiya (there are departures every 20–40 min. and the trip takes about 55 min.), where you change for the JR train to Nikko (45 min., with departures every hour or less).

VISITOR INFORMATION Before leaving Tokyo, pick up the leaflet "Nikko" from the Tourist Information Center (TIC). It gives the train schedule for both the Tobu Line, which departs from Asakusa Station, and JR trains. The TIC also has color brochures with maps of the Nikko area.

Nikko's Tobu and JR stations are located almost side by side in the village's downtown area. The Nikko Tobu Station tourist information counter (☎ 0288/53-4511; www.nikko-jp.org), located inside Tobu Station, has staff who can give you a map, answer basic questions, and point you in the right direction. You can also make hotel and ryokan reservations here for ¥100 (85¢/45p). Open daily 8:30am to 5pm.

Another tourist office, the Nikko Information Center (☎ 0288/54-2496), is located on the left side of the main road leading from the train station to Toshogu Shrine (next to Eneos gas station). It has English-speaking staff and lots of information in English about Nikko, including information on public hot springs. Open daily from 9am to 5pm.

GETTING AROUND Toshogu Shrine and its mausoleum are on the edge of town, but you can walk from either the JR or Tobu train stations to the shrine in about half an hour. Head straight out the main exit, pass the bus stands, and then turn right. Signs in English point the way throughout town. Keep walking on this main road (you'll pass the Nikko Information Center about halfway down on the left side, as well as souvenir shops) until you come to a T intersection with a vermilion-colored bridge spanning a river (about a 15-min. walk from the train stations). The stone steps opposite lead up the hill into the woods and to Toshogu Shrine. You can also travel from Tobu Station by bus, getting off at either the Shinkyo (a 7-min. ride) or Nishi Sando (a 10-min. ride) bus stop.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

ON THE WAY TO THE SHRINE The first indication that you're nearing the shrine is the vermilion-painted Sacred Bridge (Shinkyo) arching over the rushing Daiyagawa River. It was built in 1636, and for more than 3 centuries only shogun and their emissaries were allowed to cross it. Today, you can cross it by paying ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10), or take the modern vehicular bridge for free.

Across the road from the Sacred Bridge, steps lead uphill into a forest of cedar where, after a 5-minute walk, you'll see a statue of Shodo, a priest who founded Nikko 1,200 years ago at a time when mountains were revered as gods. In the centuries that followed, Nikko became one of Japan's greatest mountain Buddhist retreats, with 500 sub-temples spread through the area. Behind Shodo is the first major temple, Rinnoji Temple, where you can buy a combination ticket for ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50); it allows entry to Rinnoji Temple and its garden, Toshogu Shrine, neighboring Futarasan Shrine, and the other Tokugawa mausoleum, Taiyuin. Once at Toshogu Shrine, you'll have to pay an extra ¥520 ($4.35/£2.20) to see Ieyasu's tomb. Combination tickets sold at the entry to Toshogu Shrine already include Ieyasu's tomb. It doesn't really matter where you buy your combination ticket, as you can always pay the extra fee to see sights not covered. A note for bus riders: If you take the bus to the Nishi Sando bus stop, the first place you'll come to is the Taiyuin Mausoleum, where you can also purchase a combination ticket.

Toshogu Shrine and the other sights in Nikko Sannai are open daily from 8am to 5pm April through October (to 4pm the rest of the year); you must enter at least 30 minutes before closing time.

RINNOJI TEMPLE Rinnoji Temple was founded by the priest Shodo in the 8th century, long before the Toshogu clan came onto the scene. Here you can visit Sanbutsudo Hall, a large building that enshrines three 8.4m-high (28-ft.) gold-plated wooden images of Buddha, considered the "gods of Nikko"; today people pray here for world peace. Perhaps the best thing to see at Rinnoji Temple is Shoyo-en Garden (opposite Sanbutsudo Hall). Completed in 1815 and typical of Japanese landscaped gardens of the Edo Period, this small strolling garden provides a different vista with each turn of the path, making it seem much larger than it is. Your ticket also gains entrance to a small treasure house, where relics are displayed on a rotating basis.

TOSHOGU SHRINE ★★☆☆ The most important and famous structure in Nikko is Toshogu Shrine, built by Tokugawa's grandson (and third Tokugawa shogun), Tokugawa Iemitsu, as an act of devotion. It seems that no expense was too great in creating the monument: Some 15,000 artists and craftspeople were brought to Nikko from all over Japan, and after 2 years' work, they erected a group of buildings more elaborate and gorgeous than any other Japanese temple or shrine. Rich in colors and carvings, Toshogu Shrine is gilded with 2.4 million sheets of gold leaf (they could cover an area of almost 2.4 hectares/6 acres). The mausoleum was completed in 1636, almost 20 years after Ieyasu's death, and was most certainly meant to impress anyone who saw it as a demonstration of the Tokugawa shogun's wealth and power. The shrine is set in a grove of magnificent ancient Japanese cedars planted over a 20-year period during the 1600s by a feudal lord named Matsudaira Masatsuna. Some 13,000 of the original trees still stand, adding a sense of dignity to the mausoleum and the shrine.

You enter Toshogu Shrine via a flight of stairs that passes under a huge stone torii gateway, one of the largest in Japan. On your left is a five-story, 35m-high (115-ft.) pagoda. Although normally pagodas are found only at temples, this pagoda is just one example of how Buddhism and Shintoism are combined at Toshogu Shrine. After climbing a second flight of stairs, turn left and you'll see the Sacred Stable, which houses a sacred white horse. Horses have, long been dedicated to Shinto gods and are kept at shrines. Shrines also kept monkeys as well, as they were thought to protect horses from disease; look for the three monkeys carved above the stable door, fixed in the poses of "see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil"—they're considered guardians of the sacred horse. Across from the stable is Kami-Jinko, famous for its carving by Kano Tanyu, who painted the images of the two elephants after reading about them but without seeing what they actually looked like.

The central showpiece of Nikko is Yomeimon Gate, popularly known as the Twilight Gate, implying that it could take you all day (until twilight) to see everything carved on it. Painted in red, blue, and green, and gilded and lacquered, this gate is carved with about 400 flowers, dragons, birds, and other animals. It's almost too much to take in at once and is very un-Japanese in its opulence, having more in common with Chinese architecture than with the usual austerity of most Japanese shrines.

You can visit the shrine's main sanctuary, Hai-den, comprising three halls: One was reserved for the imperial family, one for the shogun, and one (the central hall) for conducting ceremonies. You can buy good-luck charms here that will guard against such misfortunes as traffic accidents, or that will ensure good health, success in business, easy childbirth, or other achievements in daily life. To the right of the main hall is the entrance to Tokugawa Ieyasu's mausoleum. If it's not already included in your combination ticket, admission is ¥520 ($4.35/£2.20) extra. After the ticket counter, look for the carving of a sleeping cat above the door, dating from the Edo Period and famous today as a symbol of Nikko (you'll find many reproductions in area souvenir shops). Beyond that, there are 200 stone steps leading past cedars to Tokugawa's tomb. After the riotous colors of the shrine, the tomb seems surprisingly simple.

On the way out you'll pass Yakushido, famous for its dragon painting on the ceiling. A monk gives a brief explanation (in Japanese) and demonstrates how two sticks struck together produce an echo that supposedly resonates like a bell. Twelve statues here represent the Chinese zodiac calendar.

FUTARASAN SHRINE Directly to the west of Toshogu Shrine is Futarasan Shrine, the oldest building in the district (from 1617), which has a pleasant garden and is dedicated to the gods of mountains surrounding Nikko. You'll find miniature shrines dedicated to the god of fortune, god of happiness, god of trees, god of water, and god of good marriages. On the shrine's grounds is the so-called ghost lantern, enclosed in a small vermilion-colored wooden structure. According to legend, it used to come alive at night and sweep around Nikko in the form of a ghost. It apparently scared one guard so much that he struck it with his sword 70 times; the marks are still visible on the lamp's rim. Entrance to the miniature shrines and ghost lantern is ¥200 ($1.65/80p) extra.

TAIYUIN MAUSOLEUM ⚡ Past Futarasan Shrine is Taiyuin Mausoleum, the final resting place of Iemitsu, the third Tokugawa shogun (look for his statue). Completed in 1653, it's not nearly as large as Toshogu Shrine, but it's ornate and serenely elegant nevertheless. Tourists usually bypass this shrine, making it a pleasant last stop on your tour of Nikko Sannai.

NIKKO TAMOZAWA IMPERIAL VILLA (Tamozaawa Goyoutei Kinen Koen) ⚡⚡ If you haven't seen the imperial villas of Kyoto (which require advance planning), this villa, at 8–27 Honcho (☎ 0288/53-6767), is a great alternative. Though not as old (it was built in 1899 for Prince Yoshihito, who later became the Taisho emperor), it has been painstakingly restored so that it looks brand-new; it has the distinction of being the largest wooden imperial villa of its era, with 106 rooms, 37 of which are open to the public. The central core of the villa is actually much older, constructed in 1632 by a feudal lord and brought to Nikko from Edo (present-day Tokyo). Altogether, three emperors and three princes used the villa between 1899 and 1947. A self-guided tour of the villa provides insight into traditional Japanese architectural methods—from its 11 layers of paper-plastered walls to its nail-less wood framing—as well as the lifestyle of Japan's aristocracy. Be sure to wander the small, outdoor garden. Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, half-price for children. Open Wednesday to Monday 9am to 4:30pm. It's about a 20-minute walk from Toshogu Shrine; or take the bus to Tamozawa stop.

WHERE TO STAY

If it's peak season (Golden Week, Aug, or Oct) or a weekend, it's best to reserve a room in advance, which you can do by calling a lodging either directly or through a travel agency in Tokyo. Off-peak, you can make a reservation upon arrival at Nikko Tobu Station, either at the tourist information counter, where the service costs ¥100 (85¢/45p), or at the accommodations-reservation window (☎ 0288/54-0864; daily 9am–5pm), which charges a ¥200 to ¥500 ($1.65–$4.15/£80p–£2.10) fee but is familiar with the area accommodations and will make all arrangements for you.

Nikko Kanaya Hotel ★★ Finds This distinguished-looking, old-fashioned place on a hill above the Sacred Bridge is the most famous hotel in Nikko, combining the rustic heartiness of a European country lodge with elements of old Japan. It was founded in 1873 by the Kanaya family, who wished to offer accommodations to foreigners, mainly missionaries and businessmen looking to escape the heat and humidity of Tokyo. The present complex, built in spurts over the past 100-some years, has a rambling, delightfully old-fashioned atmosphere that fuses Western architecture with Japanese craftsmanship. Through the decades it has played host to a number of VIPs, from Charles Lindbergh to Indira Gandhi to Shirley MacLaine; Frank Lloyd Wright left a sketch for the bar fireplace, which was later built to his design. Even if you don't stay here, you might want to drop by for lunch (see review below). Pathways lead to the Daiyagawa River and several short hiking trails.

All rooms are Western-style twins, with the differences in price based on room size, view (river view is best), and facilities. Some 10 rooms have been updated, but I prefer the older, simpler rooms because they have more character; some have antiques and claw-foot tubs. The best (and priciest) room in the house is the corner room in the 72-year-old wing where the emperor once stayed.

Annex Turtle Hotori-An ★★ Kids Owned by the super-friendly family that runs Turtle Inn (see below), this is one of my favorite places to stay in Nikko. One dip in the hot-springs bath overlooking the Daiyagawa River (which you can lock for privacy) will tell you why; at night, you're lulled to sleep by the sound of the rushing waters. A simple but spotless modern structure (all nonsmoking), it's located in a nice rural setting on a quiet street with a few other houses; an adjoining park and playground provide plenty of space for kids to play. All its rooms except one are Japanese style. A plentiful Western-style breakfast costs ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) in the pleasant living area/dining room. For dinner, you can go to the nearby Turtle Inn (not available Sun, Tues, and Thurs; reservations should be made the day before), or buy a pizza from the freezer and microwave it yourself. There's also a communal refrigerator where you can store food.

Turtle Inn ★ This excellent, nonsmoking pension, a Japanese Inn Group member, is located within walking distance of Toshogu Shrine in a newer two-story house on a quiet side street beside the Daiyagawa River. The friendly owner, Mr. Fukuda, speaks English and is very helpful in planning a sightseeing itinerary. Rooms are bright and cheerful in both Japanese and Western styles; the five tatami rooms are without bathroom. Excellent Japanese dinners (served on local Mashiko pottery) are available for ¥2,100 ($17/£8.50), as are Western breakfasts for ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40). Be sure to order dinner the day before, and note that it's not available on Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday.

Main Dining Hall at Nikko Kanaya Hotel ★★ Finds CONTINENTAL Even if you don't spend the night here, the Kanaya Hotel's quaint dining hall with its wood-carved pillars is one of the best places in town for lunch. Because it's beside the Sacred Bridge, only a 10-minute walk from Toshogu Shrine, you can easily combine it with your sightseeing tour. I suggest Nikko's specialty: locally caught rainbow trout available cooked three different ways. I always order mine cooked Kanaya style—covered with soy sauce, sugar, and sake, grilled, and served whole. The best bargain is the set lunch for ¥3,150 ($26/£13), available until 3pm, which comes with soup, salad, a main dish such as trout, bread or rice, and dessert. Steak, lobster, salmon, chicken, and other Western fare are also listed on the English-language menu.

Gyoshin-Tei ★★ VEGETARIAN/KAISEKI This lovely Japanese restaurant, with a simple tatami room and a view of pines, moss, and bonsai, serves two kinds of set meals—kaiseki and Buddhist vegetarian cuisine—both of which change monthly and include the local specialty, yuba, a high-protein food made from soybeans and produced only in Kyoto and Nikko. Until 100 years ago, it could be eaten only by priests and members of the imperial family. Gyoshin-Tei is actually one of several restaurants in a parklike setting all under the same management and with the same open hours. Meiji-no-Yakata (closed Wed), occupying a stone house built 110 years ago as the private retreat of an American businessman, serves Western food such as grilled rainbow trout, veal cutlet, and steak, with set meals ranging from ¥3,990 to ¥8,400 ($33–$70/£16–£35). In a small stone cottage, Fujimoto (closed Thurs) serves French food created with Japanese ingredients and eaten with chopsticks. All restaurants offer a set lunch for ¥2,940 ($25/£13). The drawback: This place is harder to find than my other recommendations, but it's only a 4-minute walk northeast of Rinnoji Temple.

④ Hippari Tako NOODLES This tiny, three-table establishment is under the caring supervision of motherly Miki-san, who serves a limited selection of noodle dishes, including ramen and stir-fried noodles with vegetables as well as onigiri (rice balls) and yakitori (skewered barbecued chicken). There's an English-language menu, and the walls, covered with business cards and messages left by appreciative guests from around the world, are testimony to both the tasty meals and Miki-san's warm hospitality. A computer allows guests access to the Internet 30 minutes for free.

3 Yokohama, City of the 21st Century

29km (18 miles) S of Tokyo

Few attractions in Yokohama warrant a visit if you're just in Japan for a short time. If you find yourself in Tokyo for an extended period, however, Yokohama is a pleasant destination for an easy day trip. Be sure to make time for wonderful Sankeien Garden; although a mere 90-some years old, it ranks on my long list as one of the top gardens in Japan.

A rather new city in Japan's history books, Yokohama was nothing more than a tiny fishing village when Commodore Perry arrived in the mid-1800s and demanded that Japan open its doors to the world. The village was selected by the shogun as one of several ports to be opened for international trade, transforming it from a backwater to Japan's most important gateway. Yokohama subsequently grew by leaps and bounds, and was a pioneer when it came to Western goods and services, boasting Japan's first bakery (1860), photo studio (1862), beer brewery (1869), cinema (1870), daily newspaper (1870), public restroom (1871), and ice cream (1879).

Now Japan's second-largest city with a population of almost 3.6 million, Yokohama remains the nation's largest international port and supports a large international community, with many foreigners residing in the section called the Bluff. Yokohama has an especially large Chinese population and Japan's largest Chinatown, whose restaurants serve as a mecca for hungry Tokyoites. Befitting a city known for its firsts, Yokohama constructed Japan's first and largest urban development project more than a decade ago—Minato Mirai 21, with a conference center, museums, hotels, shopping centers, and restaurants. Hard to imagine that a mere 150 years ago, Yokohama was a village of 100 houses.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE Because many Yokohama residents work in Tokyo, it's as easy to get to Yokohama as it is to get around Tokyo. Although Yokohama Station is the city's main train station, I suggest taking a train from Tokyo that will take you farther to Sakuragicho, Minato Mirai, or Motomachi Chukagai station, as most attractions are clustered here. (However, if you're headed first to Sankeien Garden, you'll want to disembark at Yokohama Station and transfer to bus no. 8 at the east exit.) Best is the Minato Mirai Line (of the Tokyu-Toyoko private company), which departs from Shibuya and reaches Minato Mirai in about 30 minutes on the limited express. A one-way fare costs ¥460 ($4.85/£2.45); an all-day Minato Mirai Line pass, including transportation from Shibuya and back, is worth the cost of ¥840 ($7/£3.50). Alternatively, the JR Keihin-Tohoku Line travels through Ueno, Tokyo, Yurakucho, Shibashi, and Shinagawa stations before continuing on to Sakuragicho, with the journey from Tokyo Station taking approximately 40 minutes and costing ¥450 ($3.75/£1.90) one-way.

VISITOR INFORMATION There are several Tourist Information Centers in Yokohama, but probably the most convenient and easiest to find is Sakuragicho Station Tourist Information Center (☎ 045/211-0111; daily 9am–7pm), located in a kiosk outside JR Sakuragicho Station in the direction of Minato Mirai and its Landmark Tower. The main office, the Yokohama Convention & Visitors Bureau, is located in the Sangyo Boeki Center (nicknamed Sambo Center), 2 Yamashita-cho, Naka-ku (☎ 045/641-4759; www.welcome.city.yokohama.jp/tourism; Mon–Fri 9am–5pm), close to the Silk Center and Yamashita Park. Both have excellent city maps and brochures.

Next door to the Convention and Visitors Bureau, in the Silk Center, is the Kanagawa Prefectural Tourist Office (☎ 045/681-0007; Tues–Sun 10am–6pm), with information on Hakone and Kamakura, both in Kanagawa Prefecture.

GETTING AROUND If you start your day in Yokohama at either Sakuragicho or Minato Mirai Station, you can visit the museums and attractions there and then walk onward to Yamashita Park via a waterfront promenade (about a 30-min. walk, with a stop, perhaps, at the Red Brick Warehouse shopping mall on the way). If you prefer not to walk, there's a red Tourist Spot Round-Trip Bus which makes the rounds of central Yokohama, including Sakuragicho Station, Minato Mirai, Yamashita Park, and Chinatown throughout the year, with departures every 20 to 30 minutes and costing ¥100 (85¢/45p) per ride or ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for an all-day pass (pick up a map and timetable at the Sakuragicho Station tourist office). To reach Sankeien Garden, take bus no. 8, which departs from Yokohama Station's east exit and passes Minato Mirai, Chinatown, and Yamashita Park on its way to the garden. If you end the day with a meal at Chinatown, you can catch the Minato Mirai Line back to Shibuya at nearby Motomachi Chukagai Station.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

MINATO-MIRAI There's no mistaking Minato Mirai 21 (www.minatomirai21.com) when you see it: It looks like a vision of the future with its dramatic monolithic buildings. It boasts a huge state-of-the-art convention facility, three first-class hotels, Japan's tallest building, office high-rises, two great museums, and an amusement park. It's all a bit too sterile for my taste, but its museums make a visit here worthwhile.

If you arrive at Sakuragicho Station, take the moving walkway that connects the station to the Landmark Tower in Minato Mirai in 5 minutes. Otherwise, the Minato Mirai Line will deposit you directly in the middle of the massive urban development.

There are several shopping malls in Minato Mirai, including Queen's Square, Yokohama World Porter's, Landmark Plaza, Jack Mall, and the restored Red Brick Warehouse, but the area's most conspicuous building is Landmark Tower, with Japan's highest observatory in a building. The fastest elevator in the world will whisk you up 270m (900 ft.) in about 40 seconds to the 69th floor, where there's an observation room called Sky Garden (☎ 045/222-5030; daily 10am–9pm, to 10pm Sat). From here you can see the harbor with its container port and Yokohama Bay Bridge, as well as almost the entire city and even, on clear days in winter, Mount Fuji. However, its admission fees—¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults, ¥800 ($6.65/£3.30) for seniors and high school students, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for elementary and junior-high students, and ¥200 ($1.65/80p) for children—make it too expensive in my book. Better is Landmark Tower's 70th-floor Sirius Sky Lounge; although there's a cover charge, it's atmosphere is more relaxing. (See “Where to Dine,” below.)

Maritime buffs should spend an hour checking out the Yokohama Maritime Museum, 2–1–1 Minato Mirai (☎ 045/221-0280), which concentrates on Yokohama's history as a port, beginning with the arrival of Perry's “Black Ships.” Other displays chart the evolution of ships from Japan and around the world from the 19th century to the present, with lots of models of everything from passenger ships to oil tankers. Kids like the three telescopes connected to cameras placed around Yokohama and the captain's bridge with a steering wheel; sailing fans enjoy touring the 96m (320-ft.), four-masted Nippon-Maru moored nearby, built in 1930 as a sail-training ship for students of the merchant marines. Admission is ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for adults and ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for children. The museum is open Tuesday to Sunday 10am to 5pm (to 6:30pm July–Aug, to 4:30pm Nov–Feb).

The most important thing to see in Minato Mirai is the Yokohama Museum of Art ★, 3–4–1 Minato Mirai (☎ 045/221-0300), which emphasizes 20th-century art by Western and Japanese artists; its ambitious goal is to collect and display works reflecting the mutual influence of Europe and Japan on modern art since the opening of Yokohama's port in 1859. The light and airy building, designed by Kenzo Tange and Urtec Inc., features exhibits from its permanent collection—which includes works by Cézanne, Picasso, Matisse, Leger, Max Ernst, Dalí, and Japanese artists—that change three times a year (you can tour these four rooms in about 30 min.), as well as special exhibits on loan from other museums. Open Friday through Wednesday from 10am to 6pm. Admission to the permanent collection is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for high school and college students, and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children. Special exhibitions cost more.

It would be hard to miss Yokohama Cosmo World (☎ 045/641-6591), an amusement park spread along both sides of a canal: It boasts one of the largest Ferris wheels in the world. Other diversions include a roller coaster that looks like it dives right into a pond (but vanishes instead into a tunnel), a haunted house, a simulation theater with seats that move with the action, kiddie rides, a games arcade, and much more. Admission is free but rides cost ¥300 to ¥700 ($2.50–$5.85/£1.25–£2.90) apiece. The park is open 11am to 8pm in winter and 11am to 10pm in summer; closed most Thursdays (except in summer).

IN & AROUND YAMASHITA PARK You can walk to Yamashita Park from Minato Mirai's Cosmo World in less than 30 minutes along a waterfront promenade. Along the way you'll pass the Red Brick Warehouse (Aka Renga), located in the Shinko-cho district of Minato Mirai (☎ 045/227-2002). This restored waterfront warehouse is home to dozens of shops selling crafts, furniture, housewares, clothing, and jewelry, as well as restaurants, with most shops open daily 11am to 8pm. Otherwise, if you don't want to walk take the Minato Mirai Line to either Nihon Odori or Motomachi Chukagai Station, from which Yamashita Park is about a 5-minute walk.

Laid out after the huge 1923 earthquake that destroyed much of Tokyo and Yokohama, Yamashita Park was Japan's first seaside park, a pleasant place for a stroll along the waterfront where you have a view of the city's mighty harbor and Bay Bridge. Across the gingko-lined street from Yamashita Park are two worthwhile special-interest museums. At the west end (closest to Minato Mirai) is the Silk Center, where you'll find both the prefectural tourist office and the excellent Silk Museum ★★, 1 Yamashita-cho, Naka-ku (☎ 045/641-0841; Station: Nihon Odori). For many years after Japan opened its doors, silk was its major export, and most of it was shipped to the rest of the world from Yokohama, the nation's largest raw-silk market. In tribute to the role silk has played in Yokohama's history, this museum has displays showing the metamorphosis of the silkworm and the process by which silk is obtained from cocoons, all well documented in English; from April to October you can even observe live cocoons and silkworms at work (compared to the beauty they produce, silkworms are amazingly ugly). The museum also displays various kinds of silk fabrics, as well as gorgeous kimono and reproduction Japanese costumes from the Nara, Heian, and Edo periods. Don't miss this museum, which takes about 30 minutes to see; surprisingly, it's never crowded. Open Tuesday through Sunday from 9am to 4:30pm; admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for seniors, ¥200 ($1.65/80p) for students, and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children.

At the opposite end of Yamashita Park is the Yokohama Doll Museum, 18 Yamashita-cho (☎ 045/671-9361; Station: Motomachi Chukagai), which boasts a collection of approximately 13,000 dolls from 140 countries, with about 1,300 dolls on display at any one time. A trip through the museum begins with a collection of antique Western dolls brought to Japan when Yokohama opened as an international harbor, as well as Japanese dolls sent to the West. Exhibits that follow show dolls from around the world dressed in their native costume, popular international figures of the past few decades (from Hello Kitty to R2-D2 of Star Wars fame), antique dolls (including those produced by such famous doll makers as Lenci and Jumeau), and Japanese dolls, from hina (elaborate dolls representing the empress and emperor, used for the March Hina Festival) to kokeshi (simple wooden dolls). Open 10am to 6:30pm; closed the third Monday of every month (except July, Aug, and Dec). Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults and ¥150 ($1.25/60p) for children. Plan on spending about 30 minutes here.

Not far from Yamashita Park is Chukagai, Japan's largest Chinatown with hundreds of souvenir shops and restaurants; see "Where to Dine," below.

SANKEIEN GARDEN ★★★ In my opinion, Sankeien Garden (☎ 045/621-0634; www.sankeien.or.jp) is the best reason to visit Yokohama. Although not old itself, this lovely park contains more than a dozen historic buildings that were brought here from other parts of Japan, including Kyoto and Nara, all situated around streams and ponds and surrounded by Japanese-style landscape gardens. The park, divided into an Inner Garden and Outer Garden, was laid out in 1906 by Tomitaro Hara, a local millionaire who made his fortune exporting silk. As you wander along the gently winding pathways, you'll see a villa built in 1649 by the Tokugawa shogunate clan, tea arbors, a 500-year-old three-story pagoda, and a farmhouse built in 1750 without the use of nails. The gardens are well known for their blossoms of plums, cherries, wisteria, azaleas, irises, and water lilies, but no matter what the season, the views here are beautiful.

Plan on at least 2 hours to see both gardens. Sankeien is open daily from 9am to 5pm (you must enter the Inner Garden by 4pm, the Outer Garden by 4:30pm). Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for seniors, and ¥200 ($1.65/80p) for children. The easiest way to reach Sankeien Garden is by bus no. 8, which departs from platform no. 2 at Yokohama Station's east exit (near Sogo department store) and winds its way past Sakuragicho Station, past Chinatown (via Hon-cho Dori avenue), and through Kannai before it reaches the Honmoku-Sankeien-mae bus stop 30 minutes later (the bus stop is announced in English).

WHERE TO DINE

MINATO-MIRAI For sophisticated surroundings or just a romantic evening cocktail (no children allowed after 5pm), take the elevator up to the 70th floor of Landmark Tower, where you'll find the Yokohama Royal Park Hotel Nikko's Sirius Sky Lounge ★ (☎ 045/221-1111), with stunning seaside views. It serves a buffet lunch for ¥3,500 ($29/£15) daily from 11:30am to 2:30pm, which often centers on a changing, ethnic cuisine but also offers items like salmon, lamb, and pizza. After lunch, it's teatime until 5pm. From 5pm to 1am daily, Sirius is a cocktail lounge and levies a cover charge: ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) per person from 5 to 7pm and again from 11pm to 1am; ¥2,100 ($17/8.50) for live music from 7 to 11pm. It offers a small, a la carte dinner menu, as well as set dinners for ¥6,300 ($52/£26) and ¥9,450 ($79/£39).

Nearby, a good place for a drink or a hamburger is the local branch of the Hard Rock Cafe, located on the first floor of Queen's Square Yokohama Tower A (☎ 045/682-5626; open daily 11am–11:30pm). Nearby, on the fourth and fifth floors of the Queen's Square Yokohama, is a branch of daidaiya (☎ 045/228-5035; open daily 11am–10:30pm). See p. 166 and p. 169 for reviews of these restaurants.

The 1911 renovated Red Brick Warehouse (see above) also has fast-food outlets, including a Kua' Aina burger shop (☎ 045/227-5300; see p. 160 for review), but for something more substantial, head to the third floor for Beer Next (☎ 045/226-1961), which strives admirably to create an international cuisine that goes down well with beer. Pizza, pasta, rotisserie roast chicken, and seared tuna with garlic oil and soy sauce are just some of the dishes offered; prices range from ¥1,147 to ¥2,310 ($12–$19/£6–£9.50). Beer Next is open daily 11am to 10pm (last order).

CHUKAGAI (CHINATOWN) Located in Yamashita-cho, a couple blocks inland from Yamashita Park and next to Motomachi Chukagai Station of the Minato Mirai Line, Chinatown has more than 500 restaurants and shops lining two main streets and dozens of offshoots. Tokyoites have long been coming to Yokohama just to dine; many of the restaurants have been owned by the same families for generations. Most serve Cantonese food and have plastic-food displays, English-language menus, or pictures of their dishes, so your best bet is to wander around and let your budget be your guide. Most dishes run ¥850 to ¥3,000 ($7.10–$25/£3.55–£12), and set lunches go for ¥900 to ¥1,200 ($7.50–$10/£3.75–£5). Larger restaurants accept credit cards; those that do display them on the front door. Most Chinatown restaurants are open from 11 or 11:30am to 9:30pm or later; some close Tuesday or Wednesday, but there are always other restaurants open.

While here, you might want to take a spin through the China Museum (Yokohama Daiseikai), 97 Yamashita-cho (☎ 045/681-5588), an eight-story building with an interior that replicates Shanghai of the 1920s and 1930s (Shanghai and Yokohama are sister cities), with re-created street scenes, artisans producing traditional crafts, a stage with musical and theatrical performances such as Chinese opera or acrobatics (every hour on the hour, 11am–4pm), souvenir shops, and a food court with stalls offering dishes from around China, most priced less than ¥800 ($6.65/£3.30). It's open daily 10am to 9pm. You can browse through the first five floors with its shops and restaurants for free, but theatrical shows cost ¥800 ($6.65/£3.30) for adults and ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for children.

4 Climbing Japan's Most Famous Mountain: Mount Fuji

100km (62 miles) SW of Tokyo

Mount Fuji, affectionately called “Fuji-san” by Japanese, has been revered since ancient times. Throughout the centuries, Japanese poets have written about it, painters have painted it, pilgrims have flocked to it, and more than a few people have died on it. Without a doubt, this mountain has been photographed more than anything else in Japan.

Mount Fuji is stunningly impressive. At 3,716m (12,388 ft.), it's the tallest mountain in Japan, towering far above anything else around it, a cone of almost perfectly symmetrical proportions. Mount Fuji is majestic, grand, and awe-inspiring. To Japanese, it symbolizes the very spirit of their country. Though it's visible on clear days (mostly in winter) from as far as 161km (100 miles) away, Fuji-san, unfortunately, is almost always cloaked in clouds. If you catch a glimpse of this elusive mountain (which you can sometimes do from the bullet train between Tokyo and Nagoya), consider yourself extremely lucky. Some of the best spots for views of Mount Fuji are Hakone and Izu (see below).

There are four ascents to the summit of Mount Fuji (and four descents), each divided into 10 stations of unequal length, with most climbs starting at the Go-go-me, or the 5th Station, about 1,400m to 2,400m (4,620–7,920 ft.) above sea level. From Tokyo, the Kawaguchiko-Yoshidaguchi Trail is the most popular and most easily accessible, as well as the least steep. The “official” climbing season is very short, only from July 1 to August 31. Climbers are discouraged from climbing outside the season, due to low temperatures, super-strong winds, and no emergency services. To beat the crowds—and I do mean crowds—try to schedule your climb on a weekday during the first 2 weeks of July, before the start of Japan's school vacation (around July 20).

GETTING THERE The easiest way to reach the Kawaguchiko 5th Station is by bus from Shinjuku Station. In July and August there are six buses daily that travel directly from Shinjuku Station to Kawaguchiko Trail's 5th Station, costing ¥2,600 ($22/£11) one-way and taking almost 2½ hours. Otherwise, there are also buses that go only as far as Kawaguchiko Station in 1 hour and 45 minutes and cost ¥1,700 ($14/£7) one-way; from Kawaguchiko Station there are buses onward to the 5th Station, with this trip taking approximately 45 minutes and costing another ¥1,700 ($14/£7). Buses, which depart a 2-minute walk from the west side of Shinjuku Station in front of the Yasuda Seimi no. 2 Building, require reservations, which you can make at the Keio Kosoku Bus Yoyaku Center (☎ 03/5376-2222) or a travel agency such as JTB. Less frequent Fujikyū Buses (☎ 0555/72-5111) depart from Tokyo Station's Yaesu south exit for Kawaguchiko Station for ¥1,700 ($14/£7), but the trip takes an hour longer and you still have to transfer to another bus for the 5th Station.

If you want to use your Japan Rail Pass, you can leave from Tokyo's Shinjuku Station via the JR Chuo Line to Otsuki, where you change to the Fuji Kyūko Line for Kawaguchiko Station. The entire trip takes about 3 hours. Note, however, that you must pay an extra ¥1,110 ($9.25/£4.60) for the last leg of the journey, and from Kawaguchiko Station you must still take the 45-minute bus ride onward to the Fifth Station.

VISITOR INFORMATION More information and train and bus schedules can be obtained from the Tokyo Tourist Information Center, including a leaflet called “Mount Fuji and Fuji Five Lakes”; see “Visitor Information” in chapter 4. A good online source is Fujiyoshida City's website, www.city.fujiyoshida.yamanashi.jp, which carries information on the Kawaguchiko-Yoshidaguchi Trail, bus schedules from Tokyo, mountain huts, and other information.

CLIMBING MOUNT FUJI

Mount Fuji is part of a larger national park called Fuji-Hakone-Izu National Park. Of the handful of trails leading to the top, most popular for Tokyoites is the

Fun Fact Mount Fuji or Bust

The first documented case of someone scaling Mount Fuji is from the early 8th century. During the Edo Period, pilgrimages to the top were considered a purifying ritual, with strict rules governing dress and route. Women, thought to defile sacred places, were prohibited from climbing mountains until 1871.

Kawaguchiko-Yoshidaguchi Trail, which is divided into 10 different stages; the 5th Station, located about 2,475m (8,250 ft.) up and served by bus, is the usual starting point. From here it takes about 6 hours to reach the summit and 3 hours for the descent.

PREPARING FOR YOUR CLIMB Because of snow and inclement weather from fall to late spring, the best time to make an ascent is during the “official” climbing season from July to August. Keep in mind that this is not a solitary pursuit. Rather, about 600,000 people climb Fuji-san every year, mostly in July and August and mostly on weekends—so if you plan on climbing Mount Fuji on a Saturday or a Sunday in summer, go to the end of the line, please.

You don't need climbing experience to ascend Mount Fuji (you'll see everyone from grandmothers to children making the pilgrimage), but you do need stamina and a good pair of walking shoes. The climb is possible in tennis shoes, but if the rocks are wet, they can get awfully slippery. You should also bring a light plastic raincoat (which you can buy at souvenir shops at the 5th Stage)—it often rains on the mountain—a sun hat, a bottle of water, a sweater for the evening, and a flashlight (or headlamp), if you plan on hiking at night. It gets very chilly on Mount Fuji at night. Even in August, the average temperature on the summit is 43°F (6°C).

Don't be disappointed when your bus deposits you at Kawaguchiko Fifth Station, where you'll be bombarded with souvenir shops, restaurants, and busloads of tourists; most of these tourists aren't climbing to the top. As soon as you get past them and the blaring loudspeakers, you'll find yourself on a steep rocky path, surrounded only by scrub brush and the hikers on the path below and above you. After a couple of hours, you'll probably find yourself above the roily clouds, which stretch in all directions. It will be as if you are on an island, barren and rocky, in the middle of an ocean.

STRATEGIES FOR CLIMBING TO THE TOP The usual procedure for climbing Mount Fuji is to take a morning bus, start climbing in early afternoon, spend the night near the summit, get up early in the morning to climb the rest of the way to the top, and then watch the sun rise (about 4:30am) from atop Mount Fuji. (You can, of course, also wake up in time to see the sun rise and then continue climbing.) At the summit is a 1-hour hiking trail that circles the crater. Hikers then begin the descent, reaching the 5th Station before noon.

There are about 16 mountain huts along the Kawaguchiko Trail above the 5th Station, but they're very primitive, providing only a futon and toilet facilities. Some have the capacity to house 500 hikers. The cost is ¥5,250 ($44/£22) per person without meals, ¥7,350 ($61/£30) with meals. When I stayed in one of these huts, dinner consisted of dried fish, rice, miso soup, and pickled vegetables; breakfast was exactly the same. Still, unless you want to carry your own food, I'd opt for the meals. Note that huts are open only in July and August; book as early as you can to ensure a place. Recommendations include Toyokan Hut at the 7th Stage (☎ 0555/22-1040); or Taishikan Hut at the 8th Stage (☎ 0555/22-1947). Call the Japanese Inn Union of Mount Fuji at ☎ 0555/22-1944 for more information.

In the past few decades, there's been a trend in which climbers arrive at the 5th Station late in the evening and then climb to the top during the night with the aid of flashlights. After watching the sunrise, they then make their descent. That way, they don't have to spend the night in one of the huts. My days of walking up a mountain through the night, however, are far behind me.

Climbing Mount Fuji is definitely a unique experience, but there's a saying in Japan: "Everyone should climb Mount Fuji once; only a fool would climb it twice."

5 Hakone: By Mountain Streetcar, Cable Car, Ropeway & Boat ★★★

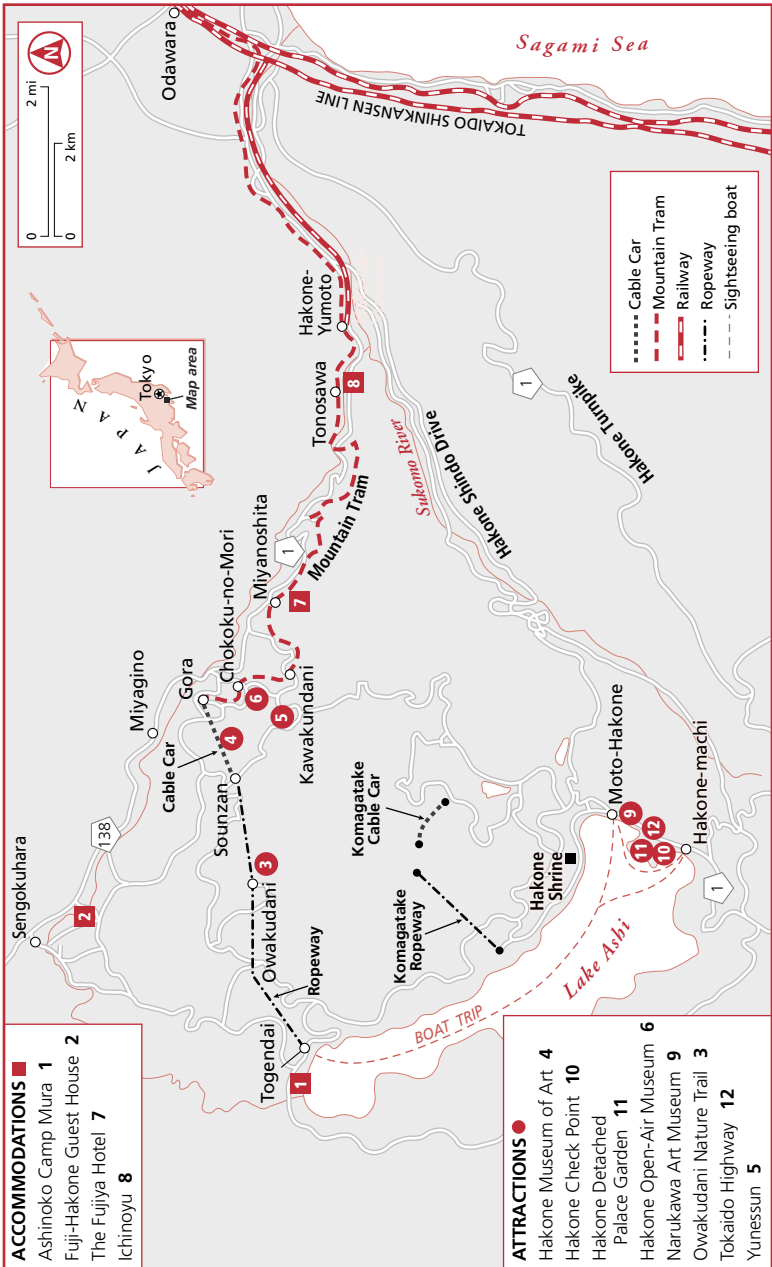

97km (60 miles) SW of Tokyo

Part of the Fuji-Hakone-Izu National Park ★★, Hakone is one of the closest and most popular destinations for residents of Tokyo. Beautiful Hakone has about everything a vacationer could wish for: hot-spring resorts, mountains, lakes, breathtaking views of Mount Fuji, and interesting historical sites. You can tour Hakone as a day trip if you leave early in the morning and limit your sightseeing to a few key attractions, but adding an overnight stay—complete with a soak in a hot-spring tub—is much more rewarding. If you plan to return to Tokyo, I suggest that you leave your luggage in storage at your Tokyo hotel or Shinjuku Station and travel to Hakone with only an overnight bag. If you're traveling onward, say, to Kyoto, leave your bags at a check-in counter at Hakone Yumoto Station.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE & GETTING AROUND Getting to and around Hakone is half the fun! An easy loop tour you can follow through Hakone includes various forms of unique transportation: Starting out by train from Tokyo, you switch to a small two-car streetcar that zigzags up the mountain, then change to a cable car, and then to a smaller ropeway, and end your trip with a boat ride across Lake Ashi, stopping to see major attractions along the way. From Lake Ashi (that is, from the villages of Togendai, Hakone-machi, or Moto-Hakone), you can then board a bus bound for Odawara Station (an hour's ride), where you board the train back to Tokyo. These same buses also pass by all the recommendations listed below, which is useful if you wish to complete most of your sightseeing the first day before going to your hotel for the evening. A bus also runs directly between Togendai and Shinjuku in about 2 hours (fare: ¥1,960/$16/£8).

Odakyu operates the most convenient network of trains, buses, streetcars, cable cars, and boats to and around Hakone. The most economical and by far easiest way to see Hakone is with Odakyu's Hakone Free Pass which, despite its name, isn't free but does give you a round-trip ticket on the express train from Shinjuku Station to Odawara or Hakone Yumoto and includes all modes of transportation in Hakone listed above and described below. The pass lets you avoid the hassle of buying individual tickets and gives nominal discounts on most Hakone attractions. Several variations of the pass are available; the most common, valid for 3 days, costs ¥5,500 ($46/£23) for adults, half-fare for children. You'll save money, however, by traveling on a weekday. The Hakone Weekday Pass, which is good Monday through Thursday, is valid for 2 days and costs ¥4,700 ($39/£19) for adults, half-price for children. Not only are weekdays less crowded, but some hotels also offer cheaper weekday rates, which means you'll save all around. Note, however, that the Weekday Pass is not available during peak times, including Golden Week, summer school vacation (mid-July to Aug), and New Year's Day.

The trip from Shinjuku to Hakone Yumoto, where you can then board the mountain streetcar, takes 2 hours, with departures approximately every 30 minutes. If time is of the essence or if you want to ensure a seat during peak season, reserve a seat on the faster and more luxurious Odakyu Romance Car, which travels from Shinjuku to Hakone Yumoto in 1½ hours and costs an extra ¥870 ($7.25/£3.60) one-way with a Hakone Pass.

If you have a Japan Rail Pass, you should take the Shinkansen bullet train first to Odawara (not all bullet trains stop here, so make sure yours does). From there, you can buy a Hakone Free Pass for ¥4,130 ($34/£17) or the Weekday Pass for ¥3,410 ($28/£14).

All passes described above can be purchased at any station of the Odakyu Railway, including Shinjuku and Odawara. In Tokyo, the best place to purchase Hakone Free Pass tickets is at the Odakyu Sightseeing Service Center (located on the ground floor near the west exit of Odakyu Shinjuku Station; ☎ 03/5321-7887; www.odakyu.jp/english; daily 8am–6pm), where you can obtain sightseeing information in English in addition to purchasing tickets.

VISITOR INFORMATION Before leaving Tokyo, pick up the “Hakone and Kamakura” leaflet available from the Tourist Information Center; it lists the schedules for the extensive transportation network throughout the Hakone area. A color brochure called “Hakone National Park” includes sightseeing information and contains a map of the Hakone area. See “Visitor Information” in chapter 4 for TIC locations.

In Hakone Yumoto, the Yumoto Tourist Office (☎ 0460/5-8911; daily 9:30am–6pm Apr–Nov, to 5:30pm Dec–Mar) is a 2-minute walk from the Hakone Yumoto Station. Take a right out of the station onto the town's main street; the office is on the left. If you want to leave luggage, you can do so at a counter inside the Hakone Yumoto train station, open daily 6am to 10pm.

EXPLORING HAKONE

STRATEGIES FOR SEEING HAKONE If you plan on spending only a day in Hakone, you should leave Tokyo very early in the morning and plan on visiting only a few key attractions—I recommend the Hakone Open-Air Museum, Owakudani Nature Trail, and, if time permits, Hakone Check Point and/or Narukawa Art Museum. Keep in mind that most forms of transportation (like the ropeway), as well as museums, close at 5pm.

If you're spending the night—and I strongly urge that you do—you can arrange your itinerary in a more leisurely fashion and devote more time to Hakone's attractions. You may wish to travel only as far as your hotel the first day, stopping at sights along the way and in the vicinity. The next day you could continue with the rest of the circuit through Hakone. Or, you can opt to complete most of your sightseeing the first day, and then backtrack to your accommodations or reach it by bus from Togendai, Hakone-machi, or Moto-Hakone.

SCENIC RAILWAY TO GORA Regardless of whether you travel via the Odakyu Romance Car or the ordinary Odakyu express, you'll end up at Hakone Yumoto Station. Here you'll transfer to the Hakone Tozan Railway, a delightful, mountain-climbing, two-car electric streetcar that winds its way through forests and over streams and ravines as it travels upward to Gora, making several switchbacks along the way. The entire trip from Hakone Yumoto Station to Gora takes only 45 minutes, but it's a beautiful ride on a narrow track through the mountains. This is my favorite part of the entire journey. Trains, which run every 10 to 15 minutes, make about a half-dozen stops before reaching Gora, including Tonosawa and Miyanoshita, two hot-spring spa resorts with a number of old ryokan and hotels. Some of these ryokan date back several centuries to the days when they were on the main thoroughfare to Edo, called the old Tokaido Highway. Miyanoshita is also the best place for lunch. See "Where to Dine," and "Where to Stay," below.

For relaxing hot-springs bathing en route, stop at the thoroughly modern, sophisticated public bath called Yunessun ♨️ (☎ 0460/82-4126; www.yunessun.com). To reach it, disembark from the Hakone Tozan Railway at Kowakudani, and then take a 15-minute taxi or bus ride (bus stop: Kowaki-en). This self-described "Mediterranean Style Spa Resort" offers a variety of both indoor and outdoor family baths, which means you wear your bathing suit. In addition to indoor Turkish, Roman, and salt baths, there's also a small children's play area with slides and a large outdoor area with a variety of small baths, including those mixed with coffee, sake, wine, rose petals, or healthy minerals. For those who desire more traditional bathing, there's the Mori No Yu, with both indoor and outdoor baths separated for men and women (you don't wear your suit here). Most people who come stay 2 to 3 hours. Admission is ¥3,500 ($29/£14) to Yunessun, ¥1,800 ($15/£7.50) to Mori No Yu, or ¥4,000 ($33/£16) for both; children pay half-fare. Upon admission, you'll be given a towel, robe, and wristband to pay for drinks and extras (rental suits are available), so you can leave all valuables in your assigned locker. Yunessun is open daily 9am to 7pm in summer, 9am to 6pm in winter; Mori No Yu is open 9am to 9pm year-round.

The most important stop on the Hakone Tozan Railway is the next-to-the-last stop, Chokoku-no-Mori, where you'll find the famous Hakone Open-Air Museum (Chokoku-no-Mori Bijutsukan) ♨️ (☎ 0460/82-1161; www.hakone-oam.or.jp), a minute's walk from the station. With the possible exception of views of Mount Fuji, this museum is, in my opinion, Hakone's number-one attraction. Using nature as a dramatic backdrop, it showcases sculpture primarily of the 20th century in a spectacular setting of glens, formal gardens, ponds, and meadows. There are 400 sculptures on display, both outdoors and in several buildings, with works by Carl Milles, Manzu Giacomo, Jean Dubuffet, Willem de Kooning, Barbara Hepworth, and Joan Miró, as well as more than 25 pieces by Henry Moore, shown on a rotating basis. The Picasso Pavilion contains works by Picasso from pastels to ceramics (it's one of the world's largest collections), while the Picture Gallery displays paintings by Miró, Renoir, Kandinsky, Vlaminck, Utrillo, and others. Several installations geared toward children allow them to climb and play. I could spend all day here; barring that, count on staying at least 2 hours. Be sure to stop off at the "foot onsen," where you can immerse your tired feet in soothing, hot water. The museum is open daily 9am to 5pm; admission is ¥1,600 ($13/£6.50) adults, ¥1,100 ($9.15/£3.55) university and high school students and seniors, and ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) children. Your Hakone Free Pass gives you a ¥200 ($1.65/80p) discount.

BY CABLE CAR TO SOUNZAN Cable cars leave Gora every 20 minutes or so and arrive 9 minutes later at the end station of Souznan, making several stops along the way as they travel steeply uphill. One of the stops is Koen-Kami, from which it's only a minute's walk to the Hakone Museum of Art (☎ 0460/82-2623). This five-room museum displays Japanese pottery and ceramics from the Jomon Period (around 10,000–400 B.C.) to the Edo Period, including terra-cotta haniwa burial figures, huge 16th-century Bizen jars, and Imari ware. What makes this place particularly rewarding are the bamboo grove and small but lovely moss garden, shaded by Japanese maples, with a teahouse where you can sample Japanese tea for ¥630 ($5.25/£2.60). It is most beautiful in autumn. Open Friday through Wednesday from 9:30am to 4:30pm (to 4:15pm in winter and to 5:15pm in autumn); admission is ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for adults, ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) for seniors, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for university and high school students, and free for children. The Hakone Free Pass gives you a ¥200 ($1.65/80p) discount. Plan on spending about a half-hour here, more if you opt for tea.

BY ROPEWAY TO TOGENDAI From Sounzan, you board a ropeway with gondolas for a long, 30-minute haul over a mountain to Togendai on the other side, which lies beside Lake Ashi, known as Lake Ashinoko in Japanese. Note that the ropeway stops running at around 5:15pm in summer and 4pm in winter.

Before reaching Togendai, however, get off at the first stop, Owakudani, the ropeway's highest point, to hike the 30-minute Owakudani Nature Trail (★). Owakudani means “Great Boiling Valley,” and you'll soon understand how it got its name when you see (and smell) the sulfurous steam escaping from fissures in the rock, testimony to the volcanic activity still present here. Most Japanese commemorate their trip by buying boiled eggs cooked here in the boiling waters, available at the small hut midway along the trail.

ACROSS LAKE ASHI BY BOAT From Togendai you can take a pleasure boat across Lake Ashi, also referred to as “Lake Hakone” in some English-language brochures. Believe it or not, a couple of the boats plying the waters are replicas of a man-of-war pirate ship. It takes about half an hour to cross the lake to Hakone-machi (also called simply Hakone; machi means city) and Moto-Hakone, two resort towns right next to each other on the southern edge of the lake. This end of the lake affords the best view of Mount Fuji, one often depicted in tourist publications. Boats are in operation year-round (though they run less frequently in winter and not at all in stormy weather); the last boat departs around 5pm from the end of March to the end of November. Buses connect Togendai with Moto-Hakone, Odawara, and Shinjuku.

If you're heading back to Tokyo, buses depart for Odawara near the boat piers in both Hakone-machi and Moto-Hakone. Otherwise, for more sightseeing, get off the boat in Hakone-machi, turn left, and walk about 5 minutes on the town's main road, following the signs and turning left to Hakone Check Point (Hakone Seki-sho) (★) (☎ 0460/83-6635), on a road lined with souvenir shops. This is a reconstructed guardhouse originally built in 1619 to serve as a checkpoint along the famous Tokaido Highway, which connected Edo (present-day Tokyo) with Kyoto. In feudal days, local lords, called daimyo, were required to spend alternate years in Edo; their wives were kept in Edo as virtual hostages to discourage the lords from planning rebellions while in their homelands. This was one of several points along the highway that guarded against the transport of guns, spies, and female travelers trying to flee Edo. Passes were necessary for travel, and although it was possible to sneak around it, male violators who were caught were promptly executed, while women suffered the indignity of having their heads shaven and then being given away to anyone who wanted them. Inside the reconstructed guardhouse, you'll see life-size models re-enacting scenes inside a checkpoint. Your ticket also allows admission to a small museum with displays relating to the Edo Period, including items used for travel, samurai armor, and gruesome articles of torture. Open daily from 9am to 5pm (until 4:30pm in winter); admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults and ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for children. It shouldn't take more than 20 minutes to see everything.

Just beyond the Hakone Check Point, at the big parking lot with the traditional gate, is the Hakone Detached Palace Garden (Onshi-Hakone-Koen), which lies on a small promontory on Lake Ashi and has spectacular views of the lake and in clear weather of Mount Fuji. Originally part of an imperial summer villa built in 1886, the garden is open to the public 24 hours, and admission is free. It's a great place for wandering, with the Lakeside Observation Building (daily 9am–4:30pm) showing displays relating to Hakone Palace, destroyed by earthquakes.

If you take the northernmost exit from the garden, crossing a bridge, you'll see the neighboring resort town, Moto-Hakone. Across the highway and lined with ancient and mighty cedars is part of the old Tokaido Highway itself. During the Edo Period, more than 400 cedars were planted along this important road, which today stretches 2.4km (1½ miles) along the curve of Lake Ashi and makes for a pleasant stroll (unfortunately, though, a modern road has been built right beside the original one). Moto-Hakone is a 5-minute walk from the Detached Palace Garden.

In Moto-Hakone, Narukawa Art Museum ★★ (☎ 0460/83-6828; www.narukawa-museum.co.jp) is very worthwhile, located just after you enter town, up the hill to the right when you reach the orange torii gate. It specializes in modern works of the Nihonga style of painting, developed during the Heian Period (794–1185) and sparser than Western paintings (which tend to fill in backgrounds and every inch of canvas). Large paintings and screens by contemporary Nihonga artists are on display, including works by Yamamoto Kyujin, Maki Susumu, Kayama Matazo, Hirayama Ikuo, and Hori Fumiko. Changing exhibitions feature younger up-and-coming artists, as well as glassware. I wouldn't miss it; views of Lake Ashi and Mount Fuji are a bonus. Open daily 9am to 5pm; admission is ¥1,200 ($10/£5) for adults, ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) for students, and ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for children.

WHEN YOU'RE DONE SIGHTSEEING FOR THE DAY Buses depart for Hakone Yumoto and Odawara from both Hakone-machi and Moto-Hakone two to four times an hour. Be sure to check the time of the last departure; generally it's around 8pm, but this can change with the season and the day of the week. (The bus also passes two of the accommodations recommended below, The Fujiya Hotel and Ichinoyu, as well as Yunessun hot-springs baths; another bus will take you to Fuji-Hakone Guest House.) Otherwise, the trip from Moto-Hakone takes approximately 30 minutes to Hakone Yumoto and 50 minutes to Odawara, where you can catch the Odakyu train back to Shinjuku or the Shinkansen bullet train onward toward Nagoya and Kyoto.

WHERE TO STAY

Ashinoko Camp Mura Kids Because you're in a national park, you might be inclined to enjoy nature by roughing it in a cabin beside Lake Ashi, just a 10-minute walk from the ropeway to Sounzan and the boat to Hakone-machi. Operated by Kanagawa Prefecture and also with tent camping, it offers row and detached (more expensive and closer to the lake) cabins that sleep up to six persons, each with two bedrooms, a bathroom, a living room with cooking facilities and tableware, and a deck with picnic table. However, there is no supermarket in nearby Togendai, so you'll either want to bring your own food or dine at the camp's restaurant, which offers both Japanese and Western selections (reservations required for lunch and dinner). There's a hiking trail around the lake. It's a great place for kids, and it's open year-round.

164 Hakone-machi, Moto-Hakone, Ashigarashimo-gun, Kanagawa 250-0522. ☎ 0460/84-8279. Fax 0460/84-6489. 36 units. Peak season ¥26,250 ($219/£109) row cabin, ¥31,500 ($262/£131) detached cabin; off season ¥15,750 ($131/£65) row cabin, ¥21,000 ($175/£87) detached cabin. No credit cards. Bus: Togendai, from Odawara (1 hr.) or Shinjuku (2 hr.), then a 10-min. walk. Amenities: Restaurant; rental bikes; barbecue grills. In room: Kitchenette, fridge.

Fuji-Hakone Guest House It's a bit isolated, but this Japanese Inn Group member offers inexpensive, spotlessly clean lodging in tatami rooms, all nonsmoking. A 20-some-year-old house, situated in tranquil surroundings set back from a tree-shaded road, is run by a man who speaks very good English and is happy to provide sightseeing information, including a map of the area with local restaurants. Some of the rooms face the Hakone mountain range. Pluses are the communal lounge area with TV and even a piano and a guitar; and the outdoor hot-spring bath (for which there's an extra ¥500/$4.15/£2.10 charge).

912 Sengokuhara, Hakone, Kanagawa 250-0631. ☎ 0460/84-6577. Fax 0460/84-6578. www.fujihakone.com. 14 units, none with bathroom. ¥5,250–¥6,300 ($44–$52/£22–£26) single; ¥10,500–¥12,600 ($87–$105/£43–£52) double; ¥15,750–¥16,800 ($131–$160/£66–£140) triple. Plus ¥150 ($1.25/60p) hot-spring tax per person. Peak season and weekends ¥1,000–¥2,000 ($8.35–$17/£4.20–£8.50) extra. Minimum 2-night stay preferred. Western breakfast ¥840 ($7/£3.50) extra. AE, MC, V. Bus: Hakone Tozan (included in the Hakone Free Pass) from Togendai (15 min.) or from Odawara Station (50 min.) to the Senkyoro-mae stop (announced in English), then a 1-min. walk. Amenities: Hot-spring bath; coin-op laundry and dryer; communal fridge and microwave. In room: A/C, TV.

The Fujiya Hotel ★★☆☆ Finds The Fujiya, which was established in 1878, is quite simply the grandest, most majestic old hotel in Hakone; indeed, it might be the loveliest historic hotel in Japan. I love this hotel for its comfortably old-fashioned atmosphere, including such Asian touches as a Japanese-style roof, lots of windows, and long wooden corridors with photographs of famous guests, from Einstein to Eisenhower. Staying here transports me to a gentler, and more genteel, past. There are five separate buildings, all different and added on at various times in the hotel's long history, but management has been meticulous in retaining its historic traditions. A landscaped garden out back, with a waterfall, a pond, a greenhouse, and stunning views over the valley, is great for strolls and meditation. An outdoor pool, fed by river water, occupies a corner of the garden, and there's also an indoor thermal pool and hot-spring public baths. Even the private bathroom in each room has piped in hot-spring water.

Rooms are old-fashioned and spacious with high ceilings and antique furnishings; some even have claw-foot tubs. The most expensive rooms are the largest, but my favorites are those in the Flower Palace, which has an architectural style that reminds me of a Japanese temple and seems unchanged since its 1936 construction. Even if you don't stay at the Fujiya, come for a meal or tea.

Note: A limited number of the least expensive rooms are available for foreigners at a special discounted rate, in dollars, based on the hotel's age. Note, however, that the special rate is not available on Saturday, Sunday, or during Golden Week, the month of August, or New Year's. And if these discounted rooms are sold out, you'll pay the regular rate.

44 Ichinoyu ★★ Located near Tonosawa Station (on the Hakone Tozan Line) next to a roaring river, this delightful, rambling, wooden building stands on a tree-shaded winding road that follows the track of the old Tokaido Highway. First opened more than 375 years ago, Ichinoyu is now in its 15th generation of owners. It claims to be the oldest ryokan in the area and was once honored by the visit of a shogun during the Edo Period. Old artwork, wall hangings, and paintings decorate the place. The ryokan has only tatami rooms, the oldest dating from the Meiji Period, more than 100 years ago. My favorites are the Take, Kotobuki, and Matsue rooms, old-fashioned and consisting mainly of seasoned and weathered wood; they face the river and have private outdoor baths, also with views of the river. (Rooms with private rotenburo, or outdoor hot-spring baths, cost ¥3,000/$25/£13 extra.) Both the communal tubs and the tubs in the rooms are supplied with hot water from a natural spring. The price you pay depends on your room, the meals you select, and the time of year you visit (rooms for single travelers are not available).

WHERE TO DINE

For casual dining, the Hakone Open-Air Museum has a pleasant restaurant, Bella Foresta, overlooking the park's fantastic scenery and offering a buffet lunch daily from 11am to 3pm for ¥1,980 ($16/£8). Also sporting a view is the even less formal restaurant on the third floor of the Owakudani Ropeway Station, serving spaghetti, tempura, and other inexpensive fare.

Main Dining Room ★★ CONTINENTAL Hakone's grandest, oldest hotel, conveniently located near a stop on the two-car Hakone Tozan Railway, is a memorable place for a good Western meal. The main dining hall, dating from 1930, is very bright and cheerful, with a high and intricately detailed ceiling, large windows with Japanese screens, a wooden floor, and white tablecloths. The views of the Hakone hills are impressive, and the service by the bow-tied waitstaff is attentive. For lunch you can have such dishes as spaghetti, sandwiches, fried chicken, rainbow trout, and sirloin steak. The excellent dinners, with seating at 6 and 8pm, feature elaborate set courses or a la carte dishes ranging from scallops and sole to grilled lamb, chicken, rainbow trout, and steak. Afterward, be sure to tour the landscaped garden.

In the Fujiya Hotel, 359 Miyanoshita. ☎ 0460/82-2211. Reservations required for dinner. Main dishes ¥2,541–¥7,854 ($21–$65/£11–£32); set dinners ¥10,500–¥23,100 ($87–$192/£43–£96); lunch main dishes ¥1,732–¥6,699 ($14–$56/£7–£28). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily noon–2pm (to 2:30pm weekends and holidays) and 6–8:30pm. Station: Miyanoshita on the Hakone Tozan Railway (5 min.).

6 Izu Peninsula, Tokyo's Playground

Atami: 107km (66 miles) SW of Tokyo; Ito: 120km (75 miles) SW of Tokyo

Whenever Tokyoites want to spend a night or two at a hot-spring spa on the seashore, they head for Izu Peninsula. Jutting into the Pacific Ocean southwest of Tokyo, Izu boasts some fine beaches, verdant and lush countryside, and a dramatic coastline marked in spots by high cliffs and tumbling surf. Even though the scenery is at times breathtaking, there's little of historical interest to lure a short-term visitor to Japan; make sure you've seen both Kamakura and Nikko before you consider coming here. Keep in mind also that Izu's resorts are terribly crowded during the summer vacation period from mid-July to the end of August.

The best way to enjoy Izu Peninsula, which is in Shizuoka Prefecture, is to drive, making this one of the few times when it may be worthwhile to rent your own car. A road hugs the coast all the way around the peninsula; you can drive it easily in a day (but beware: it's awfully narrow in parts). Rather than rent a car in Tokyo, I suggest you wait until you reach Atami or Ito, both of which have many car-rental agencies near their train stations. Ito, especially, warrants a car because attractions are rather far-flung and poorly served by public transportation.

If you're traveling during peak summer season (July–Aug), make accommodations reservations at least several months in advance. Otherwise, there are hotel, ryokan, and minshuku reservation offices in all of Izu's resort towns that will arrange accommodations for you. Be aware, however, that if a place has a room still open at the last minute in August, there's probably a reason for it—poor location, poor service, or unimaginative decor.

Before you leave Tokyo, be sure to pick up the leaflet “The Izu Peninsula” at the Tourist Information Center.

Atami means “hot sea.” According to legend, once upon a time local fishermen, concerned about a geyser spewing forth into the sea and killing lots of fish and marine life, asked a Buddhist monk to intervene on their behalf and to pray for a solution to the problem. The prayers paid off when the geyser moved itself to the beach; not only was the marine life spared, but Atami was blessed with hot-spring water the townspeople could henceforth bathe in.

Today, Atami—with a population of 42,000—is a conglomeration of hotels, ryokan, restaurants, pachinko parlors, souvenir shops, and a sizable red-light district, spread along narrow, winding streets that hug steep mountain slopes around Atami Bay. The city itself isn't very interesting—in fact, its economy is severely depressed, and because it has none of the fancy shops and nightlife to attract a younger generation, mostly older Japanese vacation here, giving the town an old-fashioned, unpretentious atmosphere. In any case, this is the most easily accessible hot-spring resort from Tokyo, and it has a wide beach flanked by a half-mile boardwalk, a wonderful art museum, and several other attractions that make it popular even on just a day trip.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE From Tokyo Station, it's 51 minutes by Shinkansen bullet train; as only the slower Kodama bullet trains stop in Atami, be sure to check beforehand. If you don't have a Japan Rail Pass, the fare is ¥3,570 ($30/£15) for an unreserved seat. You can also take the JR Odoriko or Super View Odoriko, which travels from Tokyo Station to Atami in 1 hour and 15 or 20 minutes, with the fare ranging from ¥3,900 to ¥4,270 ($32–$36/£16–£18), depending on the train. Even slower is the 2-hour JR Tokaido Local Line for ¥1,890 ($16/£8).

VISITOR INFORMATION The Atami Tourist Information Office (adjacent to a coffee shop) is to the left as you exit the train station (☎ 0557/81-5297; daily 9:30am–6pm; to 5:30pm Oct–Mar). No English is spoken, but English-language literature and a map are available, including the very useful “Atami Walking Guide.”

GETTING AROUND Buses serve major sightseeing attractions in Atami. If you're spending the day here, you might wish to purchase a 1-day ticket for the YuYu Bus, which has two routes, both making circuitous trips through town and departing Atami Station every 35 minutes. You can leave and re-board as often as you wish, or you can stay on for a tour of the city. The cost is ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) for adults and ¥400 ($3.35/£1.60) for children. Convenient rental car agencies include a Toyota Rental Car office in front of Atami Station (☎ 0557/81-0100) and JR Eki Rent-A-Car (☎ 0557/82-1382) at the station.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

Atami's must-see is the MOA Art Museum (★), 26–2 Momoyama-cho (☎ 0557/84-2511; www.moaart.or.jp), housed in a modern building atop a hill with sweeping views of Atami and the bay. It's a 5-minute bus ride from Atami Station on the YuYu Bus; or take a bus from platform 4 to the last stop (fare: ¥160/$1.35/70p). The museum's entrance is dramatic—a long escalator ride through a tunnel—but the museum itself concentrates on traditional Asian art, including woodblock prints by Hokusai, Hiroshige, and their contemporaries; Chinese ceramics; Japanese bronze religious art; and lacquerware. Although some 200 items from the 3,500-piece private collection are changed monthly, keep an eye out for a few things always on display: the Golden Tea Room (a remake of Toyotomi Hideyoshi's tea room), a Noh theater, and a tea-storage jar with a wisteria design by Edo artist Nonomura Ninsei, a National Treasure. Another National Treasure, displayed only 1 month a year (Feb), is a gold-leaf screen of red and white plum blossoms by Ogata Korin, whose residence next door is also part of the museum. It takes about an hour to tour the museum, open Friday through Wednesday from 9:30am to 4:30pm; admission is ¥1,600 ($13/£6.50) for adults, ¥1,200 ($10/£5) for seniors, ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) for university and high-school students, free for children.

I also love (45) Kiunkaku, 4–2 Showa-cho (☎ 0557/86-3101; YuYu Bus: Kiunkaku stop), built in 1918 as the private villa of a shipping magnate, converted to a ryokan in 1947, and now open to the public. It's an eclectic mix of Japanese and Western architectural styles, with stained-glass windows, fireplaces, parquet floors, gaily painted European furniture, and tatami rooms, wrapped around a lovely inner garden. It was once a favorite haunt of famous Japanese writers (including Mishima Yukio); who wouldn't feel inspired here? Allow 30 minutes to tour the facilities, open Thursday to Tuesday from 9am to 5pm. Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for university and high-school students, and free for children.

Finally, if you're here on a Saturday or Sunday, try to catch the 11am dancing performance of the Atami Geisha, in front of City Hall at Geigi Kenban, 17–13 Chuocho (☎ 0557/81-3575; YuYu Bus: Shiyakusho-mae). Although reservations are not required for the 30-minute show, I advise making one anyway to assure getting a seat, as these performances are very popular with the older generation. Stick around after the show; most of the geisha come out to greet the audience and you can ask to have your picture taken standing next to a performer. Admission, including tea and a Japanese sweet, is ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50).

WHERE TO STAY

(46) Taikanso (★★) Located on a pine-shaded mountain slope above the city, this beautiful ryokan was built in 1938 as the private villa of a steelworks owner and was named after his friend Yokoyama Taikan, a famous Japanese painter. Ten years later it was converted to a Japanese inn; since then, it's been expanded into several buildings connected by covered pathways and meandering streams, adhering to a Kyoto style of architecture popular in the 16th century. Various styles of rooms are available (most with Washlet toilets and massage chairs), with the most expensive (including the room where Taikan stayed) offering the best views, the most space, and the best meals (Western-style breakfasts available on request). Rooms are tatami, but beds can be installed upon request. The ultimate in luxury is the oldest unit, a three-room suite with a sitting alcove and cypress tub, where Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands stayed with her husband and three sons. Although all the rooms boast hot-spring water for the tubs, there are three public baths with open-air bathing, saunas, and Jacuzzis, as well as three private baths with outdoor baths and views over Atami (extra fee for these: ¥2,100/$18/£8.75 for 45 min.). Be sure to wander the corridors and garden with its 300-year-old pines, stopping off at the footbaths on the third floor of the annex, where you can soak your feet, order drinks, and look out over the town.

Rates include 2 meals. ¥3,150-¥5,000 ($26-$42/£13-£21) extra per person weekends, holidays, and peak season. AE, DC, MC, V. Take a taxi from Atami Station, a 4-min. ride. Amenities: 2 restaurants (sushi, teppanyaki); coffee shop; nightclub; indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; sauna; beauty salon; in-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, free dataport (annex rooms only), hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

WHERE TO DINE

④7 Home Run Sushi (Value) SUSHI For excellent sushi, head to this simple, 30-year-old one-room restaurant near the waterfront with both counter and table seating. There's no English-language menu, but there are plastic-food displays of various sushi sets. I have no idea why this place is called Home Run—one of Japan's many mysteries.

5-1 Nagisacho. © 0557/82-7300. Sushi set meals ¥1,050-¥2,000 ($8.75-$17/£4.40-£8.50). No credit cards. Daily 11:30am-10:30pm. A 10-min. walk from Atami Station, at the end of Ginza Dori St., on a corner to the left.

ITO

Just 25km (15 miles) south of Atami, Ito is a hot-spring spa, hemmed in on one side by steeply wooded mountains and on the other by the sea. Its 75,000 inhabitants are unusually spread along the coast in a string of hamlets, separated by beautiful scenery but connected by winding roads, private railway, and buses. Its lush, tropical atmosphere with palm trees and flowering bushes comes as a surprise this close to Tokyo, but what makes this town truly unique is that it supports an astonishing number of private museums, most of them Western and some quite odd. I don't think I could come up with a more bizarre collection of museums even if I tried.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE From Tokyo Station it's approximately 1 hour and 50 minutes to Ito Station aboard the JR Odoriko (¥4,220/$35/£17); or 1 hour and 40 minutes aboard the Super View Odoriko JR (¥4,590/$38/£19), with six daily runs. Otherwise, a slower local line takes approximately 2½ hours and costs ¥2,210 ($18/£9) one-way. From Atami, the trip costs ¥320 ($2.65/£1.35) and takes almost a half-hour aboard the JR Ito Local Line.

VISITOR INFORMATION The Ito Tourist Information Office (© 0557/37-6105) has two locations: across the street from the train station's exit (open daily 9am-5pm) and in Marine Town on the waterfront (open daily 9:30am-5:30pm).

GETTING AROUND The Ito Local Line train travels south from Ito Station to Jogasaki, the site of Izu's famous Jogasaki Coast. However, because most museums are located inland from Jogasaki, it's best to rent a car (avoid weekends and peak season). There are many agencies around Ito Station, including Toyota Rental Car (☎ 0557/37-0100), JR Eki Rent-A-Car (☎ 0557/37-2866), and Avis (☎ 0557/36-1150). Otherwise, a bus departing Ito Station for Shaboten Koen makes stops at both the Ikeda Museum of 20th Century Art and the Izu Glass & Craft Museum. A Free Pass for ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50) allows unlimited 1-day travel by bus.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

Of Ito's 30-some museums, the most well known, and one of the oldest (open since 1975), is the Ikeda Museum of 20th Century Art ★★, 614 Totari (☎ 0557/45-2211; bus stop: Ikeda Bijutsukan). Though small, it boasts an impressive collection by mostly Western artists, including Warhol, Salvador Dalí, Picasso, Renoir, Roy Lichtenstein, Edvard Munch, Fernand Leger, Paul Signac, Emil Nolde, Willem de Kooning, Miró, Kokoschka, Matisse, and Chagall as well as Kimura Issho, Tatsuoki Nambata, and Junzo Watanabe. Plan on spending about 30 minutes here. Open Thursday to Tuesday 10am to 5pm (daily July–Aug); admission is ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for adults, ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) for high-school students, and ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for elementary and junior-high students.

Another personal favorite is the Izu Glass & Craft Museum ★★, 11–300 Omurokogen (☎ 0557/51-7222; bus stop: Risokyo), with its exquisite collection of Art Nouveau and Art Deco glass art, including figurines, perfume bottles, jewelry, vases, and lamps by such artists as Galle, Lalique, Tiffany, Erté, and Daum. Although at first thought it seems strange to find such a collection here, the Japonism craze that swept through the world in the late 19th century had a huge influence on Western design, apparent in this museum by the frequent use of dragonflies, water lilies, orchids, and other motifs. You'll want to spend at least an hour here. Open 9am to 5pm daily; admission is ¥850 ($7.10/£3.55) for adults, ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) for seniors, and ¥450 ($3.75/£1.90) for children.

Other art and decorative-art museums include the Izu Lake Ippeki Museum with works by Jean-Pierre Cassigneul (☎ 0557/45-5500), the Izu Kogen Ceramic Glass Art Museum (☎ 0557/54-9600) with Chinese works, the Izu Lake Ippeki Museum of Perfume (☎ 0557/45-7700) with early-20th-century American and European perfume bottles, the Brian Wild Smith Museum (☎ 0557/51-7330) with original pictures and books including Mother Goose, the Bohemian Glass Museum (☎ 0557/53-4630), African Art Gallery (☎ 0557/51-5757), and the Antique Jewelry Museum (☎ 0557/54-5566) with Victorian brooches, rings, and more.

There are also special-interest museums with collections dedicated to the teddy bear, dolls, music boxes and automatic musical instruments, stained glass, antique clocks, ammonites, cats, bird carvings, antique tin toys, clocks, and angels. A wax museum boasts likenesses of the Beatles, Charlie Chaplin, presidents Lincoln and Clinton, the Japanese imperial family, former prime minister Koizumi, baseball star Suzuki Ichiro, and other celebrities. But the museum that takes the cake is the Ayashi Shonen Shojō Hakubutsukan (☎ 0557/51-8800), which translates loosely as Mysterious Boys & Girls Museum (how could you not go?) and is packed to the rafters with a little bit of everything relating to Japanese and Western pop culture, including toys from World War II to the present, magazines, clothing, album covers (from the Monkeys to Elvis), games, a Godzilla collection, Marilyn Monroe dolls, a two-headed calf, real stuffed monkeys, dolls with a penchant for bondage and S&M, and a house of horrors. For more information on museums, contact the Ito Tourist Office.

To see the Jogasaki Coast with its dramatic, rugged, cliff-lined coast and hiking paths, take the train to Jogasaki Station; from there it's a 20-minute walk. For bathing, there's the Ito Orange Beach not far from Ito Station.

HOT-SPRING BATHING

Although many accommodations boast hot-spring baths, Japanese think nothing of visiting additional hot-spring facilities during the day. Unique is ④8 Tokaikan, 12–10 Higashimatsubara-cho (☎ 0557/36-2004). A beautiful Japanese inn built in 1928 and boasting superior wood craftsmanship, it was in danger of becoming a parking lot before it was rescued by the city and opened to the public in 2001. After wandering its halls, consider stopping for a snack at the ground-floor cafe with its views of the river. Admission is ¥200 ($1.65/85p), half-price for children. Make a reservation if you want to take in the waters in the tiny public bath, which costs ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) extra. It's open daily 9am to 9pm; closed the third Tuesday of every month.

Seaside Spa, located in a small, waterfront shopping/dining complex called Marine Town, 571–19 Yukawa (☎ 0557/38-1811; bus stop: Marine Town), offers indoor and outdoor baths with views of the sea, whirlpools, and saunas daily from 10am to 10pm; admission is ¥1,500 ($13/£6.25). It's about a 25-minute walk from Ito Station; turn left out of the station and left again at the coast.

WHERE TO STAY

④9 Ito-en Hotel Value Located on the Matsukawa River, this modern, simple hotel opened in 2002 and offers mostly Japanese-style rooms that can sleep two to six people, most with small balconies (request a room facing the river) and—I like this—manga comic books. There are also huge Western-style twin rooms and combination bed/tatami rooms that are great for families. Other pluses include its hot-spring indoor/outdoor baths and breakfast served until a late 11am. The downside: Only parties of two or more are accepted. Single travelers can opt for its annex for the same price (☎ 0557/32-5500), which equips each of its 70 rooms with computers (free of charge) and offers both indoor and outdoor baths, but it isn't on the river.

1–12 Matsukawa-cho, Ito City, Shizuoka 414-0001. ☎ 0557/35-1234. Fax 0557/35-2003. 66 units. ¥7,800 ($65/£32) per person. Rates include 2 buffet meals but exclude ¥150 ($1.25/60p) spa tax. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Ito (8 min.). Go straight out of the station to the 3rd stoplight, and turn right on the last street before the river; it's on the left. Amenities: Indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; sauna; lobby computer with free Internet access. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, safe.

Kawana Hotel Star This grand old hotel is a good choice for relaxation, golf, and swimming. With its whitewashed walls, red roof tiles, and manicured lawns sloping gently toward the sea, the place seems little changed since it opened in 1936. Even the lobby lounge, built in the theme of an English country estate, remains faithful to the era with its soaring ceiling, large fireplace, coat of arms, heavy wood detailing, and antique furniture. The hotel's seclusion drew Joe Dimaggio and Marilyn Monroe on their honeymoon. Today, its two 18-hole golf courses (one open to the public, the other only for hotel guests) make it famous among golfers—the hotel is often fully booked a half year in advance.

Nevertheless, the hotel shows its age in places, with unimaginative, mediocre rooms that could use some updating. Best are those facing the sea, with small balconies, automatic curtain controls, and large bathrooms, most with two sinks. The least expensive rooms are smaller in size and face inland toward the mountains; double rooms are cramped for two large people. Don't forget to climb to the top of the hotel's observation tower for a view of the grounds and their 10,000 cherry trees. Because the hotel is rather isolated, you'll probably want to dine at one of its restaurants: the old-fashioned main dining room serving French cuisine; a 370-year-old, thatched-roof farmhouse specializing in Japanese food; and the casual, oval-shaped Sun Parlor with windows on three sides that offer views of the sea and, on clear days, Mount Fuji rising above the mountains. A great place for a vacation.

1459 Kawana, Ito City, Shizuoka 414-0044. ☎ 0557/45-1111. AE, DC, MC, V. A 15-min. taxi ride from Ito Station. Amenities: 3 restaurants; bar; lounge; 3 outdoor pools, including a children's pool (fee: ¥1,680/$14/£7); 2 18-hole golf courses (greens fees: ¥21,000–¥26,500/$175–$221/£87–£110 weekdays, ¥28,400–¥33,900/$236–$282/£118–£141 weekends and holidays); unlit outdoor tennis courts; room service (8–10am and 3–10:45pm); in-room massage; laundry service; non-smoking rooms; library w/free dataports. In room: TV, minibar, hair dryer, safe.

WHERE TO DINE

For a varied selection of international cuisine, head to Marine Town, a shopping complex on the waterfront, where you'll find restaurants serving Italian, Indonesian, and Japanese fare.

7–6 Shizumicho. ☎ 0557/37-4705. Teishoku ¥1,000–¥2,000 ($8.35–$17/£4.20–£8.50); set courses ¥2,600–¥4,600 ($22–$38/£11–£19); donburi rice casseroles ¥1,200–¥2,000 ($10–$17/£5–£8.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 10am–3pm; Sat–Sun 10am–7pm (last order). Station: Ito (20 min.). Turn left out of the station, walk to the coast, and turn right. After you cross the bridge, it will be on the right across from Denny's.

The Japan Alps

The several volcanic mountain ranges that lie in central Honshu together comprise Japan Alps National Park ★★★ (called Chubu Sangaku National Park in Japanese). With the exception of Japan's tallest mountain, Mount Fuji (see section 4 of chapter 6, beginning on p. 239), all of Japan's loftiest mountains are in these ranges, making the Japan Alps a popular destination for hikers in summer and skiers in winter (Nagano, near Matsumoto, hosted the XVIII Winter Olympics in 1998). In addition, because some of the villages nestled in these mountains retain much of their traditional architecture, the Japan Alps provide a unique look at mountain life both past and present.

A GOOD STRATEGY FOR SEEING THE JAPAN ALPS

Because towns and villages in this region are spread out—with lots of mountains in between—traveling isn't as fast in this part of the country as on Honshu's broad plains. Your best strategy for visiting all the destinations covered in this chapter is to start from Nagoya Station by taking the JR Shinano train in the morning to Nakatsugawa, where you can then board a bus for Magome and spend the day hiking to Tsumago. From Tsumago, it's only a short bus ride to Nagiso, where you can then reboard the Shinano train bound for Matsumoto. From Matsumoto, you'll travel by bus onward to Takayama and then on to Ogimachi (in Shirakawago).

1 Matsumoto, Gateway to the Japan Alps ★

235km (146 miles) NW of Tokyo

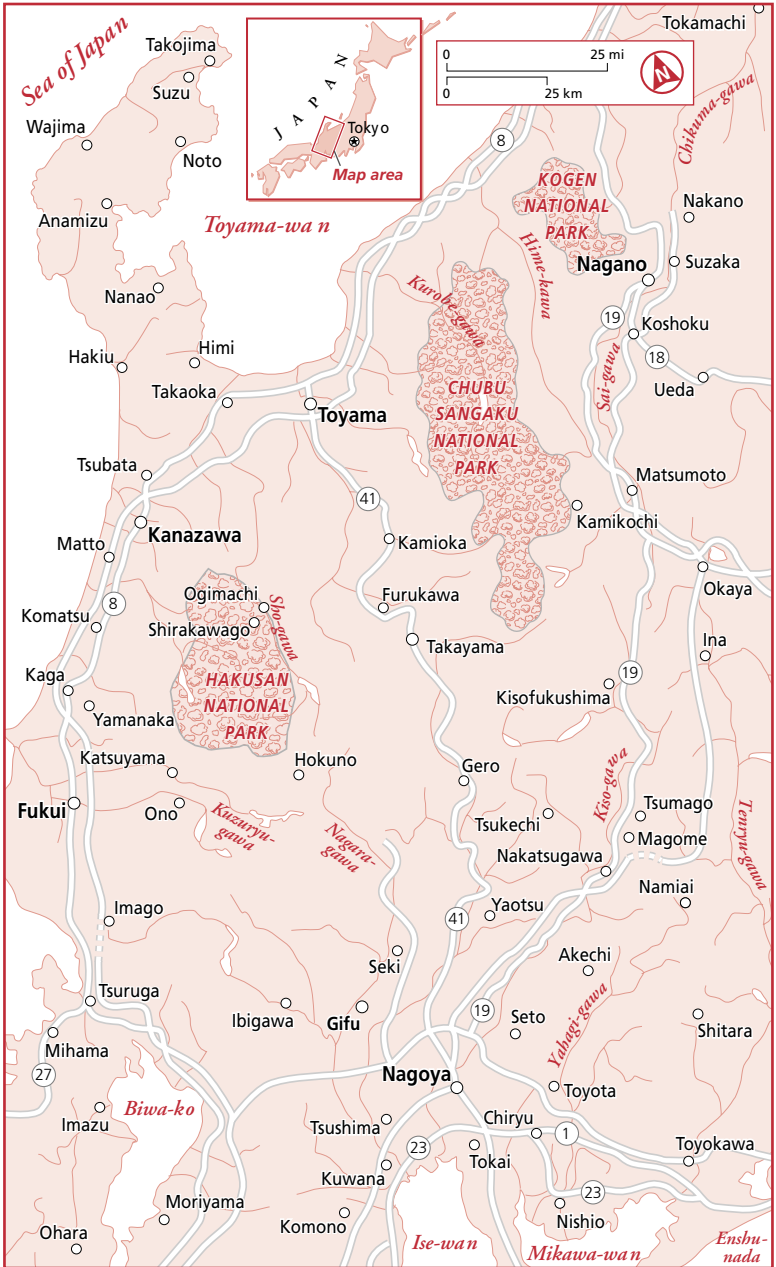

Located in the middle of a wide basin about 198m (660 ft.) above sea level and surrounded on all sides by mountain ranges, Matsumoto ★ boasts a fine feudal castle with the oldest existing keep (donjon) in Japan, as well as an outstanding woodblock-print museum. Although the city itself (pop. 230,000) is modern with little remaining from its castle days, it does boast approximately 100 storehouses (kura) scattered throughout town, built a century ago after a devastating fire destroyed most homes and businesses. Some of the kura, made of earth and straw and then painted many times to protect valuables against future flames, have been renovated into shops, restaurants, and other establishments.

In any event, I find Matsumoto pleasant, the air fresh, and its people among the nicest I've encountered in Japan. Encircled by towering peaks, sparkling mountain lakes, and colorful wildflowers, Matsumoto also serves as the gateway to the hiking trails of Japan Alps National Park; most travelers heading to the more remote regions of the Japan Alps pass through here on their way.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Train The JR Chuo Honsen Line runs directly to Matsumoto from Tokyo's Shinjuku Station. Its Limited Express Azusa, departing every hour or less, reaches Matsumoto in about 2½ to 3½ hours and costs ¥6,200 ($52/£26) one-way for an unreserved seat. There's also a direct JR train from Nagoya, the Limited Express Shinano, which takes about 2 hours and costs ¥5,360 ($45/£22).

By Bus From Tokyo's Shinjuku Station, buses depart for Matsumoto approximately every hour, taking about 3¼ hours and costing ¥3,400 ($28/£14). From Nagoya, the ride is 2½ hours and ¥3,460 ($29/£15); from Osaka, the ride is 5½ hours and ¥5,710 ($58/£29); from Takayama, the ride is 2¼ hours and ¥3,100 ($26/£13).

VISITOR INFORMATION Before you depart from Tokyo, pick up a sheet called "Nagano" at the Tourist Information Center (p. 26), or download it from JNTO's website at www.jnto.go.jp, under "Browse by Destinations." It provides information on buses and trains to Matsumoto, as well as information on sights in and around Matsumoto. It also recommends 2- to 4-hour hiking trips from Kamikochi ♣, the Japan Alps' most popular destination for serious hikers; the small village is a little more than 2 hours with the trip from Matsumoto via train and then bus.

In Matsumoto, you'll find Matsumoto Tourist Information (☎ 0263/32-2814; www.city.matsumoto.nagano.jp; daily 9:30am–6pm Apr–Oct, to 5:30pm Nov–Mar) just across from the main wicket of Matsumoto Station. It has a good English-language map of the city, and its excellent English-speaking staff will also help with accommodations and can provide information on nearby skiing destinations.

GETTING AROUND You can walk to Matsumoto Castle, about 1.5km (1 mile) northeast of the station, in about 20 minutes. Alternatively, the Town Sneaker Bus departs from in front of Matsumoto Station every 30 minutes and makes a circular trip to all city sights; it costs ¥100 (85¢/45p) each time you get off or ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for an all-day pass (half-price for children). To visit the Japan Ukiyo-e Museum, however, you'll have to go by local train or taxi. Alternatively, free bicycles are available daily 8:30am to 5pm at various locations throughout town, including the Matsumoto City Museum next to Matsumoto Castle and the Kaichi Gakko Primary School. They're convenient for visiting sights not accessible by Sneaker Bus; ask the Matsumoto Tourist Information staff for details.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

In addition to the sights below, good places for strolling and shopping include the Nakamachi district in the heart of the city with its kura, restaurants, and shops selling Matsumoto furniture, crafts, and antiques; and Nawate Dori, a narrow pedestrian lane flanking the Metoba River where vendors sell fruit, vegetables, flowers, and crafts.

Unless otherwise noted, all directions below are from Matsumoto Station.

MATSUMOTO CASTLE & ENVIRONS

Matsumoto Castle ♣★ Originally built in 1504 when Japan was in the throes of continuing and bloody civil wars, Matsumoto Castle is a fine specimen of a feudal castle with a 400-year-old donjon that's the oldest existing keep in the country. Surrounded by a moat with ducks and white swans and lined with willow and cherry trees, the outside walls of the donjon are black, earning the place the nickname of Karasu-jo, or Crow Castle. It's rather small as castles go, but English-speaking Goodwill Guides stand ready daily to provide free, 1-hour tours outlining the castle's history and architectural features. Take your shoes off at the entrance and walk in stocking feet over worn wooden floors and up steep and narrow steps until you finally reach the sixth floor, from which you have a nice view of the city. This would have served as the feudal lord's (daimyo's) headquarters in case of enemy attack, while the fifth floor, with views in all directions, was where the generals would have conferred during war. Although the Ishikawa clan rebuilt the castle in 1593 in anticipation of gun warfare (guns were introduced to Japan in 1543) with many arrow and gun slots and walls thick enough to withstand bullets, the castle was never attacked because the civil wars ended with the coming of the Edo Period (1603–1867). Nevertheless, guns were manufactured in Japan throughout the Edo Period, and on display inside the castle are approximately 370 matchlocks, armor, and other arms manufactured in Japan from 1543 to the late Edo Era, providing interesting insight into how the import was adapted for domestic use. With war no longer a threat, a moon-viewing room was added to the castle in 1635.

Included in your castle ticket is admission to the Matsumoto City Museum (★) next to the castle. This rather eclectic museum has displays relating to archaeology, history, Matsumoto's many festivals (including the summer Tanabata Festival and a fertility festival held in Sept featuring, well, phalluses), and folklore of the surrounding region, including samurai armor, an ornate palanquin, and farming equipment. You can tour both castle and museum in about 75 minutes.

4-1 Marunouchi. ☎ 0263/32-2902. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm. Town Sneaker Bus: Matsumotojo Kuromon. To walk, take Ekimae Dori, the main road leading away from the station, and turn left onto Honmachi Dori.

Kaichi Gakko Primary School Japan's public school system was founded in 1872 (before that, Buddhist temples were the only source of education). In 1876, this handsome white mortar building of black tile topped by an octagonal turret opened its doors, making it one of the oldest Western-style schools still in existence and a fine example of Meiji Era architecture. Serving as an elementary school for 90 years, it remains much as it was, with displays of books, games, desks, abacuses, and other educational items. Most fascinating are the photographs of former pupils (showing how many young girls came to school with young siblings strapped to their backs, as parents were hard at work) and the children's books dating from World War II, with offending passages blackened out by demand of Allied occupational forces after the war. Next to the school is an 1889 parsonage you can see for free. In any case, you can tour everything in about 30 minutes.

2-4-12 Kaichi. ☎ 0263/32-5725. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm. Closed Mon Dec–Feb. Town Sneaker Bus: Takajomachi. Behind the castle, about a 7-min. walk north.

MORE TO SEE & DO

Japan Ukiyo-e Museum (★★★ Finds) Don't miss this ultramodern building housing the private collection of the Sakai family, quite simply one of the best museums of woodblock prints in Japan. With more than 100,000 prints, it's believed to be the largest collection of its kind in the world and includes representative masterpieces of all known Ukiyo-e artists. The exhibition changes every 3 months, with approximately 100 prints on display at any one time. A 15-minute slide show with English-language explanations introduces the current exhibition, and an English-language pamphlet describes the history of the collection and how woodblock prints are made. You'll want to spend at least 45 minutes here, longer if you browse the museum shop of reproduction and original prints.

2206-1 Koshiba, Shimadachi. ☎ 0263/47-4440. www.ukiyo-e.co.jp. Admission ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.45) adults, ¥530 ($4.40/£2.20) children. Tues–Sun 10am–5pm. From platform 7 at Matsumoto Train Station, take the local Kamikochi

Tips A Note on Japanese Characters

Many establishments and attractions in Japan do not have signs in Roman (English-language) letters. Those that don't are indicated in this guide by an oval with a number that corresponds to a number in appendix C showing the Japanese equivalent. Thus, to find the Japanese symbol for, say, the Matsumoto Folkcraft Museum (below), refer to no. 51 in appendix C.

Line 10 min. to Oniwa Station (¥170/$1.40/70p); JR Rail Pass not accepted) and then walk 15 min. (turn left out of the station, then left at the T-intersection with the post office; after passing under the bridge, take the 3rd right at the small cemetery and continue straight on, past the underpass); or take a ¥1,500 ($13/£6.25) taxi ride; or, better yet, come by bike (about 20 min. from Matsumoto Station).

Matsumoto City Museum of Art (Matsumoto-shi Bijutsukan) Opened in 2002, this inviting museum showcases the talents of artists who have connections to Matsumoto, including Kamijyo Shinzan, who elevated calligraphy to an art, landscape artist Tamura Kazuo, and Kusama Yayoi, a female artist known for her exuberant colors and polka-dot modern art. Expect to spend about 30 minutes here.

4–2–22 Chuo. ☎ 0263/39-7400. Admission ¥400 ($3.35/£1.65) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) university and high-school students, free for children and seniors. Tues–Sun 9am–5pm. Town Sneaker Bus: Matsumoto-shi Bijutsukan or a 15-min. walk east of Matsumoto Station on Ekimae Dori.

51 Matsumoto Folkcraft Museum (Matsumoto Mingei-kan) ★ Here's a museum worth visiting if you have an extra hour (including the bus ride). Housed in a kura built to store fish, it contains folk art made primarily of wood, glass, bamboo, and porcelain from Japan and other countries, with exhibits changed three times a year. On display may be items as diverse as combs from around the world to Japanese store signs designed during the Edo Period for people who couldn't read. Particularly beautiful are the wooden chests.

1313–1 Satoyamabe. ☎ 0263/33-1569. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, free for children 15 and younger. Tues–Sun 9am–5pm. About 15 min. by bus (¥290/$2.45/£1.25); from the bus terminal, take the platform 1 bus and get off at the Shimoganaï Mingeikan Guchi.

52 Suzuki Shinichi Memorial Hall (Suzuki Shinichi Kinenkan) ★ If you studied violin when you were young, maybe you were one of the countless children around the world who learned by the Suzuki Method, named after its creator, Dr. Suzuki Shinichi, who died in 1998 at the age of 99. From 1946 to 1994, Suzuki lived in this simple home. You can see his study, where he spent 6 hours every morning reviewing tapes sent by pupils from around the world. You can also view short films in which Dr. Suzuki discusses his revolutionary teaching theory based on the belief that any child can be taught to play an instrument. Especially interesting is the 1955 film showing 1,000 Japanese children performing—in unison—Bach's Concerto for Two Violins, which is credited with spreading the theory to the United States when a Japanese graduate student at Oberlin College showed it to one of his professors. Matsumoto is also home of the Suzuki Shinichi Talent Education Institute, 3–10–15 Fukashi (☎ 0263/32-1611), where you can watch group lessons (advance reservations required) or see periodic concerts given by graduating students.

2–11–87 Asahi. ☎ 0263/34-6645. Free admission. Tues–Sun 9am–5pm. About 10 min. by bus from platform 6 (bound for Osama Onsen) to Motoharacho, then a 5-min. walk.

WHERE TO STAY

Because Matsumoto is popular primarily with hikers used to roughing it along nature trails, accommodations are geared mainly toward convenience. Directions are from Matsumoto Station.

EXPENSIVE

Buena Vista ★ Matsumoto's biggest and fanciest hotel is a white gleaming structure popular for its conference and wedding facilities and with those attending the Saito Kinen Festival. A round fireplace in the lobby bar welcomes arriving guests; black-painted walls, offset by earth tones and accented by indirect lighting, are reminiscent of Matsumoto's famous kura. Rooms range from very small singles (though windows can be opened) to premier rooms with better amenities and modern furnishings. Rooms on higher floors have views of mountains in the distance. Rates below reflect the seasons, with the highest prices in peak season (July 20–Sept 15).

1–2–1 Honjo, Matsumoto, Nagano 390-0184. ☎ 0263/37-0111. Fax 0263/37-0666. www.buena-vista.co.jp. 200 units. ¥9,240–¥11,550 ($77–$96/£39–£48) single; ¥19,635–¥24,255 ($164–$202/£82–£101) double or twin. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Matsumoto (7 min.). Turn right out of the station onto Shirakaba Dori; the hotel will be on a side street to the left. Amenities: 4 restaurants; 2 bars; lounge; 2 computers w/free Internet service in the lobby; gift shop; salon; room service (7:30–10am and 5:30–10pm); in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry cleaning; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, cable TV w/pay movies, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

MODERATE

Matsumoto Hotel Kagetsu ★ Value This ryokan, in a newer building constructed in the style of a kura with a history going back more than 100 years, imparts a pleasant, old-fashioned atmosphere with its antique wooden furnishings in public spaces. Both Western- and Japanese-style rooms are available, comfortably large for the price. For the best views, ask for one of the western rooms facing the castle. For a splurge, deluxe corner rooms boast more windows, larger sitting areas, and toilets separate from the bathrooms.

4–8–9 Ote, Matsumoto, Nagano 390-0874. ☎ 0263/32-0114. Fax 0263/33-4775. www.mcci.or.jp/www/kagetsu/eigo-index.htm. 85 units. ¥7,350–¥10,500 ($61–$88/£30–£44) per person. Japanese or Western breakfast ¥1,200 ($10/£5) extra. AE, MC, V. Town Sneaker Bus: Agetsumachi (1 min.). Amenities: 2 restaurants; room service (4–9pm). In room: A/C, TV, dataport, hot-water pot w/tea, safe (Japanese-style rooms only).

Matsumoto Tokyu Inn Visible from the station, this practical and clean business hotel's main selling point is its convenient location, which probably accounts for rates that are a bit higher than you would expect in Matsumoto (the highest rates below are charged in summer). The majority of rooms are singles and twins, all with semi-double-size beds with feather quilts and Swedish pillows (easier to sleep on, perhaps, than the Japanese bean variety). There are also six doubles and five deluxe twins, the latter with sofa, chairs, and a separate vanity area with its own sink. On clear days, rooms facing west have views of the Japan Alps.

AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Matsumoto (3 min.). Turn right out of the station. Amenities: Restaurant; bar; salon; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV w/pay movies, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, trouser press.

INEXPENSIVE

⑤3 Marumo ★★ Finds This is my top pick for accommodations that epitomize the old-fashioned atmosphere of Matsumoto during the Meiji Era. Located in the traditional district of Nakamachi and occupying a kura and traditional Japanese inn constructed after the great 1888 fire that destroyed much of Matsumoto, it boasts a diminutive but eye-catching entryway of polished woods and antiques, very narrow stairs and corridors leading to Japanese-style rooms, and a wonderful coffee shop which has changed little over the decades. Rooms are simple and without the usual creature comforts, but the location is great and the atmosphere is truly one of a kind. If you're searching for "traditional Japan," this is where you'll want to stay.

3-3-10 Chuo, Matsumoto, Nagano 390-0811. ☎ 0263/32-0115. 8 units, none with bathroom. ¥5,250 ($44/£22) per person without breakfast; ¥6,300 ($53/£26) per person with Japanese breakfast. Rates include service charge. No credit cards. Town Sneaker Bus: Nakamachi (12 min.). Walk down Koen Dori (left of the station; there's a McDonald's on the corner) to Honmachi, turn left, and then turn right at Nakamachi. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea, safe.

WHERE TO DINE

Matsumoto is famous for its buckwheat noodles, which are fairly thick with a hearty flavor and can be served hot or cold, with several kinds of dips and sauces. It is also known for its basashi—raw horse meat.

⑤4 Kura ★ Finds TEMPURA This restaurant occupies the ground floor of one of the largest kura in Matsumoto, built in the late Meiji Period and rare for its three stories (most kura are two-storied). Enter the dining room through the thick vaultlike door and sit at the dark wood counter or at one of the tables. The restaurant is known for its delicious tempura, though it also offers sushi, grilled fish, basashi, and the local cold noodles (zaru soba) on its English-language menu. Best values are set meals; kaiseki is available only with prior reservations. Try to avoid peak meal times, when the overworked staff can be brusque.

1-10-22 Chuo. ☎ 0263/33-6444. Kaiseki from ¥4,000 ($33/£17); tempura, sushi, and sashimi set dinners ¥945-¥2,100 ($9.85-$18/£4.90-£9); set lunches ¥735-¥2,100 ($6.10-$18/£3.05-£9). AE, DC, V. Thurs-Tues 11:30am-2pm and 5:30-10pm. Station: Matsumoto (5 min.). Walk down Koen Dori (left of the station; there's a McDonald's on the corner) and take the 1st left past the Parco department store.

⑤5 Nomugi ★ NOODLES There are only three tables in this well-known eatery popular with the locals, which means you may have to wait for a seat and can't dawdle over a meal. Its handmade buckwheat noodles are served until they run out, which is why the restaurant has a flexible closing time. You'll be given a sauce to pour into a cup; add green onion, wasabi, and daikon radish, then dip your soba into the mix. At the end of your meal, make a soup from the soba water stock (served in a teapot) and the soba sauce. In winter, the soba is served with boiled toppings.

2-9-11 Chuo. ☎ 0263/36-3753. Soba ¥1,100 ($9.15/£4.60); half portion ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90). No credit cards. Thurs-Mon 11:30am-around 2pm. Town Sneaker Bus: Nakamachi. Station: Matsumoto (12 min.). Walk down Koen Dori (left of the station; there's a McDonald's on the corner), turn left at Honmachi, turn right at Nakamachi, and then take the 1st right; it will be on the left.

⑤6 Sa-No-Haru Finds LOCAL SPECIALTIES Dining in this cozy, one-room establishment, opened more than 60 years ago by the present proprietor's mother, is like being an invited guest in the Nishimura home, with Mr. Nishimura behind the counter and his wife serving the meals. Tempura, sashimi, grilled fish (yakizakana), basashi, tofu, and seasonal dishes are available, ranging from bamboo shoots in spring (which are grilled in their husks and served with miso paste) to mushrooms in autumn, both gathered from the nearby mountain forests by Mr. Nishimura himself. He also grates his own wasabi. The best thing to do is to tell him what kinds of food you like and how much you want to spend, and then leave the rest to him.

4–12–8 Ote. ㊦ 0263/36-4943. Meals start at ¥3,000 ($25/£13) and go up. No credit cards. Mon–Sat 5–11pm. Town Sneaker Bus: Agetsuchimachi. Station: Matsumoto (20 min.). Walk down Koen Dori (left of the station; there's a McDonald's on the corner), turn left at Honmachi, and turn right when you reach the castle; it's down this street, on the right.

57 Shikimi ★ Value EEL/SUSHI For inexpensive Japanese fare close to Matsumoto Station, try this place specializing in eel and sushi. An atmosphere of old Japan is evoked by its traditional tiled roof, cast-iron lanterns, and interior with wooden sliding doors, small tatami rooms, wooden counter, and paper lanterns. I recommend the unagi donburi (strips of eel on rice), which comes with soup and pickled vegetables. If sushi is more to your liking, try one of Shikimi's platters of assorted sushi, called morawase.

1–5–5 Chuo. ㊦ 0263/35-3279 or 0263/36-7716. Unagi donburi ¥1,680 ($14/£7); platters of assorted sushi (morawase) ¥1,680–¥3,150 ($14–$26/£7–£13). No credit cards. Mon–Fri 11:45am–3pm and 4:30–9:30pm; Sat–Sun 11:45am–9pm. Station: Matsumoto (3 min.). Take Koen Dori 1 block and turn left; it is on the corner on your left.

Taiman ★★★ FRENCH If you feel like treating yourself, this ivy-covered, rustic yet elegant restaurant with a view of a garden is an excellent choice. In business for nearly 60 years and located just south of Matsumoto Castle, it offers wonderful French cuisine from a changing menu that might include grilled duck, whitefish in a shrimp cream sauce, scallops, lamb cutlet with pistachio, or grilled steak in a red-wine sauce. My ¥5,250 ($43/£22) lunch—which included bread or rice, dessert, and coffee—started with a corn potage, followed by stuffed ayu (river fish) and then the main dish, lamb with cepe mushrooms.

4–2–4 Ote. ㊦ 0263/32-0882. Reservations recommended. Main dishes ¥4,200–¥6,300 ($35–53/£18–£27); set lunches ¥5,250–¥9,450 ($43–$79/£22–£40); set dinners ¥12,000–¥18,900 ($100–$157/£50–£78). AE, DC, MC, V. Thurs–Tues 11:30am–2pm and 5–9pm (last order 8pm). Station: Matsumoto (12 min.). Walk straight (east) on Eki-mae Dori and turn left on Honmachi Dori with its post office; after the bridge, turn right at the 2nd stoplight where the NTT Building is.

2 Along the Nakasendo Highway: Tsumago & Magome

About 98km (61 miles) E of Nagoya; 88km (55 miles) SW of Matsumoto

If you're traveling between Nagoya and Matsumoto, you'll most likely pass through Kiso Valley in mountainous Nagano Prefecture. Formed by the Kiso River, the valley has always served as a natural passageway through the Japan Alps and was, in fact, one of two official roads linking Kyoto with Edo (Tokyo) back in the days of the Tokugawa shogunate (the other route was the Tokaido Hwy., which passes through Hakone). Known as the Nakasendo Highway ★★, it was the route of traveling daimyo and their entourages of samurai retainers journeying between Japan's two most important towns. To serve their needs, 11 post towns sprang up along the Nakasendo Highway. Back then, it took 3 days to travel through the valley.

Of the old post towns, 58 Tsumago ★★ and 59 Magome ★ are two that still survive, with many of the old buildings left intact. An 8km (5-mile) pathway skirting the Kiso River links the two villages, providing hikers with the experience of what it must have been like to travel the 400-year-old Nakasendo Highway back in the days of the shogun. You can visit the two picturesque villages and take the hike in a 1-day excursion from Nagoya or Matsumoto, but I've included an overnight recommendation in case you want to linger.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE Because neither Magome nor Tsumago is directly on a train line, you'll have to make the final journey by bus.

To reach Magome, take the JR Shinano train (which connects Nagoya and Matsumoto and departs hourly) to Nakatsugawa Station. Trains from Nagoya take about 50 minutes and cost ¥2,430 ($20/£10) for an unreserved seat; from Matsumoto it takes about 75 minutes and costs ¥3,670 ($31/£15). The 20-minute bus ride onward to Magome costs ¥540 ($4.50/£2.25), with buses departing once an hour.

To reach Tsumago, take the JR Shinano train to Nagiso Station and then take a 10-minute bus ride (¥300/$2.50/1.25). A taxi ride between Tsumago and Nagiso costs about ¥1,200 ($10/£5).

Note: Train and bus schedules do not always coincide and not all trains stop in Nagiso or Nakatsugawa, so be sure to plan ahead. Make certain your train stops at your destination (trains stop in Nagiso infrequently, only five times a day). Note also that buses are infrequent and run only until about 4pm; be sure to inquire about bus schedules beforehand. The Matsumoto Station tourist office has information on bus schedules (see “Visitor Information,” on p. 258).

VISITOR INFORMATION The best way to obtain information about Kiso Valley is to stop by the Tourist Information Center in Tokyo or Narita or Kansai international airports to pick up a leaflet called “Kiso Valley” (or download it from JNTO’s website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under “Browse by Destinations”), which provides a rough sketch of the 8km (5-mile) hiking path between Magome and Tsumago and gives some basic information about the villages; you can also stop by the tourist office in Matsumoto.

Otherwise, there’s a tourist office in Tsumago (☎ 0264/57-3123; open daily 8:30am–5pm) and one in Magome (☎ 0264/59-2336; open daily 9am–5pm except in summer when it opens at 8:30am). No English is spoken.

TRAVELING BETWEEN TSUMAGO & MAGOME If you can’t walk the entire distance between Tsumago and Magome, a bus travels between the two villages, so you could walk around Tsumago and then take a bus to Magome for ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70).

Especially useful for hikers is a luggage-transfer service available between Magome and Tsumago on weekends and national holidays from mid-March to mid-November (offered daily during peak season, July 20–Aug 31). Luggage is accepted at either town’s tourist office no later than 11:30am, at a charge of ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) per bag, and can be picked up as early as 1pm, but must be picked up after your hike by 5pm.

WALKING THE NAKASENDO HIGHWAY BETWEEN TSUMAGO & MAGOME

Allow about 3 hours for the 8km (5-mile) hike between Tsumago and Magome. It doesn’t matter which town you start from, though starting from Tsumago is easier if you have heavy luggage being sent via transfer service, as starting in Magome requires an 8-minute walk from the bus stop up a steep slope to the tourist office. In any case, the trail is mainly a footpath tracing the contours of the Kiso Valley and crisscrossing the stream over a series of bridges. At times the trail follows a paved road and leads through interesting farming villages. There are public toilets along the way. Because the trail does go up some steep inclines, be sure to wear your walking shoes. And have fun—this is a great walk!

Fun Fact Daimyo Paranoia

Daimyo (feudal lords) almost never ate meals prepared by local innkeepers. Rather, feudal lords traveled with their own cooks, who shopped for provisions in the village and then prepared meals in the inn's kitchen. Even then the food was first tested by a taster before the daimyo himself ate, to make sure it wasn't poisoned.

TSUMAGO  Tsumago, the second post town from the south, is the more beautiful and authentic of the two towns. Threatened with gradual decline and desertion after the train line was constructed in 1911, bypassing Tsumago, the town experienced decades of neglect—and that's probably what ultimately saved it. Having suffered almost no modernization in the rebuilding zeal of the 20th century, Tsumago was a perfect target for renovation and restoration in the early 1970s, and in a rare show of insight, electrical wires, TV antennas, and telephone poles were hidden from sight along the main road. Thus, Tsumago looks much as it did back in the days of Edo. There are, of course, the ubiquitous souvenir shops, but many sell locally made crafts made of wood and bamboo.

On the main street of Tsumago, be sure to stop at the Tsumagojuku Honjin (☎ 0264/57-3322), an officially appointed inn that once served as a way station for the 30 or so daimyo who used the Nakasendo Highway to travel to and from Edo. Like all honjin (an inn designated as the resting place for daimyo), it's divided into two parts: a large, grand area for the feudal lord and his attendants, and a few smaller, simpler rooms for the Shimazaki family, who managed the inn.

Apparently, the Shimazaki family had plans drawn up to rebuild their inn back in 1830. Renovation, however, didn't take place until 160 years later when an heir discovered the plans and gave them to the township, which rebuilt the inn according to the original plans using techniques dating from the period. You'd swear it's the original.

Across the lane is the Waki-honjin Okuya, the town's secondary inn, used by court nobles or by daimyo when the Honjin was already occupied. The present house, a lovely traditional structure with a garden, dates from 1877 and was rebuilt with hinoki cypress trees, a fact that has a special significance for this region. For centuries, all the way through the Edo Period, wood in the Kiso Valley was as good as gold and was used instead of rice to pay taxes. Commoners, therefore, were prohibited from cutting down trees, and those who did so literally lost their heads. When the Meiji Period dawned and the ban was finally lifted, wealthy landowners were quick to rebuild in a staterier manner. Emperor Meiji himself visited the inn in 1880, and though a special tub and toilet were built just for the occasion, he stayed only 30 minutes. Next door is the Rekishi Shiriyokan, which serves as a local history museum with displays of lacquerware, a model of how the Waki-honjin looked during the Edo Period, diagrams showing how trees were felled and transported from the steep mountainsides, and photographs of buildings in Tsumago before and after they were renovated. A ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) ticket allows admission to all three museums; all are open daily 9am to 5pm.

MAGOME The southernmost post town, Magome has old inns, restaurants, and shops selling beautiful basket work and wooden articles that line both sides of a steeply sloping, cobblestone road. It takes about 20 minutes to stroll through the town.

WHERE TO STAY & DINE

Both Tsumago and Magome have simple minshuku and ryokan (tourist offices in both towns can make reservations). I'm partial to (60) Ryokan Fujioto, Tsumago, Nagiso-machi 399-5302 (☎ 0264/57-3009; fax 0264/57-2239), set back from the main road of Tsumago and buffered from foot traffic by a nice Japanese garden. The 100-year-old inn offers nine tatami rooms (none with bathroom) for ¥10,500 to ¥12,600 ($88–$105/£44–£53) per person, including two meals. No credit cards are accepted. What makes this a particularly good place to stay is the English-speaking owner, whose daughter volunteers as a free guide around town (you can request her services when making a reservation).

Even if you don't spend the night, you can sample the inn's meal of local specialties for lunch, served from 11am to 2:30pm daily. An English-language menu with pictures offers broiled trout, carp sashimi, raw horse meat, and other fare, as well as set meals for ¥900 to ¥1,650 ($7.50–$14/£3.75–£7).

3 Takayama, Little Kyoto of the Mountains ★★

533km (331 miles) NW of Tokyo; 165km (103 miles) NE of Nagoya

Located in the Hida Mountains (part of the Japan Alps National Park), Takayama is surrounded by 3,000m (10,000-ft.) peaks, making the train ride here breathtaking. The town, situated along a river on a wide plateau with a population of 90,000, was founded back in the 16th century by Lord Kanamori, who selected the site because of the impregnable position afforded by the surrounding mountains. Modeled after Kyoto but also with strong ties to Edo (Tokyo), Takayama borrowed from both cultural centers in developing its own architecture, food, and crafts, all well preserved today thanks to centuries of isolation. With a rich supply of timber provided by surrounding forests, its carpenters were legendary, creating not only beautifully crafted traditional merchants' homes in Takayama but also the Imperial Palace and temples in Kyoto.

Today, Takayama boasts a delightful and elegant historic district, called San-machi Suji, with homes of classical design typical of 18th-century Hida. The streets are narrow and clean and are flanked on both sides by tiny canals of running water, which in centuries past were useful for fire prevention, washing clothes, and dumping winter snow, but which now give the town its distinct character. Rising from the canals are one- and two-story homes and shops of gleaming dark wood with overhanging roofs; latticed windows and slats of wood play games of light and shadow in the white of the sunshine. In the doorways of many shops, blue curtains flutter in the breeze.

With its quaint old character, great shopping (including a lively city market), and museums, Takayama is a town that invites exploration. As you walk down the streets, you'll also notice huge cedar balls hanging from the eaves in front of several shops, indicating one of Takayama's sake breweries. Altogether there are six of them in Takayama, most small affairs. Go inside, sample the sake, and watch the men stirring rice in large vats. There are also a surprising number of museums, most housed in traditional homes and filled with historical relics and antiques.

GETTING THERE By Train The easiest way to reach Takayama is by direct train from Nagoya, with about eight departures daily for the 2¼-hour trip that costs ¥5,360 ($45/£22) for an unreserved seat. There's also one direct train a day from Osaka via Kyoto, which takes about 5 hours and costs ¥7,560 ($63/£32).

By Bus Buses depart Tokyo's Shinjuku Station four to six times daily spring through autumn, arriving in Takayama 5½ hours later and costing ¥6,500 ($54/£27). There are fewer departures in winter, when snowfall sometimes makes roads impassable. From Matsumoto, the Highland Express Bus (☎ 0263/35-7400 in Matsumoto, or 0577/32-1160 in Takayama) passes through mountain scenery on the 2¼-hour trip and costs ¥3,100 ($26/£13).

VISITOR INFORMATION Before you depart from Tokyo or Narita or Kansai airports, stop by the Tourist Information Center for the excellent "Takayama and Shirakawago" leaflet (or download it from JNTO's website at www.jnto.go.jp), which contains maps and sightseeing information. In Takayama, the tourist office (☎ 0577/32-5328; daily 8:30am–6:30pm, to 5pm Nov–Mar) is housed in a wooden booth just outside the main (east) exit of Takayama Station. You can pick up an English-language brochure with a map of the town showing the location of all museums and attractions. You can also use the tourist office's laptop for free Internet access, but you have to stand.

More information is available at www.hida.jp/english.

GETTING AROUND Takayama is one of Japan's easiest towns to navigate. Most of its attractions lie east of the train station in San-machi Suji and are easily reached from the station in about 10 to 15 minutes on foot. Throughout the town are English-language signs pointing directions to the many attractions; they're even embedded in sidewalks and streets. An alternative is to rent a bicycle from one of the many shops ringing the station, Timely (☎ 0577/35-5377; daily 10am–5pm) rents bikes for ¥200 ($1.65/85p) an hour or ¥1,200 ($10/£5) for the day.

To reach Hida Folk Village and Hida Takayama Museum of Art (see below for both), you'll have to go by bus, which departs from platform 6 at the bus station to the left of the main exit of the train station. Better yet, ask at the tourist Information Center for the free London Bus (operated by the Museum of Art only for museum customers Apr–Oct), which departs from Takayama Station three or four times a day. From the museum it's about a 10-minute walk to the folk village.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

Takayama's main attraction is its old merchants' houses, which are clustered together in San-machi Suji on three narrow streets called Ichino-machi, Nino-machi, and Sanno-machi. Be sure to allow time to wander around. In addition to the district's many museums, there are also shops selling Takayama's specialties, including sake, yew wood-carvings, beautiful cypress furniture, and a unique lacquerware called shunkei-nuri.

Be sure, too, to visit the Miyagawa Morning Market, which stretches on the east bank of the Miyagawa River between Kajibashi and Yayoibashi bridges. Held every morning from 7am (6am in summer) to noon, it's very picturesque, with cloth-covered stalls selling fresh vegetables, flowers, pickled vegetables, locally made crafts, and toys.

And if you have more free time still, consider the Higashiyama Hiking Course, which takes you to a string of 13 temples and five shrines, nestled on a wooded hill on the east edge of town in an area called Higashiyama Teramachi. The path here stretches 3.5km (2.25 miles) end to end, but English-language signs are few and far between and the map provided by the tourist office is hopeless; you could consider getting lost part of the fun. The Higashiyama Hiking Course then continues through Shiroyama Park, site of the Kanamori clan castle until it was torn down in 1695 by order of the Tokugawa shogunate. Parts of its stone foundations still remain.

THE TOP ATTRACTIONS

Note that the attractions listed below are closed during the New Year's holiday.

Hida Minzoku Mura Folk Village (Hida no Sato) ★★☆☆ This is an open-air museum of more than 30 old thatched and shingled farmhouses, sheds, and buildings, many of which were brought here from other parts of the region to illustrate how farmers and artisans used to live in the Hida Mountain range. The entire village is picturesque, with swans swimming in the central pond, green moss growing on the thatched roofs, and flowers blooming in season. Some of the houses have gassho-zukuri-style roofs, built steeply to withstand the region's heavy snowfalls; the tops of the roofs are said to resemble hands joined in prayer. All the structures, which range from 100 to 500 years old, are open to the public and are filled with furniture, old spindles and looms, utensils for cooking and dining, instruments used in the silk industry, farm tools, sleds, and straw boots and snow capes for winter. Be sure to ask for the free English-language audio guide at the entrance.

Workshops have been set up in one corner of the village grounds to demonstrate Takayama's well-known woodcarving, tie-dyeing, weaving, and lacquer-work industries; some of the artisans even live here. On weekends you can try your hand at sandal-making, weaving, and woodworking (class fees: ¥500–¥1,000/$4.15–$8.35/£2.10–£4.15). You'll want to spend about 1½ hours at the village, but if you're heading to Shirakawago, skip it; there's a similar, more accessible open-air museum there.

☎ 0577/34-4711. Admission ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) children under 15. Daily 8:30am–5pm. Either take the bus from platform 6 next to Takayama Station (a 10-min. ride) or the free London Bus to the Hida Takayama Museum of Art (then a 10-min. walk); or walk 30 min. southwest from the train station.

Merchants' Houses ★★☆☆ In contrast to other castle towns during the Edo Period, Takayama was under the direct control of the Tokugawa government rather than a feudal lord, which meant its homes were built and owned by merchants and commoners rather than the samurai class that dominated other Japanese cities. Located side by side in San-machi Suji and both toured easily in less than 30 minutes, Yoshijima-ke or Yoshijima House (☎ 0577/32-0038) and Kusakabe Mingeikan (☎ 0577/32-0072) are merchants' mansions that once belonged to two of the richest families in Takayama. Of the two, the Yoshijima House is my favorite: With its exposed attic, heavy crossbeams, sunken open-hearth fireplace, and sliding doors, it's a masterpiece of geometric design. It was built in 1907 as both the home and factory of the Yoshijima family, well-to-do brewers of sake. Notice how the beams and details of the home gleam, a state attained through decades of polishing as each generation of women did their share in bringing the wood to a luster. Yoshijima-ke is also famous for its lattices, typical of Takayama yet showing an elegance influenced by Kyoto. But one of the main reasons I like this house is that its walls serve as an art gallery for the lithographs of female artist Shinoda Toko, one of my favorite Japanese artists (and a distant relative of present owner Yoshijima Tadao, who also uses the house for his other passion, jazz, heard softly in the back gallery).

The Kusakabe Mingeikan, built in 1879 for a merchant dealing in silk, lamp oil, and finance, is more refined and imposing. Its architectural style is considered unique to Hida but has many characteristics common during the Edo Period, including a two-story warehouse with open beams and an earthen floor. On display are personal items such as lacquerware and chests from Japan and imports from other countries, handed down through the generations and arranged just as they would have been in the 18th and 19th centuries.

North end of Nino-machi St., Oshinmachi. Separate admission to each house: ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for junior high and younger. Summer: Both open daily 9am–5pm. Winter (Dec–Feb): Yoshijima-ke Wed–Mon 9am–4:30pm; Kusakabe Mingeikan daily 9am–4pm.

MORE MUSEUMS

Fujii Folk Craft Museum (Fujii Bijutsu Mingei-Kan) ★ This gallery in the heart of San-Machi Suji occupies a traditional merchant's storehouse; its entrance is a copy of an outer gate that once led to Takayama Castle. The eclectic collection from the Edo Period includes beautiful chests (tansu) inlaid with mother-of-pearl, sake and wine glasses, lacquerware, Imari and Kutani porcelain, tortoise-shell combs, ceremonial dolls, kimono, teakettles, paper lanterns, rice barrels, smoking utensils, matchlocks, swords, farming tools, spinning wheels, and more. Many items are identified in English, making this a very worthwhile museum; you can see it all in about 15 minutes.

Sanno-machi St., 69 Kamisanno-machi. ☎ 0577/35-3778. Admission ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) adults, ¥350 ($2.90/£1.45) children. Daily 9am–5pm. Station: Takayama (12 min.).

1-124-1 Kamiokamoto-cho. ☎ 0577/35-3535. www.htm-museum.co.jp. Admission ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50) adults, ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) university and high-school students, ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) junior-high age and younger. Apr–Nov daily 9am–5pm; Dec–Mar Thurs–Mon 9am–5pm. Take the bus from platform 6 to Hida Takayama Bijutsukan, or take the free London Bus.

Hirata Folk Art Museum (Hirata Kinen-kan) ★★ Here you'll find what is probably Takayama's most varied and extensive collection of folk art. It vividly conveys what life was like during the Edo Period by displaying household utensils, crafts, and fine arts found in a typical middle-class home; the house itself, built in 1897 in the traditional style with a sunken hearth and both living and working quarters, belonged to a candle-maker. Items are identified in English. On display are folk toys, coin boxes, mirrors, toiletry sets, geta, spectacles, hair adornments, shunkei lacquerware, and paper and kerosene lamps; my favorite is the room outfitted with items used for travel, including guide maps, portable abacuses, compasses, a traveling pillow, a folding lantern, and even a folding hat. You'll probably spend 20 minutes here.

Ichino-machi St., 39 Kaminino-machi. ☎ 0577/33-1354. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.45/65p) junior-high age and younger. Daily 9am–5pm. Station: Takayama (10 min.).

Historical Government House (Takayama Jinya) ★★ I highly recommend a visit here to anyone interested in Japanese history. The building served as the Tokugawa government's administrative building for 177 years (1692–1868). Of some 60 local government offices that were once spread throughout Japan, this is the only one still in existence. Resembling a miniature palace with its outer wall and an imposing entrance gate, the sprawling complex consists of both original buildings and reconstructions. In addition to administrative offices, chambers, and courts, the complex contained living quarters, a huge kitchen, an interrogation room with torture devices, and a 400-year-old rice granary, the oldest and biggest in Japan, where rice collected from farmers as a form of taxation was stored.

Making visits here especially educational are the free guided tours available in English, which last about 30 to 40 minutes and provide fascinating insight into administrative life during the Edo Period.

1–5 Hachi-ken-machi. ☎ 0577/32-0643. Admission ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75) for adults, free for high-school age and younger. Mar–Oct daily 8:45am–5pm; Nov–Feb daily 8:45am–4:30pm. Station: Takamaya (10 min.).

Lacquerware Museum (Hida Takayama Shunkei Kaikan) This museum, which can be toured in 15 minutes, displays Takayama lacquerware, known for the transparency of its finish, which enhances the grain of the wood. Takamaya lacquerware is admired all over Japan for its honey-colored sheen, which becomes lighter and more beautiful over time. The museum displays some 1,000 items dating from the 17th century to the present, including beautifully crafted trays, furniture, vases, rice containers, and lunch boxes; one exhibit explains the multistage production technique and tools of the craft. There's also a shop—and after seeing the time-consuming process to produce shunkei ware, you'll know why prices are high.

1–88 Kanda-cho. ☎ 0577/32-3373. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) high-school and junior-high students, free for children. Summer daily 8:30am–5:30pm; winter daily 9am–5pm. Station: Takayama (15 min.).

53–1 Sakura-machi. ☎ 0577/32-0881. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) junior-high age and younger. Summer daily 8:30am–5pm; winter daily 9am–4:30pm. A 1-min. walk from Takayama Festival Float Exhibition Hall (see below).

Showa Kan ★ If you're a history or a kitsch buff, check out this small museum recreating a Showa-era town (Showa refers to the reign of Emperor Hirohito, 1926 to 1989), filled with original items used in daily life. You can step inside a barbershop, doctor's office, dry goods store (it's fun to see what was considered high-tech back then), schoolroom, and other establishments, filled with items of the era and providing a unique perspective on how much Japan has changed in just a few short decades (you'll probably find yourself wishing more from the Showa era remained). After spending about 20 minutes here, be sure to take a look at the small museum shop selling replica tin toys and candies of yesteryear. You'll recognize the museum by the outdated vehicles and gas pump in the entranceway.

6 Shimoichino-machi. ☎ 0577/33-7836. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Daily 9am–6pm. Just off Kokubunji Dori.

Takayama Festival Float Exhibition Hall (Takayama Matsuri Yatai Kaikan) ★ This exhibition hall displays four of the huge, elaborate floats used for Takayama's famous Takayama Matsuri (Autumn Festival). Dating mostly from the 17th century and colorfully decorated with carvings, hanging lanterns, and sometimes marionettes, floats are as high as 6.9m (23 ft.) and are mounted on wheels. Free 20-minute guided tours in English are available, making the festival hall an interesting stop if you're unable to see the festival itself.

The admission price also allows entrance to Sakurayama Nikko Kan next door, which houses a replica of the Toshogu Shrine in Nikko (p. 183), built almost 100 years ago at one-tenth the scale. I was initially skeptical, but the 28 buildings—complete with computerized sunsets and sunrises—are works of art.

178 Sakura-machi. ☎ 0577/32-5100. Admission ¥820 ($6.85/£3.45) adults, ¥510 ($4.25/£2.10) high-school students, ¥410 ($3.40/£1.70) junior-high age and younger. Summer daily 8:30am–5pm; winter daily 9am–4:30pm. In the precincts of Sakurayama Hachimangu Shrine, about a 10-min. walk north of San-machi Suji or a 25-min. walk from the train station.

WHERE TO STAY

There are more minshuku and ryokan in Takayama than hotels, making it the perfect place to stay in a traditional inn. In fact, staying in a tatami room and sleeping on a futon is the best way to immerse yourself in the life of this small community, and the best news is that there are places to fit all budgets.

You should be aware that in peak season—Golden Week (Apr 29–May 5), August, festival times in April and October, and New Year’s—prices will be higher, generally between 10% and 20%, than prices given below.

All directions are from Takayama Station.

EXPENSIVE

⑥3 Nagase ★★ ★ Finds The Nagase family has been running this traditional inn since 1754, spanning 11 generations. A renovated merchant’s home not far from the Historical Government House that highlights the region’s strong architectural identity, it’s filled with antiques. Each of the tatami guest rooms is unique, made special by carved wooden transoms, bamboo detailing, shunkei lacquer furniture, flower arrangements, and hanging scrolls in alcoves. Best of all, each room has views of one of six perfectly crafted miniature gardens, complete with small waterfalls and streams fed by natural springs that provide their own serenade throughout the ryokan. Kyoto-style cuisine and local specialties, served on beautiful lacquerware and ceramics, are brought to your room. If you are looking for an authentic Japanese experience (not to mention Takayama’s most venerable inn), look no farther.

10 Kami-Nino-machi, Takayama, Gifu 506-0845. ☎ 0577/32-0068. Fax 0577/32-1068. 10 units, 8 with bathroom, 2 with toilet only. ¥15,750–¥16,800 ($131–$140/£66–£70) per person with toilet only; ¥18,900–¥31,500 ($158–$263/£79–£131) per person with bathroom. Rates include 2 meals. MC, V. Station: Takayama (10 min.). Just south of San-machi Suji, on Nino-machi St. Amenities: Jacuzzi; in-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, safe.

MODERATE

⑥4 Antique Inn Sumiyoshi ★★ ★ Finds This calls itself a ryokan, but its price and homey atmosphere make it seem more like a minshuku. Built almost 100 years ago by a well-known local carpenter to house a silkworm industry, it opened in 1950 as a ryokan and probably hasn’t changed a bit since then. An open-hearth fireplace, samurai armor, and antiques fill the reception area, where you are invited to have tea or coffee, and on the second floor there’s an outdoor deck facing the river. Rooms are comfortable and old-fashioned, and many have painted screens and antiques; request one facing the river, across which you have a view of the morning market. Rates are based on room type. The young man running the ryokan is a fourth generation inn-keeper and speaks English; vegetarian meals (order when making reservations) and Japanese or Western breakfasts are available.

Honmachi 4–21, Takayama, Gifu 506-0011. ☎ 0577/32-0228. Fax 0577/33-8916. www.sumiyoshi-ryokan.com. 8 units, 1 with bathroom. ¥6,300–¥9,450 ($53–$79/£26–£39) per person. Dinner ¥3,150 ($26/£13) extra; breakfast ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.35) extra. No credit cards. Station: Takayama (10 min. northeast). Across from historic San-machi Suji on the Miyagawa River. Amenities: In-room massage; laundry/dry-cleaning service. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea.

Best Western Hotel Takayama ✨ Purists might decry the size of this 1998 chain hotel in such a historic town, but it does have a convenient location just a minute’s walk from the train station and could be a lifesaver for those who do not like sleeping on the floor. Besides, at seven stories, it’s not even the tallest building around, and its facade, with a replica Meiji-Era design, could be worse. Otherwise, its mostly twin rooms are fairly small and ordinary, though cheerful and bright; ask for a room on a higher floor facing east, where you have a view of mountains in the distance.

Hanasatocho 6–6, Takayama, Gifu 506-0026. ☎ 0577/37-2000. Fax 0577/37-2005. www.bestwestern.com. 78 units. ¥11,000 ($92/£46) single; ¥18,000 ($150/£75) double; ¥21,000 ($175/£87) twin. Rates include breakfast. AE, MC, V. Station: Takayama (1 min.). Walk straight out of the station for 1 block and turn left. Amenities: 3 restaurants; lounge; lobby computer w/free Internet access; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, cable TV w/pay movies, free Wi-Fi/dataport, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Four Seasons ^{Value} Although this modern-looking building with an arched roof looks out of place in Takayama, the hotel is a good choice in terms of price. Catering to business travelers during the week and tourists on weekends, it has free coffee in the lobby. Avoid the cheaper rooms on the second and third floors, as these have glazed windows. Rooms on the fourth through sixth floors have views over the city (request a corner room), with those on the sixth floor decorated with wooden furniture and wooden floors (important for the allergy conscious). A large Japanese bath with Jacuzzi and sauna overlooking a small garden is a plus. (By the way, as you may have guessed by its rates, this place is not part of the famous Four Seasons hotel chain.)

Kanda-machi 1–1, Takayama, Gifu 506-0006. ☎ 0577/36-0088. Fax 0577/36-0080. 46 units. ¥6,900–¥7,500 ($58–$62/£29–£31) single; ¥13,500–¥14,500 ($113–$121/£56–£60) twin. AE, MC, V. Station: Takayama (10 min. northeast). Amenities: Restaurant; hot-spring indoor bath; Jacuzzi; sauna; rental bikes (¥600/£5/£2.50 per day); lobby computer guests can use free; in-room massage; coin-op washers and dryers; laundry/dry-cleaning service. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Yamakyu ✨ This spotless minshuku has a reputation for serving the best meals in town in its price range. Although it’s a bit far from the station—about a 20-minute walk or a 5-minute taxi ride—it’s located in a quiet residential area near Takayama’s many temples and shrines (and Higashiyama Hiking Course) and is only a 10-minute walk or short bike ride to the historic district. Its hallways boast a good collection of folk art, antique clocks, glassware, and lamps; eaves above all guest-room doors give it a “village” atmosphere. In the mornings, free coffee is available from the small lobby lounge, where you have a view of a small courtyard garden. As with most minshuku, the Japanese-style rooms—nicely done with natural woods and artwork—are without private bathrooms, but the communal baths are large and include small outdoor tubs, one ceramic and one wood.

Minshuku Sosuke ★ The entryway of this warm and friendly minshuku is filled with country knickknacks. There's an open hearth (irori) in the communal room to the left as you enter; if it's chilly, you'll be invited to sit down and warm yourself, and it is here where guests (85% foreigners) gather to chat in the evening. Although the building housing the minshuku is 170 years old (moved here from a village) and some of the original atmosphere has been preserved, the inside has been remodeled, and all the tatami rooms, though simple, are clean and are nonsmoking. Note, however, that some have skylights, and that morning arrives awfully early in summer. Also, though it's not far from the station, it's in the opposite direction from the town center, making it less convenient for sightseeing. On the plus side, the owner, who speaks English, will pick you up from the station if he's not busy, and rentals bikes are available from the Green Hotel across the street for ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) per day. Generous meals feature local specialties, and vegetarian choices are available if requested in advance.

Station: Takayama (8 min. west). Turn right out of the station and then take the 1st right (at the T intersection); it's over the bridge on the right side of the street, across from the Green Hotel. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea, no phone.

Rickshaw Inn ★★ Kids In a modern house, centrally located between the train station and San-machi Suji, the Rickshaw Inn is welcoming, due in no small part to the friendly owner, Setoyama Eiko, a Takayama native who lived in the United States and speaks flawless English. A communal living room—with sofas, TV, newspapers, a table, dataport, and an adjoining kitchen complete with refrigerator, hot plate, microwave, and toaster—is a good place to relax with fellow guests. No dinner is served, but Eiko-san is happy to recommend nearby restaurants (ask for her map) and is also knowledgeable about museums, crafts, and Takayama's history. Japanese- and Western-style rooms with sinks or bathrooms are available, with Asian artwork on the walls and batik shades to block out light. Some Japanese rooms are big enough for three or four people, but best are the two suites which are great for longer stays, families or groups: “Bamboo,” with a kitchenette, table, and chairs, and “Sakura,” with a large living area complete with two sofas, large-screen TV, table, and chairs. Both rooms have tatami sleeping areas and bathrooms and sleep four and six people respectively (the charge for four people is ¥26,800/$223/£112 in either suite). By the way, art and crafts from all over Japan, Asia, and Africa on the walls of the inn and on shelves on the stair landing are for sale.

WHERE TO DINE

Takayama has some local specialties you should try while you're here (they may well be served at your ryokan or minshuku). The best known is hoba miso, which is soybean paste mixed with dried scallions, ginger, and mushrooms and cooked on a dry magnolia leaf at your table above a small clay burner. Sansai are mountain vegetables, including edible ferns and other wild plants; and ayu is river fish, grilled with soy sauce or salt. Other favorite dishes include Takayama's own style of buckwheat noodles (soba), mitarashi-dango (grilled rice balls with soy sauce), and Hida beef.

In addition to the listings below, stop by ⑥5 Fujiya Hanaikada, 46 Hanakawa-cho (☎ 0577/36-0339), located off Kokobunji on the same street as Rickshaw Inn (see above). Open Friday to Wednesday from 10am to 6pm, it serves traditional Japanese homemade sweets along with tea and coffee, but what makes this place memorable is its award-winning locally made cypress furniture.

All directions given are from Takayama Station.

⑥6 Kakusho ★★ ★ finds VEGETARIAN For a big splurge, dine at Kakusho, established 180 years ago and offering local vegetarian fare called shojin-ryori, typically served at Buddhist temples. Situated on the slope of a hill in the eastern part of the city, a 5-minute walk from San-machi Suji, this delightful restaurant serves meals either in small, private tatami rooms dating from the Edo Period or in a larger room from the Meiji Period that can be opened to the elements on three sides, all of which overlook a dreamy, mossy garden enclosed by a clay wall. The least expensive meals consist of various mountain vegetables, mushrooms, nuts, tofu, and other dishes; more dishes are added for the more expensive set meals. The owner speaks some English.

2-98 Babacho. ☎ 0577/32-0174. Reservations strongly recommended. Kaiseki shojin-ryori ¥10,000-¥20,000 ($83-$165/£42-£82); set lunches ¥5,500 ($46/£23). No credit cards. Daily seating at 11:30am and 3pm and 5:30-7pm. Irregular closing days. Station: Takayama (15 min.). Just north off of San-machi and 1 block east of Kamiichino-machi.

⑥7 Matsuki ★ SUSHI Takayama is a 90-minute drive from the ocean, but that's where this sushi purveyor shops daily. Seating is at the counter or at low tables with leg wells. There is no menu, but chef Kazu recommends the omakase, with 14 sushi selections along with miso soup for ¥3,150 ($26/£13); two diners can even split this feast. Alternatively, just tell the chef which kinds of sushi you like (there's a handy photo poster) and how much you want to spend. Oddly, a specialty here is Hida beef sushi—but thank goodness, despite its name, it's grilled.

Sowa-cho 1-40. ☎ 0577/34-4766. Sushi ¥1,575-¥3,150 ($13-$26/£6.50-£13). AE, V. Daily 5:30-11:30pm. 1 block north of Kokubunji St., 4 blocks east of the station.

⑥8 Suzuya ★★ LOCAL SPECIALTIES Darkly lit with traditional Takayama country decor, this restaurant specializing in Takayama cuisine is very popular. There's an English-language menu complete with photographs and explanations of each dish, including such local specialties as mountain vegetables, hoba miso, Hida beef, and tobanyaki, which is a stew of leeks, Japanese green peppers, mushrooms, and various chicken parts (including liver, gizzard, skin, and meat) that you cook at your table. Also cooked at the table is sansai-misonabe, a stew of Chinese cabbage, chicken, and various mountain vegetables flavored with miso.

Agura ★★ finds LOCAL SPECIALTIES/PIZZA A converted rice kura, with a high-beamed ceiling, wooden floors, slabs of wood for tables, and locally crafted bentwood chairs, makes for a lovely, airy setting, heightened by eclectic cuisine, hip waiters, and jazz. The English-language menu has lots of great salads (I especially like the “Agura Original Salad” with lettuce, spinach, boiled egg, tomato, ham, tuna, and sprouts), pizzas fired in a wood-burning stove, and food that goes down well with beer, including roasted tuna with a honey sauce, Vietnamese spring rolls, and steaks served with garlic soy sauce.

On the road that runs to the south of Takayama City Memorial Hall, on the right side (look for the green sign with the yellow seated Buddha).

69 Myogaya VEGETARIAN Just a minute’s walk east of the train station, this tiny shop packed with books and some health foods offers a limited selection of organic set meals from an English-language menu, including chicken or veggie curry and stir-fried rice, which come with salad, miso soup, and vegetables (takeout available). The friendly proprietress makes this a pleasant place to come even for just a drink, which range from organic coffee and tea to plum juice and wine made from organic grapes.

4 Rural Shirakawago & Ogimachi

555km (347 miles) NW of Tokyo

With its thatched-roof farmhouses, paddies trimmed with flowerbeds, roaring river, and pine-covered mountains rising on all sides, Shirakawago is one of the most picturesque regions in Japan. Unfortunately, it also has more than its fair share of tour buses (especially in May, Aug, and Oct), but because of its rather remote location and because it’s accessible only by car or bus, Shirakawago still remains off the beaten path for most foreign tourists. A visit to this rural region could well be the highlight of your trip.

Although Shirakawago stretches about 39km (24 miles) beside the Shokawa River and covers 229 sq. km (88 sq. miles), mountains and forest account for 95% of the region, and Shirakawago’s 2,000 residents and cultivated land are squeezed into a valley averaging less than 3.2km (2 miles) in width. Thus, land in Shirakawago for growing rice and other crops has always been scarce and valuable. As a result, farmhouses were built large enough to hold extended families, with as many as several dozen family members living under one roof. Because there wasn’t enough land available for young couples to marry and build houses of their own, only the eldest son was allowed to marry; the other children were required to spend their lives living with their parents and helping with the farming. But even though younger children weren’t allowed to marry, a man was allowed to choose a young woman, visit her in her parents’ home, and father her children. The children then remained with the mother’s family, becoming valuable members of the labor force.

Before the roads came to Shirakawago, winter always meant complete isolation as snow 2m (6 ft.) deep blanketed the entire region. Open-hearth fireplaces (irori) in the middle of a communal room were used both for cooking and for warmth, and because there were no chimneys, smoke simply rose into the levels above. The family lived, therefore, on the ground floor, while upper floors were used for silk cultivation and storage of utensils. Because of the heavy snowfall, thatched roofs were constructed at steep angles, known as gasho-zukuri in reference to the fact that the tops of the roofs look like hands joined in prayer. The steep angle also allowed rain to run off quickly, and the thatch (Japanese pampas grass) dried quickly in the sun, preventing decay.

Today, there are about 115 thatched farmhouses, barns, and sheds in Shirakawago, most of them built about 200 to 300 years ago. The thatched roofs are about .6m (2 ft.) thick and last some 40 years. The old roofs are replaced in Shirakawago every April, when one to four roofs are changed on successive weekends. The entire process involves about 200 people, who can replace one roof in a couple of days.

Shirakawago's inhabitants live in several small villages. Of these, Ogimachi ★★, declared a UNESCO World Cultural and Natural Heritage site in 1995, boasts the greatest concentration of thatched-roof buildings. With just 600 residents, it's a delightful hamlet of narrow lanes winding past thatched-roof farmhouses, which stand like island sentinels surrounded by paddies. Many of the farmhouses have been turned into minshuku, souvenir shops, restaurants, and museums, including an open-air museum that depicts life in the region before roads opened it to the rest of the world.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE The most common way to reach Ogimachi is by bus from Takayama, which takes about 2 hours and costs ¥2,400 ($20/£10). There are usually six departures from Takayama daily April through November, less frequently in winter (heavy winter snowfall sometimes renders the road impassable). Reservations are required (☎ 0577/32-1688). From Kanazawa, a bus operates twice daily mid-March through November; the fare is ¥1,800 ($15/£7.50) for the 1½-hour trip. In any case, buses arrive at a parking lot next to the Gassho Zukuri Minkaen open-air museum (below); minshuku are located on the other side of the river, reached via footbridge.

VISITOR INFORMATION There are two tourist offices (☎ 05769/6-1013), both open daily 9am to 5pm. If you're arriving by bus, most convenient is the one located at the edge of the parking lot; the other across the river on the main road in the center of town. Both will reserve a room in a minshuku if you haven't already done so, and you can pick up an English-language map.

GETTING AROUND Your own two feet can do it best. You can walk from one end of the village to the other in about 15 minutes; English-language signs direct you to the various attractions.

SEEING THE SIGHTS IN & AROUND OGIMACHI

In addition to an open-air museum, several old farmhouses in Ogimachi are open to the public. Note: Because Ogimachi is so small, no addresses are given in this section. This is a very small village, basically just one main street and some side streets.

Moments A View of Ogimachi

For an overview (and the best vantage point for photographs) of the entire village, walk along the gently sloping road that leads from the north side of Ogimachi to the Shirayama Viewing Point ★★. There's a souvenir shop/restaurant here, but the best thing to do is to turn left at the crest of the hill and walk to the hill's westernmost point (toward the river), where there are some secluded benches. From here, you'll have a marvelous view of the entire valley. If you're thirsty or hungry, go to the restaurant to buy a drink or a snack and then take it with you to the lookout.

⑦0 Doburoku Matsuri no Yakata (Festival Hall) This Festival Hall was erected in honor of the Doburoku Matsuri Festival held in Shirakawago every year from October 14 to October 19. Centering on locally produced, potent sake, the festival is held just outside the museum's grounds at Hachimanjinja Shrine. If you've never seen a Japanese festival, you might want to come here to see some of the costumes worn during the festival, sample the festive sake, and watch a 20-minute video of the yearly festivities.

☎ 05769/6-1655. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥100 (85¢/45p) junior-high and elementary students. Daily 9am–4pm. Closed Oct 13–16 and Dec–Mar.

⑦1 Nagase Ke ★ Built in 1890 using 150- to 200-year-old cypress and 300- to 400-year-old chestnut, the Nagase house is the largest house here, once housing 44 people (a few members of the Nagase family still lives here). The enormous cross beam is 18m (59 ft.) long and the height of the house is more than 17m (55 ft.) high. A video shows the 2001 re-thatching in which 500 people took part, including 40 women involved just in cooking meals for the workers. Because the Nagase ancestors were the personal doctors of the powerful Maeda lords, the house contains gifts from the Maedas as well as medical tools. Upstairs is a mezzanine where 17 laborers lived, while the next level displays various tools used for everything from making rope to making cloth; in this remote area, almost everything people used was homemade. The fourth and fifth floors, where silk production once took place, contain tools related to the business, including flat trays where the silk worms were bred.

☎ 05769/6-1047. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) children. Daily 9am–5pm. Occasionally closed. Just north of the main street.

Shirakawago Gassho Zukuri Minkaen ★★☆☆ To see how rural people lived in centuries past, visit Shirakawago's top attraction, this open-air museum with 25 gassho-zukuri houses and sheds that were relocated and restored here. Filled with the tools of everyday life, the buildings are picturesquely situated around ponds, paddies, flower beds, and streams, a photographer's dream. You can occasionally see artisans engage in traditional handicrafts here. You'll easily spend an hour here.

☎ 05769/6-1231. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children 7–15. Apr–July and Sept–Nov daily 8:40am–5pm; Aug daily 8am–5:30pm; Dec–Mar Fri–Wed 9am–4pm. If Thurs is a national holiday, the museum remains open but closes Wed instead. Across the Shokawa River from Ogimachi, over a pedestrian suspension bridge.

⑦2 Wada Ke ★ This thatched-roof home is Ogimachi's finest—not surprising, as it belonged to the wealthy Wada family who served as the region's top officials. Still occupied by the Wada family, the 300-year-old house boasts carved transoms, painted sliding doors, lacquerware passed down through generations, a family altar, and tatami rooms overlooking a private garden. Upstairs you can see how the heavy roof beams are held together using only rope (no nails were used), as well as containers once used in silkworm cultivation. It takes only 10 minutes to see everything.

WHERE TO STAY

Because huge extended families living under one roof are a thing of the past, many residents of Ogimachi have turned their gassho-zukuri homes into minshuku. Staying in one gives you the unique chance to lodge in a thatched farmhouse with a family that might consist of grandparents, parents, and children. English is often limited to the basics of “bath,” “breakfast,” and “dinner,” but smiles go a long way. Most likely, the family will drag out their family album with its pictures of winter snowfall and the momentous occasion when their thatched roof was repaired. What I like best about staying overnight in Ogimachi is that most Japanese tourists (about 4,000 on average daily), are day-trippers, which means you have the village pretty much to yourself by late afternoon. Be sure to take an evening or early morning stroll.

Most minshuku are fairly small, with about four to nine tatami rooms open to guests. Rooms are basic without bathroom or toilet (the communal toilets are sometimes nonflush style), and you may be expected to roll out your own futon. Privacy may be limited, as only a flimsy sliding partition may separate you from the guest next door. All recommended minshuku below are in thatch-roofed homes; rates include breakfast and dinner (add ¥400/$3.35/£1.70 in winter for heating charges), and none accept credit cards or have private bathrooms. The tourist office can make a reservation for you at these or any of the others around town.

73 35 10 Juemon ★★ Juemon is a favorite among foreigners traveling in Japan. This attractive minshuku, in a 270-year-old farmhouse, features a stone-ringed pond with flowering shrubs and a couple of benches where you can relax and enjoy the view. In addition, there’s an irori in the dining room, and the bathroom facilities feature flush toilets. The outgoing 70-something Mrs. Sakai who runs this place is quite a character; don’t be surprised if she serenades you during dinner with a shamisen and folk songs.

Shirakawa Mura, Ogimachi, Ono-gun, Gifu 501-5627. ☎ 05769/6-1053. 6 units, none with bathroom. ¥8,400 ($70/£35) per person. No credit cards. A 10-min. walk from the bus stop, on the south edge of Ogimachi past Doburoku Festival Hall.

74 Koemon ★★ This is my top choice for accommodations, mainly because of fifth-generation innkeeper Otani Shoji and his wife Mutsuko. Otani-san speaks English and is enthusiastic about imparting information about his 200-year-old farmhouse, which became a minshuku 30 years ago and was recently modernized with a heated floor, automatic sensor lights, communal Washlet toilets, and even dim switches to enhance the mood around his irori fireplace. You are part of family life here, with grandchildren playing and little kindnesses such as flashlights for those after-dark strolls. Best of all, he has transformed his attic into a theater where he’s happy to show his guests 100 slides of Shirakawago through the seasons and where you may be asked to give an impromptu speech (consider yourself forewarned). Rooms are spotless, with the best one facing a pond.

75 Shimizu On the edge of town, mercifully far from the bus tour routes, this small minshuku has a communal room with an irori, serve-yourself coffee and tea, and a computer you can use for free. Two rooms look out on the fields and mountains. The owner speaks some English.

Kyoto & Nara

If you go to only one place in all of Japan, Kyoto (★★★) should be it. Not only is it the most historically significant town in the nation, this former capital was also the only major Japanese city spared from the bombs of World War II. As such, it's rife with temples, shrines, imperial palaces, and traditional wooden homes. In nearby Nara (★★), another former capital—one even more ancient than Kyoto—is Japan's largest bronze Buddha and more historic temples.

Even though its well-preserved architecture and relics are what put Kyoto on the sightseeing map, I've always felt that its scenes from daily life are what make the city exceptional. Kyoto is home to the nation's greatest concentration of craft artisans, making Kyoto famous for its shops dealing in textiles, dyed fabrics, pottery, bambooware, cutlery, fans, metalwork, umbrellas, and other goods. No wonder Kyoto is also home to 20% of Japan's national treasures.

As your Shinkansen bullet train glides toward Kyoto Station, however, your first reaction is likely to be great disappointment. There's Kyoto Tower looming in the foreground like some misplaced spaceship. Kyoto Station itself is strikingly modern and unabashedly high tech, looking as though it was airlifted straight from Tokyo. Modern buildings and hotels surround the station on all sides, making Kyoto look like any other Japanese town.

In other words, as Japan's seventh-largest city with a population of about 1.5 million people, Kyoto hasn't escaped the afflictions of the modern age. Yet it has always led a rather fragile existence, as a look at any of its temples and shrines will tell you. Made of wood, they've been destroyed through the years by man, fire, and earthquake and have been rebuilt countless times. Come and explore; you'll soon understand why I consider Kyoto to be Japan's most romantic city despite modernization. No one who comes to this country should miss the wealth of experiences this ancient capital has to offer.

A LOOK AT THE PAST Kyoto served as Japan's capital for more than 1,000 years from 794 to the Meiji Restoration in 1868. Originally known as Heian-kyo, it was laid out in a grid pattern borrowed from the Chinese with streets running north, south, east, and west. Its first few hundred years—from about A.D. 800 to the 12th century—were perhaps its grandest, a time when culture blossomed and court nobility led luxurious and splendid lives dotted with poetry-composing parties and moon-gazing events. Buddhism flourished and temples were built. A number of learning institutions were set up for the sons and daughters of aristocratic families, and scholars were versed in both Japanese and Chinese.

Toward the end of the Heian Period, military clans began clashing for power as the samurai class grew more powerful, resulting in a series of civil wars that eventually pushed Japan into the Feudal Era of military government that lasted nearly 680 years—until 1868. The first shogun

Frommer's Favorite Kyoto Experiences

Spending a Night in a Ryokan Kyoto is one of the best places in Japan to experience the traditional inn, where you'll sleep on a futon in a tatami room and be treated to a beautifully presented multicourse kaiseki feast, perhaps with a view of your own private garden. Though expensive, it's the utmost in simple elegance.

Dining on a Tofu Vegetarian Meal in a Garden Setting Shojin ryori, vegetarian meals served at Buddhist temples, are one of Kyoto's specialties. There are a number of rustic restaurants with outdoor garden seating throughout Kyoto.

Visiting a Japanese Garden Kyoto has a wide range of traditional gardens, from austere beautiful Zen rock gardens used by Buddhist priests for meditation to the miniature bonsai-like landscape gardens of the ruling classes.

Strolling through Eastern Kyoto Temples, shrines, gardens, craft shops, traditional neighborhoods—these are highlights of a day spent walking through this historic part of Kyoto. You won't find a slice of old Japan like this in other Japanese cities.

Shopping for Traditional Crafts Traditional arts and crafts thrive in Kyoto, where skills are passed down from generation to generation. You'll find small specialty shops selling everything from fans to wooden combs.

Seeing How the Upper Class Lived Kyoto has more imperial palaces and villas than any other Japanese city. Walk through the shogun's digs at Nijo Castle and if you have time, visit the Kyoto Imperial Palace, Katsura Imperial Villa, or Shugakuin Imperial Villa with their splendid gardens.

Exploring Gion Kyoto's traditional pleasure quarter is fascinating for its austere architecture, hushed atmosphere, and the sight of heavily made-up geisha in traditional kimono hurrying to their evening appointments. Though touristy, Gion Corner is your best bet for observing performances of traditional dance, puppetry, and other cultural presentations.

Taking an Evening Stroll through Pontocho A small, narrow pedestrian lane, Pontocho is lined with a dazzling collection of brightly lit hostess bars, restaurants, and drinking establishments. If it's a warm night, end the evening by sitting for a while along the banks of the nearby Kamo River, a popular spot for Kyoto's young couples.

to rise to power was Minamoto Yoritomo, who set up his shogunate government in Kamakura. With the downfall of the Kamakura government in 1336, however, Kyoto once again became the seat of power, home to both the imperial family and the shogun. The beginning of this era, known as the Muromachi and Azuchi-Momoyama periods, was marked by extravagant prosperity and luxury, expressed in such splendid shogun villas as Kyoto's Gold Pavilion and Silver Pavilion. Lacquerware, landscape paintings, and the art of metal engraving came into their own. Zen Buddhism was the rage, giving rise to such temples as Saihoji Temple and the Ryoanji rock garden. And, despite civil wars that rocked the nation in the 15th and 16th centuries and destroyed much of Kyoto, culture flourished. During these turbulent times, Noh drama, the tea ceremony, flower arranging, and landscape gardening gradually took form.

Emerging as victor in the civil wars, Tokugawa Ieyasu established himself as shogun and set up his military rule in Edo (presently Tokyo) far to the east. For the next 250 years, Kyoto remained the capital in name only, and in 1868 (which marked the downfall of the shogunate and the restoration of the emperor to power), the capital was officially moved from Kyoto to Tokyo.

GETTING THERE

FROM KANSAI AIRPORT If you arrive in Japan at Kansai International Airport (KIX) outside Osaka, the JR Haruka Super Express train has direct service every 30 minutes to Kyoto Station; the trip takes approximately 75 minutes. It costs ¥3,490 ($29/£15) for a reserved seat (recommended during busy departure times or peak season) and ¥2,980 ($25/£13) for a nonreserved seat, or you can ride free with your JR Rail Pass. A cheaper (¥1,830/$15/£7.50), though less convenient, alternative is the JR Kanku Kaisoku, which departs every 30 minutes or so from Kansai Airport and arrives in Kyoto 100 minutes later, with a change at Osaka Station.

If you have a lot of luggage, I recommend taking the Airport Limousine Bus (☎ 075/682-4400) from Kansai Airport; buses depart every hour or less for the 1½-hour trip to Kyoto Station. Fare is ¥2,300 ($19/£9.50) one-way.

BY TRAIN FROM ELSEWHERE IN JAPAN Kyoto is one of the major stops on the Shinkansen bullet train; trip time from Tokyo is 2½ hours, with the fare for a non-reserved seat ¥12,710 ($106/£53) one-way if you don't have a rail pass. Kyoto is only 20 minutes from Shin-Osaka Station in Osaka, but you may find it more convenient to take one of the local commuter lines that connect Kyoto directly with Osaka Station. From Kobe, you can reach Kyoto from Sannomiya and Motomachi stations. The strikingly modern Kyoto Station, which is like a city in itself with tourist offices, restaurants, a hotel, a department store, a shopping arcade, a theater, and stage events, is connected to the rest of the city by subway and bus.

BY BUS FROM TOKYO Night buses depart from Tokyo every evening for Kyoto, arriving the next morning. Buses depart from Tokyo Station at both 10:10 and 11:10pm, arriving in Kyoto at 6:06am and 7am, respectively. The fare for these are ¥8,180 ($7.40/£3.70; free if you have a Japan Rail Pass). Cheaper still are the Seishun Dream buses that depart Tokyo Station at 9:50pm and Shinjuku Station at 11:10pm, arriving at Kyoto at 5:56am and 7:01am respectively and costing ¥5,000 ($42/£21) one-way. In addition, day buses (two a day from both Tokyo Station and Shinjuku Station) cost ¥6,000 ($50/£25). Tickets can be purchased at any major JR station or a travel agency. Contact the Tourist Information Center (TIC) in Tokyo for more information (see "Visitor Information" in chapter 4).

VISITOR INFORMATION

Although there's a Kyoto City Tourist Information Office (☎ 075/343-6656; daily 8:30am–7pm) on the second floor of Kyoto Station, it's for Japanese only. Foreign visitors are requested to visit the roomier but less convenient Kyoto Tourist Information on the ninth floor of Isetan department store in Kyoto Station (☎ 075/344-3300), which can prove quite a challenge if you're toting luggage and battling shoppers for space in the crowded elevators. Surprisingly, there are no brochure racks here to peruse, so you have to wait your turn to ask English-speaking staff for city and bus maps and sightseeing pamphlets. It's open daily 10am to 6pm, closed the second and fourth Tuesday of every month. You can also make reservations here for inexpensive lodging throughout Japan free of charge.

The Kyoto City International Foundation, 2-1 Torii-cho Awataguchi, Sakyo-ku (☎ 075/752-3010; www.kcif.or.jp), provides information in English on living in Japan, Japanese-language and culture classes, and some tourist information. It's open Tuesday to Sunday from 9am to 9pm; it's a 6-minute walk from the Keage subway stop (exit 2).

ON THE WEB Kyoto city's website is http://raku.city.kyoto.jp/sight_e.phtml; Kyoto Prefecture's website is www.pref.kyoto.jp/visitkyoto/en; see also www.kyoto.travel.

PUBLICATIONS A monthly tabloid distributed free at hotels and restaurants is the Kyoto Visitor's Guide (www.kyotoguide.com), with maps, a calendar of events, and information on sightseeing and shopping. Kansai Scene (www.kansaiscene.com) is a monthly giveaway with information on nightlife, festivals, and other events in Kyoto, Osaka, and Kobe. In addition, a monthly English-language magazine, Kansai Time Out (www.kto.co.jp), carries information and articles on Kyoto, Osaka, and Nara. It's sold in Kyoto for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) at Junkudo bookstore, located in the BAL department store, on the east side of Kawaramachi Dori north of Shijo Dori (☎ 075/253-6460; daily 11am-8pm).

CITY LAYOUT

Most of Kyoto's attractions and hotels are north of Kyoto Station (take the Central exit), spreading like a fan toward the northeast and northwest. The northern and eastern edges of the city contain the most famous temples. The heart of the city is in central Kyoto (Nakagyo-ku ward), which boasts the largest concentration of restaurants, shops, and bars and which radiates outward from the intersection of Kawaramachi Dori and Shijo Dori. It includes a narrow street called Pontocho, a nightlife mecca that runs along the western bank of the Kamo River. Across the Kamo River to the east is the ancient geisha district of Gion.

FINDING AN ADDRESS Kyoto's streets are laid out in a grid pattern with named streets (a rarity in Japan) and an address system that's actually quite easy to understand once you get to know the directional terms. Streets north of Kyoto Station that run east-west are numbered; for example, the shi of Shijo Dori means "Fourth Avenue." Agaru means "to the north," sagaru means "to the south," nishi-iru means "to the west," and higashi-iru means "to the east." Thus, an address that reads Shijo-agaru means "north of Fourth Avenue."

Many addresses also indicate which cross streets a building is near. Take the Hotel Gimmond, for example: Its address is Takakura Oike Dori, which tells you that the hotel is near the intersection of Takakura Dori and Oike Dori. Complete addresses include the ward, or ku, such as Higashiyama-ku.

KYOTO'S NEIGHBORHOODS IN BRIEF

The following are Kyoto's main tourist areas; to locate them, see the "Kyoto" map on p. 288.

Around Kyoto Station The southern ward of Shimogyo-ku, which stretches from Kyoto Station north to Shijo Dori Avenue, caters to tourists with its cluster of hotels and to commuters with its shops and restaurants. Kyoto Station, which caused quite a controversy when built because of its size, height, and futuristic appearance, is now this area's top attraction with Isetan department store, a shopping arcade, restaurants, a cinema, a theater, and dramatic public spaces, including a rooftop plaza.

Central Kyoto Nakagyo-ku, the central part of Kyoto west of the Kamo River and north of Shimogyo-ku, embraces Kyoto's main shopping and nightlife districts, with most of the action on Kawaramachi and Shijo Dori avenues and Teramachi and Shin-kyogoku covered shopping arcades. Most of Kyoto's legendary craft stores are located here, along with numerous restaurants and bars. Home also to Nijo Castle, Nakagyo-ku has a number of exclusive ryokan tucked away in delightful neighborhoods typical of old Kyoto. But downtown is changing fast, as Kyoto's younger generation lays claim to new shopping and entertainment complexes, such as Shin-Puh-Kan, a renovated telephone company building on Karasuma Dori filled with shops and restaurants and an open stage for concerts. Nakagyo-ku is one of the most desirable places to stay in terms of convenience and atmosphere.

Pontocho, a narrow lane that parallels the Kamo River's western bank just a stone's throw from the Kawaramachi-Shijo Dori intersection, is Kyoto's most famous street for nightlife. It's lined with bars and restaurants that boast outdoor verandas extending over the Kamo River in summer.

Eastern Kyoto East of the Kamo River, the wards of Higashiyama-ku and Sakyo-ku boast a number of the city's most famous temples and shrines, as well as restaurants specializing in Kyoto cuisine and Buddhist vegetarian dishes, and shops selling local pottery and other crafts. Eastern Kyoto is a great area for walking and shopping, particularly Higashiyama-ku, and boasts several ryokan as well. Gion, Kyoto's most famous geisha entertainment district, is part of Higashiyama-ku. Customers are entertained in traditional wooden geisha houses that are not open to the public (you can only gain entry through introductions provided by someone who is already a customer)—but the area makes for a fascinating stroll.

Northern Kyoto Embracing the Kita-ku, Kamigyo-ku, and Ukyo-ku wards, northern Kyoto is primarily residential but contains a number of Kyoto's top sights, including the Kyoto Imperial Palace, Kinkakuji (Temple of the Golden Pavilion), and Ryoanji Temple, site of Kyoto's most famous Zen rock garden.

2 Getting Around

Kyoto is Japan's most visitor-friendly city, with lots of English-language signs and an easy-to-navigate transportation system.

BY PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION Kyoto's subway and bus networks are efficient and quite easy to use, but one of the best ways to explore is by foot.

By Subway Kyoto has two subway lines, with stops announced in English. The older Karasuma Line runs north and south, from Takeda in the south to Kokusai Kaikan in the north, with stops at Kyoto Station and Imadegawa Station (convenient for visiting the Imperial Palace). The newer Tozai Line runs in a curve from east to west and is convenient for visiting Nijo Castle and Higashiyama-ku. The two lines intersect in central Kyoto at Karasuma Oike Station. Fares start at ¥200 ($1.65/85p), and service runs from 5:30am to about 11:30pm. Although buses are generally more convenient (they usually get you closer to where you want to go), I sometimes opt for the subway even if I have to walk a bit, simply to avoid hassling with buses and their unknown stops.

By Bus The easiest way to get around Kyoto and to most of its attractions is by bus. Buses depart from Kyoto Station's Central (north/Karasuma) exit, with platforms clearly marked in English listing the bus destinations. The Kyoto Tourist Information office gives out an excellent map showing major bus routes (see "Visitor Information," above). Some of the buses loop around the city, while others go back and forth between two destinations. Most convenient for sightseeing is Raku bus no. 100 (some of which look like old-fashioned trolleys), which makes a run every 10 minutes from Kyoto Station to major attractions in east Kyoto, including the Kyoto National Museum, Gojo-zaka (the approach to Kiyomizu Temple), Gion, Heian Shrine, Nanzenji, and Ginkakuji. Raku bus no. 101 departs Kyoto Station for Nijo Castle and Kinkakuji.

The fare for traveling in central Kyoto is ¥220 ($1.80/90p) for a single ride or ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for a 1-day pass (good for all local buses). Board the bus at the rear entrance and pay when you get off. If the bus is traveling a long distance out to the suburbs, there will be a ticket machine right beside the back door—take the ticket and hold onto it. It has a number on it and will tell the bus driver when you got on and how much you owe. You can see for yourself how much you owe by looking for your number on a lighted panel at the front of the bus; the longer you stay on the bus, the higher the fare.

TRANSIT PASSES If you think you'll be doing a lot of sightseeing in 1 or 2 days, it may pay to buy a pass. A day pass only for buses costs ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10). Passes for both buses and subways cost ¥1,200 ($10/£5) for 1 day or ¥2,000 ($17/£8.35) for 2 days. You can purchase passes at subway stations, the city bus center at Kyoto Station, and major hotels. Alternatively, such prepaid cards as the Traffica Kyoto Card, which give you a 10% discount, can be used for city buses and subways, and are available in values of ¥1,000 and ¥3,000 ($8.35/£4.15 and $25/£15). Because there is no time limit, they're convenient if you're staying in Kyoto for several days.

BY TAXI Taxis in Kyoto come in two different sizes with only slightly different fares. Small ones are ¥580 ($4.80/£2.40) for the first 2km (1¼ miles), and large ones are ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70). Taxis can be waved down or, in the city center, boarded at marked taxi stands or at hotels. MK Taxi (☎ 075/721-4141) has the cheapest fares and also offers individualized English-language guided tours.

BY BICYCLE A popular way to get around Kyoto is by bike, made easy because there are few hills and because most streets are named. However, you do have to be on guard for vehicular traffic. Kyoto Cycling Tour Project, a 3-minute walk from the Central (north) Exit of Kyoto Station (turn left upon exiting the station and walk past the post office and APA Hotel; ☎ 075/354-3636; www.kctp.net), open daily 9am to 7pm, rents bikes beginning at ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) a day.

FAST FACTS: Kyoto

Area Code If you're calling a Kyoto number from outside Kyoto but within Japan, the area code for Kyoto is 075. For calls within Kyoto, don't dial the area code. For details on calling Kyoto from outside Japan, see "Staying Connected" in chapter 2.

Climate Kyoto is generally hotter and more humid than Tokyo in summer and colder than Tokyo in winter. For more information, see "When to Go" in chapter 2.

Currency Exchange In addition to banks, good places to exchange money after banks close are large department stores like Isetan, Takashimaya, and Daimaru, and the Kyoto Handicraft Center (p. 333). You can also exchange money at the World Currency Shop on the eighth floor of Kyoto Station (☎ 075/365-7750), open Monday to Friday 11am to 5pm. When changing money, be sure to bring your passport. The most convenient ATM accepting foreign credit cards is at Kyoto Central Post Office next to Kyoto Station (see "Post Offices," below) or at one of many 7-Eleven convenience stores in Kyoto.

Dentists & Doctors Sakabe International Clinic, Gokomachi, Nijo-sagaru, Nakagyo-ku (☎ 075/231-1624), has an English-speaking staff. Otherwise, the Kyoto City International Foundation (☎ 075/752-3010) has information on English-speaking doctors and dentists. For Eastern medicine, the Hyatt Regency Kyoto's RIRAKU Spa (☎ 075/541-1234) offers Oriental therapies, including acupuncture and shiatsu, with an English-speaking staff.

Electricity In both Kyoto and Nara it's 100 volts, 60 cycles, almost the same as in the United States (110 volts, 60 cycles); your two-pronged appliances should work, but they'll run a little slowly (there are no three-pronged plugs in Japan).

Hospitals Most hospitals are not equipped to handle emergencies 24 hours a day, but a system has been set up in which hospitals handle emergencies on a rotating basis. English is spoken at Japan Baptist Hospital (Nihon Baputesuto Byoin), north of Kikage, east of Shirakawa, Sakyo-ku (☎ 075/781-5191). Also in Kyoto are Kyoto University Hospital (Kyoto Daigaku Byoin), Shogoin Kawahara-cho, Sakyo-ku (☎ 075/751-3111), and Kyoto Municipal Hospital (Kyoto Shiritsu Byoin), Gojo Dori Onmae, Nakagyo-ku (☎ 075/311-5311). There's also a holiday emergency clinic on Shichihonmatsu Street, north of Marutamachi (☎ 075/811-5072).

Internet Access Media Café Popeye, in central Kyoto next to the Kyoto Royal Hotel & Spa at Sanjo Kawaramachi (☎ 075/253-5300), is open 24 hours and offers 1 hour of Internet surfing for ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75), with discounts for additional hours. Across from Kyoto Station's south (Hachijo) exit is Topscafe, on the corner of Karasuma and Hachijo Dori (☎ 075/681-9270), open 24 hours. Here you pay ¥120 ($1/50p) for every 15 minutes.

Lost Property If you leave something on the Shinkansen bullet train, you have to call the last stop of the train (regardless of where you got off). Ask the tourist office for the number. For trains terminating in Kyoto call ☎ 075/691-1000. Items lost at Kyoto Station are turned in to the lost-and-found office (☎ 075/371-0134), which is open daily 8am to 7:30pm. If you lost something along a street or outside, contact the Shichijo Police Station (☎ 075/342-0110). Taxi Kyodo Center (☎ 075/672-1110) handles lost and found for all taxi companies.

Luggage Storage & Lockers Kyoto Station has lockers for storing luggage beginning at ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for 24 hours, including lockers large enough for big suitcases on its south (Shinkansen) side.

Police The national emergency telephone number is ☎ 110.

Post Offices The Kyoto Central Post Office, located just west of Kyoto Station's Central (north) Exit (☎ 075/365-2471), is open Monday to Friday 9am to 7pm, Saturday 9am to 5pm, Sunday and holidays 9am to 12:30pm. You can mail packages bound for international destinations here. To the south of the Central Post Office's main entrance is a counter offering 24-hour postal service; stamps for letters are also sold from vending machines. There are also ATMs here, where you can obtain currency Monday to Saturday from midnight to 11:55pm, Sundays and holidays midnight to 8pm, and consecutive holidays (for example, 3-day week-ends) 7am to 8pm. The Nakagyo-ku Post Office (☎ 075/255-1119), at Sanjo and Higashinotoin streets in central Kyoto, is open Monday to Friday 9am to 4pm; its ATMs are open Monday to Friday 7am to 11pm and weekends 9am to 7pm.

3 Where to Stay in Kyoto

If you've never stayed in a ryokan, Kyoto is probably the best place to do so. With the exception of hot-spring resorts, Kyoto has more choices of ryokan in all price categories than any other city in Japan. Small, usually made of wood, and often situated in delightfully quaint neighborhoods, these ryokan can enrich your stay in Kyoto by putting you in direct touch with the city's traditional past. Remember that in upper- and midpriced ryokan, the room charge is per person, and though the prices may seem prohibitive at first glance, they do include two meals, tax, and usually a service charge. These meals are feasts, not unlike kaiseki meals you'd receive at a top restaurant where they could easily cost ¥10,000 ($85/£45). Ryokan in the budget category, on the other hand, usually don't serve meals unless stated otherwise, and they often charge per room rather than per person.

Be sure to make reservations in advance, particularly in spring when flowers bloom, in autumn for the changing of the leaves, during summer vacation from mid-July through August, and during major festivals (see "Japan Calendar of Events" in chapter 2). Some accommodations raise their rates during these times. In any case, accommodations are expensive in Kyoto, almost on par with Tokyo.

Because Kyoto is relatively small and has such good bus and subway systems, no matter where you stay, you won't be too far away from the heart of the city. Most hotels and ryokan are concentrated around Kyoto Station (Shimogyo-ku Ward), in central Kyoto not far from the Kawaramachi-Shijo Dori intersection (Nakagyo-ku Ward), and east of the Kamo River (in the Higashiyama-ku and Sakyo-ku wards).

TAXES & SERVICE CHARGES The 5% tax levied by hotels is included in room rates. Mid- and upper-range hotels, however, add a 10% to 15% service charge to the prices below unless noted otherwise.

Tips A Note on Directions

For all hotel, restaurant, and other listings in this chapter, directions provided are from Kyoto Station unless otherwise indicated. Numbers in parentheses after stations and bus stops refer to the time it takes to reach your destination on foot after alighting from public conveyance.

AROUND KYOTO STATION EXPENSIVE

Hotel Granvia Kyoto ★★ Opened in 1997 and owned by the Japan Railways group (holders of a Japan Rail Pass get discounts), this hotel boasts Kyoto's most convenient location for travelers arriving by train: It's right atop the futuristic-looking Kyoto Station. Only a minute's walk from city buses and trains, it's a good base for exploring Kyoto, Nara, and beyond. The dimly lit hotel lobby is on the second floor, removed from the foot traffic of the station but still buzzing with activity. A guest-relations desk helps with everything from sightseeing to restaurant reservations (a huge plus given the inconvenience of the local tourist office), and although there's no business center, behind the guest-relations desk are a workstation and computer with Internet access for hotel guests (for a fee). If you can, avoid the least expensive rooms—they have rather unexciting views of the station's glass roof. Otherwise, modern rooms on higher floors facing north have great Kyoto views. Hotel packages are available that include cooking classes, a visit to the inner sanctums of a Shinto shrine, or the opportunity to spend the evening with a geisha.

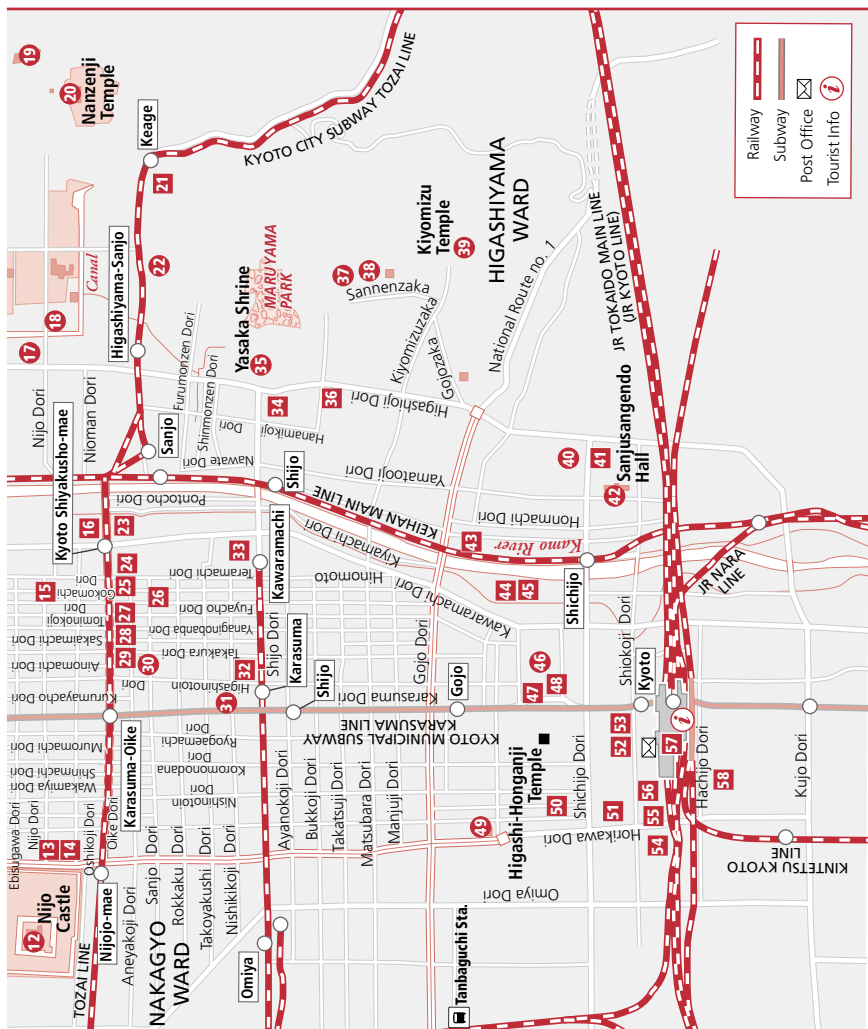

JR Kyoto Station Building, Central Exit, Karasuma Dori Shiokoji-sagaru, Shimogyo-ku, Kyoto 600-8216. ☎ 075/344-8888. Fax 075/334-4400. www.granvia-kyoto.co.jp. 539 units. ¥23,100–¥34,650 ($193–$289/£96–£145) double; ¥25,410–¥34,650 ($212–$289/£106–£145) twin. Executive units from ¥35,805 ($298/£145) double, ¥40,425 ($387) twin. 10% discount for holders of Japan Rail Pass. AE, DC, MC, V. Amenities: 11 restaurants; bar; 2 lounges; health club w/indoor pool, fitness gym, and sauna (fee: ¥1,050/$8.75/£4.40); concierge; shopping arcade (in same building); salon; room service (6am–midnight); in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms; executive-level rooms. In room: A/C, cable TV w/pay movies, free dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

New Miyako Hotel With the Miyako name behind it (it's a sister hotel to the famous Westin Miyako in eastern Kyoto), this is a popular choice near Kyoto Station due in part to its convenient location near the terminus of both the Shinkansen and Kintetsu trains (the city bus terminus, however, is a 5-min. walk away on the other side of Kyoto Station). It has the dubious honor of being Kyoto's largest hotel. It has a utilitarian, almost spartan lobby and rooms that vary in price according to floor and size, though the view is nothing special (children may like rooms facing the front, where they can see the Shinkansen trains arrive). The cheapest twins are so small that couples may fight over who gets the lone luggage rack, while those in the pricier new wing seem like a different hotel altogether, with tall ceilings, mock balconies, and upbeat colors (some rooms face the hotel's courtyard glass-prism chapel, lit at night). I like the rooftop summer beer garden with its all-you-can-eat buffet.

Rihga Royal Hotel ★ This has been one of Kyoto's grand hotels since 1969, a familiar landmark topped by the city's only revolving restaurant, open also for breakfast (see p. 304 for a review of French Dining Top of Kyoto). The building's aging exterior offers a modern rendition of traditional Japanese architecture with its railed ledges, but the lobby is rather confining and uninteresting, with a row of chairs near the checkout desk testimony to the sometimes long queues. Still, rooms are comfortable enough, with adequately sized standard rooms that feature shoji screens and window panels that close for darkness. The most expensive rooms, occupying the top two floors, have smart-looking Italian-style furnishings, better views, and spacious modern bathrooms. To aid the foreigners who make up about 30% of hotel guests, there's an English-language guest-relations coordinator on staff. Another plus is the frequent shuttle bus to Kyoto Station, though it delivers you to the south side of the station (city buses depart from the north side of Kyoto Station).

Free shuttle bus 8 times an hour 7:30am–9pm from Kyoto Station's Hachijo exit (turn left and walk to the end of the parking lot, past McDonald's), or a 7-min. walk from Kyoto Station. Amenities: 7 restaurants; 2 bars; lounge; indoor pool (fee: ¥1,050/$8.75/£4.40); sauna (men only; fee: ¥2,625/$22/£11); concierge; complimentary shuttle to station; salon; florist; bakery; room service (6am–midnight); in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms, executive-level rooms. In room: A/C, cable TV w/pay movies, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, trouser press.

MODERATE

APA Hotel Kyoto Ekimae Opened in 1999, this smart-looking business hotel is a good choice for its location. Rooms, however, are very small (the cheapest singles are minuscule) but pleasantly decorated and, though close to the train tracks, are relatively quiet. Japanese-style rooms are also available. In short, stay here or at its sister hotel below only if this book's top choices are full or if you don't plan on spending any quality time with your room.

Another choice includes the nearby APA Hotel Kyotoeki-Horikawa Dori, opened in 2005 just a 2-minute walk farther west at Nishi Aburakojicho, Shiokoji, across the street from the Rihga Royal Hotel (☎ 075/341-6111). It offers similarly miniature rooms at cheaper prices, beginning at ¥9,000 ($75/£38) for a single, ¥12,000 ($100/£50) for a double, and ¥17,000 ($142/£71) for a twin. The cheapest rooms face an inner courtyard (read: no sunshine), and you'll be climbing over your partner to get out of bed in the cheapest double rooms. Note that ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) per person is added to all APA hotels on Saturday and nights before public holidays; ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) per person is added in peak season.

806 Minami Fudodocho, Shiokoji-sagaru, Aburakoji Dori, Shimogyo-ku, Kyoto 600-8234. ☎ 075/365-4111. Fax 075/365-8720. www.apahotel.com. 192 units. ¥10,000–¥10,500 ($83–$87/£41–£43) single; ¥19,000–¥21,000 ($158–$175/£79–£88) twin. AE, MC, V. A 3-min. walk from Kyoto Station's north Central exit; turn left out of the station and walk between the post office and train station. Amenities: Restaurant; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, dataport, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Kyoto Tower Hotel There's no problem finding this hotel, located under Kyoto Tower and in business for more than 40 years. It doesn't have a lot to offer, other than convenient access and reasonable prices. Check-in is on the ground floor, and though there's a functional lobby on the eighth floor, it's doubtful you'll want to spend a lot of time here. Guest rooms are long and narrow, with shoji screens, but only the higher-priced rooms afford a view of the station (the rest face other buildings).

Even cheaper prices are available at the nearby Kyoto Tower Hotel Annex, Shinmachi Dori, Shichijo-sagaru (☎ 075/343-3111), and at the Kyoto Dai-Ni Tower Hotel, Higashinotoin Dori, Shichijo-sagaru (☎ 075/361-3261), with twins starting at ¥14,000 ($117/£58). Both are within a 4-minute walk from the station.

INEXPENSIVE

Budget Inn ★★ finds Keiji and his wife, Hiromi, opened this hostelry in 2003 in a former apartment building with six tatami rooms (three of which are gilded in gold and have refrigerators) complete with private bathrooms and balconies, plus two dormitory rooms with beds that sleep up to five persons. The level of caring is impressive, with little maps of the neighborhood given to guests that show the location of restaurants, supermarkets, and more; tips dispensed on what's going on and how to spend rainy days; free coffee and tea in the communal kitchen; and the chance to try on a kimono. With its convenient location, English-speaking staff, clean rooms, free wireless Internet connection, and other amenities, this place beats most other budget accommodations hands down.

Keiji offers an additional 13 rooms (including Western-style twins) and three dormitory rooms at his nearby Tour Club, 362 Momiji-cho, Kitakoji-agaru, Higashi-Nakasuji Dori (☎ 075/353-6968; www.kyotojp.com), a 9-minute walk from the station. With similar facilities and amenities, it offers twin/double rooms from ¥6,982 ($58/£29), triples from ¥8,880 ($74/£37), and dormitory beds for ¥2,415 ($20/£10).

Hiraiwa Ryokan and Annex This inexpensive ryokan, halfway between Kyoto Station and downtown, is one of the best-known and oldest members of the Japanese Inn Group. Although they speak limited English, the Hiraiwa family has been welcoming foreigners from all over the world since opening their doors in 1973. The tatami guest rooms, spread through the 80-year-old traditional main building and a newer annex, are spotless. Note that a Japanese breakfast, which includes kamameshi (rice casserole), miso soup, and tofu, must be ordered a day in advance, but you can have coffee and toast until 9am. Shower and bathing facilities are limited (you might opt for the neighborhood public bath and sauna just around the corner) and toilet stalls are unisex, affording little privacy for the shy. And because there's no lounge, there's no chance to meet other guests unless you pass them shuffling down the hall to the bathroom. If you're traveling with a group of friends and would like to hang out in a communal room, stay elsewhere.

Hotel Hokke Club Kyoto Popular with tourists thanks to its great location just opposite Kyoto Station and its reasonable rates, this chain hotel opened more than 80 years ago but underwent a much-needed renovation in 2000 and now offers clean and pleasantly decorated Western-style rooms, all with feather quilts and smallish bathrooms. Note that all the singles have tiny glazed windows (which could drive the claustrophobic over the brink) but do have semi-double-size beds. The most expensive twins, large for this price category, face Kyoto Station.

Kyoraku Ryokan ★★ Near the Matsubaya (below), this pleasant and spotlessly clean member of the Japanese Inn Group offers nicely decorated rooms, some of which look over an inner courtyard garden. Though the English-speaking son is a fourth-generation innkeeper, the building housing this ryokan was erected in 2007 and has the bonus of an elevator. Guests can help themselves to free coffee and tea in the dining room. Rooms, including two that are Western-style, are simple and spotless, with screened windows that open. Japanese breakfasts must be ordered the night before, and note that the ryokan locks its doors at 11pm. The higher rates below are for larger rooms.

Matsubaya Ryokan ★★ ★ Finds A member of the Japanese Inn Group, this highly recommended ryokan just east of Higashi Honganji Temple is a great choice in this category. First opened in 1885 and completely rebuilt in 2008 using architectural details from the old inn, it's owned and managed by the friendly Hayashi family, representing the sixth generation of innkeepers. All rooms are Japanese-style, with the best rooms overlooking a garden. The comfortable lobby lounge is a good place to meet fellow travelers and chat with the Hayashis, who have made this ryokan the highlight of many a voyager's trip for many decades.

Yuhara ★★ This small ryokan has been welcoming guests from all over the world for more than 50 years and seems to be a favorite of visiting journalists, as evidenced by the many framed newspaper articles written about the ryokan that line the corridor walls. It has one of the most picturesque, pleasant settings in all of Kyoto—beside the tree-lined narrow Takasegawa canal in a quiet residential area that's a 13-minute walk from Kyoto Station—and is run by an enthusiastic woman who speaks some English. There are nice touches everywhere, from shoji screens and artwork in the rooms to plants and bamboo decorations in the hallways. One of the rooms is Western style, and three come with a sink. The largest room looks out onto a miniature courtyard. Guests are requested to vacate their rooms from 10am to 3pm, and there's an 11pm curfew.

CENTRAL KYOTO VERY EXPENSIVE

Hiiragiya Ryokan ★★ This exquisite ryokan is as fine an example of a traditional inn as you'll find in Japan. Situated in the heart of old Kyoto, it offers the ultimate in Japanese-style living, with a very kind and accommodating staff that's helpful in initiating foreigners unfamiliar with Japan to the joys of a ryokan. Noteworthy former guests include princes of the Japanese royal family, Charlie Chaplin, and Pierre Cardin. If you're going to splurge just once in Japan, this is one of my top choices.

Built in 1818 and an inn since 1861—Ms. Nishimura is the sixth-generation innkeeper—Hiiragiya is a haven of simple design that makes artful use of wood, bamboo, screens, and stones in its spacious, traditionally arranged rooms. Even the remote controls for the lights and curtains are cleverly concealed in specially made lacquered boxes shaped like gourds (invented by the present owner's great-grandfather). Rooms, each one unique, are also outfitted with art and antiques such as gold-painted folding screens or lacquered bathrooms, and most offer garden views and cypress baths. Even the least expensive room—a former tearoom only 4½ tatami mats big, with a sink but no bathroom and a view of the garden—is good enough for me. A recent addition added seven new but elegant rooms. Dinners are exquisite multicourse kaiseki feasts; Western-style breakfasts are available upon request.

Sumiya ★★ Like the other traditional Japanese inns listed here, the 100-year-old Sumiya has a great location in a typical Kyoto neighborhood just a few minutes' walk from bustling downtown. Offering excellent service amid simple yet elegant surroundings, including wooden corridors that wrap around courtyard gardens and several tea-rooms (a tea ceremony is performed after dinner on the 7th and 17th of each month), it has a variety of rooms, most with wooden tubs and some with wonderful views of tiny private gardens with outdoor benches and platforms for sitting. The oldest rooms employ a striking variety of different woods in their design (be sure, too, to notice the Edo-Era designs on the sliding doors), while rooms in a 45-year-old addition may have sliding screen doors that open onto a private garden. Meals feature Kyoto kaiseki cuisine; Western breakfasts are also available.

Taxi: 10 min. Amenities: In-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

Tawaraya ★★ Across the street from the Hiiragiya (see above) is another distinguished, venerable old inn, which has been owned and operated by the same family since it opened in the first decade of the 1700s. Unfortunately, fire consumed the original building, so the oldest part of the ryokan now dates back a mere 175 years. This inn has had an impressive list of former guests, from Leonard Bernstein to Alfred Hitchcock. Saul Bellow wrote in the ryokan's guest book, "I found here what I had hoped to find in Japan—the human scale, tranquility, and beauty."

With refined taste reigning supreme, each room is different and exquisitely appointed. Some, for example, have glass sliding doors opening onto a mossy garden of bamboo, stone lanterns, and manicured bushes, with cushions on a wooden veranda where you can sit and soak in the peacefulness.

Yoshikawa Inn ★ Known for its tempura (see "Where to Dine in Kyoto," later in this chapter), this inn also offers tatami rooms, the best of which offer views of the largest garden I've seen in a downtown Kyoto ryokan. Built more than 100 years ago and opening as an inn a half-century ago, it offers the extra benefit of leg wells under the tables of its tatami rooms, making dining easier for foreigners not used to sitting on the floor. It offers the usual elegance you'd expect from an inn of this caliber, including a warm, hospitable staff.

ANA Hotel Kyoto (Zenniku Hotel Kyoto) ★★ Just across the street from Nijo Castle and offering rooms with castle views, this hotel has one of the most eye-catching lobby lounges in town, complete with a glass wall overlooking an impressive waterfall and tiny landscape garden, all to the accompaniment of koto music (a Japanese stringed instrument). Kimono-clad hostesses greeting guests as they enter the lobby is a welcoming touch. Rooms are attractive if a bit cramped, with well-crafted, Asian-accented furniture, roomy bathrooms, and unusual extras like shoe dryers and dehumidifiers (both handy during the rainy season), and ion-free hair dryers and hair brushes. None of the singles face the castle; double rooms that do—with floor-to-ceiling windows—start at ¥31,185 ($260/£130) during the regular season. Another plus: a complimentary shuttle bus four times an hour to and from Kyoto Station from 8am to 7:45pm.

Kyoto Hotel Okura ★★ First built in 1888, one of Kyoto's oldest hotels underwent a complete metamorphosis and reopened in 1994 as the city's tallest building, with 17 floors. Its height caused a stir of protest by those who advocate stricter height restrictions; though I usually side with historical preservationists, I must admit that no finer building could have violated the skyline. Its modern facade hints at traditional Japanese latticework, while the spacious lobby, designed after the hotel's original 1920s ballroom, exudes a gracefully elegant old-world ambience. Restaurants on the top floor offer stunning views.

Luxurious accommodations, a great location in the heart of Kyoto, and an English-speaking staff that makes a special effort to be hospitable (their motto is "Service with a Smile") come together to make this an excellent choice. Rooms, built around a central atrium, are the utmost in comfort and grandeur, with deep carpeting, rich textiles, vanities, and large bathrooms that, with the exception of single rooms, have separate shower stalls and tubs. The best views are of the Kamo River, especially from the most expensive rooms on upper floors that also take in the hills of Higashiyama-ku beyond the city. The only drawback is that the indoor pool and related facilities are open to guests only from 7 to 10am (people under 20 not allowed), after which they become a private club (if they're not crowded, you may get in—but it costs more).

Kyoto Royal Hotel & Spa ★ The main reason to stay here? Location, location, location. In the heart of Kyoto on Kawaramachi Dori, this typical tourist hotel has a friendly staff, was stylishly renovated in 2001 to achieve a top-class atmosphere, and added a spa in 2005—yet it still can't compete with the facilities and grandeur of Kyoto's other top hotels. However, it's a convenient base for sightseeing and has an information desk to answer guest questions. Chic blonde-and-black furnished rooms feature focused bedside reading lamps, but they are otherwise fairly basic. Note that most single rooms and some doubles face an inner courtyard, which cuts down on noise but also on sunshine, while rooms that face the Kamo River have better views but are minuscule. Again, the best reason to stay here is location, though the spa might help you get over jet lag.

MODERATE

Hotel Alpha Kyoto This small and unassuming but pleasant brick business hotel has a great, hidden location near the Kawaramachi-Shijo Dori intersection, and I have always found the staff accommodating. Most rooms, including singles, are outfitted with double-size beds, but because the cheapest singles face an inner courtyard and are fairly dark, it may be worthwhile to dish out the extra yen for a brighter room. My favorite rooms are those that overlook a quiet temple and Buddhist cemetery—a fitting view in a town that boasts so many religious structures. There are also three Japanese-style rooms with cedar tubs, and the handmade origami crane in each room is a nice touch. In short, this is a good choice if you like to be in the thick of things and are willing to sacrifice space and facilities to be there.

Hotel Gimmond This small hotel on Oike Dori was built some 30 years ago, but it achieves an even older ambience in its lobby with the clever use of antique-looking lighting and decor. Though the hotel calls itself a tourist hotel and offers mainly twins, its accommodations and lack of services and facilities place it in the category of business hotel. Simple rooms are soundproof, but I still think those that face away from Oike Dori are quieter; ask for one on a higher floor. The cheapest rooms are quite small.

Hotel Nishiyama Located just a few minutes' walk north of downtown Kyoto, this 38-year-old property has a traditional atmosphere, from the old lantern above its front door to the small courtyard garden just beyond the lobby. Although the building itself is fairly plain and nondescript, it has more soul than a chain hotel and, despite its name, offers mostly Japanese-style tatami rooms and four small Western-style twins. A public bath boasts views of a garden waterfall. Low rates make this a popular choice for school groups, but if you don't mind the youthful clientele this makes for a good choice for moderately priced Japanese-style accommodation in the heart of the city. Manager Mr. Nishiyama speaks English.

Kyoto Kokusai Hotel ★ I like this hotel across from Nijo Castle because it offers a few surprises you wouldn't expect in medium-range accommodations. Billing itself as a Western-style hotel with a Japanese atmosphere, it has a very nice lobby overlooking a pleasant, lush garden, which you can gaze upon from either the lobby tea lounge or the buffet-style restaurant, Azalea (p. 307). Every Friday and Saturday evening at 7:30pm, the garden also serves as a stage for a free 15-minute dance presentation given by maiko (geisha apprentices). Room rates are based on decor and amenities, with higher-priced rooms offering such luxuries as Internet connections and bathroom scales along with views of Nijo Castle (note, however, that about 50 twins and two doubles face the castle, but none of the singles do). All rooms are comfortable and are outfitted with shoji screens. Despite the hotel's name, which translates as the International Hotel, more than 90% of its guests are Japanese.

Kyoto Central Inn As the name implies, this inn is centrally located in the heart of the city, near the intersection of Shijo Dori and Kawaramachi Dori. It resembles a business hotel, but thanks to its great location, about 50% of its guests are tourists, with twins making up the vast majority of its rooms. However, rooms are worn and dated, with the only difference between those in the newer and older wing being that the newer-wing rooms are slightly larger and therefore more expensive. As those facing the front or side of the building are plagued by traffic noise, ask for a room on a high floor facing the back, where you might have a view over surrounding buildings. Clearly, the best thing this aged hotel has going for it are its prices and its location. You even have to fetch your own tea from the lobby.

The Palace Side Hotel ★ Finds Budget-conscious travelers in the know have been flocking to this modest hotel with its contemporary lobby and cafe for more than 3 decades. Although its location just west of the Imperial Palace is not as convenient as my other inexpensive recommendations in central Kyoto, it's near a subway line and offers more facilities than most (joggers like running on palace grounds). With the exception of original artwork that graces half the rooms by artists who actually stayed in them, rooms (all nonsmoking) resemble those in a dormitory, small with just the basics of a desk too tiny for any serious work, windows that open, and old tiled bathrooms. More expensive twins add a sofa bed; and the most expensive twins have both sofas and kitchenettes (these are also sold as triples but are cramped). Long-term rates and a communal atmosphere attract many who come to Kyoto to study or work.

76 Kinoe ★ This ryokan is different from my other high-end Japanese inn recommendations in that it's been in operation only half a century and occupies a modern, 14-year-old building. However, there may be room at this inn when more famous establishments are full, and it has an interesting location on the edge of the Gion geisha district. Under the able management of Ms. Chizuyo Miyata, it offers simple but elegant tatami rooms with all the traditional flourishes such as shoji screens, sliding paper doors, calligraphy in the tokonoma alcove, and a seating area beside the window. Meals, including Western breakfasts on request, are served in your room. Rates below, based on two persons occupying a room, reflect the seasons, with higher rates charged on weekends and the highest rates in spring and autumn.

Seikoro Inn ★★ ★ Finds This ryokan just east of the Kamo River was established in 1831, with the present building dating from a century ago. After passing through a traditional front gate and small courtyard, you'll find yourself in one of the most charming entryways I've seen in Japan, which adjoins a cozy parlor replete with an eclectic mix of Japanese and Western antiques, including an old grandfather clock. The rooms, also decorated in antiques, are very homey and comfortable; some open onto a garden with sliding doors and shoji screens. Rooms in an annex built just before the 1964 Olympics are high enough that you can see over the surrounding rooftops, but most of these don't have garden views so I prefer the ones in the oldest buildings. The nice public bath boasts a tub made of 400-year-old black pine, making it one of the inn's most treasured possessions. The owner, who speaks English well, doesn't mind if you take your meals elsewhere, especially if you're going to be here for a while. The staff is warm and welcoming.

Tips A Note on Japanese Characters

Many hotels, restaurants, attractions, and other establishments in Japan do not have signs giving their names in Roman (English-language) letters. Appendix C in this book lists the Japanese equivalent for all such places described in this guide. Each set of characters representing an establishment name has a number in the appendix that corresponds to the number that appears inside the oval before the establishment's name in the text. Thus, to find the Japanese for, say, the Kinoe (above), refer to no. 76 in Appendix C.

Hyatt Regency Kyoto ★★ Located in Higashiyama-ku near the Kyoto National Museum and Sanjusangendo Hall, this boutique-like gem has a stunning interior that combines traditional art and materials with contemporary styles. Occupying the former residence of Emperor Goshirakawa, it also has a beautiful 850-year-old garden, complete with waterfall and pond, visible from restaurants and some of its rooms. Its spa, offering acupuncture, moxibustion, and shiatsu in addition to the usual aromatherapy, boasts more Asian treatments than any other hotel spa in Japan. Rooms blend Japanese aesthetics with technical know-how, from kimono-covered headboards and elegant teaware to large safes with electric hookups for laptops, DVD players (and a free DVD library), and spacious granite bathrooms. For a splurge, there are eight deluxe rooms with tatami areas and Japanese-style tubs placed next to balconies, with views of the garden or National Museum. In short, you can't go wrong staying here.

The Westin Miyako ★★ Kids One of the best-known hotels in Japan, the Miyako first opened back in 1890 and boasts a guest list that reads like a who's who of visitors to Japan: Douglas Fairbanks, Queen Elizabeth II, Prince Charles and Princess Diana, Anwar el-Sadat, and Ted Kennedy. Even today, half of the guests staying here are foreigners.

You'd be hard-pressed to find evidence of that history today. Rather, the renovated Westin Miyako is one of Kyoto's most smartly appointed hotels, on par with the best of Tokyo's hotels. Its setting is as good as it gets: The hotel sprawls over more than 6.4 hectares (16 acres) of hilltop at the northeastern end of the city, close to some of Kyoto's most famous temples (and a subway station) and commanding a good view of the surrounding hills. There's a Japanese garden, and families appreciate the free use of indoor and outdoor pools and a small playroom equipped with billiards, video games, and an activity corner just for toddlers.

Western-style rooms, which come with Westin's trademark Heavenly beds and one-touch express service for everything from room service to messages, come in a variety of styles and price ranges, with the least expensive rooms occupying the oldest wing and the most expensive featuring updated, modern furnishings. Best of all are rooms on the fifth floor, with large terraces overlooking the valley. And for those who wish to experience the pleasures of a traditional tatami room but with all the nearby conveniences of a first-rate hotel, the Japanese-style Kasui-en annex is a good bet for ryokan first-timers. Built in 1959, the annex offers 20 modern, elegant rooms with views of the Japanese garden and cypress baths.

Kyoto Gion Hotel This older, simple hotel has no frills but a great location in the heart of Gion, within easy walking distance of the city center, shops, nightlife, and the many sights in Higashiyama-ku. There's no view to speak of, but I prefer the rooms facing west, which have floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking the quaint tiled roofs of Gion (corner rooms are best). The single rooms are among the smallest I've seen (I'm not sure there's even room to unpack). A plus is the rooftop beer garden, open in summer.

⑦⑦ Myorenji Temple ★★ Finds If you don't mind the austerity of life in a temple (early to bed, early to rise), you'll like the tranquillity of this place. Located north-west of the Horikawa-Ternanouchi intersection in a pleasant, quiet neighborhood, Myorenji Temple was founded more than 700 years ago and is now run by a jolly woman named Chizuko-san, who speaks a little English. As she manages this place virtually single-handedly, she prefers guests who stay 2 or 3 days and requests that they make reservations at least a week in advance (a month in advance would be even better). The temple buildings, about 200 years old and containing several important cultural properties (including paintings from the Momoyama Period that you can see upon request), are beautifully laid out. Cherry blossoms bloom from October to April, and there's even a rock garden, laid out by the same priest who directed the construction of the gardens of Katsura Imperial Villa. Sleeping is in bare, simple tatami rooms, and because there are no bathing facilities on the temple grounds, you're given a ticket to use the neighborhood bath. Check in is from 5 to 7pm, doors are locked at 9pm, and services are held every morning at 6:30am.

Nashinoki Inn ★ Kids In a quiet, peaceful neighborhood north of the Kyoto Imperial Palace, this ryokan has been run by a warm, friendly older couple that speaks some English since 1970. Staying here is like living with a Japanese family, as the home looks very lived-in and is filled with the personal belongings of a lifetime. Some of the tatami rooms, which feature touches such as vases, Japanese dolls, and pictures, are quite large and adequate for families. Breakfast is served in your room.

Rakucho ★★ Finds This member of the Japanese Inn Group isn't as conveniently situated as most of the other inns listed above, but that shouldn't stop anyone from staying in this well-kept 70-year-old ryokan, managed by English-speaking Kimiko Urade and her son. All but one of the spotless tatami rooms, decorated with such traditional touches as scrolls, have views of a small peaceful garden. Entrance to the ryokan is through a well-tended tiny courtyard filled with plants. There's a kitchenette with two communal refrigerators, a toaster, microwave, and free instant coffee.

4 Where to Dine in Kyoto

Kyoto cuisine, known as Kyo-ryori, is linked to Kyoto's long history and to seasonal foods produced in the surrounding region. Among the various types of Kyo-ryori available, most famous are probably the vegetarian dishes, which were created to serve the needs of Zen Buddhist priests and pilgrims making the rounds of Kyoto's many temples. Called shojin ryori, these vegetarian set meals may include tofu simmered in a pot at your table (yudofu), filmy sheets of soy milk curd (yuba), and an array of local vegetables. Kyoto is also renowned for its own style of kaiseki (Kyo-kaiseki), originally conceived as a meal to be taken before the tea ceremony but eventually becoming an elaborate feast enjoyed by the capital's nobility with its blend of ceremonial court cuisine, Zen vegetarian food, and simple tea-ceremony dishes. Today, Kyoto abounds in restaurants serving both vegetarian tofu dishes and kaiseki meals fit for an emperor (Kyoto's better ryokan also serve kaiseki as the evening meal). Simpler restaurants specialize in Obanzai, home-style Kyoto cooking using traditional seasonal ingredients. Otherwise, any restaurant advertising that it serves Kyo-ryori generally offers a variety of Kyoto specialties. For more on kaiseki and other Japanese-style meals, see "Tips on Dining, Japanese Style," beginning on p. 70.

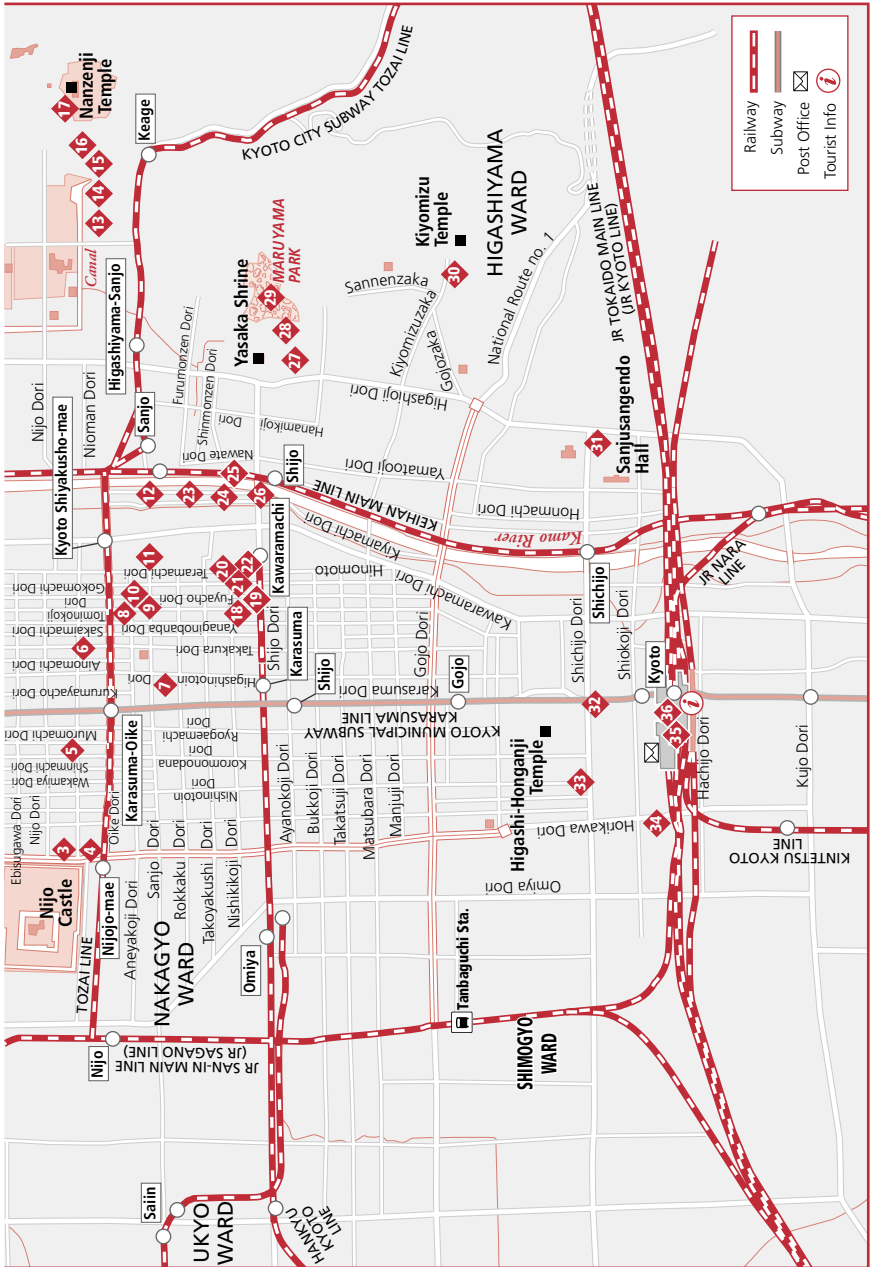

Remember: Last orders are taken 30 to 60 minutes before the restaurant's actual closing time, even earlier for some kaiseki restaurants (which often require a reservation). Bus information to each restaurant is from Kyoto Station.

AROUND KYOTO STATION

In addition to the restaurants listed here, a good place for inexpensive dining is Kyoto Station, which houses approximately 70 restaurants in underground arcades, at major

French Dining Top of Kyoto ★ FRENCH Kyoto's only revolving restaurant, located on the 14th floor of the Rihga Royal Hotel, is a good choice for a romantic dinner. Unlike most other revolving restaurants in Japan, which usually move so fast that you fear being flung against the windows by centrifugal force, this one, I'm happy to report, takes a leisurely 90 minutes to revolve, affording excellent views over the tops of Kyoto's temples to the mountains surrounding the city. It offers a seasonal menu of set courses that may include French quail and foie gras in a chestnut-cream sauce or a filet of beef with Dijon mustard sauce.

Rihga Royal Hotel, Horikawa-Shiokoji. ☎ 075/341-2311. Reservations recommended. Set lunches ¥3,000–¥6,000 ($25–$50/£13–£25); set dinners ¥8,085–¥15,015 ($67–$125/£34–£63). AE, DC, MC, V. Free shuttle bus 8 times an hour until 9pm from Kyoto Station's Hachijo (south) exit (turn left out of the station and walk to the end of the parking lot, past McDonald's), or a 7-min. walk west of Kyoto Station to the Horikawa-Shiokoji intersection.

Grace Garden ★ CONTINENTAL This smart-looking, bright, and airy restaurant, with large windows overlooking southern Kyoto, is trendier and more upbeat than most hotel restaurants that specialize in buffets (which tend toward the utilitarian) and is also smaller, with fewer than 100 seats. Because of that, there are seatings for lunch (11:30am–1pm, 1:30–3pm) and dinner (5:30–7pm and 7:30–9pm). Though you don't have to arrive at the beginning of each seating, you do have to leave when your time is up. Its plentiful spreads offer a bit of everything, from fish to pasta. After dinner, retire to the Southern Court cocktail lounge on the same floor, which offers the same view over Kyoto and live piano music (best of all, there's no cover or music charge).

15th floor, Hotel Granvia Kyoto, Kyoto Station. ☎ 075/342-5522. Reservations strongly recommended. Buffet dinner ¥4,000 ($33/£17) weekdays, ¥4,300 ($36/£18) weekends; buffet lunch ¥2,700 ($23/£11) weekdays, ¥3,000 ($25/£13) weekends. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–3pm and 5:30–9pm. The Kitchen Salvatore Cuomo ★★ Finds ITALIAN Whereas Grace Garden (above) looks toward the south, this contemporary eatery with an open kitchen has a better view toward the north, over rooftops and temples to the hills in the distance. At night, with dimmed lights and an elegant setting, it's a good place for a romantic meal. Three set meals are available for dinner, with the least expensive offering an antipasto plate, pizza, pasta, dessert, and coffee. More expensive set meals add main dishes like grilled shrimp with thyme and lemon-flavored sauce or sautéed tuna with risotto. The set lunches include a trip through an antipasto and a salad bar, along with choices of main dishes.

10th floor, Isetan department store, Kyoto Station. ☎ 075/365-7765. Reservations recommended. There's another Ichiba Coji in the heart of central Kyoto in the Teramachi covered shopping arcade, basement of the Withyou Building (☎ 075/252-2008), with a hip, modern decor and set lunches priced from ¥950 to ¥1,860 ($7.90–$16/£3.95–£8). It's open Monday to Friday 11:30am to 3pm and 5 to 10:15pm; Saturday and Sunday 11:30am to 10:15pm (last order).

79 Izusen ★ KYO-RYORI/VEGETARIAN Although located in a nondescript building and decorated very simply, this is a good choice for inexpensive Japanese set meals near the station. The food, which features local and vegetarian dishes, is delicious and beautifully presented. There's an English-language menu with photographs, and seating is either at tables or on tatami mats. You can choose from a variety of fixed-price meals offering soup, appetizer, rice, a main dish, and side dishes. A vegetarian meal for ¥1,900 ($16/£8), for example, is the kind of light meal usually served at a tea ceremony.

CENTRAL KYOTO

The heart of Kyoto's shopping, dining, and nightlife district is in Nakagyo-ku, especially on Kawaramachi and Shijo Dori and along the many side streets. In summer, restaurants on the west bank of the Kamo River erect large wooden outdoor platforms that extend over the water and offer open-air dining.

80 Misogi-gawa ★★ ★ Finds FRENCH KAISEKI Dining here could well be the culinary highlight of your trip. For more than 25 years—long before fusion cuisine burst onto the scene—this lovely and exclusive restaurant has been serving nouvelle French cuisine that utilizes the best of Japanese style and ingredients in what could be called French kaiseki. It's located on narrow Pontocho, which parallels the Kamo River and is one of Kyoto's most famous nightlife districts, in a century-old renovated wooden building that once belonged to a geisha. Dishes are the creations of owner/master-chef Teruo Inoue, who trained with a three-star Michelin chef and successfully blends the two cuisines into dishes that are arranged like a work of art and served on Japanese tableware.

Although four set meals are offered, diners are often asked for their preferences and dislikes, with favorite foods incorporated into at least one dish. The dining experience is enhanced by an English-speaking staff, who explain the ingredients of each dish as it's presented, and by an extensive wine list, culled from Inoue's annual visits to France. Seating options include an L-shaped counter with tatami seating and leg wells; an informal counter for customers who prefer to order a la carte dishes (written in French and changing regularly) while watching chefs at work; private tatami rooms; and my favorite, an outdoor summer veranda overlooking the river. Note that the L-shaped counter and veranda add a 10% service charge and private rooms add a 15% service charge, but no service charge is added for the a la carte counter. This is a great place for a splurge.

Sanjo-sagaru, Pontocho. ☎ 075/221-2270. Reservations required. Set dinners ¥13,230–¥21,000 ($110–$175/£55–£88); set lunches ¥4,935–¥10,500 ($41–$88/£20–£44). AE, DC, MC, V. Kyoshiki ★ KAISEKI/KYO-RYORI This reasonably priced kaiseki restaurant, with a small garden in the back, was converted from a Meiji-Era private home more than 30 years ago. I recommend the Hisago obento for ¥3,465 ($29/£15) offered for lunch on the English-language menu. It consists of a variety of seasonal foods served in individual dishes that stack neatly on top of one another to form a gourd; you take the bowls apart to eat. The atmosphere here is relaxed and comfortable, with both tatami and table seating.

Fuyacho Dori, Sanjo-agaru (just north of Sanjo Dori). ☎ 075/221-4840. Set meals ¥6,500–¥10,500 ($54–$87/£27–£44); set lunches ¥3,465–¥5,200 ($29–$43/£14–£22). AE, DC, MC, V. Tues–Sun 11:40am–2pm and 5–8pm (last order). Bus: 5 to Shijo-Fuyacho (1 min.). On Fuyacho Dori, just north of Sanjo Dori.

Tempura Yoshikawa ★★ TEMPURA If you're hungering for tempura, this restaurant has a sign in English and is easy to find. Located in an old-fashioned part of Kyoto that boasts a number of expensive ryokan, it's a tiny, intimate place with a traditional atmosphere. The tempura counter, where you can watch the chefs prepare delicate deep-fried morsels, seats only 12. Meals served in tatami rooms, with views of an expansive garden (lit at night), are more expensive.

Tominokoji Dori, Oike-sagaru. ☎ 075/221-5544. Reservations required. Set dinners ¥6,300–¥21,000 ($53–$175/£26–£88); set lunches ¥2,100–¥4,200 ($18–$35/£9–£18). AE, DC, MC, V. Unkai ★ KAISEKI/SHABU-SHABU/VEGETARIAN A convenient place for a meal if you're visiting Nijo Castle (across the street), Unkai has a modern and refined decor, floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking greenery, and kimono-clad waitresses. The English-language menu has photos illustrating shabu-shabu, kaiseki, tempura, and shojin ryori (a vegetarian set meal typical of Kyoto). The ¥6,300 ($53/£27) Tempura Kaiseki is the one most often recommended for foreigners and includes an appetizer, sashimi, grilled fish, tempura, miso soup, and rice.

Azalea CONTINENTAL Azalea is a pleasant place for a casual Western meal if you're visiting nearby Nijo Castle. Offering an English-language menu and a view of its small, Japanese landscaped garden, it has inexpensive set lunches that may include a pasta or risotto dish as the main course, along with a la carte selections like club sandwiches and beef curry rice. Dinner entrees include salmon and hamburger, while the most expensive set dinners include steak. Obviously, at these prices you can't expect perfection, but the setting is nice and it's easy to find.

Kyoto Kokusai Hotel, Nijojo-mae, Horikawa Dori. ☎ 075/222-1111. Set dinners ¥2,700–¥8,000 ($23–$67/£11–£33); set lunches ¥1,500–¥3,700 ($13–$31/£6.50–£15). AE, DC, MC, V. Tofujaya Finds TOFU After inheriting a tofu shop, owner Hamano-san opened this small, casual restaurant to promote tofu's nutritious qualities. Look for a tiny tofu shop on narrow Pontocho; the entrance to the second-floor restaurant is around the corner to the right. The restaurant, with room for only a dozen or so diners, has an open kitchen and an English-language menu listing dengaku (broiled tofu with a miso coating), fried tofu, sesame tofu, and other dishes priced under ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40). It's easiest, however, to order one of the tofu kaiseki courses, which come with a variety of tofu and side dishes. You'll probably feel healthy after eating here.

Shijo-agaru, Pontocho. ☎ 075/212-7706. Reservations required. Set dinners ¥4,720–¥5,750 ($39–$48/£19–£24); set lunches ¥1,890–¥2,620 ($16–$22/£8–£11). No credit cards. (north of the playground; look for the tofu shop).

In addition to the choices here, there's a branch of Ichiba Coji in the Teramachi covered shopping arcade, with a modern, hip decor and offering pub food that goes good with beer, sake, and spirits. See "Around Kyoto Station," above, for a review.

83 Bio-Tei VEGETARIAN/HEALTH FOOD If you're yearning for a meal in a health-food restaurant, head to this very informal second-floor restaurant down the street from the Museum of Kyoto and catty-corner from the post office. Using organic, preservative-free ingredients, it serves only one thing at lunch: a great teishoku (fixed-price meal). Last time I was there it came with genmae (brown rice), salad, miso soup, pickles, and a curry-based tofu stew with potatoes and carrots. For dinner, a set meal and vegetarian a la carte dishes are offered from a Japanese-language menu. Seating is at sturdy wooden tables hewn from Japanese cypress, and meals are served on tableware from local kilns. As befits a health-food restaurant, smoking is not allowed.

Sanjo Dori Higashinotoin. ☎ 075/255-0086. Lunch teishoku ¥840 ($7/£3.50); set dinner ¥1,260 ($11/£5.50); dinner main courses ¥700–¥800 ($5.85–$6.65/£2.95–£3.35). No credit cards. 84 Ganko Sushi SUSHI This popular, lively sushi restaurant offers the usual raw fish selections, as well as such items as grilled yakitori, shabu-shabu, tempura, tofu (ranging from fried to grilled), noodles, and shrimp or crab dishes on an English-language menu. Behind the sushi counter is a fish tank with some rather large specimens swimming around happily until their numbers come up.

Kawaramachi-Sanjo, Higashi-iru. ☎ 075/255-1128. Sushi a la carte ¥160–¥680 ($1.35–$5.65/70p–£2.85); set meals ¥1,150–¥2,780 ($9.60–$23/£4.80–£12). MC, V. Daily 11:30am–11pm. Subway: Kyoto Shiyakusho-mae (4 min.). Bus: 4, 17, or 205 to Kawaramachi Sanjo (2 min.). On Sanjo Dori, just west of the Kamo River (look for its logo of a face with glasses and a bandanna).

85 Gontaro NOODLES This noodle shop has been serving its own handmade noodles for a mere 100-some years. A small place with a modern yet traditional interior and an English-language menu, it offers various noodle dishes of either soba (buckwheat) or udon (a thicker, wheat noodle) with such toppings as tempura, as well as donburi (a rice casserole with tempura, yakitori, or other topping) and nabe (udon boiled in broth with seafood, chicken, and vegetables). Those with insatiable appetites should have it all with the Okimori set meal for ¥5,500 ($46/£23), which comes with nabe, tempura, barbecue chicken, and noodles.

Kushiya Monogatari Value KUSHIYAKI This is the first all-you-can-eat, do-it-yourself kushiyaki restaurant I've seen. After choosing skewers of chicken, beef, salmon, scallops, fish, mushrooms, onions, potatoes, and other meats and vegetables from refrigerated cases, you cook them yourself by dipping them in a paste, covering them with bread crumbs and then deep frying them at your table (there are English-language instructions to help you along). There's also rice, noodles, and a dessert and salad bar. Gluttony is restricted to 90 minutes, and you can add all-you-can-drink alcohol and soft drinks for an additional ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40).

5th Floor, Sakizo Plaza Building, Shijo-agaru, Nishi-Fuyacho. ☎ 0120/194-948 (toll-free). All-you-can-eat kushiyaki ¥2,625 ($22/£11). No credit cards. Daily 4–11pm. Bus: 5 to Shijo-Fuyacho (2 min.). On the north side of Shijo Dori west of Fuyacho Dori; look for the English-language billboard.

Misoka-An Kawamichiya ★★ NOODLES Charming and delightful with a central courtyard and cubbyhole rooms, this tiny, 300-year-old noodle shop makes a great place for an inexpensive meal in the heart of traditional Kyoto. It offers hot or cold buckwheat noodles as well as noodles with such adornments as tempura and chicken and onions. Its specialty is a one-pot noodle dish prepared at your table called hokoro, which includes chicken, yuba, mushrooms, and vegetables for two. There's an English-language menu.

Fuyacho Dori, Sanjo-agaru. ☎ 075/221-2525. Noodles ¥600–¥1,500 ($5–$13/£2.50–£6.50); hokoro ¥8,000 ($65/£33) for 2 people. AE, DC, MC, V. Fri–Wed 11am–8pm (last order). Bus: 5 to Shijo-Fuyacho (2 min.). On the west side of Fuyacho Dori just north of Sanjo Dori.

86 Musashi Value SUSHI For a cheap meal of raw fish, this conveniently located restaurant can't be beat. Morsels of sushi ranging from tuna to octopus are served via a conveyor belt that moves plates along the counter; reach out and take whatever strikes your fancy. Sushi is priced at ¥127 ($1.05/55p) a plate. Takeout sushi is also available from the sidewalk front counter.

Daily 11:30am–2pm, Thurs–Tues 5–8:30pm. Subway: Karasuma-Oike (5 min.). On the east side of Kuromonotana Dori, in the second block north of Oike.

88 Omen UDON A casual atmosphere and reasonably priced food make this tiny place popular. Vegetable udon (omen) is the specialty, and the house's traditional style is to serve the wheat noodles in a flat wooden bowl, the sauce in a pottery bowl, the vegetables delicately arranged (sushi style) on a handmade platter with a bowl of sesame seeds alongside. You dip and mix yourself, unlike at other udon shops where it all arrives like a stew swimming in one bowl. Tempura, lightly fried tofu, and kamonasu dengaku (fried eggplant topped with a rich miso sauce) are among the other dishes offered. Other branches are located just south of Ginkakuji (☎ 075/771-8994; daily from 11am to 9:30pm), and on Pontocho (☎ 075/253-0377; same hours as the main branch below). There's also one in New York.

Tohkaikain BEIJING CHINESE This Beijing-style Chinese restaurant, which is popular with families, started life as a Western restaurant. The old building features an ancient, manually operated elevator, lots of wood paneling, high ceilings, old-fashioned decor, and a friendly staff. From June to mid-September, you can sit outside on a wooden veranda over the Kamo River, one of the cheapest places along the river to do so. If it's winter or raining, consider sitting in the fifth-floor dining room, which has nice views of the city. The best views, however, are from the rooftop garden (in summer only), where you can order mugs of beer and dine on dishes from the extensive English-language menu, including sweet-and-sour pork, cooked shrimp with arrowroot, and chicken and green pepper. The service tends to be slow and I've had better Chinese food, but the atmosphere is great and is reminiscent of another era.

Nishizume, Shijo Ohashi. ☎ 075/221-1147. Main dishes ¥1,575–¥2,630 ($13–$22/£6.50–£11). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–9pm (last order). Bus: 4, 5, 17, or 205 to Shijo Kawaramachi (2 min.). On Shijo Dori just west of the bridge spanning the Kamo River in a large yellow stone building.

EASTERN KYOTO

In addition to the restaurants discussed below, there are a lot of informal and inexpensive places near Kiyomizu Temple (p. 318). If the weather is nice, you may wish to stop for noodles and a beer on the Kiyomizu Temple grounds, where you'll find several open-air tatami pavilions.

⑧9 Hyotei ★★☆☆ Finds KAISEKI/OBENTO This 300-year-old restaurant first opened its doors as a teahouse to serve pilgrims and visitors on their way to Nanzenji Temple. Today it consists of two parts: one that offers expensive Kyo-kaiseki, which originated with the tea ceremony but is now associated with Kyoto cooking, and an annex offering seasonal obento lunch boxes. The kaiseki meals are served in separate tiny houses situated around a beautiful garden with a pond, maple trees, and bushes; the oldest house, which resembles a small teahouse, is more than 3 centuries old. You'll dine seated on a tatami floor in a private room, the food brought to you by kimono-clad women. The annex (bekkan), to the left of the kaiseki restaurant and with its own entrance, serves delicious lunch boxes (Shokado Bento), which change with the season and are served in a communal tatami room with views of a garden.

35 Kusakawa-cho, Nanzenji. ☎ 075/771-4116. Reservations required for kaiseki, recommended for obento. Kaiseki lunches from ¥ 23,000 ($192/£96), dinners from ¥ 27,000 ($225/£112); obento lunch boxes ¥4,800 ($40/£20). AE, DC, MC, V. West of Shirakawa Dori and south of Murin-an; look for a plain facade hidden behind a bamboo fence with a sign shaped like a gourd.

⑨0 Mikaku ★ JAPANESE STEAKHOUSE Established almost a century ago by the present owner's grandfather, this restaurant, in the heart of Gion, is housed in a 100-year-old renovated building that was once a private home. It offers sukiyaki, shabu-shabu, oil-yaki (sliced beef cooked on an iron griddle and flavored with soy sauce, lemon, and Japanese radish), and teppanyaki, all made with high-grade Kobe beef.

Minokichi Honten Takesigero ★★ KYO-KAISEKI One of Japan's best-known restaurants for Kyoto cuisine, Minokichi was founded in 1719 as one of eight restaurants licensed to serve freshwater fish and is now in its 10th generation of restaurateurs. With several branches in Japan, including a handful in Kyoto, Osaka, and Tokyo, this flagship restaurant is an elegantly simple modern building, with tatami rooms reminiscent of those used in tea ceremonies, all with peaceful views of a graceful moss and bamboo garden. The specialty is Kyoto-style kaiseki (Kyo-kaiseki); emphasis is on the appearance of the food, and great care is given to the selection and preparation of seasonal ingredients. Although the dishes themselves change, a kaiseki meal here always consists of 10 items: appetizer, raw fish, light soup, food cooked in delicate broth, steamed food, broiled food, deep-fried food, vinegared food, fruit, and green tea with a sweet.

Sanjo-agaru, Dobutsuen-mae Dori. ☎ 075/771-4185. Reservations required. Kyo-kaiseki dinner ¥15,750–¥31,500 ($121–$262/£60–£131); kaiseki lunch ¥7,350–¥15,750 ($61–$121/£30–£60). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2pm and 5–7:30pm (last order). Subway: Keage (10 min.). North of Sanjo Dori on the road to the Zoological Gardens.

91 Minoko ★★ KAISEKI/OBENTO This former villa is an enclave of traditional Japan with a simple, austere exterior and an interior of winding wooden corridors, tatami rooms, and a garden. Opened about 90 years ago by the present owner's father, Minoko does its best to retain the spirit of the tea ceremony, specializing in an elaborate kind of kaiseki dinner called cha-kaiseki, usually served at tea-ceremony gatherings and utilizing seasonal ingredients that are beautifully arranged to please both the palate and the eye. If you come for dinner, when only kaiseki is served, you'll eat in a private tatami room. Lunch, which is served communally in a large tatami room with a view of a beautiful garden, is more economical and less formal but still draws on the tea ceremony for inspiration. The obento lunch box, for example, called chabako-bento, is named after the lacquered box it's served in, which is traditionally used to carry tea utensils to outdoor tea ceremonies. A hiru-kaiseki, or mini-kaiseki set meal, is also available at lunch.

480 Kiyoi-cho, Shimogawara-dori, Gion. ☎ 075/561-0328. Reservations recommended for lunch, required for dinner. 92 Chorakukan WESTERN Located on the edge of Maruyama Park and a good place to stop if you're walking from Kiyomizu Temple to Gion, this restaurant, housed in a building dating from the Meiji Period with elaborate woodwork and marble, is one of the few Western restaurants in eastern Kyoto. Although the inexpensive downstairs restaurant is nothing fancy, it's restful: Classical music plays in the background, and there's a view of some maple trees. Only set meals, with meat or fish, are available. After your meal, you may wish to retire to the building's coffee shop, a beautiful room reminiscent of European coffee shops, open daily 8:30am to 9:30pm.

In the southwest corner of Maruyama Park. ☎ 075/561-0001. Set dinners ¥6,000–¥12,000 ($50–$100/£25–£50); set lunch ¥5,000 ($42/£21). No credit cards. Daily 11am–2:30pm and 5–9pm (last order). Bus: 100 or 206 to Gion (7 min.); after passing Yasaka Shrine, look to the right for a large stone-and-brick, Western-style building with a huge stone lantern in its driveway.

93 Isobe KAISEKI/VARIED JAPANESE A convenient place to stop for lunch if you're walking from Kiyomizu Temple to Gion, this modern, pleasant restaurant offers a nice view of Maruyama Park from its dining room and has an English-language menu with photos listing a variety of set meals featuring sashimi, tempura, and kaiseki.

Maruyama Park, Ikenohata. ☎ 075/561-2216. Set meals ¥3,150–¥8,400 ($26–$70/£13–£35). MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Bus: 100 or 206 to Gion (10 min.). On the southeastern edge of the park (if you're walking from Kiyomizu, take a right at the park entrance; if you're coming from Gion, walk past Yasaka Shrine and keep to the right); look for the outdoor red umbrella (up only in dry weather but also depicted on the sign).

Junsei ★ TOFU/KAISEKI/OBENTO Specializing in tofu dishes, Junsei opened in 1961, but the grounds and garden were originally part of a medical school established in the 1830s during the shogun era. Although tourist oriented and popular with tour groups, the food is good and an English-language menu makes ordering easy. There are several buildings spread throughout the grounds, and what you want determines where you go; as soon as you arrive, you'll be given a menu and asked what you'll be eating. I chose the house special—a yudofu (tofu) set meal—and was directed to an older building with a view of the garden and filled with antiques and tatami mats. My meal came with vegetable tempura and various tofu dishes, including fried tofu on a stick and yudofu (tofu boiled in a pot at my table). Other set meals include kaiseki (by reservation only), yuba, shabu-shabu, or sukiyaki.

There's a branch, Kiyomizudera Junsei (☎ 075/541-7111), located just off Kiyomizu-zaka, the main slope leading to Kiyomizu Temple. Housed in a grand, 1914 former villa with high ceilings, wainscoting, and stained-glass windows, it offers just three set tofu meals priced ¥2,100 to ¥5,250 ($18–$44/£9–£22) and is open daily 10:30am to 5pm (last order).

60 Kusakawa-cho, Nanzenji. ☎ 075/761-2311. Reservations required for kaiseki. Yudofu set meal ¥3,150 ($26/£13); yudofu kaiseki meal ¥6,300 ($53/£26); shabu-shabu or sukiyaki ¥9,240 ($77/£38); kaiseki set meal ¥10,000–¥20,000 ($83–$167/£42–£83). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–8pm (last order). Subway: Keage (5 min.). Bus: 5 to Nanzenji-Eikando-michi (7 min.). East of Shirakawa Dori on the road to Nanzenji Temple.

94 Okutan ★★☆☆ finds TOFU/VEGETARIAN This is one of the oldest, most authentic, and most delightful tofu restaurants in Kyoto. Founded about 350 years ago as a vegetarian restaurant serving Buddhist monks, this thatched-roof wooden place in a peaceful setting with pond and garden serves just two things: a tofu set meal (yudofu) and a more traditional tofu meal originally from China. Okutan is very simple and rustic with seating either in tatami rooms or outdoors on cushioned platforms, making it especially delightful in fine weather. Women dressed in traditional rural clothing bring your food. The yudofu set meal, which changes slightly with the seasons, includes a pot of tofu boiled at your table, fried tofu on a stick, vegetable tempura, yam soup, and pickled vegetables. It's all highly recommended.

86–30 Fukuchi-cho, Nanzenji. ☎ 075/771-8709. Reservations recommended (but not accepted in peak season). Yudofu set meal ¥3,150 ($26/£13); traditional tofu meal ¥4,200 ($35/£18). No credit cards. Fri–Wed 11am–5:30pm (last order). Bus: 5 or 100 to Nanzenji-Eikando-michi (6 min.). Just north of Nanzenji Temple's main gate (the San Mon Gate).

Touzan ★★☆☆ SUSHI/SUMIBIYAKI/KAISEKI Next door to Sanjusangendo and across the street from Kyoto National Museum, this eatery is convenient to sight-seeing but worth going out of your way for. Modeled after a Kyoto-style home, with views of a traditional rock garden and with an innovative interior design (such as glass room dividers encasing broken pottery and a wall with textured Japanese paper imprinted with pebbles, a manhole, a squashed can, and other items when the paper was pressed against a street), it specializes in charcoal-grilled vegetables and sushi. Seating is at a sushi counter or at tables overlooking the garden, but you can order sumibiyaki (vegetables, fish, and meat grilled over high-quality charcoal), Kyo-kaiseki, or sushi from a seasonal menu regardless of where you sit. The highest-priced dishes are for Japanese beef, while the Shokado Bento, with appetizer, seasonal dishes like simmered prawn and lotus root, grilled eggplant, sashimi, butterfish, rice, miso soup, and pumpkin pudding is a great value at ¥4,300 ($36/£18). A large selection of sake serves as a perfect complement to the meals, but if you have trouble choosing, the sake-tasting set for ¥2,500 ($21/£11) lets you sample four varieties.

Hyatt Regency Kyoto, 644–2 Sanjusangendo-mawari, Higashiyama-ku. ☎ 075/541-1234. Main dishes ¥1,300–¥7,800 ($11–$65/£5.50–£32); set dinners ¥6,000–¥13,000 ($50–$105/£25–£53); set lunches ¥1,950–¥4,300 ($16–$36/£8–£18). AE, DC, MC, V. Bus: 100 to Sanjusangendo (1 min.).

95 Goemonjaya TOFU/TEMPURA/NOODLES Convenient if you're visiting Nanzenji, this typical Japanese restaurant specializes in tofu dishes and tempura. With tatami seating, a miniature garden, a waterfall, and a carp-filled pond, it offers a tofu (yudofu) set meal, a shrimp or vegetarian tempura teishoku, and, in summer only, inexpensive noodle dishes ranging in price from ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70) for somen (thin vermicelli served cold) to ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) for cold buckwheat noodles (zaru soba). You might also wish to try its desserts, including mitarashi dango (soy-flavored rice dumplings on a stick) and zensai-mochi (rice cake with black beans).

67 Kukasawa-cho, Nanzenji. ☎ 075/751-9638. Set meal ¥2,200–¥2,900 ($18–$24/£9–£12). No credit cards. Daily 11am–7pm (last order). Closed some Tues. Bus: 5 to Nanzenji-Eikando-michi (2 min.). Across the street from Yachiyo Inn on the road leading to Nanzenji Temple, look for a red lantern beside the road and a display case of plastic food; the restaurant is back off the main road past a smiling Buddha and a red paper umbrella (open only in dry weather).

NORTHERN KYOTO

In addition to the selection here, there's a branch of the Gontaro noodle at Hinomiyashiki-cho 26 (☎ 075/463-1039), with the same English-language menu as its main shop (p. 308). It's located about halfway down the street that runs between Ryoanji and Ginkakujii, on the west side; look for the red paper lantern. It's open Thursday to Tuesday from 11am to 10pm.

Ryoanji Yudofuya ★★ Finds TOFU/VEGETARIAN If you're visiting Ryoanji Temple in northeastern Kyoto, there's no lovelier setting for a meal than this traditional restaurant, which calls itself the Ryoanji Seven Herb Tofu Restaurant in honor of the only thing it serves, yudofu, which is boiled tofu and vegetables topped with seven herbs. You can order it by itself, or as a set meal with side dishes. Entrance to the restaurant, situated beside the Kyoyoiike Pond, is along a small path that takes you past a stream, a small pond, a grove of maple and pine, and moss-covered grounds, which are also what you look out on as you dine, seated on tatami. You'll know you're getting close to the restaurant when you hear the thunk of a bamboo trough fed by a stream, which fills and hits against stone as it empties. Note that if you wish to come here only for a beer after visiting the temple, you'll pay an extra ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) table charge in addition to ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for the beer.

Ryoanji Temple. ☎ 075/462-4742. Yudofu ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50); yudofu vegetarian set meal ¥3,300 ($28/£14). No credit cards. Daily 10am–5pm. Bus: 59 to Ryoanji-mae (2 min.) or 12, 50, or 51 to Ritsumeikan Daigaku-mae (4 min.).

5 Exploring the City

Because Kyoto has so many worthwhile sights, you must plan your itinerary carefully. Even the most avid sightseer can become jaded after days of visiting yet another temple or shrine, no matter how beautiful or peaceful, so be sure to temper your visits to cultural and historical sights with time spent simply walking around. Kyoto is a city best seen on foot; take time to explore small alleyways and curio shops, pausing from time to time to soak in the beauty and atmosphere. If you spend your days in Kyoto racing around in a taxi or a bus from one temple to another, the essence of this ancient capital and its charm may literally pass you by.

Before setting out, be sure to stop by Kyoto City Tourist Information on the ninth floor of Kyoto Station's Isetan department store (☎ 075/344-3300) to get a detailed map of the city, a bus map, and the Kyoto's Visitor's Guide (which also contains maps).

Keep in mind, too, that you must enter Kyoto's museums, shrines, and temples at least a half-hour before closing time. Listings in this section give numbers not only for buses departing from Kyoto Station but from elsewhere as well.

As strange as it sounds, the biggest tourist draw around Kyoto Station is Kyoto Station itself. Japan's second-largest station building (after Nagoya) is a futuristic-looking building with soaring glass atriums, space-age music, escalators rising to a rooftop observatory, and open stages for free concerts and other events. In a bold move to attract young Japanese (who nowadays prefer to take their vacations in more exotic or trendier climes), it also has a shopping center selling everything from clothing to Kyoto souvenirs, the fashionable Isetan department store, and restaurants galore. I see more tourists photographing Kyoto Station than any other modern building in town.

Just a 10- and 5-minute walk (respectively) north of Kyoto Station are two massive temple compounds, Nishi-Honganji and Higashi-Honganji. They were once joined as one huge religious center called Honganji, but they split after a disagreement several centuries ago. Higashi-Honganji is Kyoto's largest wooden structure, while Nishi-Honganji is an outstanding example of Buddhist architecture. Another good thing to do is visit Higashi-Honganji's garden, Shosei-en (☎ 075/371-2961), a 2-minute walk to the east. Once the private villa of Higashi-Honganji's abbot and designed in part by famous landscape architect Kōbori Enshū in the 17th century, it features a pond and several buildings in a parklike setting. Although there are far more beautiful and grander gardens in Kyoto, it provides a nice respite if you're in the area and, even better, it's free (though donations are strongly encouraged). It's open daily 9am to 4pm.

For a personalized English-language tour that takes in Higashi-Honganji, Shosei-en Garden, and several shrines before ending near Kiyomizu Temple, join Johnnie Hill-walker's Kyoto Walking tour, held every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday from 10am to 3pm March through November (no walks on national holidays). Led by Hajime Hirooka, with 50 years guide experience, the tour costs ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) for adults, ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for 13- to 15-year-olds and free to children. No reservations are required; pick up his brochure at the tourist office.

Costume Museum This one-room museum is filled with an elaborate, quarter-size replica of the Spring Palace as immortalized by Murasaki Shikibu in The Tale of Genji, complete with scenes of ceremonies, rituals, and everyday court life depicted by dolls wearing gorgeous kimono and by miniature furniture and other objects of the Heian Period. The exhibit, including costumes, changes twice a year. In an adjoining room, life-size kimono and costumes can be donned for free, so be sure to bring your camera. You can see everything in about 15 minutes.

Izutsu Building, 5th floor, Shinhanayacho Dori, Horikawa Higashiiru (on the corner of Horikawa and Shinhanayacho sts. just northeast of Nishi-Honganji Temple). ☎ 075/342-5345. Admission ¥400 ($3.35/£1.65) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) university and high-school students, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) children 7–12. Mon–Sat 9am–5pm. Bus: 9 or 28 to Nishi-Honganji-mae (2 min.), or a 15-min. walk north from Kyoto Station.

CENTRAL KYOTO

Much of Central Kyoto has been taken over by the 21st century, but there are a few interesting sites worth investigating.

If you've never been to a market in Japan, you'll probably want to take a stroll down Nishiki-Koji Dori, a fish-and-produce market right in the heart of town. A covered

Moments Cultural Immersion

If you're interested in learning firsthand about the tea ceremony, flower arranging, origami, Japanese calligraphy, Japanese cooking, and other cultural pursuits, you can do so with the help of the members of the Women's Association of Kyoto (WAK Japan). Contact WAK (☎ 075/212-9993; www.wakjapan.com) for information on private instruction, classes, and fees. Courses run 1½ to 2 hours and cost ¥3,500 to ¥7,350 ($30–$61/£15–£31) per person depending on the class and the number of people in your group. Reservations should be made 1 day in advance, if possible. Kyoto City International Foundation (☎ 075/752-3010; www.kcif.or.jp) also has information about cultural classes, some of which are free. See "Visitor Information," earlier in this chapter.

pedestrian lane stretching west from Teramachi Dori (and just north of Shijo Dori), Nishiki-Koji has been Kyoto's principal food market for more than 4 centuries. This is where the city's finest restaurants and inns buy their food; you'll find approximately 135 open-fronted shops and stalls selling seasonal vegetables, fish, beans, seaweed, and pickled vegetables, as well as crafts and cooking supplies. Shops are open from the early-morning hours until about 6pm; many close on either Wednesday or Sunday.

Kyoto Imperial Palace (Kyoto Gosho) ★★ This is where the imperial family lived from 1331 until 1868 when they moved to Tokyo. The palace was destroyed several times by fire but was always rebuilt in its original style; the present buildings date from 1855. Modestly furnished with delicate decorations, the palace shows the restful designs of the peaceful Heian Period. The emperor's private garden is graceful. You can visit the palace only on a free, 1-hour guided tour, but fair warning: Tours are conducted quickly, leaving little time for dawdling or taking pictures. In addition, tours view buildings only from the outside, though they do impart interesting information on court life and palace architecture.

Kyotogyoen-nai, Karasuma-Imadegawa. ☎ 075/211-1215. Free admission. Tours in English Mon–Fri at 10am and 2pm, also 3rd Sat of every month and every Sat Apr–May and Oct–Nov. Closed national holidays. Permission must be obtained from the Imperial Household Agency Office (☎ 075/211-1215), either online at http://sankan.kunaicho.go.jp/order/index_EN.html at least 4 days in advance; or in person at palace grounds near the northeast corner, Mon–Fri 8:45am–noon and 1–4pm. Foreign visitors can apply in person in advance or on the day of the tour (before 9:40am for the 10am tour, before 1:40pm for the 2pm tour; 1-day advance application required for Sat tours), but tours can fill up (especially in spring and fall). You must be 18 or older (or accompanied by an adult) and you must present your passport; parties of no more than 8 may apply. Subway: Karasuma Line to Imadegawa (exit 3); then turn left and walk south on Karasuma Dori (5 min.).

Museum of Kyoto (Kyoto Bunka Hakubutsukan) ★ Through video displays, slides, and even holograms, this museum presents Kyoto's 1,200-year history from pre-historic relics to contemporary arts and crafts. I particularly like the various architectural models depicting a local market, merchants' homes, and a wholesale store, but best of all is the vermilion-colored Heian Shrine model with its holographic display of construction workers. The third floor features changing exhibitions of Kyoto arts and crafts as well as a Japanese-style room and garden. Occupying a 1906 bank with its original main hall (complete with teller cages), the annex houses special exhibits and events.

Unfortunately, explanations are in Japanese only, but the museum does offer free English-language guides every day from 10am to 5pm; personal tours last between 30 and 60 minutes depending on your interest (because guides are volunteers, it's a good idea to make a reservation for one). A special feature of the museum is its film library, which houses hundreds of Japanese classics from silent movies to films made up to 20 years ago (the Japanese movie industry was based in Kyoto for decades). Movies are shown twice a day Thursday through Sunday (at 1:30 and 5pm at last check, but you'd be wise to confirm the time). Be sure, also, to browse the Roji Temple Mercantile Street, a re-created merchant's quarters with shops selling crafts and souvenirs and restaurants serving typical Kyoto dishes.

At Sanjo and Takakura sts. ☎ 075/222-0888. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) students, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children, including movie. Tues–Sun 10am–7:30pm. Subway: Karasuma-Oike (exit 5, 3 min.).

Nijo Castle (Nijojo) ★★ The Tokugawa shogun's Kyoto home stands in stark contrast to most of Japan's other remaining castles, which were constructed purely for defense. Built by the first Tokugawa shogun, Ieyasu, in 1603, Nijo Castle is considered the quintessence of Momoyama architecture, built almost entirely of Japanese cypress and boasting delicate transom woodcarvings and paintings by the Kano School on sliding doors. Unfortunately, no photos are allowed.

I prefer Nijo Castle to the Imperial Palace because you can explore its interior on your own. The main building, Ninomaru Palace, has 33 rooms, some 800 tatami mats, and an understated elegance, especially compared with castles being built in Europe at the same time. All the sliding doors on the outside walls of the castle can be removed in summer, permitting breezes to sweep through the building. Typical for Japan at the time, rooms were unfurnished, and the mattresses were stored in closets.

One of the castle's most intriguing features is its so-called nightingale floors. To protect the shogun from real or imagined enemies, the castle was protected by a moat and stone walls. How deep the shogun's paranoia ran, however, is apparent by the installation of these special floorboards, which creaked when trod upon in the castle corridors. The nightingale floors were supplemented by hidden alcoves for bodyguards. Furthermore, only female attendants were allowed in the shogun's private living quarters.

Outside the castle is an extensive garden, designed by the renowned gardener Kobori Enshu, that's famous in its own right. The original grounds of the castle, however, were without trees—supposedly because the falling of leaves in autumn reminded the shogun and his tough samurai of life's transitory nature, making them terribly sad. Ironically, it was from Nijo Castle that Emperor Meiji issued his 1868 decree abolishing the shogunate form of government. Plan on spending an hour here, especially if you decide to rent an audio guide for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) extra, recommended because it describes the significance of what you're seeing.

On the corner of Horikawa Dori and Nijo Dori. ☎ 075/841-0096. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥350 ($2.90/£1.45) high-school students, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) children. Daily 8:45am–5pm (you must enter by 4pm). Closed Tues Dec–Jan and July–Aug. Subway: Nijojo-mae Station (1 min.). Bus: 9, 12, 50, or 101 to Nijojo-mae (1 min.).

Nishijin Textile Center (Nishijin-Ori Kaikan) ★ About a 10-minute walk west of the Imperial Palace is this museum dedicated to the weavers who for centuries produced elegant textiles for the imperial family and nobility. The history of Nishijin silk weaving began with the history of Kyoto itself back in 794; by the Edo Period, there were an estimated 5,000 weaving factories in the Nishijin District. Today, the district remains home to one of Japan's largest handmade weaving industries. The museum regularly holds weaving demonstrations at its ground-floor hand looms, which use the Jacquard system of perforated cards for weaving. One of the most interesting things to do here is attend the free Kimono Fashion Show, held six or seven times daily from 10am to 4pm, showcasing kimono that change with the seasons. Other activities—for which you need reservations—include dressing up in a kimono for ¥3,600 ($30/£15) or as a geisha apprentice (maiko) or professional entertainer (geiko) for ¥10,000 ($83/£42), as well as trying your own hand at producing a textile on a small loom, which you can then take home with you (fee: ¥1,800/$15/£7.50). There's also, naturally, a shop selling textile products and souvenirs.

On Horikawa Dori just south of Imadegawa Dori. ☎ 075/451-9231. www.nishijin.or.jp. Free admission. Daily 9am–5pm. Subway: Imadegawa (8 min.). Bus: 9, 12, 51, 59, or 101 to Horikawa Imadegawa (2 min.).

EASTERN KYOTO

The eastern part of Kyoto, embracing the area of Higashiyama-ku with its Kiyomizu Temple and stretching up all the way to the Temple of the Silver Pavilion (Ginkakuji Temple), is probably the richest in terms of culture and charm. Although temples and gardens are the primary attractions, Higashiyama-ku also boasts several fine museums, forested hills and running streams, great shopping opportunities, and some of Kyoto's oldest and finest restaurants. I've included two recommended strolls through eastern Kyoto later in this chapter that will lead you to the region's best attractions as well as to some lesser-known sights that are worth a visit if you have the time.

Ginkakuji (The Temple of the Silver Pavilion) ★★ Ginkakuji, considered one of the more beautiful structures in Kyoto, was built in 1482 as a retirement villa for Shogun Ashikaga Yoshimasa, who intended to coat the structure with silver in imitation of the Golden Pavilion built by his grandfather. He died before this could be accomplished, however, so the Silver Pavilion is not silver at all but remains a simple, two-story wood structure enshrining the goddess of mercy and Jizo, the guardian god of children. Note the sand mound in the garden, shaped to resemble Mount Fuji, and the sand raked in the shape of waves, created to enhance the views during a full moon.

Ginkakuji-cho. ☎ 075/771-5725. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) junior-high and elementary students. Mid-Mar to Nov daily 8:30am–5pm; Dec to mid-Mar daily 9am–4:30pm. Bus: 5, 17, 102, 203, or 204 to Ginkakuji-michi (10 min.); or 32 or 100 to Ginkakuji-mae (5 min.).

Heian Shrine ★★ Although it dates only from 1895, Kyoto's most famous shrine was built in commemoration of the 1,100th anniversary of the founding of Kyoto and is a replica of the main administration building of the Heian capital. It also deifies two of Japan's emperors: Emperor Kanmu, 50th emperor of Japan, who founded Heian-kyo in 794; and Emperor Komei, the 121st ruler of Japan, who ruled from 1831 to 1866. Although the orange, green, and white structure is interesting for its Heian-Era architectural style, the most important thing to see here is Shinen Garden ★★★, the entrance to which is on your left as you face the main hall. Typical of gardens constructed during the Meiji Era, it's famous for its weeping cherry trees in spring, its irises and water lilies in summer, and its changing maple leaves in the fall. Don't miss it.

Nishi Tennocho, Okazaki. ☎ 075/761-0221. Free admission to grounds; Shinen Garden ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Daily 8:30am–6pm (to 5pm Nov–Feb). Subway: Higashiyama (10 min.). Bus: 5, 32, 46, 57, or 100 to Kyoto Kaikan Bijutsukan-mae (2 min.).

Hosomi Art Museum ★ This highly acclaimed private museum houses changing exhibits of Buddhist and Shinto art, primarily from temples and shrines in Kyoto and Nara, including Heian bronze mirrors, Buddhist paintings, lacquerware, tea-ceremony objects, scrolls, folding screens, and pottery. In contrast to the objects it contains, the building itself is starkly modern, complete with automatic doors that open and clang shut with the finality of a prison. The 30 minutes it takes to walk through are worthwhile; be sure to browse through the gift shop of finely crafted goods.

6–3 Okazaki, Saishoji-cho. ㊦ 075/752-5555. Admission ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) adults, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) university students and children. Tues–Sun 10am–6pm. Subway: Higashiyama (exit 2, 5 min.). Bus: 31, 201, 202, or 206 to Higashiyama-Nijo (2 min.). Catty-corner from the Kyoto Museum of Traditional Crafts (Fureaikan).

Kiyomizu Temple (Kiyomizudera) ㊦㊦㊦ This is Higashiyama-ku’s most famous temple, known throughout Japan for the grand views afforded from its main hall. Founded in 798 and rebuilt in 1633 by the third Tokugawa shogun, Iemitsu, the temple occupies an exalted spot on Mount Otowa, with its main hall constructed over a cliff and featuring a large wooden veranda supported by 139 pillars, each 15m (49 ft.) high. The main hall is dedicated to the goddess of mercy and compassion, but most visitors come for the magnificence of its height and view, which are so well known to Japanese that the idiom “jumping from the veranda of Kiyomizu Temple” means that they’re about to undertake some particularly bold or daring adventure. Kiyomizu’s grounds are particularly spectacular (and crowded) in spring during cherry-blossom season and in fall during the turning of the maple leaves.

Also worth checking out are the three-story pagoda and Otowa Falls (known for the purity of its water; kiyomizu translates as “pure water”), but be sure not to spite the gods by neglecting to visit Jishu Shrine ㊦㊦ (㊦ 075/541-2097), a vermilion-colored Shinto shrine behind Kiyomizu’s main hall that has long been considered the dwelling place of the god of love and matchmaking. Ask for the English-language pamphlet and be sure to take the ultimate test: On the shrine’s grounds are two “love–fortune telling” stones placed 9m (30 ft.) apart; if you’re able to walk from one to the other with your eyes closed, your desires for love will be granted.

㊦ 075/551-1234. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) children 7–15. Daily 6am–6pm (until 6:30pm in summer); Jishu Shrine closes at 5pm. Bus: 100, 202, 206, or 207 to Gojo-zaka (10 min.).

Kodai-ji Temple Located between Kiyomizu Temple and Yasaka Shrine, this temple was founded by Toyotomi Hideyoshi’s widow, popularly referred to as Nene, to commemorate her husband and to pacify his spirit. Shogun Tokugawa Ieyasu, who served under Toyotomi before becoming shogun, financed its construction. It contains lovely gardens laid out by Kobori Enshu, as well as teahouses designed by Sen no Rikyu, a famous 16th-century tea master. A memorial hall enshrines wooden images of Hideyoshi (to the left) and Nene. Nene, by the way, became a Buddhist nun after her husband’s death, as was the custom of noblewomen at the time.

Yasakotorii-mae-sagaru, Shimo-Kawaramachi. ㊦ 075/561-9966. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) under 18 years. Daily 9am–4:30pm (until 4pm in winter). Bus: 100 or 206 to Higashiyama Yasui (5 min.).

Kyoto Museum of Traditional Crafts (Fureaikan) ㊦㊦ Finds Near Heian Shrine is this excellent museum dedicated to the many crafts that flourished during Kyoto’s long reign as the imperial capital. Various displays and videos demonstrate the step-by-step production of crafts ranging from stone lanterns and fishing rods to textiles, paper fans, umbrellas, boxwood combs, lacquerware, Buddhist altars, and Noh masks. The displays are fascinating, the crafts beautiful, and explanations are in English, making even a 30-minute stop here well worth the effort. Crafts are sold in the museum shop.

In the basement of the Miyako Messe (International Exhibition Hall), 9–1 Seishoji-cho, Okazaki. ㊦ 075/762-2670. Free admission. Tues–Sun 9am–6pm. Subway: Higashiyama (5 min.). Bus: 5, 32, 46, 57, or 100 to Kyoto Kaikan Bijutsukan-mae (2 min.).

Kyoto National Museum (Kokuritsu Hakubutsukan) ★★ This museum, housed in a French baroque-style building constructed in 1897, features changing exhibits highlighting magnificent art objects and treasures, many of which once belonged to Kyoto's many temples and the imperial court. Japanese and Chinese ceramics, sculpture, Japanese paintings, clothing and kimono, lacquerware, and metalworks are always on display, making this the best museum in town for viewing the ancient capital's priceless treasures. Plan on staying about an hour, but if you've seen the more extensive Tokyo National Museum, you may want to skip this one.

527 Chaya-machi (across the street from Sanjusangendo Hall). ☎ 075/541-1151. www.kyohaku.go.jp. Admission to permanent exhibit ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) university and high-school students, free for children. Free admission to permanent exhibit 2nd and 4th Sat of the month. Special exhibits cost more. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5pm (to 6pm during special exhibitions). Bus: 100, 206, or 208 to Hakubutsukan Sanjusangendo-mae (1 min.).

Sanjusangendo Hall ★★ Originally founded as Rengeoin Temple in 1164 and rebuilt in 1266, Sanjusangendo Hall has one of the most visually stunning sights I've seen in a Japanese temple: 1,001 wooden statues of the thousand-handed Kannon. Row upon row, these life-size figures, carved from Japanese cypress in the 12th and 13th centuries, make an impressive sight; in the middle is a large seated Kannon carved in 1254 by Tankei, a famous sculptor from the Kamakura Period. Don't expect to actually see a thousand arms on each statue; there are only 40, the idea being that each hand has the power to save 25 worlds. To accommodate the thousand-handed Kannon as well as 30 other statues representing the Kannon's disciples, the hall stretches almost 120m (400 ft.), making it the longest wooden building in Japan (no photography or videos are allowed in the building). Its length was too hard to ignore—in the corridor behind the statues, archery competitions have been held for centuries; standing here, you can easily imagine how hard it must be to hit a piece of sacred cloth attached to the wall at the opposite end.

Shichijo Dori. ☎ 075/525-0033. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.65) junior-high and high-school students, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Apr to mid-Nov daily 8am–5pm; mid-Nov to Mar daily 9am–4pm. Bus: 100, 206, or 208 to Hakubutsukan Sanjusangendo-mae (1 min.).

NORTHERN KYOTO

Two of Kyoto's most famous sights are in the northwestern corner of the city.

Kinkakuji (Temple of the Golden Pavilion) ★★ One of Kyoto's best-known attractions—and the inspiration for the Temple of the Silver Pavilion (above)—Kinkakuji was constructed in the 1390s as a retirement villa for Shogun Ashikaga Yoshimitsu and features a three-story pavilion covered in gold leaf with a roof topped by a bronze phoenix. Apparently, the retired shogun lived in shameless luxury while the rest of the nation suffered from famine, earthquakes, and plague. If you come here on a clear day, the Golden Pavilion shimmers against a blue sky, its reflection captured in the waters of a calm pond. However, this pavilion is not the original; in 1950, a disturbed student monk burned Kinkakuji to the ground (the story is told by author Mishima Yukio in his famous novel, The Temple of the Golden Pavilion). The temple was rebuilt in 1955 and in 1987 was recovered in gold leaf, five times thicker than the original coating: You almost need sunglasses. Be sure to explore the surrounding park with its moss-covered grounds and teahouses.

Kinkakuji-cho. ☎ 075/461-0013. Admission ¥400 ($3.35/£1.65) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Daily 9am–5pm. Bus: 12, 59, 101, 102, 204, or 205 to Kinkakuji-michi (3 min.).

Ryoanji Temple (★★★) About a 20-minute walk southwest of the Golden Pavilion is Ryoanji—home to what is probably the most famous Zen rock garden (★★★) in all of Japan—laid out at the end of the 15th century during the Muromachi Period. Fifteen rocks set in waves of raked white pebbles are surrounded on three sides by a clay wall and on the fourth by a wooden veranda. Sit down here and contemplate what the artist was trying to communicate. The interpretation of the rocks is up to the individual. (Mountains above the clouds? Islands in the ocean?) My only objection to this peaceful place is that, unfortunately, it's not always peaceful—a loudspeaker on occasion extols the virtue of the garden, destroying any chance for peaceful meditation. If you get here early enough, you may be able to escape both the crowds and the noise.

After visiting the rock garden, be sure to take a walk around the temple grounds. There's a 1,000-year-old pond, on the rim of which sits a beautiful little restaurant, Ryoanji Yudofuya (★★), with tatami rooms and screens, where you can eat yudofu (p. 313) and enjoy the view. There's also a nice landscape garden, with moss so inviting you wish you could lie down and take a nap.

Goryoshita-cho. ☎ 075/463-2216. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Mar–Nov daily 8am–5pm; Dec–Feb daily 8:30am–4:30pm. Bus: 59 to Ryoanji-mae (2 min.); or 12 or 50 to Ritsumeikan Daigaku-mae (4 min.).

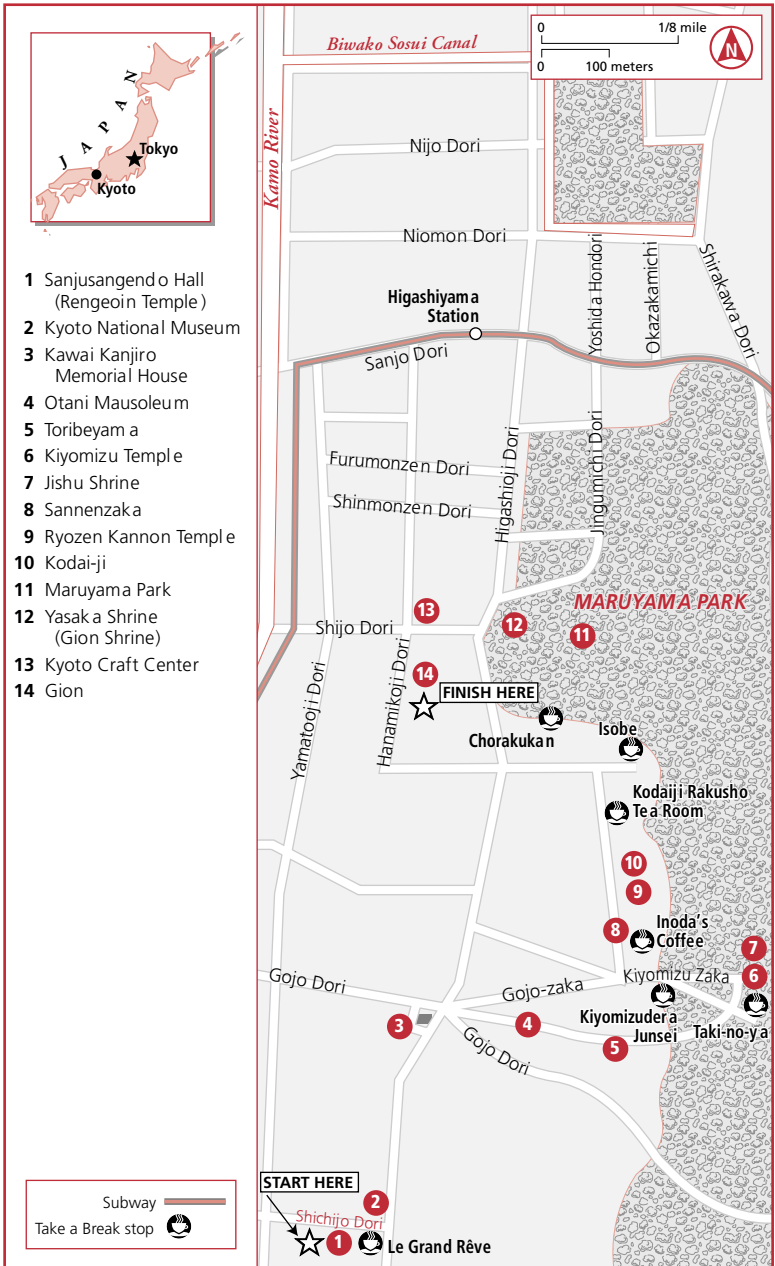

Toei Uzumasa Eiga Mura (Toei Uzumasa Movieiland) (★ Kids) If your kids are ready to mutiny because of yet another temple, get on their good side by coming to this studio park, one of Japan's three major film companies and where most of the samurai flicks are made. Don't expect the high-tech, polished glitz of American theme parks—rather, this is a working studio with indoor and outdoor movie sets re-creating the mood, setting, and atmosphere of feudal and turn-of-the-20th-century Japan, complete with “villages” lined with samurai houses and old-time shops. Stagehands carry around props, hammers and saws, and rework sets. You may even see a famous star walking around dressed in samurai garb, or come upon a scene being filmed. There are, of course, other attractions, including a museum tracing the history of the film industry, a 20-minute ninja show four times a day Monday through Friday, a special-effects show, a haunted house, a games arcade, and indoor rides and play areas for children. You can also have a photo taken of yourself decked out in a kimono or samurai gear. Note: Back lots are open only on weekends when there is no filming, but kids will prefer a weekday when there are ninja shows and filming. Come here only if you have a lot of time (you'll probably spend a minimum of 2 hr. here), are a cinema buff, or have youngsters in tow.

10 Higashi-Hachigaokacho, Uzumasa, Ukyo-ku. ☎ 075/864-7718. Admission ¥2,200 ($18/£9) adults, ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50) junior-high and high-school students, ¥1,100 ($9.15/£4.60) children. Daily 9am–5pm (9:30am–4pm Dec–Feb). Closed Dec 26–Jan 1. Train: JR line to Uzumasa or Hanazono Station (8 min.) or Keifuku Line to Uzumasa (5 min.). Bus: 75 to Uzumasa Eigamuramichi (4 min.).

WALKING TOUR 1 A STROLL THROUGH HIGASHIYAMA-KU

- Start: Sanjusangendo Hall on Shichijo Dori a couple of blocks east of the Kamo River; to get there, walk 20 minutes from Kyoto Station or take bus no. 100, 206, or 208 to Hakubutsukan Sanjusangendo-mae.
- Finish: Kyoto Craft Center, Shijo Dori, Gion.
- Time: Allow approximately 5 hours, including stops for shopping and museums.
- Best Times: Weekdays, when temples and shops aren't as crowded.
- Worst Times: Monday, when the Kyoto National Museum is closed; Wednesday, when the Kyoto Craft Center is closed.

Walking Tour 1: Higashiyama-ku

A stroll through Higashiyama-ku will take you to Kiyomizu Temple, one of Kyoto's most famous sights, and other worthwhile attractions like Sanjusangendo Hall and the Kyoto National Museum. It will also take you through some of Kyoto's most charming neighborhoods, with plenty of shopping opportunities en route.

Although the walking-tour leaflet ("Kyoto Walks") distributed by the Tourist Information Center in Tokyo claims that you can walk from Kiyomizu Temple to Heian Shrine in 50 minutes, I don't see how it's possible unless you run the entire way. I've walked this route almost a dozen times, and it's always taken me the better part of a day—perhaps I'm slow, but it's a pace that I've found does justice to this wonderful area of Kyoto.

Note: The second walk, "The Philosopher's Stroll" (p. 325), includes several attractions that could be combined with this walk if you don't have time for two walks. If you continue walking north from Maruyama Park instead of heading west for Gion, for example, you could take in Heian Shrine and the Kyoto Handicraft Center (covered at the end of the second walk). In any case, because eastern Kyoto has some of the city's most traditional and beautiful restaurants, be sure to read through the dining section to decide beforehand where you want to eat lunch or dinner.

Start your stroll at:

① Sanjusangendo Hall

This hall dates from 1266 and is only about 15m (50 ft.) wide, but stretches almost 120m (400 ft.), making it the longest wooden building in Japan. However, it's not the building itself that impresses but what it contains—1,001 life-size images of the thousand-handed Kannon. Seeing so many of them—row upon row of gold figures, glowing in the dark hall—is stunning (unfortunately, no photographs or videos allowed). In the middle is a 3.3m-tall (11-ft.) seated figure of Kannon carved in 1254. At the back of the hall is a 117m (384-ft.) archery range where a competition is held every January 15. (See "Exploring the City," earlier in this chapter, for more information on this and other major sights described in this stroll.)

Across the street is the:

② Kyoto National Museum (Kokuritsu Hakubutsukan)

In 1889, the Meiji government, fearful that Japan's cultural objects were going the way of the samurai with the increasing import of Western ways and products, established three national museums—one in Tokyo, one in Nara, and this one in Kyoto, which serves as a repository for art objects and treasures that once belonged to Kyoto's temples and royal court. Individual items, most of which come from the museum's own collection, are rotated continuously, which means that no matter how many times you come here you'll always see something new. Always on display are ceramics, paintings, calligraphy, lacquerware, textiles, and sculptures. For ancient art, there's no better place in town than this.

East of the Kyoto National Museum (toward the wooded hills) are Higashioji Dori and a stoplight; take a left and walk about 5 minutes until you come to the second stoplight, at a small intersection with a Sunkus convenience store. Turn left here, take the first right down a narrow street, and to your right you'll soon see:

③ Kawai Kanjiro Memorial House

Kawai Kanjiro Memorial House, Gojozaka (☎ 075/561-3585), is the former home and studio of one of Japan's most well-known potters, Kawai Kanjiro (1890–1966). Inspired at a young age by Bernard Leach and one of the cofounders of the Japan Folk Crafts Museum in Tokyo, this versatile man handmade much of the furniture in this lovely home, which is a traditional Japanese house with an indoor open-pit fireplace and gleaming woodwork. Pottery, personal effects, and his outdoor clay kiln, built on a slope in the traditional Japanese method, are all on display, but this museum is worth seeing for the house alone, especially if you haven't had much opportunity to see the interiors of traditional Japanese homes. Admission is ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for adults, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for students, and ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for children. It's open Tuesday to Sunday from 10am to 5pm.

Take a right out of the museum, walk to the busy road with the overpass, and turn right. When you get to the big intersection, look catty-corner across the intersection to the left and you'll see a slope leading uphill between two big stone lanterns. This marks the entrance to the:

4 Otani Mausoleum

It serves as a major mausoleum for members of Shin Buddhism (a Japanese religious sect). In addition to a memorial hall dedicated to victims of World War II, it holds many memorial services for deceased Shin Buddhists from throughout Japan. After passing through a wooden gate, you should turn left and then right for:

5 Toribeyama

Since ancient times it has served as a cremation site and burial ground, with more than 15,000 tombs spread along the slopes.

Follow the pathway uphill through the cemetery for about 10 minutes to the top, where you should then turn left and follow the painted white arrow in the street to the vermilion-colored tower gate, which marks the entrance to:

6 Kiyomizu Temple

This temple is the star attraction of this stroll. First founded in 798 and rebuilt in 1633 by the third Tokugawa shogun, Iemitsu, the temple occupies an exalted spot. The main hall is built over a cliff and features a large wooden veranda supported by 139 pillars, each 15m (49 ft.) high. Take in the view of Kyoto from its deck, but to fully appreciate the grandeur of the main hall with its pillars and dark wood, be sure to walk to the three-story pagoda, which offers the best view of the main hall, built without the use of a single nail. From the pagoda, descend the stone steps to Otowa Falls, where you'll see Japanese lined up to drink from the refreshing spring water. Kiyomizu's name, in fact, translates as "pure water." From here you'll also have the best view of the temple's impressive pillars.

On the grounds of Kiyomizu Temple, just beside Otowa Falls, is Taki-no-ya (☎ 075/561-5117), an open-air pavilion where you can sit on tatami and enjoy noodles and a beer or flavored shaved ice from the English-language menu. This is a great place to stop (and now you know why this walk takes me all day). If you're lucky to be here in autumn, the fiery reds of the maple trees will set the countryside around you aflame. Open Friday through Wednesday from 10am to 5pm. Or, for something more substantial, wait until after your temple visit to dine on tofu at Kiyomizudera Junsei, located off Kiyomizu-zaka (see p. 311 for a complete review). On Sannenzaka (see below), keep your eyes peeled for Inoda's Coffee (☎ 075/532-5700), where you'll have views of a Japanese-style garden along with pastries, sandwiches, and coffee. It's open daily 9am to 5pm.

Before departing Kiyomizu Temple, be sure to make a stop at the vermilion-colored Shinto shrine located behind the temple's main hall:

7 Jishu Shrine

The shrine is regarded as a dwelling place of the deity in charge of love and matchmaking. Ask for the English-language leaflet that gives its history. Throughout the grounds are English-language signs and descriptions telling about its various parts; for once, you're not left in the dark about the purpose of the various statues and memorials and what Japanese are doing as they make their rounds. It's very enriching. You can buy good-luck charms for everything from a happy marriage to easy delivery of a child to success in passing an examination. On the shrine's grounds are two stones placed about 9m (30 ft.) apart—if you're able to walk from one stone to the other with your eyes closed, you're supposedly guaranteed success in your love life. It sure doesn't hurt to try. There's also a place where you can write down your troubles on a piece of paper and then submerge it in a bucket of water, which supposedly will cause both the paper and your troubles to dissolve. If you failed the rock test, you might make a point of stopping here.

From Kiyomizu Temple, retrace your steps to the vermillion-colored tower gate you passed earlier. From here, on a downhill slope called Kiyomizu-zaka, you'll pass shop after shop selling sweets, pottery, fans, ties, hats, souvenirs, and curios. It's okay to go crazy shopping here, but remember that you're going to have to carry whatever you buy. After passing a couple of small shrines nestled in among the shops, you'll come to a split in the road and a small shrine on the right shaded by trees in front. Just beside this shrine are stone steps leading downhill (north) to a stone-cobbled street called:

8 Sannenzaka

The slope leads past lovely antiques stores, upscale craft shops, and restaurants and winds through neighborhoods of wooden buildings reminiscent of old Kyoto. Keep your eyes peeled for downhill stairs to the right leading to Maruyama Park; after you take these, the street will wind a bit as it goes downhill and eventually end at a T intersection. Take the stairs opposite the road to:

9 Ryozen Kannon Temple

This temple (☎ 075/561-2205) has a 24m-high (80-ft.) white statue dedicated to unknown soldiers who died in World War II. Memorial services are conducted four times daily at a shrine that contains memorial tablets of the two million Japanese who perished during the war. There's also a Memorial Hall commemorating the more than 48,000 foreign soldiers who died on Japanese territory.

Open daily from 8:45am to 4:20pm; because admission is ¥200 ($1.65/85p), you may just want to take a peek at the statue. Just past Ryozen Kannon Temple, across the parking lot, is:

10 Kodaiji Temple

This temple was founded by the widow Nene in commemoration of her husband, Toyotomi Hideyoshi, who succeeded in unifying Japan at the end of the 16th century. In addition to teahouses and a memorial hall containing wooden images of the couple, there's a beautiful garden designed by master gardener Kobori Enshu.

Exit Kodai-ji Temple via the main steps leading downhill and turn right, continuing north.

Past Kodai-ji Temple and just before the street ends at a pagoda with a crane on top, keep your eyes peeled for a teahouse on your right with a garden, which you can glimpse from the street through a gate. The 96 Kodaiji Rakusho Tea Room, 516 Washiochiyo (☎ 075/561-6892), is a lovely place and one of my favorite tearooms in Kyoto. It has a 100-year-old miniature garden with a pond that's home to some of the largest and most colorful carp I've ever seen, some of which are 20 years old and winners of the many medals displayed in the back room. In summer, stop for somen (finely spun cold noodles), tea, or traditional desserts, and refresh yourself with views of the small but beautiful garden from one of the tables or from the back tatami room. If you're a gardener, you'll probably want to give up the hobby after you've seen what's possible—but rarely achieved. Open from 9:30am to 5:30pm (until 6pm in summer); closed 1 day a week but, unfortunately, not a fixed day. For coffee or Western food, there's Chorakukan, located in a brick-and-stone Meiji-Era building at the southwest corner of Maruyama Park (described below; to the left as you enter the park). See p. 311 for a complete review.

Continuing on your stroll north, turn right at the pagoda with the crane and then take an immediate left, which marks the beginning of:

11 Maruyama Park

An unkempt field of shrubs and weeds until designated a public park in 1886, this is one of Kyoto's most popular outdoor respites, filled with ponds, pigeons, and gardens. In spring, it's one of the most popular spots for viewing cherry blossoms; to the left after you enter the park is one of the oldest, most famous cherry trees in Kyoto. Also farther west is:

12 Yasaka Shrine

Yasaka Shrine is also known as Gion Shrine because of its proximity to the Gion District. Its present buildings date from 1654; the stone gates (torii) on the south side are considered among the largest in Japan. But the reason most people come here is one of practicality—the shrine is dedicated to the gods of health and prosperity, two universal concerns. This shrine, free to the public and open 24 hours, is packed during the Gion Festival and on New Year's Eve.

Exit Yasaka Shrine to the west; this brings you to a busy street called Higashioji. Cross it and continue walking west, on the right side of busy Shijo Dori, where you'll soon come to the:

13 Kyoto Craft Center

The center carries beautifully crafted traditional items by local and famous artisans, including glassware, pottery, jewelry, baskets, and more (see p. 332 for more information).

Across Shijo Dori is:

14 Gion

Gion is one of Japan's most famous nightlife districts. It's centered primarily on Hanamikoji Dori, which translates as "Narrow Street for Flower Viewing." This is Kyoto's long-standing geisha district, an enclave of discreet, traditional, and almost solemn-looking wooden homes that reveal nothing of the gaiety that goes on inside—drinking, conversation, and business dealings with dancing, singing, and music provided by geisha and their apprentices, called maiko. If it's early evening, you might glimpse one of these women as she small-steps her way in geta, a type of traditional wooden shoe, to an evening appointment, elaborately made up and wearing a beautiful kimono. You might also wish to visit Gion Corner on Hanamikoji Dori, which offers performances of dance, puppetry, and other traditional arts nightly; see "Kyoto After Dark," later in this chapter, for details.

WINDING DOWN

If all this sightseeing and shopping have made you thirsty, there are many restaurants and bars to the west across the Kamo River, on Pontochō, and near Shijo and Kawaramachi streets. See "Where to Dine in Kyoto" and "Kyoto After Dark" in this chapter for many suggestions in this area.

WALKING TOUR 2 THE PHILOSOPHER'S STROLL

- Start: Ginkakuji, the Temple of the Silver Pavilion; from Kyoto Station, take bus no. 100 to Ginkakuji-mae stop or bus no. 5 or 17 to Ginkakuji-michi stop.
- Finish: Kyoto Handicraft Center, Marutamachi Dori.
- Time: Allow about 5 hours, including stops along the way.
- Best Times: Early on weekdays, when crowds aren't as thick.
- Worst Times: There is no worst time for this walk.

This stroll takes in the Temple of the Silver Pavilion as well as a couple of other temples, a museum dedicated to Kyoto's traditional crafts, Kyoto's most well-known shrine and its garden, and the best place in town for one-stop souvenir shopping. Linking the Silver Pavilion with the other sights is a canal lined by trees—a path known as the Philosopher's Pathway.

From the Ginkakuji-mae or Ginkakuji-michi bus stop, head east (toward the wooded hills) along the canal, and continue east when the canal veers to the (right) south, up the gentle slope to:

1 Ginkakuji, the Temple of the Silver Pavilion

This temple is the architectural jewel of this stroll. Contrary to its name, however, it isn't silver at all. It was built in 1482 as a retirement villa for Shogun Ashikaga Yoshimasa, who intended to coat the structure with silver in imitation of the Golden Pavilion built by his grandfather. However, he died before this could be accomplished, which is just as well—the wood of the Silver Pavilion is spectacular just as it is. The entire complex is designed for enjoyment of the tea ceremony, moon viewing, and other aesthetic pursuits, with a beautiful garden of rippled sand, rocks, and moss. One of the small sand hills is in the image of Mount Fuji. It's easy to imagine the splendor, formality, and grandeur of the life of Japan's upper class as you wander the grounds here. Be sure to take the hillside pathway with its lookout point, dozens of different kinds of moss, and streams; you might be able to escape the crowds that sometimes overwhelm this attraction.

Head back to that narrow canal you saw on the way to the temple, heading south lined with cherry, willow, and maple trees and flanked by a small pathway. It's known as the:

2 Philosopher's Pathway

The name Philosopher's Pathway refers to the fact that, throughout the ages, philosophers and priests have strolled this tranquil canal thinking deep thoughts. It's a particularly beautiful sight in spring during the cherry-blossom season. The pathway runs almost a mile, allowing you to think your own deep thoughts.

Approximately 5 minutes down the Philosopher's Pathway, to the right, is Café de Sagan (☎ 075/751-7968), a coffee shop with an English-language menu listing sandwiches, desserts, beer, and juices. It's open Friday to Wednesday from 7am to 5pm, with views of the shaded path through its windows.

At the end of the Philosopher's Pathway (a 30-min. walk), near Nyakuoji Shrine, turn right and walk for a few minutes through a residential area until you reach a street with some traffic on it (and a wooden sign pointing toward Eikando and Nanzenji). Here you should turn left. After a couple of minutes, on the left, you'll come to:

3 97 Eikando Temple

Founded in 856, this temple (also known as Zenrinji Temple; ☎ 075/761-0007) derives its popular name from the seventh head priest Eikan (1032–1111), who was loved by the people for attending to the impoverished sick and for planting plum trees as sources of medicine. The temple is famous for a small statue of the Amida Buddha with his head turned, looking back over his shoulder. According to popular lore, it was carved after Eikan, who while walking and reciting chants he believed would propel him toward rebirth, was so astonished to see that the Amida Buddha had descended from the altar and was walking ahead of him that he stopped short in his tracks, whereupon the Buddha looked back over his shoulder and admonished, "Eikan, you are dawdling." How typically Zen. The Buddha facing backward is in the Amidado Hall. Otherwise, there isn't much to see unless it's autumn and the many maples here are at their most glorious. The temple's pagoda, up on a hillside, offers a view over the city. Open daily from 9am to 4pm; admission is ¥600 ($5/£2.50), except in autumn when it's ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20).

Walking Tour 2: The Philosopher's Stroll

A few minutes' walk farther south brings you to:

4 Nanzenji Temple

Nanzenji Temple (☎ 075/771-0365) is a Rinzaï Zen temple set amid a grove of spruce. One of Kyoto's best-known Zen temples, it was founded in 1293, though its present buildings date from the latter part of the 16th century during the Momoyama Period. Attached to the main hall (Hojo) is a Zen rock garden attributed to Kobori Enshu; it's sometimes called "Young Tigers Crossing the Water" because of the shape of one of the rocks, but the association is a bit of a stretch for me. In the building behind the main hall is a sliding door with a famous painting by Kano Tanyu of a tiger drinking water in a bamboo grove. Spread throughout the temple precincts are a dozen other lesser temples and buildings worth exploring if you have the time, including Nanzen-in, which was built about the same time as Nanzenji Temple and served as the emperor's vacation house whenever he visited the temple grounds. The temple is open daily from 8:40am to 5pm (to 4:30pm in winter); admission to the main hall is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) and to Nanzen-in ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25).

Several traditional restaurants near Nanzenji reflect the settings of the temples themselves. Okutan, just north of Nanzenji and with a view of a peaceful pond, has been serving vegetarian tofu meals for 350 years. On the road leading west from Nanzenji are Junsei, serving tofu, obento lunch boxes, and kaiseki in a beautiful garden setting; Gomonjaya, which serves moderately priced set meals and noodles; and Hyotei, which opened more than 300 years ago to serve pilgrims to Nanzenji, offering obento lunches as well as expensive kaiseki. See "Where to Dine in Kyoto," earlier in this chapter, for details.

Head straight out (west) from Nanzenji until you see a body of water on your right, the Lake Biwa Aqueduct. Continue west on Niomon Dori (the water will be on your right) to the vermilion-colored bridge to your right, where you'll also see a vermilion-colored torii. Turn right here and continue straight ahead to Nijo Dori, where you turn left for one of my favorite museums, the:

5 Kyoto Museum of Traditional Crafts (Fureaikan)

This museum displays all the Kyoto crafts you can think of, from combs, umbrellas, and fans to textiles, sweets, bambooware, and masks. English-language explanations and videos describe how the crafts are made (mostly by hand). The best news: The museum is free. For more details, see p. 318.

Farther north, it would be hard to miss:

6 Heian Shrine

If orange and green are your favorite colors, you're going to love Heian Shrine, one of Kyoto's most famous. Although it was built as late as 1895 in commemoration of the 1,100th anniversary of the founding of Kyoto, Heian Shrine is a replica of the city's first administrative quarters, built in Kyoto in 794, giving you some idea of the architecture back then. The most important thing to see here is the garden, the entrance to which is on your left as you face the main hall. Typical of gardens constructed during the Meiji Era, it's famous for its weeping cherry trees in spring, its irises and water lilies in summer, and its changing maple leaves in the fall. I love sitting on the bench on the wooden bridge topped by a phoenix; you'll probably want to dawdle here, too.

Take a right out of the shrine's main exit onto Reisen Dori and then take the next right, which after 5 minutes will bring you to the:

7 Kyoto Handicraft Center

This center is located behind the shrine on its north side. It's the best place in Kyoto for one-stop shopping for souvenirs of Japan, including pearls, kimono and the less-formal yukata, fans, paper products, toys, and more; see p. 333 for complete information. You may want to take advantage of the free hourly shuttle service the center provides to major hotels in Kyoto; the last bus departs at 6pm.

6 Imperial Villas & Temples Within Easy Reach of Kyoto

If this is your first visit to Kyoto and you're here for only a couple days, you should concentrate on seeing sights in Kyoto itself. If, however, this is your second trip to Kyoto, you're here for an extended period of time, or you have a passion for traditional Japanese architecture or gardens, there are a number of worthwhile attractions in the region surrounding Kyoto. Foremost on my list is Katsura Imperial Villa.

Note: The Katsura Imperial Villa, Shugakuin Imperial Villa, and Saihoji (popularly called the Moss Temple) all require advance permission to visit. To see the Katsura Imperial Villa or Shugakuin Imperial Villa, which are free, you must apply for permission either online at http://sankan.kunaicho.go.jp/order/index_EN.html at least 4 days before your intended visit; or go in person to the Imperial Household Agency Office (☎ 075/221-1215; no English is spoken and no reservations are accepted by phone, but you can call to see whether space is available), located on the northwest grounds of the Kyoto Imperial Palace near Inui Gomon Gate, a 5-minute walk from Imadegawa subway station. It's open Monday through Friday from 8:45am to noon and 1 to 4pm.

Tours, which take place weekdays (except holidays) and the third Saturday of every month year-round, as well as on Saturdays in April, May, October, and November (even if they are national holidays), are given at both at Katsura Imperial Villa at 9am, 10am, 11am, 1:30pm, 2:30pm, and 3:30pm and at Shugakuin Imperial Villa at 9am, 10am, 11am, 1:30pm, and 3pm. In the off season, you may be able to make a reservation for a tour on the same day, though keep in mind that it takes an hour to reach Katsura Imperial Villa and 30 minutes to reach Shugakuin by taxi from the Imperial Household Agency Office. It's always better, therefore, to make a reservation a day or two in advance; in spring and fall, try to make a reservation a week in advance. The time of your tour will be designated when you apply. Parties are limited to four persons, everyone must present their passports, and participants must be at least 18 years old. Tours are conducted in Japanese only, but an English-language video is shown.

For tours of Saihoji, see below.

KATSURA IMPERIAL VILLA ★★☆☆ About a 15-minute walk from Katsura Station on the Hankyu railway line, or a 30-minute bus ride from Kyoto Station (take bus no. 33 to the Katsura Rikyu-mae stop) and then a 5-minute walk, this villa is considered the jewel of traditional Japanese architecture and landscape gardening. It was built between 1620 and 1624 by Prince Toshihito, brother of the emperor, with construction continued by Toshihito's son. The garden, markedly influenced by Kobori Enshu, Japan's most famous garden designer, is a "stroll garden" in which each turn of the path brings an entirely new view.

The first thing you notice upon entering Katsura is its simplicity—the buildings were all made of natural materials, and careful attention was paid to the slopes of the roofs and to the grain, texture, and color of the various woods used. A pavilion for moon viewing, a hall for imperial visits, a teahouse, and other buildings are situated around a pond; as you walk along the pathway, you're treated to views that literally change with each step you take. Islets; stone lanterns; various scenes representing seashores, mountains, and hamlets; manicured trees; and bridges of stone, earth, or wood that arch gracefully over the water—everything is perfectly balanced. No matter where you stand, the view is complete and in harmony. Every detail was carefully planned down to the stones used in the path, the way the trees twist, and how scenes are reflected in the water. Little wonder the Katsura Imperial Villa has influenced architecture not only in Japan but around the world. Sadly, tours are much too hurried (they last only 1 hr.), and no photography is allowed.

SHUGAKUIN IMPERIAL VILLA ★★ Northeast of Kyoto, about a 40-minute bus ride from Kyoto Station (take bus no. 5 from Kyoto Station to the Shugakuin Rikyu-michi bus stop) and then a 15-minute walk, this villa was built in the mid-1600s as a retirement retreat for Emperor Go-Mizunoo, who came to the throne at age 15 and suddenly abdicated 18 years later to become a monk, passing the throne to his daughter in 1629. Amazingly, though the villa was only 2 hours from the Imperial Palace, the emperor came here only on day trips; he never once spent the night. The 53-hectare (133-acre) grounds, among Kyoto's largest, are situated at the foot of Mount Hiei and are famous for the principle known as “borrowed landscape” in which the surrounding landscape is incorporated in the overall garden design. Grounds are divided into three levels (only two of which have compelling features): The upper garden, with its lake, islands, and waterfalls, is the most extensive of the three and offers grand views of the surrounding countryside from its hillside pavilion. The middle garden, built as a residence for the emperor's daughter, contains a villa with the famous “Shelves of Mist”; in keeping with the Japanese penchant for ranking the best three of everything, this is considered one of the three most beautiful shelves in Japan. The gardens are more spacious and natural than most Japanese-style gardens, which are often small and contrived. Tours, which take 1 hour and 15 minutes and cover almost 3.2km (2 miles), allow ample time for photography.

SAIHOJI ★★ Popularly known as Kokedera (Moss Temple), Saihoji was converted into a Zen temple in 1339 and is famous for its velvety-green moss garden spread underneath the trees. Altogether, there are more than 100 different varieties of moss throughout the grounds, with such popular names as “velvet moss,” “water moss,” and “snake-stomach moss.” They give off an iridescent and mysterious glow that's best just after a rain; indeed, Kyoto's rainy season and high summer humidity create the perfect breeding ground for moss. Before being allowed to visit the grounds, tour participants must first listen to a lecture (in Japanese).

Note: Because the monks are afraid that huge numbers of visitors will trample the moss to death, permission is needed to visit Saihoji, and you can obtain it only by writing to the temple at least 10 days in advance (applications up to 2 months in advance are accepted). Write to Saihoji Temple, 56 Matsuo Kamigatani-cho, Nishikyo-ku, Kyoto 615-8286 (☎ 075/391-3631), and give your name, your address in Japan, your age, your occupation, and the date you'd like to visit (plus second and third choices). Include a self-addressed return envelope and International Reply Coupons for return postage. (If you're in Japan, you should send a double postcard or ofuku hagaki.) The cost of the visit, which includes a sutra-writing demonstration, is a “donation” of at least ¥3,000 ($25/£13; no change given), payable when you pick up your ticket. To reach Saihoji, take bus no. 73 from Kyoto Station to the Kokedera-michi stop.

BYODOIN TEMPLE ★ Located in the town of Uji, about 18km (11 miles) south-east of Kyoto and a 15-minute ride by express JR train from Kyoto Station, Byodoin Temple (☎ 0774/21-2861) is a good example of temple architecture of the Heian Period. Originally a villa, it was converted into a temple in 1053. Most famous is the main hall, known as Phoenix Hall, the only original building remaining. It has three wings, creating an image of the mythical bird of China, the phoenix; on the gable ends are two bronze phoenixes. On the temple grounds is a National Treasure: one of the most famous bells in Japan (there are no inscriptions on the bell, but it has reliefs of maidens and lions and is thought to contain Korean influences) as well as a monument to Minamoto Yorimasa, who took his own life here after being defeated by the rival Taira clan. Byodoin is best known to Japanese, however, for gracing the back of ¥10 coins. Byodoin is about a 10-minute walk from the Uji JR Station (there's a map of the town in front of the station). Admission to the grounds is ¥600 ($5/£2.50), ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) more for Phoenix Hall. Open daily 9:10am to 4:30pm.

FUSHIMI-INARI SHRINE ★ Just a minute's walk from the JR Inari Station (which is just two stops by local commuter train from Kyoto Station), Fushimi-Inari Shrine (☎ 075/641-7331) has long been popular with merchants, who come here to pray for success and prosperity. One of Japan's most celebrated Shinto shrines, it was founded in 711 and is dedicated to the goddess of rice (rice was collected as taxes during the shogun era). The 4km (2½-mile) pathway behind the shrine is lined with more than 10,000 red torii, presented by worshipers throughout the ages; there are also stone foxes, which are considered messengers of the gods. It's a glorious, almost surreal, walk as you wind through the woods and the tunnel of vermilion-colored torii gates and then gradually climb a hill, where you'll have a good view of Kyoto. At several places along the path are small shops where you can sit down for a bowl of noodles or other refreshments. Admission is free, and the expansive grounds never close. The most popular times to visit are the first day of each month and New Year's.

Note: Both Byodoin Temple and Fushimi-Inari Shrine are on the same JR line that continues to Nara. If you plan on spending the night in Nara, you could easily take in these two attractions on the way. Note, however, that the express train to Nara does not stop at JR Inari Station; for that you'll have to take a local train.

7 Shopping in Kyoto

As the nation's capital for more than 1,000 years, Kyoto spawned a number of crafts and exquisite art forms that catered to the elaborate tastes of the imperial court and the upper classes. Kyoto today is still renowned for its crafts, including Nishijin textiles, Yuzen-dyed fabrics, Kyo pottery (pottery fired in Kyoto), fans, dolls, cutlery, gold-leaf work, umbrellas, paper lanterns, combs, Noh masks, cloisonné, and lacquerware.

GREAT SHOPPING AREAS The majority of Kyoto's tiny specialty shops are situated in central Kyoto along Shijo Dori and in the area of Kawaramachi Dori. The square formed by Kawaramachi Dori, Shijo Dori, Sanjo Dori, and Teramachi Dori includes two covered shopping arcades and specialized shops selling lacquerware, combs and hairpins, knives and swords, tea and tea-ceremony implements, and more—including, of course, clothing and accessories.

If you're looking for antiques, woodblock prints, and art galleries, head toward Shinmonzen Dori and Furumonzen Dori in Gion, which parallel Shijo Dori to the north on the eastern side of the Kamo River. You'll find pottery and souvenir shops in abundance on the roads leading to Kiyomizu Temple in Higashiyama-ku.

For clothing, accessories, and modern goods, Kyoto's many department stores are good bets. They're conveniently located near Kyoto Station or in central Kyoto near the Shijo-Kawaramachi intersection. In addition, there's a big underground shopping mall beneath Kyoto Station selling everything from clothing and shoes to stationery and local souvenirs.

CRAFTS & SPECIALTY SHOPS

⑨8 Aritsugu The fact that this family-owned business is located at the Nishiki-Koji market is appropriate, as it sells hand-wrought knives and other handmade cooking implements, including sushi knives, bamboo steamers, pots, pans, and cookware used in the preparation of traditional Kyoto cuisine. In business for 400 years, the shop counts the city's top chefs among its customers. It also sells ikebana scissors. Open daily 9am to 5:30pm. Nishiki-Koji Dori, Gokomachi Nishi-iru, Nakagyo-ku. ☎ 075/221-1091. Bus: 4, 5, 17, or 205 to Shijo Kawaramachi (5 min.). 1 block north of Shijo Dori on the north side of Nishiki-Koji Dori, west of Gokomachi.

Kasagen Kasagen has been making traditional umbrellas (bangasa) since 1861. They're more expensive than elsewhere but are of high quality and are made to last a lifetime. Open Thursday to Tuesday 1pm to 7pm. 284 Gion-machi, Kitagawa. ☎ 075/561-2832. Bus: 100, 206, or 208 to Gion. On the north side of Shijo Dori, just west of Yasaka Shrine.

Kikuya Kikuya has a good selection of used kimono, haori (short kimono-like jackets, traditionally worn by men), geta, and kimono accessories for both adults and children. Although they're not antiques as Kikuya advertises but secondhand, the goods here are beautiful and timeless. Everything is in good condition (Japanese wear kimono only for special occasions), but be sure to look thoroughly for any defects. No credit cards are accepted. Open Monday to Saturday 9am to 7pm. On Manjuji Dori, east of Sakaimachi. ☎ 075/351-0033. Take the Keihan Electric Line to Gojo (5 min.).

⑨9 Kyoto Aburatoriishi Senmontenzo I realize this is a bit odd, but this shop is dedicated to one of my favorite Japanese cosmetic products: face paper. Kyoto is famous for its face paper, long used by geisha and maiko, and this shop sells a bewildering choice of varieties, for everything from dry to troubled skin. I like it for blotting oily skin on hot, humid days. Daily 11am to 9pm. Kawaramachi, Shijo-agaru. ☎ 075/213-3322. Bus: 4, 5, 17, or 205 to Shijo Kawaramachi. On the east side of Kawaramachi Dori, north of Shijo Dori; look for its sign with an elephant.

Kyoto Ceramics Center (Kyoto Tojiki Kaikan) This modern shop with a glass facade is operated by an association of Kyoto potters who display their wares of Kyoto pottery (pottery fired locally). Approximately 10,000 items are on display, from sake cups and vases to bowls, plates, and chopstick rests. Daily 10am to 6pm. Higashioji Dori, Gojo-agaru. ☎ 075/541-1103. Bus: 100 or 206 to Gojozaka (one of the approaches to Kiyomizu Temple). On Higashioji Dori, north of Gojo Dori.

Kyoto Craft Center Whereas the Kyoto Handicraft Center (below) is good for souvenirs and inexpensive gifts for the folks back home, this crafts center is the kind of place to which you head to buy a wedding gift or something really special for yourself. Featuring beautifully designed contemporary crafts by local and famous artisans, the Kyoto Craft Center devotes its two floors to a wide range of products, including jewelry, scarves, pottery, glass, fans, damascene, baskets, and much more. As the products are continually changing, there's always something new. Open Thursday to Tuesday 11am to 7pm. 275 Gion, Kitagawa, Higashiyama-ku. ☎ 075/561-9660. Bus: 12, 31, 46, 80, 100, 201, 202, 203, 206, or 207 to Gion (3 min.). On Shijo Dori east of the Kamo River in the heart of Gion.

Kyoto Handicraft Center For one-stop souvenir shopping, your best bet is Kyoto's largest craft, gift, and souvenir center. Five floors of merchandise contain almost everything Japanese imaginable: pearls, lacquerware, dolls, children's toys, kimono (including antique kimono), woodblock prints, pottery, cameras, paper products, swords, lanterns, silk and textile goods, painted scrolls, and music boxes—and that's just for starters. You can even buy the socks to be worn with geta wooden shoes and the obi sashes to be worn with the kimono.

You can easily spend an hour or two here just wandering around; artisans also demonstrate their various crafts, including woodblock printing and the production of damascene. You can even try your own hand at making woodblock prints, cloisonné, and dolls, with instruction provided. For this you should plan at least 1 hour; bookings are made by phone (☎ 075/961-0142) at the information counter on the ground floor from 10am to 6pm daily. Lessons cost ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) and are a great way for older children to get creative while you shop. And if you spend more yen than you have, you can exchange money here at a favorable rate. Open daily from 10am to 6pm. Sakyo-ku. ☎ 075/761-8001. Bus: 93, 201, 202, 203, 204, or 206 to Kumano-jinja-mae (3 min.). Free hourly bus service (on the hour, except noon, 11am–6pm) from the center to major hotels throughout Kyoto. Just north of Heian Shrine on Marutamachi Dori.

⑩⑩ Miyawaki Baisen-an This elegant, open-fronted shop has specialized in handmade fans since 1823, particularly fans characteristic of Kyoto. A little English is spoken. Prices range from ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) for a small tea-ceremony fan to ¥50,000 ($417/£208) for the best that money can buy. Open daily 9am to 7pm (to 6pm in winter). 102 Tominokoji-nishi, Rokkaku-dori, Nakagyo-ku. ☎ 075/221-0181. Subway: Karasuma Oike (6 min.). On Rokkaku-dori just west of Tominokoji, across from a playground.

DEPARTMENT STORES

Department stores are good places to shop for Japanese items and souvenirs, including pottery, lacquerware, and kimono as well as clothing and everyday items.

JR Kyoto Isetan, located in Kyoto Station (☎ 075/352-1111; daily 10am–8pm), is Kyoto's most fashionable department store for young people, specializing in women's imported and domestic clothing.

In central Kyoto, Daimaru, on Shijo Dori west of Takakura (☎ 075/211-8111; daily 10am–8pm), is Kyoto's largest department store, with everything from clothing to food to electronic goods spread on nine floors. Nearby are Hankyu, on the southeast corner of Shijo-Kawaramachi intersection (☎ 075/223-2288; daily at 11am, closing 8pm Mon–Wed and 9pm Thurs–Sun), with seven floors of fashion, housewares, and food; and Takashimaya, across the street at the southwest corner of the Shijo-Kawaramachi intersection (☎ 075/221-8811; daily 10am–8pm), one of Japan's oldest and most respected department stores with a good selection of traditional crafts.

MARKETS

On the 21st of each month, a flea market is held at Toji Temple (☎ 075/691-3325), about a 15-minute walk southwest of Kyoto Station. Japan's largest flea market, it's also one of the oldest; its history stretches back more than 700 years, when pilgrims began flocking to Toji Temple to pay their respects to Kobo Daishi, who founded the Shingon sect of Buddhism. Today, Toji Temple is still a center for the Shingon sect, and its market (popularly known as Kobo-san) is a colorful affair with booths selling Japanese antiques, old kimono, ethnic goods, odds and ends, and many other items. Worshipers come to pray before a statue of Kobo Daishi and to have their wishes written on wooden slats by temple calligraphers. Even if you don't buy anything, the festive atmosphere of the market and booths makes a trip here a memorable experience. The largest Kobo-san markets take place in December and January. All markets at Toji are held from about 6am to 4pm. A smaller market, devoted entirely to Japanese antiques, is held at Toji Temple on the first Sunday of each month.

Commemorating the scholar and poet Sugawara Michizane, the Tenjin-san market held at Kitano Tenmangu Shrine (☎ 075/461-0005) the 25th of every month is a large market offering a little bit of everything—antiques, used clothing, ceramics, food—in a beautiful setting. It's open from about 8am to dusk, but go as early as you can. Kitano Shrine is on Imadegawa Dori between Nishi-oji and Senbon; take bus no. 101 to the Kitano Tenmangu-mae stop.

Unlike the other temple markets, the Chion-ji market (☎ 075/691-3325), held the 15th of each month from 9am to 4pm, is devoted to handmade goods and crafts, including pottery and clothing. To reach it, take bus no. 206 to Hyakumanben at the Higashioji and Imadegawa intersection; Chion-ji Temple is just to the northeast.

On the first Sunday of every month (though sometimes the date changes), a flea market is held in front of City Hall from 10am to 4pm, with local citizens selling unwanted stuff, mostly clothing. Although you may not buy anything to take home with you, a stroll through the Nishiki-Koji Dori market is worthwhile just for the atmosphere. Kyoto's 400-year-old city produce market, this covered shopping arcade 1 block north of Shijo Dori in the heart of old Kyoto is lined with vendors selling fish, flowers, eggs, pickled vegetables, fruit, and takeout foods, as well as crafts. It's open from 10am to about 6pm; some shops close on either Wednesday or Sunday.

8 Kyoto After Dark

Nothing beats a fine summer evening spent strolling the streets of Kyoto. From the geisha district of Gion to the bars and restaurants lining Pontocho, Kyoto is utterly charming and romantic at night. Begin with a walk along the banks of the Kamo River—it's a favorite place for young couples in love. In summer, restaurants stretching north and south of Shijo Dori along the river erect outdoor wooden platforms on stilts over the water.

FINDING OUT WHAT'S ON There are many annual events and dances, including the very popular geisha dances held in June, the only time of year you can see traditional dances performed by all five of Kyoto's traditional geisha districts; Gion Odori dances in October featuring geiko and maiko (geisha and apprentice geisha in Kyoto) dressed in elaborate costume; and Kabuki at the Minamiza Theater in December. To find out what's happening, pick up the monthly magazine Kansai Time Out, available in Kyoto at the Junkudo Kyoto BAL bookstore on Kawaramachi Dori for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25). Although major concerts are infrequent in Kyoto (they're usually held in nearby Osaka), the magazine is the best source for finding out what's going on in the classical and contemporary music scene. In addition, the Kyoto Visitor's Guide, a monthly tabloid distributed free at tourist offices, hotels, and restaurants, contains a calendar of events and performances for the month.

THE MAJOR NIGHTLIFE DISTRICTS

GION ★★

A small neighborhood of plain wooden buildings in Higashiyama-ku on the eastern side of the Kamo River, Gion doesn't look anything like what you've probably come to expect from an urban Japanese nightlife district; in fact, there's hardly any neon in sight. There's something almost austere and solemn about Kyoto's most famous geisha district, as though its raison d'être were infinitely more important and sacred than mere entertainment. Gion is a shrine to Kyoto's past, an era when geisha numbered in the thousands.

Contrary to popular Western misconceptions, geisha are not prostitutes. Rather, they're trained experts in the traditional arts, conversation, and coquettishness, and their primary role is to make men feel like kings when they're in the soothing enclave of the geisha house. There are now only a mere 200 geisha in Gion; after all, in today's high-tech world, few women are willing to undergo the years of rigorous training to learn how to conduct the tea ceremony, to play the samisen (a three-stringed instrument), or to perform ancient court dances.

Gion is about a 5-minute walk from the Shijo-Kawaramachi intersection; to reach it, walk east on Shijo Dori and then take a right on Hanamikoji Dori. Its narrow streets are great for strolling; a good time to take a walk through the neighborhood is around dusk when geisha are on their way to their evening appointments. Perhaps you'll see one—or a maiko (a young woman training to be a geisha)—clattering in her high wooden shoes (called geta). She'll be dressed in a brilliant kimono, her face a chalky white, and her hair adorned with hairpins and ornaments. From geisha houses, music and laughter lilt from behind paper screens, sounding all the more inviting because you can't enter. Don't take it personally; not even Japanese will venture inside without the proper introductions. There are, however, an increasing number of bars and restaurants in Gion that are open to outsiders; it's not hard to imagine that in another 100 years, Gion will look no different from Tokyo's Ginza.

Gion Corner After strolling around Gion, visit Gion Corner, which stages special variety programs in the ancient cultural arts. You'll see short demonstrations of the tea ceremony, ikebana (flower arranging), koto (Japanese harp) music, gagaku (ancient court music and dance), kyogen (Noh comic play), kyomai (Kyoto-style dance) performed by maiko, and bunraku (puppetry). The shows cater to tourists, and none of the individual performances beat a full-scale production of the real thing, but this is a convenient and quick introduction to the traditional forms of Japanese entertainment. If you wish, you can also partake in a 30-minute tea ceremony following each performance. Performances are at 7pm and 8pm daily March 1 to November 29 (except Aug 16) and only on Friday, Saturday, and holidays November through February. Reservations are not necessary, but arrive early (no credit cards accepted), or purchase in advance at most hotels or Gion Corner box office. Yasaka Hall, Hanamikoji Dori, Shijo-sagaru, Gion. ☎ 075/561-1119. Tickets ¥2,800 ($23/£12); ¥4,300 ($36/£18) including tea ceremony. Bus: 2 or 6 to Gion (1 min.). Located on Hanamikoji Dori south of Shijo Dori.

Pontocho is a narrow alley that parallels the Kamo River's western bank, stretching from Shijo Dori north to Sanjo Dori. Once riddled with geisha houses and other members-only establishments, it is now lined with bars, clubs, restaurants, and hostess bars that fill every nook and cranny. Pontocho makes for a fascinating walk as you watch groups of Japanese enjoying themselves.

Another good place to look for nightlife is Kiyamachi, a small street that parallels Pontocho to the west and runs beside a small canal.

THE CLUB & LIVE MUSIC SCENE

Hello Dolly With an unlikely location on Pontocho, this dark, tiny club with velvet-upholstered chairs looks like a holdout from the '50s. It has live jazz Friday and Saturday, with classic jazz recordings the rest of the week. To find it, look for an album cover of Doris Day in the window; it's that kind of place. Open daily 6pm to 2am. East side of Pontocho. ☎ 075/241-1728. Live music cover ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75); table charge an additional ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75). Bus: 4, 5, 17, or 205 to Shijo Kawaramachi (3 min.).

Live Spot Rag Depending on who's playing, the crowd at one of Kyoto's longest-standing live clubs, established in 1981, ranges from an older, more mellow audience to a younger, rowdier bunch. Mostly, however, it's a college-age crowd that comes here to listen to rock, jazz, acoustic, and fusion. Open nightly from 6pm to 2am (4:30am on weekends), with live music 7:30 to 10:30pm. Empire Building, 5th floor, Kiyamachi Dori, Sanjo Agaru. ☎ 075/241-0446. Live music cover ¥1,300–¥7,000 ($11–$58/£5.50–£29) depending on the band plus a 1-drink, 1-dish minimum. Discounts for advance purchases and usually for students. Subway: Kyoto Shiyakusho-mae (3 min.). Bus: 5, 17, or 205 to Kawaramachi Sanjo (2 min.). On the east side of Kiyamachi (beside a small stream) north of Sanjo Dori.

THE BAR SCENE

The Hill of Tara Live traditional Irish music is the main draw here Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday from 6pm, but it's lively any day of the week at this popular pub. Happy hour is from 5 to 8pm daily, and the menu lists Irish stew, fish and chips, and other pub grub. Open daily 5pm to midnight (to 1am Fri–Sat). Oike Dori, Kawaramachi-higashiiru. ☎ 075/213-3330. Subway: Kyoto Shiyakusho-mae (2 min.). Bus: 17 or 205 to Kawaramachi shiyakusho-mae (3 min.). On Oike Dori, beside the Kyoto Hotel.

McLoughlin's Irish Bar and Restaurant ★ Congenial owners Taidg, a professional chef, and Mika, a composer and pianist, lend both their talents and humor to this great bar/restaurant, offering bar seating, tables with great views of Kyoto's temples and mountains, excellent food, Guinness and Kilkenny on tap, live music, and free Wi-Fi connection. Open Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday 6pm to 1am; Friday and Saturday 6pm to 4am; and Sunday 1pm to 1am. Empire Building, 8th floor, Kiyamachi Dori, Sanjo Agaru. ☎ 075/212-6339. Subway: Kyoto Shiyakusho-mae (3 min.). Bus: 5, 17, or 205 to Kawaramachi Sanjo (2 min.). In the same building as Live Spot Rag, above.

Pig & Whistle Here's a traditional, noisy, and fun English-style pub where you can play darts, stand at the bar, or sit at a table with your mum. It attracts an older, mixed crowd of both foreigners and Japanese, including foreigners who are networking for employment or business opportunities. Happy hour is from 5 to 8pm nightly. Open daily 5pm to 2am (to 5am Fri and Sat). Shobi Building, 2nd floor, 115 Ohashi-cho, Ohashi, Higashi Iru, Sanjo Dori. ☎ 075/761-6022. Subway: Sanjo Keihan (2 min.). On the north side of Sanjo Dori, east of the Kamo River.

Rub-A-Dub This tiny basement bar has been Kyoto's premier reggae spot for 20 years, a laid-back place that plays all genres of Jamaican music. Open Monday to Thursday 7pm to 2am and Friday and Saturday 7pm to 4am. Tsujita Building, 115 Ishiyacho. ☎ 075/256-3122. Bus: 4, 5, 17, or 205 to Kawaramachi Sanjo. On Kiyamachi Dori, south of Sanjo Dori.

9 A Side Trip to Nara

42km (26 miles) S of Kyoto

In early Japanese history, the nation's capital was moved to a new site each time a new emperor came to the throne. In 710, however, the first permanent Japanese capital was set up at Nara. Not that it turned out to be so permanent: After only 74 years, the capital was moved first to Nagaoka and shortly thereafter to Kyoto, where it remained for more than 1,000 years. What's important about those 74 years, however, is that they witnessed the birth of Japan's arts, crafts, and literature, as Nara imported everything from religion to art and architecture from China. Even the city itself, laid out in a rectangular grid pattern, was modeled after Chinese concepts. It was during the Nara Period that Japan's first historical account, first mythological chronicle, and first poetry anthology (with 4,173 poems) were written. Buddhism also flourished, and Nara grew as the political and cultural center of the land with numerous temples, shrines, pagodas, and palaces.

Japanese flock to Nara because it gives them the feeling that they're communing with ancestors. Foreigners come here because Nara offers them a glimpse of a Japan that was. Remarkably enough, many of Nara's historic buildings and temples remain intact, and long ago someone had enough foresight to enclose many of these historical structures in the quiet and peaceful confines of a large and spacious park, which has the added attraction of free-roaming deer.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE Nara is easily reached from Kyoto Station on two lines: the JR Nara Line and the Kintetsu Limited Express. If you have a Japan Rail Pass, you'll probably want to take the commuter JR Nara Line, which departs about four times an hour and takes 43 to 57 minutes depending on the train; if you don't have a pass, the trip costs ¥690 ($5.75/£2.90) one-way. If speed or luxury is of the utmost importance, the deluxe Kintetsu Limited Express whisks you to Nara in 34 minutes, guarantees you a seat (all seats are reserved), and costs ¥1,100 ($9.15/£4.60) one-way; departures are every 30 minutes (if it's peak season, it's a good idea to buy your ticket in advance). A slower Kintetsu ordinary express takes 45 minutes and costs ¥600 ($5/£2.50).

You can also reach Nara from Osaka in about 30 to 50 minutes, depending on the train and the station from which you leave. The Kintetsu Nara Line, departing from Namba Station, takes 40 minutes and costs ¥540 ($4.50/£2.25) one-way.

VISITOR INFORMATION There are tourist information offices at both JR Nara Station (☎ 0742/22-9821; daily 9am–5pm) and Kintetsu Nara Station (☎ 0742/24-4858; daily 9am–5pm). Both have good brochures and maps with useful information on how to get around Nara by foot and bus. For more detailed information on Nara, visit the Nara City Tourist Center, 23–4 Kami-sanjo-cho (☎ 0742/22-3900; daily 9am–9pm), located in the heart of the city on Sanjo Dori between both stations and about a 5-minute walk from each. Finally, there's Sarusawa Information Center (☎ 0742/26-1991; daily 9am–5pm), located at Sarusawa-ike Pond, south of Nara Park and not far from Nara's many attractions.

GETTING AROUND If you take the Kintetsu Line, you'll arrive at Kintetsu Nara Station; if you take the JR train, you'll arrive at JR Nara Station. Both stations are about a 10-minute walk from each other and are within walking distance of Nara Park

Moments Your Own Personal Guide

Nara YMCA Goodwill Guides will be glad to show you the sights in exchange for the chance to practice their English. A national organization of volunteers, Goodwill Guides range from students and housewives to retired people. One guide each is often posted at both the JR and Kintetsu Station tourist offices and is available to the first tourists who show up any day except Sunday. But if you want to be assured of having a guide, make reservations in advance by calling ☎ 0742/45-5920 at least the day before to arrange a time. Guides are available daily from 9am to 5pm. There's no charge for these personal guides, but you are requested to pay their transportation to meet you, and I suggest you also pay for the guide's lunch (guides do not have to pay admission fares to attractions). A similar service is provided by Nara Student Guides by calling ☎ 0742/26-4753.

and its attractions. Kintetsu Station is slightly closer, about a 5-minute walk to the entrance of the park, while the JR Station is about a 10-minute walk to the park. Keep in mind, however, that Nara Park is quite large and its major attractions are far-flung; it takes about 20 minutes to walk from Kintetsu Nara Station to Todaiji Temple. Around the stations themselves is Nara's small downtown area, with Sanjo Dori serving as the main shopping street and running from JR Nara Station to Nara Park.

IF YOU'RE HEADING TO HORYUJI If you plan to visit the Horyuji Temple Area (see below), the cheapest and fastest way to get there is from JR Nara Station on the JR Kansai Yamatoji Line going in the direction of Namba (in Osaka); departures are every 10 minutes or so and bring you to Horyuji Station in 13 minutes (fare: ¥210/$1.75/90p). From there, you can either walk to the temple area in about 20 minutes or take the bus (¥170/$1.40/70p), which departs two to three times an hour from 10am. Obviously, because it takes quite a bit of time getting to and from Horyuji, you must limit your sightseeing to only the major attractions if you plan on visiting both Nara Park and Horyuji in 1 day.

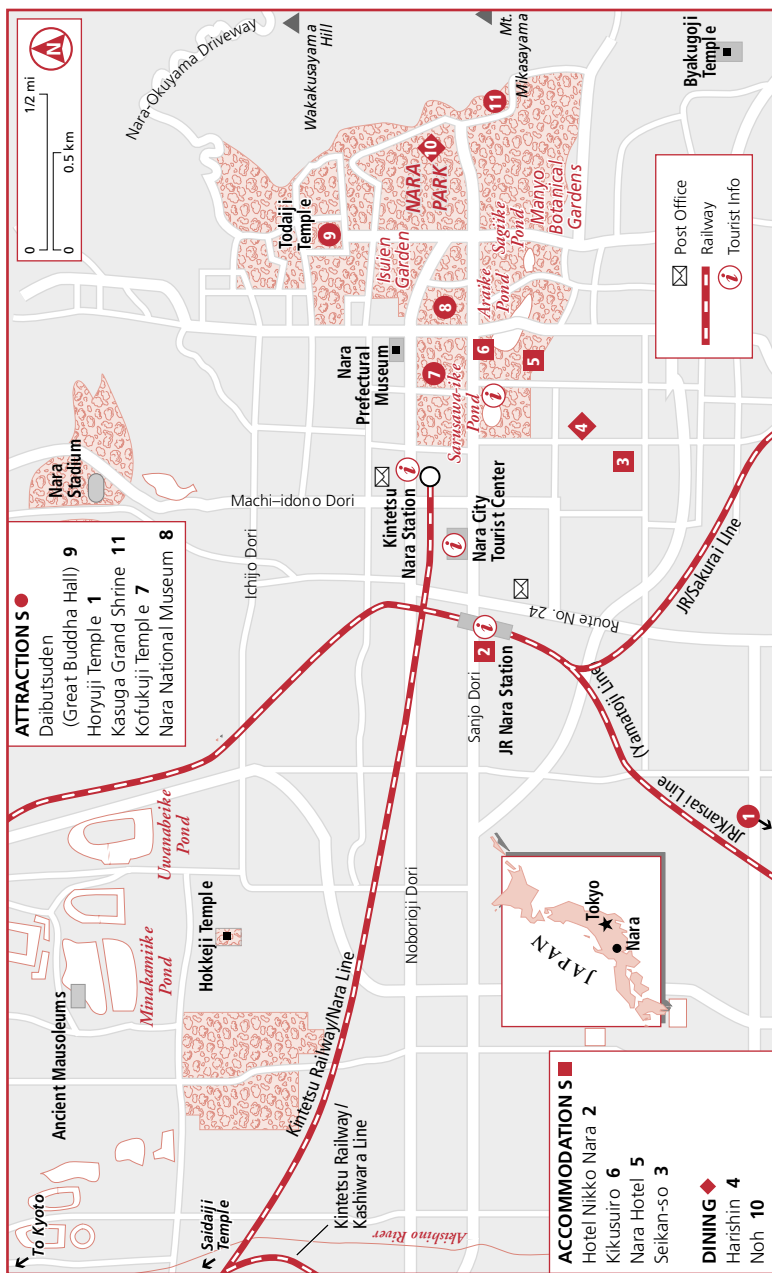

SEEING THE SIGHTS

The best way to enjoy Nara is to arrive early in the morning before the first tour buses start pulling in. If you don't have much time, the most important sites to see are Todaiji Temple, Kasuga Shrine, and Kofukuji Temple's Treasure House, which you can view in about 3 hours. If you have more time, add Horyuji Temple.

AROUND NARA PARK

With its ponds, grassy lawns, trees, and temples, Nara Park covers about 520 hectares (1,300 acres) and is home to more than 1,000 deer, which are considered divine messengers and are therefore allowed to roam freely through the park. The deer are generally quite friendly; throughout the park you can buy "deer cookies," which all but the shyest fawns will usually take right out of your hand. All of the below listings are within Nara Park.

Kofukuji Temple ★ As you walk east from either the JR or Kintetsu Station, this is the first temple you reach. It was established in 710 as the family temple of the Fujiwaras, the second-most powerful clan after the imperial family from the 8th to 12th centuries. At one time as many as 175 buildings were erected on the Kofukuji Temple grounds, giving it significant religious and political power up until the 16th century; through centuries of civil wars and fires, however, most of the structures were destroyed. Only a handful of buildings remain, but even these were rebuilt after the 13th century.

The five-story pagoda, first erected in 730, was burned down five times. The present pagoda dates from 1426 and is an exact replica of the original; at 49m (164 ft.) tall, it's the second-tallest pagoda in Japan (the tallest is at Toji Temple in Kyoto). Also of historical importance is the Eastern Golden Hall (Tokondo), originally constructed in 726 by Emperor Shomu to speed the recovery of the ailing Empress Gen-sho. Rebuilt in 1415, it houses several priceless images, including a bronze statue of Yakushi Nyorai, a Buddha believed to cure illnesses, which was installed by Emperor Shomu on behalf of his sick wife; a 12th-century wooden bodhisattva of wisdom, long worshiped by scholar monks and today by pupils hopeful of passing university entrance exams; and guardians and assistants of Yakushi.

But the best thing to see here is the temple's Treasure House (Kokuhokan) ★★, which displays many statues and works of art originally contained in the temple's buildings, many of them National Treasures. Most famous are a statue of Ashura carved in the 8th century and a bronze head of Yakushi Nyorai, but my favorites are the 12th-century carved wooden statues representing priests of the Kamakura Period with fascinating facial features that render them strikingly human.

🕒 0742/22-7755. Admission Treasure House ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) junior-high and high-school students, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) elementary-school students; Eastern Golden Hall ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) junior-high and high-school students, ¥100 (80¢/40p) elementary-school students. Daily 9am–5pm.

Nara National Museum (Nara Kokuritsu Hakubutsukan) ★ To the east of Kofukuji, this museum opened in 1895 to house invaluable Buddhist art and archaeological relics and has since expanded into a second building, used for special exhibits. Many masterpieces originally contained in Nara's temples are now housed here, including Buddhist sculptures from various periods in Japan's history, paintings, masks, scrolls, calligraphy, and archaeological objects obtained from temple ruins, tombs, and sutra mounds. Unfortunately, although items are identified in English, explanations of their historical significance are not. You'll spend 20 to 30 minutes here.

🕒 0742/22-7771. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) high-school and college students, free for junior-high and elementary students and seniors 70 and older. Higher admission during special exhibitions. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5pm.

Todaiji Temple ★★ ★ Nara's premier attraction is Todaiji Temple and its Daibutsu (Great Buddha), Japan's largest bronze Buddha. When Emperor Shomu ordered construction of both the temple and Daibutsu in the mid-700s, he intended to make Todaiji the headquarters of all Buddhist temples in the land. As part of his plans for a Buddhist utopia, he commissioned work for this huge bronze statue of Buddha; it took eight castings to complete this remarkable work of art. At a height of more than 15m (50 ft.), the Daibutsu is made of 437 tons of bronze, 286 pounds of pure gold, 165 pounds of mercury, and 7 tons of vegetable wax. However, thanks to Japan's frequent natural calamities, the Buddha of today isn't quite what it used to be. In 855, in what must have been a whopper of an earthquake, the statue lost its head. It was repaired in 861, but alas, the huge wooden building housing the Buddha was burned twice during wars, melting the Buddha's head. The present head dates from 1692.

The wooden structure housing the Great Buddha, called Daibutsuden, was also destroyed several times through the centuries; the present structure dates from 1709. Measuring 48m (161 ft.) tall, 56m (187 ft.) long, and 49m (164 ft.) wide, it's the largest wooden structure in the world—but is only two-thirds its original size. Be sure to walk in a circle around the Great Buddha to see it from all angles. Behind the statue is a model of how the Daibutsuden used to look, flanked by two massive pagodas as well as a huge wooden column with a small hole in it near the ground. According to popular belief, if you can manage to crawl through this opening, you'll be sure to reach enlightenment (seemingly a snap for children). You can also get your English-language fortune for ¥100 (80¢/40p) by shaking a bamboo canister until a wooden stick with a number comes out; the number corresponds to a piece of paper. Mine told me that though I will win, it will be of no use, an illness will be serious, and the person for whom I am waiting will not come. And the monk who gave me the fortune said mine was a good one!

🕒 0742/22-5511. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Mar daily 8am–5pm; Apr–Sept daily 7:30am–5:30pm; Oct daily 7:30am–5pm; Nov–Feb daily 8am–4:30pm.

Kasuga Grand Shrine 🌸 A stroll through the park will bring you to one of my favorite Shinto shrines in the Kyoto area. Originally the tutelary shrine of the powerful Fujiwara family, it was founded in 768 and, according to Shinto concepts of purity, was torn down and rebuilt every 20 years in its original form until 1863. As virtually all empresses hailed from the Fujiwara family, the shrine enjoyed a privileged status with the imperial family. Nestled in the midst of verdant woods, it's a shrine of vermilion-colored pillars and an astounding 3,000 stone and bronze lanterns. The most spectacular time to visit is mid-August or the beginning of February, when all 3,000 lanterns are lit. Here, too, you can pay ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for an omikuji, a slip of paper on which your fortune is written in English. If the fortune is unfavorable, you can conveniently negate it by tying the piece of paper to the twig of a tree. Although admission to the grounds is free, admission is charged for Rokuen, a botanical garden preserving native Japanese plants (and known for its wisteria), and to the Homotsuden, a treasure house displaying costumes, swords, and armor. Because they're expensive, fork out the extra yen only if these are your particular interest.

🕒 0742/22-7788. Free admission to grounds; Rokuen ¥525 ($4.40/£2.20) adults, ¥262 ($2.20/£1.10) children; Homotsuden ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75) adults, ¥315 ($2.65/£1.35) junior- and senior-high students, ¥210 ($1.75/90p) children. Daily 9am–4:30pm (4pm in winter); Rokuen and Homotsuden closed Mon.

THE HORYUJI TEMPLE AREA 🌸🌸🌸

Founded in 607 by Prince Shotoku as a center for Buddhism in Japan, Horyuji Temple (🕒 0745/75-2555) is one of Japan's most significant gems for historic architecture, art, and religion. It was from here that Buddhism blossomed and spread throughout the land. Today about 45 buildings remain, some of them dating from the end of the 7th century and comprising what are probably the oldest wooden structures in the world. Although they are the main reason people come here, it's the atmosphere of the compound itself that I love—serene, ancient, and a fitting tribute to Prince Shotoku, founder of Buddhism in Japan and much revered still today. Little wonder Horyuji was selected as Japan's first UNESCO World Cultural Heritage Site, in 1993 (for details on reaching Horyuji, see "Essentials," above).

At the western end of the grounds is the two-story, 17m-high (58-ft.) Kondo, or main hall, which is considered the oldest building at Horyuji Temple, erected sometime between the 6th and 8th centuries. It contains Buddhas commemorating Prince Shotoku's parents, protected by Japan's oldest set of four heavenly guardians (from the late 7th or early 8th c.). Next to the main hall is Japan's oldest five-story pagoda, dating from the foundation of the temple and considered the most important structure of Buddhist temples, as it is here that relics of the Buddha are enshrined; it contains four scenes from the life of Buddha. The Gallery of Temple Treasures, or Daihozoden, constructed in 1998, contains statues, tabernacles, and other works of art from the 7th and 8th centuries, many of them National Treasures. On the eastern precincts of Horyuji Temple is an octagonal building called Yumedono Hall, or the Hall of Visions, built in 739 as a sanctuary to pray for the repose of Prince Shotoku.

Admission to Kondo, Gallery of Temple Treasures, and Yumedono Hall is ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.15) for adults and ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for children. The grounds are open daily from 8am to 5pm (to 4:30pm Nov 4–Feb 21).

Just behind Yumedono is ¹⁰¹ Chuguji Temple (☎ 0745/75-2106), once part of a large nunnery built for members of the imperial family. It contains two outstanding National Treasures. The wooden statue of Nyoirin Kannon Bosatsu, dating from the 7th century, is noted for the serene and compassionate expression on her face. The Tenjukoku Mandala, the oldest piece of embroidery in Japan, was originally 4.8m (16 ft.) long and was created by Shotoku's consort and her female companions after Shotoku's death at the age of 48. It shows scenes from the Land of Heavenly Longevity, where only those with good karma are invited by the Buddha in the afterlife and where Shotoku surely resides. Only a replica of the fragile embroidery is now on display. Open daily from 9am to 4:30pm (to 4pm Oct 1–Mar 20); admission is ¥400 ($3.35/£1.65) for adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for children.

WHERE TO STAY

Although you can see Nara in a day trip from Kyoto or Osaka, I've included some recommendations for an overnight stay for more leisurely sightseeing. An extra incentive for staying overnight is provided July through October, when a dozen of Nara's most famous temples, shrines, and pagodas and other historic structures are lit at night, making for a romantic nighttime stroll.

Hotel Nikko Nara ★ This hotel next to the West exit of the JR Nara station is one of Nara's most convenient: Drop off your bags, hop on a rental bicycle to see the sights, and then soak away all cares in the large public baths. Rooms are comfortable, with fluffy quilted spreads and plenty of desk space. The best rooms are on the ninth and tenth floors with dataports and with great views toward distant mountains and Nara's temples, especially beautiful when lit at night.

8-1 Sanjo-hommachi, Nara 630-8122. ☎ 0742/35-8831. Fax 0742/35-6868. www.nikko-nara.jp. 330 units. ¥10,500 ($88/£44) single; ¥19,000 ($158/£79) double; ¥20,000–¥27,000 ($167–$225/£83–£113) twin. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: JR Nara (1 min.). Amenities: 5 restaurants; lounge; rental bikes (¥500/$4.15/£2.10 per day); concierge; convenience store; bakery; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service. In room: A/C, satellite TV w/pay movies, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

1130 Takahata-cho Bodaimachi, Nara 630-8301. ☎ 0742/23-2001. Fax 0742/26-0025. 14 units, 8 with bathroom. ¥31,500–¥40,000 ($263–$333/£131–£167) per person. Rates include 2 meals. AE, DC, MC, V. South of Nara Park's Kofukujii 5-story pagoda on Sanjo Dori (corner of Rte. 308 and 369). Station: Kintetsu Nara (10 min.) or JR Nara (15 min.). Amenities: 2 restaurants; in-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea.

Nara Hotel ★★☆☆ One of the most famous places to stay in Nara (and with a front-desk staff eager to please), the Nara Hotel sits like a palace atop a hill overlooking several ponds. Built in 1909 in the Momoyama Period style of architecture and similar to Japan's other hotels built around the turn of the 20th century to accommodate the foreigners who poured into the country following the Meiji Restoration, it's constructed as a Western-style hotel but has many Japanese features. Photographs of visiting imperial family members adorn the walls. You have your choice of accommodations in the old section of the hotel with its wide corridors, high ceilings, antique light fixtures, fireplaces (no longer in use), and comfortable old-fashioned decor, or in the new addition, which opened in 1984 and offers larger modern rooms and verandas overlooking the old town. I prefer the atmosphere of the older rooms: Those facing the city are less expensive than those in the new wing, while the higher-priced ones have a view of the pond or park.

Nara-Koennai, Nara 630-8301. ☎ 0742/26-3300. Fax 0742/23-5252. www.miyakohotels.ne.jp. 132 units. ¥18,480 ($154/£77) single; ¥28,875–¥34,650 ($241–$289/£120–£145) double; ¥25,410–¥57,750 ($212–$481/£106–£240) twin. 10% discount for holders of Japan Rail Pass. AE, DC, MC, V. About a 4-min. walk south of Nara Park; an 8-min. taxi ride from the train station. Amenities: 2 restaurants; bar; lounge; souvenir shop; room service (4–10:30pm); in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service. In room: A/C, satellite TV, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Seikan-so ★ (Value) This is a lovely choice in inexpensive Japanese-style accommodations. It boasts a beautiful garden, complete with azalea bushes and manicured trees—the kind of garden usually found only at ryokan costing twice as much. Located in a quiet neighborhood about a 10-minute walk south of Nara Park, it dates from 1916 and is owned by a friendly, English-speaking couple. The traditional Japanese building wraps around the inner garden. Unfortunately, the rooms are beginning to show their age, but all is forgiven if you can get one of the six facing the garden—be sure to request one when making your reservation. A Japanese or Western breakfast is available.

29 Higashi-Kitsuji-cho, Nara 630-8327. ☎ 0742/22-2670. Fax 0742/22-2670. seikanso@chive.ocn.ne.jp. 9 units, none with bathroom. ¥4,200 ($35/£18) per person. Discounts available for children under 10. Breakfast ¥473–¥735 ($3.95–$6.15/£1.95–£3.05) extra. AE, MC, V. Loop bus 1 to Kitayobate stop (1 min.). Station: Kintetsu Nara (12 min.) or JR Nara (25 min.). Amenities: Lobby computer w/free Internet access. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea, no phone.

WHERE TO DINE

⑩3 Harishin ★★☆☆ (Finds) OBENTO Many tourists never see this lovely part of old Nara near Gangoji Temple, which consists of narrow lanes and traditional wooden homes and shops. The restaurant itself is a 200-year-old house of ocher-colored walls and a wood-slat facade, and dining is on tatami with a view of a garden. Only an obento that changes with the season, the creation of chef-owner Nakagawa-san, is served (a mini-kaiseki meal is also available only in the evening for ¥3,675/$31/£16, but only if you make a reservation 2 days in advance). My obento included an aperitif wine, light tofu flavored with sesame, soup, rice, pickled vegetables, tempura, and various exquisitely prepared bite-size morsels of shrimp, chicken, potatoes wrapped in bacon, and scallops. A meal here is highly recommended.

15 Nakashinya-cho. ☎ 0742/22-2669. Reservations required for kaiseki 2 days in advance. Obento ¥2,625 ($22/£11). AE, DC, MC, V. Tues–Sun 11:30am–2:30pm and 6–8pm (last order); closed Tues if Mon is a national holiday. A 5-min. walk south of Sarusawa-ike Pond, on the road that leads south from the west edge of the pond (stop at the tourist office for directions).

Noh ★ JAPANESE/WESTERN This looks like an unlikely place for a meal. Housed in the Nara Prefecture Public Hall, which looks like some kind of modern temple building at the east end of Nara Park, this restaurant would be rather ordinary if it weren't for one thing: a glass wall overlooking an expanse of lawn and a manicured garden. It offers both Western and Japanese food from an English-language menu, including main courses like fried prawns with tartar sauce and veal cutlet rosemary, lighter fare like spaghetti and curry rice, and obento box lunches. Both Japanese and Western set lunches are also available.

Nara Park. ☎ 0742/27-0620. Main dishes ¥840–¥1,050 ($7–$8.75/£3.50–£4.40); Western set meals ¥2,625–¥6,300 ($22–53/£11–£27); Japanese teishoku ¥1,575 ($13/£6.50); obento ¥2,730 ($23/£11). AE, DC, MC, V. Tues–Sun 11am–6pm (to 5pm Dec–Feb).

The Rest of Western Honshu

In addition to Tokyo, Kyoto, and the Japan Alps, the island of Honshu has numerous other towns and attractions in its western half that are well worth a visit. As the largest of Japan's islands and home to 80% of the country's population, Honshu is where most of the country's important historical events took place; you'll find many castles, gardens, temples, shrines, and other famous sights linked to the past here. Its climate ranges from snowy winters in the north and in its mountain ranges to subtropical weather in the south. The middle of the island is traversed by Japan's longest river, the Shinano. With all this to offer, it's little wonder that many travelers to Japan never make it off this central island.

366km (227 miles) W of Tokyo; 147km (92 miles) E of Kyoto; 186km (116 miles) E of Osaka

Nagoya was founded as a castle town almost 400 years ago on orders of Tokugawa Ieyasu, who considered its strategic position on the Tokaido Highway useful for controlling Osaka and other points west. Today, Nagoya is Japan's fourth-largest city with a population of 2.19 million—yet it's a place most foreigners never stop to see. True, it doesn't have the attractions of many of the nation's other cities, but it does have a castle originally built by the first Tokugawa shogun, as well as one of Japan's most important Shinto shrines. You can also stroll through an aquarium famous for its penguins and sea turtles, visit the world-famous Noritake chinaware display rooms, spend hours at an open-air architectural museum (one of my favorites in Japan), and watch cormorant fishing in summer. Nagoya, capital of Aichi Prefecture, is also home to Japan's newest international airport and has long served as the gateway to Takayama in the Japan Alps (see the "Takayama, Little Kyoto of the Mountains" section in chapter 7) and Ise-Shima National Park (covered later in this chapter).

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane Known formally as the Central Japan International Airport but dubbed Centrair (☎ 0569/38-1195; www.centrair.jp/en), Japan's newest international airport occupies 22 hectares (54 acres) of a man-made island in Ise Bay. It boasts two hotels, 130 shops and restaurants (including Japan's largest duty-free store), ATMs that accept foreign credit cards, health and dental clinics, a post office, and even a relaxation area Kutsurogi-dokoro (☎ 0569/38-8282), open 8am to 9pm with Jacuzzi, sauna, and large baths with views of planes landing and taking off (fee: ¥900/$7.50/£3.75). There's also a Travel Information Center (☎ 0569/38-1050), located past the arrivals hall, open daily 9am to 7pm, but little English is spoken.

Trains connect Centrait with Nagoya Station in 40 minutes by regular train (¥850/$7.10/£3.55) or in 30 minutes by express (¥1,200/$10/£5). A taxi from Centrait to downtown Nagoya will run about ¥12,000 ($100/£50).

By JR Train The fastest way to get to Nagoya from Tokyo is by Shinkansen bullet train, which takes approximately 2 hours from Tokyo Station to JR Nagoya Station and costs ¥10,070 ($84/£42) for an unreserved seat. Nagoya is 40 minutes from Kyoto and 1 hour from Shin-Osaka Station.

By Bus From Shinjuku Station in Tokyo, the bus costs ¥5,100 ($42/£21) one-way for the 6-hour trip, with several departures daily. From Kyoto, the Highway Bus costs ¥2,500 ($21/£11) and takes 2¾ hours; from Osaka, the trip takes just over 3 hours and costs ¥2,900 ($24/£12).

VISITOR INFORMATION Before departing Tokyo or Narita or Kansai international airports, stop by the Tourist Information Center for the leaflet “Nagoya and Vicinity,” which contains a city map and transportation and sightseeing information (you can also download it from the Japan National Tourist Organization’s website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under “Browse by Destinations”). In Nagoya Station, the Nagoya Tourist Information Center (☎ 052/541-4301; daily 9am–7pm) in the central concourse, opposite the Central exit wickets of the JR Line (look for the ? and JR signs), has maps.

For more detailed information about Nagoya, walk 8 minutes from Nagoya Station’s Central exit straight down Sakura Dori (or take the subway one stop to Koku-sai Center Station) to the Nagoya International Center on the third floor of the Nagoya International Center Building, 1–47–1 Nagono (☎ 052/581-0100; www.nic-nagoya.or.jp; Tues–Sun 9am–7pm; closed second Sun in Feb and Aug). It’s one of Japan’s best facilities for foreign visitors and residents, with an English-speaking staff, a lounge area with a TV featuring CNN newscasts, Internet access, and lots of information on the city, including the free monthly publications Nagoya Calendar and Avenues. The center also advises foreign residents on how to get a visa, where to find an apartment, and which doctors speak English. On the fourth floor, you can apply to visit a Japanese family in their home in the local Home Visit system. You must apply in person no later than 5pm the day before you wish to visit; be sure to bring your passport. Call ☎ 052/581-5689 for details; the earlier you reserve, the better your chances of finding a family.

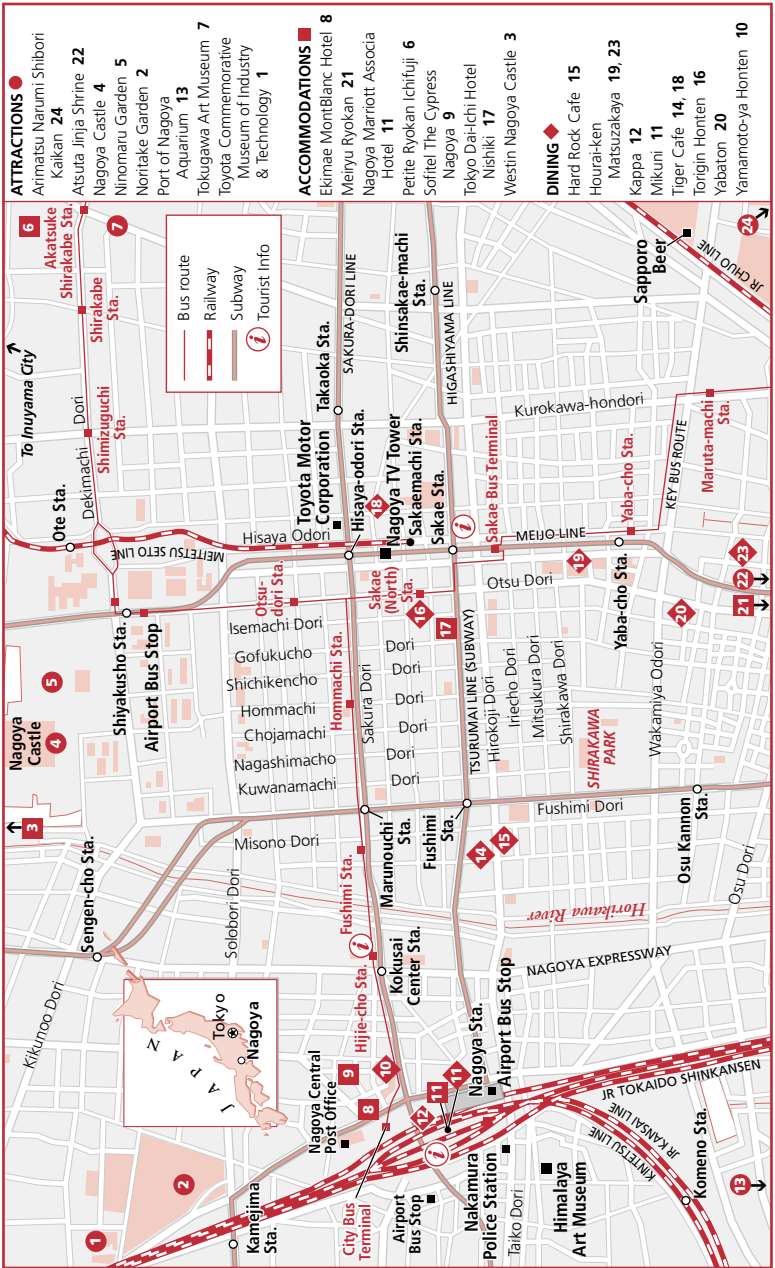

For recorded English-language information on events, concerts, festivals, and the arts, call ☎ 052/581-0400. You can check the city’s website at www.ncvb.or.jp.

INTERNET ACCESS The Nagoya International Center (see “Visitor Information,” above) provides 50-minute Internet access for ¥100 (85¢/45p).

MONEY/MAIL Nagoya’s Central Post Office (☎ 052/564-2106), located to the left of the Sakura exit of JR Nagoya Station, is open for mail and money exchange Monday to Friday 9am to 6pm. In addition to a counter open 24 hours for mail, it has ATMs open 24 hours Monday through Saturday and 12:05am to 8pm on Sunday.

ORIENTATION Almost completely destroyed during World War II, Nagoya was rebuilt with wide, straight streets, many of which are named.

The ultramodern, twin-towered JR Nagoya Station, with its many train lines (including the Shinkansen), soars more than 50 stories above the skyline and contains Takashimaya department store, offices, a Marriott hotel, many restaurants, and an observatory. Built in 1999, it has been recognized by Guinness World Records as being

Tips A Note on Directions

All directions in the listings below are from Nagoya Station unless otherwise noted; the time in parentheses indicates walking time from the subway or bus stop indicated.

the world's largest building containing a railway station. Clustered nearby are the Meitetsu Bus Terminal, Meitetsu Nagoya Station, the city bus terminal (on the second floor of Matsuzakaya department floor), Kintetsu Station, and a subway station for the Sakura Dori and Higashiyama lines, as well as many hotels and a huge underground shopping arcade that stretches 6km (3¾ miles) and includes about 600 shops.

Most of the city's attractions spread out east of Nagoya Station (take the Central/Sakuradori exit), including the city's downtown area, Sakae, two subway stops from Nagoya Station and with many shops, restaurants, and department stores. Also in Sakae is Hisaya Odori, a wide boulevard that stretches north and south with a park and a TV tower in its green meridian. North of Hisaya Odori is Nagoya Castle, while south is Atsuta Jingu Shrine.

GETTING AROUND The fastest way to get around is via the city's four-line subway system, which is simple to use because station names are written in both English and Japanese, and there are English-language announcements and digital signs in trains. Probably the most important line for tourists is the Meijo Line, which runs through Sakae underneath Hisaya Odori and takes you to both Nagoya Castle (Station: Shiyakusho) and Atsuta Jingu Shrine (Station: Jingu-Nishi), with one branch terminating at Nagoya Port with its aquarium; if you take this line in the opposite direction, you'll eventually end up at the—I like this—Ozone stop. Individual tickets for the subway are ¥200 to ¥320 ($1.65–$2.65/85p–£1.35), depending on the distance.

The Nagoya Sightseeing Route Bus, departing from platform 0 of the city bus terminal (on the second floor of Matsuzakaya department store next to Nagoya Station), is convenient for traveling to the Toyota Museum, Noritake Garden, Nagoya Castle, and Tokugawa Art Museum. It costs ¥200 ($1.65/85p) per trip or ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for a 1-day pass (Me-guru 1-Day Pass). It operates from 9:30am to 5pm, running hourly Tuesday through Friday and twice an hour weekends and holidays.

For city buses, you'll pay a flat fare of ¥200 ($1.65/85p). There's also the private Meitetsu Bus Line with a terminal located at Nagoya Station; for these buses, take a ticket and pay the exact fare according to the digital panel display at the front when you get off.

There are several transportation passes worth considering if you'll be traveling a lot within a single day. For subways, there's a 1-day pass (Ichinichi Jo-sha) for ¥740 ($6.15/£3.10) that allows you to ride as much as you want for a full day; for ¥850 ($7.10/£3.55), you can ride as much as you want on subways, city buses, and the Sightseeing Route Bus. On the weekends the Eco Pass for ¥600 ($5/£2.50) allows unlimited rides on subways and buses.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

104 Arimatsu Narumi Shibori Kaikan During the days of the shogun, Arimatsu was a small village on the old Tokaido Highway. Its inhabitants made a living producing tie-dyed cotton cloth (shibori), which they then sold as towels to passing travelers.

Today, Arimatsu is a suburb of Nagoya on its southeastern edge, yet it still retains its historic core, with several buildings remaining from the Edo Period and more than 2,500 people still involved in this cottage industry. This small museum pays tribute to the painstaking tie-dyeing process; more than 100 patterns are possible, with a single kimono requiring between 50,000 and 200,000 handmade stitches and taking 4 to 6 months to complete. A short film tells the history of Arimatsu tie-dyeing and the lengthy process involved in the craft: engraving a pattern, transferring the pattern to the cloth, tying the cloth, dyeing it, and then taking the stitches out. Several women are usually on hand practicing their trade; a small shop sells their wares.

Hashi-higashiminami 60-1, Arimatsu-cho, Midori-ku. ☎ 052/621-0111. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥100 (85¢/45p) children. Thurs–Tues 9:30am–5pm. From Meitetsu Nagoya Station, take a local Meitetsu train (not express) 30 min. to Arimatsu Station, walk straight out of the station, turn left at the bottom of the stairs, and then turn left at the sign for HATTORI RESIDENCE; the museum will be on the right (5 min.).

Atsuta Jingu Shrine Because it contains one of the emperor's Three Sacred Treasures, this is revered as one of the three most important shrines in Japan. Founded in the 2nd century and last rebuilt in 1935, it enshrines the Kusanagi-no-Tsurugi (Grass-Mowing Sword), which is one of the Imperial Regalia of the Emperor. The other two sacred treasures are the Sacred Mirror (in the Ise Grand Shrines; see p. 359) and the Jewels (in the Imperial Palace in Tokyo; see p. 173). According to legend, the Grass-Mowing Sword was presented to a prince named Yamato-Takeru, who used it during a campaign against rebels in eastern Japan; the rebels set a field of grass on fire, and the prince used the sword to mow down the grass, thereby quelling the fire. (Atsuta means “hot field” in Japanese.) Actually, there isn't much to see here—the sword is never on public display—yet this remains one of Nagoya's top attractions, and Japanese make pilgrimages here to pay their respects, first purifying their hands or mouths with water, then throwing coins into the money box, clapping to gain the attention of the gods, and bowing as they pray. Surrounded by stately, ancient cypress trees, the shrine provides a nice respite from city life.

1-1 Jingu, Atsuta-ku. ☎ 052/671-4151. Free admission to the grounds. Daily 24 hr. Station: Jingu-mae (4 min.) via the Meitetsu train line from Meitetsu Nagoya Station or Jingu-Nishi via subway (5 min.).

Nagoya Castle ★ Built for his ninth son by Tokugawa Ieyasu, the first Tokugawa shogun, Nagoya Castle was completed in 1612 and served as both a strategic stronghold and a residence for members of the Owari branch of the Tokugawa family for almost 250 years, until the Meiji Restoration ended their rule in 1868. A shrewd and calculating shogun, Tokugawa forced feudal lords throughout Japan to contribute to the castle's construction, thereby depleting their resources and making it harder for them to rebel. Although Nagoya Castle was largely destroyed in World War II (only three turrets and three gates escaped destruction), the main donjon and other structures, rebuilt in 1959, are almost carbon copies of the original. Like most reconstructed castles in Japan, this replica is made of ferroconcrete, yet it's still impressive from afar. Inside, the 20m-high (66-ft.) donjon is thoroughly modern and even has an elevator up to the fifth floor, where you have fine views of Nagoya and beyond. The castle houses treasures that escaped the bombing during World War II, including beautiful paintings on sliding doors and screens. There's also a model of Honmaru Palace (destroyed during World War II), the living quarters of the shogun when he visited Nagoya, flintlocks, swords, and helmets, as well as displays that explore Nagoya Castle's construction and what life was like during the Edo Period.

Atop the donjon roof are two golden dolphins, replicas of those that perished during World War II and long thought to protect the castle from dreaded fires. The dolphins each weigh about 1,193 kilograms (2,650 lb.) and are made of cast bronze covered with 18-karat-gold scales. Incidentally, the dolphin on the south end—the favored, warmer side—is considered female, while the one relegated to the colder northern side is male.

East of the castle is Ninomaru Garden, laid out at the time of the castle's construction, converted to a dry Japanese landscape garden in 1716 and today one of the few remaining castle gardens in Japan. Besides providing a beautiful setting, it served as an emergency shelter for the lord in case of enemy attack. Stop by the Ninomaru Tea House—it's said that if you drink tea here, made with a golden kettle, 5 years will be added to your life. That should allow you ample time to linger, but otherwise you can tour the castle and grounds in less than 1½ hours.

1-1 Honmaru, Naka-ku. ☎ 052/231-1700. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, free for junior high and younger. Daily 9am-4:30pm. Station: Shiyakusho (5 min.). Route Bus: Osakajo (1 min.).

Noritake Garden ★★ ★ Nagoya has been a pottery and porcelain production center for centuries; today, the city and its vicinity manufacture 90% of Japan's total export chinaware. The largest chinaware company in Japan is Noritake, founded in 1904 and known the world over for its fine tableware. You can learn more about Noritake by spending about an hour at the site of its former factory, beginning with the Welcome Center's short film depicting the history of Noritake. At the Craft Center, you can see displays explaining the manufacturing and decorating processes involved in making porcelain, as well as watch artisans at work. Unlike most modern-day factories, where work is largely automated, almost all the work done at Noritake is still done by hand. At the Canvas hall, all you ever wanted to know about the role ceramics plays in everyday life—from Washlet toilets to computers—is presented in hands-on displays activated by a ceramic microchip card. Other highlights are the museum with examples of all the Noritake chinaware ever produced (including a great Art Deco collection), and a shop selling Noritake (including an outlet corner for discounted products).

3-1-36 Noritake Shinmachi, Nishi-ku. ☎ 052/561-7114. Admission to museum ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) high-school students, free for children and seniors; free admission to the Welcome Center, Crafts Center, Shop, and Canvas. Tues-Sun 10am-5pm (you must enter the Craft Center by 4pm); shop until 6pm. Subway: Kamejima (5 min.). Sightseeing Route Bus: Noritake Garden (1 min.). A 10-min. walk north of Nagoya Station.

Port of Nagoya Public Aquarium ★★ Kids Young Japanese flock to Nagoya's port area on weekends, drawn by a re-creation of a Venetian village, a small amusement park, a maritime museum, a shopping complex, and sightseeing boats. But the Public Aquarium, one of Japan's largest, is the major draw for kids of all ages, with displays that concentrate on marine life from the seas around Japan. There's a 15-minute hologram show that transports you to the deep sea in a "submarine"; a touch tank with sea urchins, starfish, and other animals; and an IMAX theater with shows on the hour (included in the entry price). The aquarium is best known, however, for the penguin tank, which copies the environment of the Antarctic with artificial falling snow and cold temperatures to maintain the penguins' reproductive cycle; the loggerhead and green turtles with a sand beach to encourage them to lay eggs; and three Beluga whales. There are also dolphin performances and Beluga training sessions (apparently, to keep the Belugas from getting bored). You'll probably spend about 3 hours here, including the IMAX film.

1–3 Minato-machi, Minato-ku. ☎ 052/654-7080. Admission ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) adults, ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) junior-high and younger. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5:30pm (to 5pm Nov–Mar, to 8pm July 21–Aug). Station: Nagoyako (exit 3, 7 min.).

Tokugawa Art Museum ★★☆☆ Finds Located on the grounds of a former mansion owned by the Owari branch of the Tokugawa family—with the original entry gate and a guardhouse still intact—this worthwhile museum houses thousands of documents, samurai armor, swords, matchlocks, helmets, pottery, lacquerware, Noh costumes and masks, and paintings that once belonged to the Tokugawa family, including objects inherited from the first Tokugawa shogun, Ieyasu. There are also replicas of structures and items that once adorned Nagoya Castle, including decorative alcoves, a teahouse, and a Noh stage. Of the museum's 10 National Treasures, most famous is the 12th-century picture scrolls of The Tale of Genji (Genji Emaki), but they're displayed only 1 week a year in autumn (check with the tourist office); otherwise, replicas are on display. Excellent English-language explanations throughout the museum put the displays in historical context. You can easily spend an hour here and in the museum's garden, where you can have lunch (p. 357).

1017 Tokugawa-cho, Higashi-ku. ☎ 052/935-6262. www.tokugawa-art-museum.jp. Admission to the art museum ¥1,200 ($10/£5) adults, ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) seniors, ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) university and high-school students, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.20) children; combination ticket to the museum and garden ¥1,350 ($11/£5.50), ¥1,150 ($9.60/£4.80), ¥850 ($7.10/£3.55), and ¥570 ($4.75/£2.40) respectively. Tues–Sun 10am–5pm. Route Bus: Tokugawaen (1 min.). Station: Ozone (10 min.).

Toyota Commemorative Museum of Industry and Technology ★☆☆☆ Kids This museum seems an odd marriage: It's devoted to both textile machinery and automobile production and technology. That's because the Toyota Group, founded by Toyoda Sakichi, the inventor of automatic looms, has a long history of producing both. Housed in an attractive brick building dating from the Taisho Period (1912–25), the museum displays approximately 50 looms and textile machinery, from wooden hand looms to air-jet looms that utilize computer graphics. The automobile pavilion provides a historical chronology of automobile production, beginning with a replica of the first Toyota car (1936), early assembly lines using manpower, and automated assembly lines using industrial robots for everything from engine mounting to painting. There's also a display of both old and new Toyota cars and four films of how Toyota makes its cars, including design. Frequent demonstrations of looms (they're loud!), auto-making equipment (including robotics), a steam engine demonstration, and a flute-playing robot performance make this a fun destination for adults and kids alike. There's also a hands-on discovery room for kids. Expect to spend 90 minutes here.

4–1–35 Noritake Shinmachi, Nishi-ku. ☎ 052/551-6115. www.tcmit.org. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) junior-high and high-school students, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) children, free for seniors. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5pm. Route Bus: Sangyo Gijutsu Kinenkan (1 min.). Train: Meitetsu Line to Sakou (3 min.). Subway: Kamejima (10 min.). Just north of the Noritake Craft Center, about a 15-min. walk from Nagoya Station.

IN NEARBY INUYAMA CITY

Inuyama City has several worthwhile attractions, so I suggest coming here for a day of sightseeing and, in summer, topping it off with some cormorant fishing (see below). The Inuyama Tourist Information Center (☎ 0568/61-6000) is located in Inuyama Station and is open daily 9am to 5pm, or check the website www.city.inuyama.aichi.jp. Note: There are no specific addresses in this section, because addresses in smaller Japanese cities are of a region rather than an exact street address. However, everyone will know where these attractions are.

Inuyama Castle ★ Constructed in 1537 atop a bluff overlooking the Kiso River, miraculously surviving centuries of war and earthquake (part of it was damaged by an 1891 earthquake but then repaired), Japan's oldest castle is a designated National Treasure. The four-story keep—much smaller than most of Japan's castles—is the nation's only privately owned castle, owned by the Naruse family since 1618. In addition to displaying a few samurai outfits, it offers a nice, expansive view over the river that's especially worth a look if you intend to join the nearby cormorant fishing. The castle is so diminutive you can see everything in 15 minutes.

📞 0568/61-1711. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥100 (85¢/45p) junior-high school and younger. Daily 9am–5pm. From Meitetsu Nagoya Station, take the Inuyama Line 23 min. to Inuyama Yuen Station; from there it's about a 15-min. walk.

Museum Meiji Mura ★★☆☆ Inuyama City's most important attraction is one of my favorite museums in Japan. In fact, it may well be the main reason for a Nagoya stopover. A 100-hectare (250-acre) open-air architectural museum, it features more than 65 buildings and structures dating from the Meiji Period (1868–1912), all beautifully situated on landscaped grounds on the shores of a lake. Before Japan opened its doors in the mid-1800s, unpainted wooden structures dominated Japanese architecture; after Western influences began infiltrating Japan, however, stone, brick, painted wood, towers, turrets, and Victorian features came into play. Unfortunately, earthquakes, war, fire, and developer greed have destroyed most of Japan's Meiji-Era buildings, making this a priceless collection.

On the grounds are Western homes that once belonged to foreigners living in Nagasaki and Kobe, official government buildings and schools, two Christian churches, a post office, a bathhouse, a Kabuki theater, a brewery, bridges, Japanese-style homes, a martial-arts hall, and even a prison. Don't miss the front facade and lobby of the original Imperial Hotel in Tokyo, designed by Frank Lloyd Wright and containing some of the hotel's original Wright-designed furniture. In fact, most of the buildings display furniture and other items related to the building in which they're housed. You can mail a postcard from the post office, buy candy at the old candy shop, have coffee or tea in the Imperial Hotel lobby sitting on original Wright-designed chairs, or stop for a drink at the brewery. Plan on spending at least 3 hours here.

📞 0568/67-0314. www.meijimura.com. Admission ¥1,600 ($13/£6.50) adults, ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) high-school students, ¥600 ($5/£2.50) junior-high and elementary students. Daily 9:30am–5pm (to 4pm Nov–Feb, closed Mon Dec–Feb). Take the Meitetsu Line from Meitetsu Nagoya Station to Inuyama Station (¥540/$4.50/£2.25 one-way), which takes about 30 min. by express; change there for a 20-min. direct bus to Meiji Mura (¥410/$3.40/£1.70 one-way).

WATCHING CORMORANT FISHING ★★☆☆

There are two places near Nagoya where you can watch cormorant fishing every night from mid-May to mid-October (except during a full moon or the 2 or 3 days following a heavy rain). In this ancient, 300-year-old Japanese fishing method, trained ukai (seabirds) dive into the water in search of ayu, a small Japanese trout. At nightfall, wooden fires are lit in suspended cages at the fronts of long wooden boats to attract the ayu, whereupon leashed cormorants are released into the water. To ensure that the cormorants don't swallow the fish, the birds are fitted with neck rings.

In Inuyama, cormorant fishing takes place on the Kiso River. Spectators can board boats beginning at around 6pm to observe the spectacle firsthand. While waiting for the full darkness that must descend before the fishing takes place (usually around 7:30pm), you can dine on set meals for ¥2,500 or ¥3,500 ($21/£10 or $29/£15), which you must order when you make your reservations. You can also purchase drinks from boat vendors and can even buy and set off Japanese fireworks, which give the evening a celebratory atmosphere. The actual fishing itself occupies only 20 minutes. To participate, take the Inuyama Line of the Meitetsu Railways from Meitetsu Nagoya Station 23 minutes to Inuyama Yuen Station (¥590/$4.90/£2.45); from there, it's a 5-minute walk. Call ahead to make reservations (☎ 0568/61-0057); upon arrival, stop by the ticket office near the bridge. Tickets for boarding the boats and watching the fishing cost ¥2,500 ($21/£10) for adults and ¥1,250 ($10/£5) for children in June and September, ¥2,800 ($23/£12) and ¥1,400 ($12/£6) respectively in July and August.

The city of Gifu features cormorant fishing on the Nagaragawa River, where you can view the entire spectacle aboard a small wooden boat. To reach Gifu, take either the Meitetsu train or the JR train from Nagoya to Gifu Station (¥540/$4.50/£2.25). From there, take a bus (¥200/$1.65/85p) heading for Nagarabashi. You'll see the ticket office (Gifu-shi Ukai Kanransen Jimusho) after exiting the station. They advise that you bring your own snacks or obento as there are no markets nearby. You can call ahead to reserve your ticket (☎ 058/262-0104) daily between 9am and 8pm. Tickets cost ¥3,300 ($28/£14) for adults and ¥2,900 ($24/£12) for children for the 6:15pm boarding and weekend boardings at 6:45pm and 7:15pm (weekday boardings at 6:45 and 7:15pm are ¥300/$2.50/£1.25 less). Go to www.gifucvb.or.jp for more information.

WHERE TO STAY EXPENSIVE

In addition to the hotels listed below, the Nagoya Hilton, 1–3–3 Sakae, Naka-ku, Nagoya 460-0008 (☎ 800/HILTONS or 052/212-1111; www.hilton.com), offers 438 units to mostly foreign business travelers.

Nagoya Marriott Associa Hotel ★★ A location right over Nagoya Station makes this Nagoya's most convenient hotel. Occupying the 15th to 52nd floors of one of the twin towers that straddles the station, Nagoya's tallest building also offers the city's best views (ask for a room facing the castle and downtown; higher floors cost more), not to mention quick access to the many restaurants and shops on the lower floors of this "vertical city." Despite its central location, it doesn't skimp on facilities, offering a wide range of in-house dining possibilities (to eat at French restaurant Mikuni, considered Nagoya's top restaurant, you must make reservations months in advance) and a health club, as well as good-size, up-to-date guest rooms. Don't miss having a drink at the 52nd-floor Sky Lounge Zenith (daily 11:30am–midnight)—but all this is assuming you can even find the hotel. Guests arriving by train not only have to search for the obscure ground-floor entryway, but have to battle the crowds taking elevators to the many restaurants. Luckily, it's worth it.

1–1–4 Meieki, Nakamura-ku, Nagoya 450-6002. ☎ 800/228-9290 in the U.S. and Canada, or 052/584-1113. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Nagoya/Meitetsu Nagoya (below the hotel). Amenities: 6 restaurants; 2 bars; 2 lounges; 20m (66-ft.) 4-lane pool, Jacuzzi, and fitness gym (fee: ¥3,150/$26/£13); concierge; business center; salon; bakery; florist; 24-hr. room service; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms; executive-level rooms. In room: A/C, cable TV w/on-demand pay movies, free dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe, trouser press.

Westin Nagoya Castle ★★ Situated just west of Nagoya Castle, the chief attraction of this 30-some-year-old hotel—a local favorite for special occasions and meetings—is the wonderful views of the moat and castle from its rooms, especially at night when the castle is illuminated. Rooms are spacious enough and feature Heavenly beds, but it's worth staying here only if you get a room with a view (note that the cheapest singles do not face the castle); otherwise, the location is rather inconvenient, though courtesy shuttle buses to Nagoya Station once an hour are a big plus.

3–19 Hinokuchi-cho, Nishi-ku, Nagoya 451-8551. ☎ 800/Westin-1 in the U.S. and Canada, or 052/521-2121. AE, DC, MC, V. Subway: Tsurumai Line to Sengencho (10 min.). Bus: Free shuttle from Nagoya Station every hour on the hour 10am–8pm (15-min. ride). Amenities: 5 restaurants; bar; lounge; indoor 5-lane 25m (82-ft.) pool and Jacuzzi (fee: ¥1,575/$13/£6.50) w/exercise room and sauna (fee: ¥3,150/$26/£13 for everything); concierge; business center; salon; 24-hr. room service; in-room massage; babysitting; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms; executive-level rooms. In room: A/C, cable TV w/pay movies, free Wi-Fi/dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

MODERATE

Ekimae MontBlanc Hotel  There isn't a lot to say about this simple hotel except that it's close to the station and offers mostly single functional rooms at reasonable rates. Its corner location frees it from proximity to taller buildings, which means you can actually look outside rather than face another building (ask for a room on a higher floor). Otherwise, there's not much to crow about; this is strictly a sleeping machine with a fancy name.

3–14–1 Meieki, Nakamura-ku, Nagoya 450-0002. ☎ 052/541-1121. Fax 052/541-1140. www.montblanc-hotel.jp. 277 units. ¥7,560–¥8,610 ($63–$72/£32–£36) single; ¥12,075–¥13,125 ($101–$109/£50–£55) twin; ¥12,075 ($101/£50) double. AE, MC, V. Station: Nagoya (2 min.). Turn left out of the Sakura Dori/Central exit and then right just before the post office. Amenities: 2 restaurants; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service. In room: A/C, TV w/pay movies, Wi-Fi (not all rooms), fridge, hair dryer.

Sofitel The Cypress Nagoya  Sofitel has contemporary furnishings, a boutique-like atmosphere, and friendly multilingual service. Its location near Nagoya Station is also a huge plus, as its coffee shop with free Wi-Fi. Standard rooms are fairly small, and because some face other buildings, ask for a room on a higher floor, where you might have an urban view. Deluxe rooms add space, larger windows, and sink and vanity areas separate from the bathrooms. In short, you won't go wrong staying here, especially if you're looking for a small personable hotel near the station.

Tokyo Dai-Ichi Hotel Nishiki  Finds This smart-looking hotel is my top pick among Nagoya's moderately priced hotels in the city center. Located in the heart of Nagoya's nightlife and business district on Nishiki Dori, it has prices comparable to those of a business hotel but with a much classier atmosphere and decor. Targeting female travelers as well as businesspeople, it offers smartly decorated rooms with large desks and larger-than-usual bath towels and dataports. Some of the standard twins have two sinks (good for two people trying to get ready at the same time), while deluxe twins are separated into living and sleeping areas and even have two TVs. Rooms facing another building have glazed windows, so if seeing out is important to you, be sure to say so.

INEXPENSIVE

Meiryu Ryokan A Japanese Inn Group member and family-owned for more than 50 years, this is a no-nonsense place. Customers are a mix of travelers, students, and during the week, Japanese businessmen. Tatami rooms are spotless and cozy, with more space and features than most other hotel rooms in this price category, including a closet. The men's public bathroom has a sauna, but the female bath doesn't and is smaller (female guests are fewer). The owners' son, who often clerks the front desk, speaks English well and is very helpful.

Petit Ryokan Ichifuji ★ (Kids) This Japanese Inn Group ryokan is way out there in Ozone (pronounced “ozon-ay” in Japanese)—so be sure to get directions before heading out. Ishida Tomiyasu, who speaks a little English, inherited the 50-year-old ryokan from his father and grandfather, and together with his wife, Yoko, has created a restful Japanese interior with wood floors and wainscoting, calligraphy, and a cypress public bath (daily 24 hr.). Children have special rates; those under 6 are free. Pets are welcome. All except one of the rooms is tatami, with rates that vary depending on the season and room size.

WHERE TO DINE

One of Nagoya's specialties is kishimen, fettuccine-like broad and flat white noodles usually served in a soup stock with soy sauce, tofu, dried bonito shavings, and chopped green onions. Nagoya is also famous for miso nikomi udon—udon noodles served in a bean-paste soup and flavored with such ingredients as chicken and green onions. Cochin (free-range) chicken and breaded pork cutlets (tonkatsu) are also Nagoya favorites.

AROUND NAGOYA STATION

The best place for one-stop dining is Nagoya Station itself, on the 12th and 13th floors of one of the twin towers atop the station. Called Towers Plaza, it offers more than 30 food-and-beverage outlets (in addition to Kappa; see below) serving noodles, sushi, tempura, Chinese food, Italian fare, and more, most with plastic-food displays.

If you reserve early enough (at least 2 months in advance), you might also get one of the coveted tables at French restaurant Mikuni on the 52nd floor of the Nagoya Marriott Associa Hotel (☎ 052/584-1111). Decorated in Art Nouveau style and considered by some to be the city's finest restaurant due to its celebrated chef Kiyomi Mikuni (who has restaurants also in Tokyo and Sapporo), it offers set lunches for ¥6,000 to ¥9,000 ($50–$75/£25–£38) from 11:30am to 2pm and set dinners for ¥14,000 to ¥17,000 ($117–$142/£58–£71) from 5:30 to 10pm, with a menu that changes monthly.

Tips A Note on Japanese Characters

Many establishments and attractions in Japan do not have signs in Roman (English-language) letters. Those that don't are indicated in this guide with an oval with a number that corresponds to a number in appendix C showing the Japanese equivalent. Thus, to find the Japanese for, say, Yamamoto-ya Honten (below), refer to no. 105 in appendix C.

Kappa ★ Finds SUSHI/VARIED JAPANESE This friendly establishment, easily found because of its castlelike exterior, is actually two restaurants, one serving varied Japanese cuisine, and the other, to the right, serving sushi. As the sushi is delivered via a conveyor belt, choosing is no more difficult than reaching out for a passing plate, which is color-coded according to price. Set sushi meals are also available. The dining room to the left, decorated with bamboo-slatted screens for added privacy and Frank Lloyd Wright–inspired grillwork and stained glass, offers both a menu with photographs and a display case for meals that include tempura, noodles, fish, tonkatsu, and other fare. Seating here is at tables and chairs or on the floor at low tables with leg wells, some with nice city views. Both restaurants offer weekday set lunches for ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) until 3pm. To find Kappa in the “city” that Nagoya Station has become, take an escalator to the second floor and then transfer to an elevator for the 12th floor. 12th floor, Towers Plaza, Nagoya Station, 1–1–4 Meieki, Nakamura-ku. ☎ 052/541-7888. 2 pieces sushi ¥126–¥630 ($1–$5.25/50p–£2.65); set meals ¥945–¥2,100 ($7.90–$18/£3.95–£9). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–10:30pm (last order).

105 Yamamoto-ya Honten UDON NOODLES This chain noodle shop, a 2-minute walk from Nagoya Station, specializes in miso nikomi udon. Its noodles, all handmade, are thick, hard, and chewy and are served in a type of bean paste that's special to Nagoya. If you like your noodles spicy, add spices to your food from the large bamboo container on your table. An English-language menu with explanations makes ordering easy.

25–9 Meieki, basement of the Horiuchi Building, Sakura Dori, Nakamura-ku. ☎ 052/565-0278. Udon dishes ¥1,250–¥1,950 ($10–$16/£5–£8); set meals ¥1,900–¥2,047 ($16–$17/£8–£8.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Station: Nagoya (exit 6, 2 min.); on Sakura Dori's north side, below Junkudo bookstore.

IN SAKAE

If you are collecting T-shirts or are hungry for a hamburger, there's a Hard Rock Cafe on the third floor of the ZXY Building on Hirokoji Street not far from the Hilton, at 1–4–5 Sakae, Naka-ku (☎ 052/218-3220; Sun–Thurs 11:30am–11pm, Fri 11:30am–midnight, Sat 11:30am–3am).

Hourai-ken Matsuzakaya EEL This eel restaurant is a branch of two famous restaurants near Atsuta Shrine. There's no English-language menu, but you can't go wrong ordering one of the various unagi donburi (rice casserole with eel on top). Most famous is the Hitsumabushi, a set meal for ¥2,570 ($21/£11) that includes unagi donburi, various condiments, miso soup, and Japanese pickles. Eating it is a ritual: First, dish out some of the eel casserole into the smaller wooden bowl and eat it plain. For the next course, try it with some of the seaweed and green onions that come with it. Finally, add some of the soup and wasabi to the last mixture you tried.

The other, more elegant branches are both south of Atsuta Shrine at 2–10–26 Jingu, Atsuta-ku (☎ 052/682-5598; Wed–Mon 11:30am–2:30pm and 4:30–8:30pm); and at 503 Goudo-cho, Atsuta-ku (☎ 052/671-8686; Tues–Sun 11:30am–2pm and 4:30–8:30pm).

In the south building of Matsuzakaya department store, in the back on the 10th floor (look for the sign that says UNAGI HORAIKEN), 3–16–1 Sakae, Naka-ku. ☎ 052/264-3825. Unagi teishoku (set meal) ¥1,680 – ¥2,520 ($14–$21/£7–£11). AE, MC, V. Daily 11am–9pm (last order). Station: Yabacho (1 min.).

Tiger Cafe FRENCH With its antique-looking advertisements for Pernod, tiled floor, small tables, and rattan chairs facing the open facade, this coffee shop is the closest thing in Nagoya to a Parisian cafe. Stop for a drink, a snack of quiche, or dine on more substantial fare such as the fish of the day, pan-fried duck, or steak with frites, and be glad you're not part of the traffic whizzing by.

A branch, with the same hours and menu, is at 1–8–26 Nishiki (☎ 052/220-0031; Station: Fushimi), across from the Hilton Hotel and down a side street with a Starbucks on the corner.

1–9–22 Higashi-sakura, Higashi-ku. ☎ 052/971-1031. Main dishes ¥1,300–¥2,000 ($11–$17/£5.50–£8.50). No credit cards. Mon–Sat 11am–3am; Sun 11am–midnight. Station: Sakae (6 min.); north across from the NHK building (which you can't miss).

⑩⑥ Torigin Honten ★ COCHIN CHICKEN In the heart of Nagoya, this 37-year-old casual restaurant with counter, tatami, or table seating is known for its Nagoya cochin (free-range chicken). It serves yakitori, with a set menu of eight different skewers costing ¥1,900 ($16/£8), as well as miso-nabe (rice cake, tofu, chicken, and vegetable stew) and kamameshi set meals (rice casseroles). Set meals all include raw cochin with real gold flakes, but you are allowed to substitute for a cooked dish. An amiable staff makes it diner-friendly; a black-and-white kura-style facade makes it easy to identify. If this main shop (Honten) is full, you may be led to one of three nearby branches, one of which offers tatami rooms with a view of the garden.

3–14–22 Nishiki, Naka-ku. ☎ 052/973-3000. Set meals ¥3,000–¥5,200 ($25–$43/£13–£22); ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) per person appetizer charge. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 5–11pm (last order). Station: Sakae (exit 1, 2 min.).

⑩⑦ Yabaton ★★ Finds TONKATSU You'll recognize this Everyman's eatery in Nagoya's old downtown district immediately by its curtains displaying comical pigs dressed like sumo wrestlers. In operation since 1947, its interior is all about pigs and sumo (I'll let you draw your own conclusions about the connection). The only thing served is tonkatsu (pork cutlet), and Yabaton is famous for it. You'll be asked whether you want yours with sauce (sa-u-zu) or miso katsudon; the former is thicker and sweeter, but the latter is the specialty here (if you can't decide, ask for a little of both). Donburi, a breaded and fried pork cutlet on rice, is the cheapest, but recommended is hire, a tender cut with less fat. Main dishes all come with cabbage; rice or miso soup are ¥105 (90¢/45p) extra. And in case you're interested, Yabaton souvenirs—T-shirts, key chains, towels—are for sale, all adorned with comical pigs dressed like sumo wrestlers and baseball players.

3–6–23 Osu. ☎ 052/241-2409. Main dishes ¥735–¥1,470 ($6.10–$12/£3.05–£6.15); set meals ¥995–¥1,680 ($8.30–$14/£4.15–£7). AE, DC, MC, V. Tues–Sun 11am–9pm. Station: Yabacho (3 min.). On the southwest corner of Wakamiya-Otsu Dori intersection.

ELSEWHERE

Garden Restaurant Tokugawaen ★ FRENCH Overlooking Tokugawa-En with its classic Japanese garden and pond, this elegant restaurant is a good dining choice if you're visiting the Tokugawa Art Museum. The changing menu always includes a fresh fish of the day and steak, while the cheapest set lunch is satisfying with a starter, soup, fish or meat, dessert, and coffee.

1001 Tokugawacho, Higashiku. ☎ 052/932-78887. Set lunch ¥3,800–¥5,000 ($32–$42/£16–£21); set dinner ¥7,000–¥13,000 ($58–$108/£29–£54). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–2pm and 5–10pm (last order). Sightseeing Route Bus: Tokugawaen (1 min.).

2 Ise-Shima National Park

465km (289 miles) W of Tokyo; 100km (62 miles) S of Nagoya

Blessed with subtropical vegetation, small islands dotting its shoreline, and the most revered Shinto shrine in Japan, Ise-Shima National Park merits a 1- or 2-night stopover if you're anywhere near Nagoya. Located on and around Shima Peninsula and covering 518 sq. km (200 sq. miles), this national park has bays and inlets that make up the home of the Mikimoto pearl and thousands of pearl-cultivating rafts. Although you could conceivably cover the major attractions on a day's outing from Nagoya, I've recommended accommodations in case you'd like to take in the sights at a more leisurely pace.

Ise-Shima's major attractions are concentrated in the small towns of Ise, Futami-no-ura, Toba, and Kashikojima, all in Mie Prefecture. Ise (also called Ise-Shi, which translates as Ise City) is where you'll find the Ise Grand Shrines. Futami-no-ura (also called simply Futami) is famous for a theme park based on Japan's history from 1477 to 1598. Toba contains Mikimoto Pearl Island, which offers a pearl museum and demonstrations by its famous women divers, as well as the Toba Aquarium. Near Kashikojima, you can visit an amusement park with a Spanish theme or take boat trips around Ago Bay which, with its islets and pearl-cultivating oyster rafts, is one of the most scenic spots in the park.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Train The easiest way to get to Ise-Shima is from Nagoya on the private Kintetsu Nagoya Line (Kinki Nippon Railway; ☎ 052/561-1604), which departs about every 30 minutes or so from Kintetsu Station, next to the JR Nagoya Station. It takes about 1 hour and 30 minutes via limited express to reach Ise (with stops at both Ise-Shi and Ujijamada stations), about 1 hour and 45 minutes to reach Toba, and 2 hours and 10 minutes to reach Kashikojima. Note: Kintetsu trains do not go to Futami-no-ura. A ticket from Nagoya to the end of the line in Kashikojima costs ¥3,480 ($29/£15) one-way. There are also Kintetsu lines to Shima Peninsula both from Kyoto (2½ hr. to Toba; fare: ¥3,780/$32/£16) and from Osaka's Kintetsu stations in Uehonmachi and Tsuruhashi (2 hr. to Toba; fare: ¥3,550/$30/£15 and ¥3,450/$29/£15 respectively). Most economical, however, is to purchase a Kintetsu Rail Pass at any Kintetsu Station office, which costs ¥3,500 ($30/£15), is valid for 5 days (but only three journeys can be aboard a limited express train) and includes travel to and from Nagoya, Osaka/Kyoto, and Ise.

If you're traveling on a Japan Rail Pass, you can also reach Ise-Shima by JR Kaisoku (Rapid) Mie trains, which depart hourly from Nagoya Station, but you'll be charged an extra ¥490 ($4.10/£2.05). JR trains stop at Ise-Shi and Futami-no-ura before terminating at Toba where, if you're heading to Kashikojima, you'll have to transfer to the Kintetsu Line (fare from Toba to Kashikojima: ¥460/$3.85/£1.90).

By Ferry From Nagoya's Centrair Airport, a ferry is the quickest way to Ise. The Matsusaka Bell Line (☎ 0598/50-1102) ferries you to Matsusaka in 45 minutes for ¥2,100 ($18/£8.75), plus ¥100 (85¢/45p) for the shuttle from the pier to Matsusaka Station. The Tsu Airport Line (☎ 059/213-4111) goes to Tsu in 40 minutes and costs ¥1,890 ($16/£8), plus ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for the shuttle to Tsu Station. Both Matsusaka and Tsu stations are on the Kinetetsu/JR train lines and are 15 and 30 minutes, respectively from Ujiyamada Station in Ise City.

By Bus Buses depart nightly from Tokyo's Ikebukuro Station's east exit at 10:20 and 11:20pm, arriving at Ise-Shi Station at 7:10 and 8:10am respectively. The fare is ¥9,200 ($77/£38) one-way.

VISITOR INFORMATION Be sure to drop by the Tourist Information Centers in Tokyo or the international airports at Narita or Osaka to pick up the free leaflet, "Ise-Shima," which lists train schedules from Osaka, Kyoto, and Nagoya and gives information on the park's main attractions (you can also download it from the Japan National Tourist Organization's website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under "Browse by Destinations"). Otherwise, drop by the Ise City Tourist Information Offices located in front of the Outer Shrine Gate (☎ 0596/28-3705), open daily 8:30am to 5pm, and at Kintetsu Ujiyamada Station in Ise City (☎ 0596/23-9655); or the Toba Tourist Office (☎ 0599/25-2844) at Toba Station (exit 1). The latter two are open daily 9am to 5:30pm.

GETTING AROUND Transportation within Ise-Shima National Park is either by train or by bus. Trains are convenient if your destinations are Ise City, Toba, Futami-no-ura, and Kashikojima (see "Getting There," above). Some major sites, however, including the Outer and Inner Shrines and Ise Azuchi Momoyama Bunkamura, are best reached by bus. For sightseers, there's the CAN-Bus, which you can board in front of the JR stations in Ise City and Toba. Buses, departing about once an hour on weekdays and twice an hour on weekends, travel from Ujiyamada and Ise-Shi stations to both Outer and Inner Shrines of the Ise Grand Shrines and Ise Azuchi Momoyama Bunkamura before continuing onward to Toba. One-day passes for ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) and 2-day passes for ¥1,600 ($13/£6.65) can be bought aboard the buses. There are also local city buses that run between the Outer and Inner Shrine of the Ise Grand Shrines; you must also take a bus to reach Parque España.

In Ise, it makes sense to rent a bicycle, available at Ujiyamada Station (¥300/$2.50/£1.25 per day). Ise-Shi and Ujiyamada stations are a 7-minute walk apart. There are luggage storage facilities at Ujiyamada, Toba, and Ise-Shi stations, as well as at the entrance to the Inner Shrine in Ise.

EXPLORING ISE-SHIMA NATIONAL PARK

The easiest way to see the park's sights is to start in Ise City, the northern gateway to Ise-Shima National Park, and work your way down the peninsula to Kashikojima.

ISE CITY (ISE-SHI)

THE ISE GRAND SHRINES ★★ Tied historically to the imperial family and considered the most venerable Shinto shrines in the nation, the Ise Grand Shrines (Ise Jingu; ☎ 0596/24-111) consist of an Outer Shrine and an Inner Shrine, plus more than 100 minor shrines spread through a dense forest of Japanese cypress. As the Outer and Inner shrines are about 6.4km (4 miles) apart, your best bet is to first visit the Outer Shrine, which is a 5-minute walk from Ise-Shi Station, and then either cycle or take a bus to the Inner Shrine. In addition to the CAN-Bus (described above in “Getting Around”), local bus nos. 51 and 55 run between the two shrines every 10 to 15 minutes (fare: ¥410 ($3.40/£1.70 one-way). Because of the distance between the shrines and their large grounds, plan on spending at least 2 hours exploring Ise.

The Outer Shrine (Geku) was founded in 477 and is dedicated to the Shinto goddess of harvest, agriculture, clothing, and housing. The Inner Shrine (Naiku) was founded a few centuries earlier and is dedicated to Amaterasu, the sun goddess. Both are among the few Shinto shrines in Japan without any Chinese Buddhist influences. Constructed of plain cypress wood with thick thatched roofs in the oldest style of architecture in Japan, they’re starkly simple and have no ornamentation except for gold and copper facing on their beams and doors. In fact, if you’ve come all the way to Shima Peninsula just to see the shrines, you may be disappointed—there’s nothing much to see. The shrines are so sacred that no one is allowed near them except members of the imperial family and high-ranking Shinto priests. Both shrines are surrounded by four wooden fences, and lesser mortals are allowed only as far as the third gate.

The fences don’t allow you to see much, but that doesn’t stop the estimated six million Japanese who come here annually. They come because of what the shrines represent, which is an embodiment of Japanese Shinto itself. The Inner Shrine is by far the more important because it’s dedicated to the sun goddess, considered to be the legendary ancestress of the imperial family. It contains the Sacred Mirror (Yata-no-Kagami), one of the Three Sacred Treasures of the emperor.

According to legend, the sun goddess sent her grandson to Japan so that he and his descendants could rule over the country. Before he left, she gave him three insignia—a mirror, a sword, and a set of jewels. As she handed him the mirror, she is said to have remarked, “When you look upon this mirror, let it be as if you look upon me.” The mirror, therefore, is said to embody the sun goddess herself and is regarded as the most sacred object in the Shinto religion. It’s kept in the deep recesses of the Inner Shrine in a special casket and is never shown to the public. (The sword is in the Atsuta Shrine in Nagoya, and the jewels are in the Imperial Palace in Tokyo.)

Perhaps the most amazing thing about the Outer and Inner shrines is that, even though they were founded centuries ago, the buildings themselves have never been more than 20 years old; every 20 years they’re completely torn down and rebuilt exactly as they were on neighboring sites. The present buildings were built in 1993 for the 61st time. No photos of the shrines are allowed.

Even though you can’t see much of the shrines, they’re still the most important stops in Ise-Shima. The Inner Shrine is approached by crossing the elegant Uji Bridge of the Isuzu River, passing through a manicured garden, and then entering a dark forest of 800-year-old cypress trees. Watch how Japanese stop after crossing the second small bridge on the approach to the shrine to wash and purify their hands and mouths with water from the Isuzu River. Its source lies on the Inner Shrine, and it’s considered sacred. You may also see a couple of royal horses, one white and one brown, kept in stables near the shrine for the use of the sun goddess.

ISE’S HISTORIC DISTRICTS  After visiting the Inner Shrine (a 45-min. walk round-trip), turn right after recrossing Uji Bridge for the nearby historic district of Oharai-machi, whose main street is lined with beautiful wooden buildings and kura (storehouses), some dating from the Edo Period and others newly constructed but faithful to traditional architecture. It once served as the main pilgrimage road leading to the Grand Shrines of Ise. During the Edo Period, when travel was strictly controlled, joining a mass pilgrimage to Ise was for many Japanese a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to venture beyond their homes; they took full advantage of it here. Today it's an interesting area for a stroll, shopping, or a meal.

About halfway down is Okage-yokocho (☎ 0596/23-8828) a re-created Meiji Era village with teahouses, restaurants, and shops selling Japanese candies, traditional toys, folk crafts, and candles. If you have time, stop by the (108) Okageza ★ (☎ 0596/23-8844; daily 10am–5:30pm, to 4:30pm in winter), a museum housed in an authentic Edo-Era building that captures the spirit of Oharai-machi during the Edo Period; dioramas of half-scale models and street scenes vividly convey what life was like for both the residents and the pilgrims passing through. On a bridge overlooking a model of the city and its shrines, take note of the small man: He's not half-scale; the average Edo man measured 4 foot 11 inches. Admission is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children. You'll spend about 20 minutes here.

Off the beaten tourist track is Kawasaki, which served as Ise City's business district during the Edo Period, when boats traversing the Setagawa River delivered goods to storehouses along the river. A grass-roots movement has restored four of these storehouses along with an Edo-Era house, grouped together in the (109) Ise-Kawasaki Shonin-Kan, 2–25–32 Kawasaki (☎ 0596/22-4810; Wed–Mon 9:30am–5pm), which you can tour for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25). Displays include Ise's own paper money, the first paper money in Japan and developed to lessen the load of pilgrims who might otherwise be forced to carry heavy pieces of gold or silver. Surrounding buildings have been turned into restaurants and shops selling crafts, food, and antiques. In a country where old neighborhoods are disappearing by the minute, the local people who have fought to preserve this historic district deserve medals. It's a 10-minute walk north from Ujijamada Station or northeast from Ise-shi Station.

FUTAMI-NO-URA

Ise Azuchi Momoyama Bunkamura ★★ ★ Kids The castle you see on the hill from Futami-no-ura Station is not the former residence of a famous shogun but a replica of Azuchi Castle in Edo Wonderland, one of Japan's many theme parks. If you have youngsters in tow or if you haven't seen one of these period theme parks elsewhere in Japan, go to one—they're fun! This one is among my favorites because, rather than try to re-create a village in Holland or Spain, it's centered on a specific time in Japan's history, the Age of the Warring States—the Sengoku Era (1477–1573), when local warlords struggled for supremacy, and the Azuchi-Momoyama Era (1573–98), when Oda Nobunaga gained control of the land and finally put an end to civil war. In keeping with the theme of this Japanese equivalent of Dodge City, all the staff are dressed in 16th-century costumes, and attractions reflect the pre-Edo Era; visually, it looks just like a movie set. You can watch period dramas and theater ranging from a courtesan performance that includes singing and dancing to the action-charged antics of a ninja troupe. You can try to negotiate 11 challenging obstacles in the Ninja Labyrinth or try your hand at throwing ninja weapons at a target. There are no thrill rides here, but there are old-fashioned game centers, including shooting ranges using bows and arrows and other weaponry of the era. That gold-roofed castle is dedicated to Nobunaga—who built Azuchi Castle—and is filled with visual and audio effects that will make you feel you're in the midst of war. The top-floor Gold Room, lined with real gold, has a great view of Ise-Shima. You'll probably spend 2 to 3 hours here.

☎ 0596/43-2300. Admission ¥4,900 ($41/£21) adults, ¥2,500 ($21/£11) children 7–12. Daily 9am–5pm (9:30am–4pm Dec–Mar 19). Station: Futami-no-ura (15 min.). CAN-Bus: to the front entrance.

Mikimoto Pearl Island ★★ Toba's best-known attraction is touristy but still quite enjoyable, especially if you have a weakness for pearls or have ever wondered how they're cultivated.

To learn about the man who toiled through years of adversity to produce the world's first cultured pearl, visit Kokichi Mikimoto Memorial Hall, built in 1993 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Mikimoto's success. Born in Toba in 1858 as the eldest son of a noodle-shop owner, Kokichi Mikimoto went to Yokohama as a young man and was surprised to see stalls selling pearls with great success. He reasoned that if oysters produced pearls as the result of an irritant inside the shell, why couldn't humans introduce the irritant themselves and induce oysters to make pearls? It turned out to be harder than it sounded. It wasn't until 5 years after he started his research that Mikimoto finally succeeded in cultivating his first pearl, here on what is today called Mikimoto Pearl Island. In 1905, Mikimoto cultivated his first perfectly round pearl, after which he built what is probably the most successful pearl empire in the world.

Mikimoto, who died at the age of 93, was a remarkable man and a real character. In addition to chronicling his life, the Memorial Hall contains some of his earliest jewelry and models made with pearls, many of which were only recently re-acquired by Mikimoto & Co. Ltd. through auctions. My favorite is the brooch made for the 1937 Paris International Exhibition, which can be worn a dozen different ways by employing various clasps. The Pearl Pagoda has 12,760 Mikimoto pearls and took 750 artisans 6 months to complete, after which it was exhibited at the Philadelphia World Exhibition in 1926. The Liberty Bell, a third the size of the original, has 12,250 pearls and was displayed at the New York World's Fair in 1939.

The Pearl Museum tells all you'd probably ever want to know about the creation of pearls, with English videos showing the insertion of the round nucleus into the shell and the harvesting of the pearls 2 years later, as well as explanations of the process of making a pearl necklace by hand, from the selection and sorting of pearls to the drilling and stringing. You can learn about the criteria used for pricing pearls (luster is the most important) and can see an exhibit that examines the relationship between people and pearls since ancient times. There are also more Mikimoto pearl creations such as the Pearl Pavilion, which contains a pearl 4 centimeters (13/5inches) in diameter and resembles Nara's Hall of Dreams.

In addition, women divers (ama) in traditional white outfits demonstrate how women of the Shima Peninsula have dived through the ages in search of abalone, seaweed, and other edibles. They were also essential to the pearl industry, diving to collect the oysters and then returning them to the seabed following insertion of the nuclei. At one time, there were thousands of ama, known for their skill in diving to great depths for extended periods of time. It is said that there are still more than 1,000 of these women divers left, but I've seen them only at demonstrations given for tourists. If you happen to see ama working in earnest (diving for abalone and other food, not pearls), consider yourself lucky. Here you can watch them from the air-conditioned comfort of a viewing room built especially for overseas guests.

There's also, of course, a shop selling Mikimoto pearl jewelry and a restaurant. You can easily spend 1½ hours on Pearl Island.

1-7-1 Toba. © 0599/25-2028. www.mikimoto-pearl-museum.co.jp. Admission ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) adults, ¥750 ($6.25/£3.15) children 7-15. Mid-Mar to May, mid-July to Aug, and Oct to mid-Nov daily 8:30am-5:30pm; Jan to mid-Mar, June to mid-July, Sept, and mid-Nov to Nov 30 daily 8:30am-5pm; Dec daily 9am-4:30pm. Closed 2nd Tues, Wed, and Thurs of Dec. Station: Toba (3 min.), connected to the mainland via a short pedestrian bridge.

Toba Aquarium ★ Kids Next to Pearl Island is one of Japan's largest aquariums, containing more than 850 species of aquatic plants and animals and some 20,000 creatures. Various zones and themes make it easy to navigate. The display of marine animals around Ise-Shima and Japan includes giant spider crabs and the finless porpoise, the world's smallest whale. The exhibit of "living fossils"—creatures that have remained relatively unchanged since ancient times—includes sharks, horseshoe crabs, and the nautilus (which are bred here; babies are often on display), while the marine mammal kingdom includes Commerson's dolphins, Russian walrus, seals, and sea lions, with sea-lion shows several times a day. The aquarium also boasts exotic and rare creatures such as dugongs, African manatees, and Amazonian turtles and frogs. My only complaint is that some of the tanks look rather bare and outdated in today's world of ever-more-sophisticated aquariums; maybe the animals don't mind, but spectators sure do. Though not as sophisticated or complete as the Osaka Aquarium, you can spend 90 minutes here, longer if you have kids.

3–3–6 Toba. © 0599/25-2555. www.aquarium.co.jp/english. Admission ¥2,400 ($20/£10) adults, ¥1,200 ($10/£5) junior-high students, ¥600 ($5/£2.50) children. Nov to mid-Mar daily 9am–4:30pm; mid-Mar to mid-July and Sept–Oct daily 9am–5pm; mid-July to Aug daily 8:30am–5:30pm. Station: Toba (10 min.).

KASHIKOJIMA

At the southern end of the Shima Peninsula, the last stop on the Kintetsu Line is Kashikojima.

One of the main attractions of Kashikojima for Japanese is the boat cruises of Ago Bay. Vessels, built to resemble Spanish galleons or with other Spanish-based themes, depart from the town's boat dock, about a 2-minute walk from the tiny train station. The 50-minute cruise costs ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) for adults, half-price for children. You'll pass pearl-cultivating rafts, fishing boats, and many small islands along the way. Boats depart every half-hour or so between 9:30am and 4:30pm (until 3:30pm in winter), weather permitting. For more information call the Shima Marine Leisure Co. (© 0599/43-1023).

Parque España ★★ Kids You may wonder what this Spanish village, called Shima Spain Mura by the locals, is doing in southern Ise Shima. Mie Prefecture has a sister relationship with Valencia in Spain, a relationship that is exploited to the hilt in this ambitious theme park. A huge facility that employs about 40 Spanish-speaking natives, the amusement park includes a shopping area specializing in products from Spain; a plaza that stages dances, festivals, and other outdoor entertainment; a coliseum that features folk dancing and singing; and amusement rides that range from an adventure lagoon ride through a world of fantasy to the fastest roller coaster I'll ever care to ride (and one of the longest, lasting more than 3 hair-raising minutes). Although the park opened to much fanfare in 1994, it has suffered declining attendance ever since, which is bad for business but means there's virtually no waiting time for rides, except during school holidays.

Most educational is the Museo Castillo de Xavier, a reproduction of the castle where Francis Xavier was born (Xavier later brought Christianity to Japan); it presents a brief overlook of highlights in Spanish history, though in Japanese. Still, there's no mistaking the replica of prehistoric drawings from the Altamira caves, the model of the Santa Maria that Columbus sailed to America, and a replica of the entrance to the Prado Museum along with a film of Spain's greatest artists, including Goya, Velazquez, and El Greco. There are amusements geared to all ages, as well as numerous restaurants. Plan to spend about 3 hours here.

④ 0599/57-3333. Passport admission to most attractions ¥4,800 ($40/£20) adults, ¥3,800 ($32/£16) seniors and children 12–17, ¥3,200 ($27/£13) children 4–11; extra charges for gaming houses and flamenco show. Admission only, which includes the museum and most shows but no rides (which you can purchase separately for ¥200–¥600/$1.65–$5/85p–£2.50 per ride) ¥2,800 ($23/£12) adults, ¥1,800 ($15/£7.50) children 12–17, ¥1,200 ($10/£5) children 4–11. Hours vary, but generally Mon–Fri 9:30am–5pm, Sat–Sun and holidays 9:30am–6pm (check with the tourist office). Closed last 2 weeks of Feb. Station: Ugata (Kintetsu Line), then a bus that runs 2 or 3 times per hour; or Kashikojima Station, then a bus that runs once an hour. Both buses cost ¥360 ($3/£1.50) for the 15-min. ride.

WHERE TO STAY

Kashikojima is the best place to go if you want to escape the crowds and relax in a rural setting, while Toba and Ise have the greatest number of attractions.

ISE

⑩⑩ Asakichi ★ Because a pilgrimage to the Ise Grand Shrines during the Edo Period was often the only trip a commoner might make in his lifetime, he often lived it up to the hilt in Furuichi, Ise's former red-light district. Located between the Inner and Outer shrines, it was filled with many ryokan, brothels, and restaurants. Now only Asakichi remains, founded more than 200 years ago by the present owner's family, on an impossibly narrow street. The ryokan takes its name from the family name Asaya, which means “hemp” and which was probably supplied to commoners seeking offerings for the shrines. In any case, the ryokan seems little changed since then, built on a slope and even containing a museum of sorts filled with dusty, Edo-Era memorabilia which you can request to see. The tatami rooms are simple. Meals are served on request in the privacy of your room or in a dining hall with a view over the rooftops. Western breakfasts are available. The proprietor doesn't speak much English but understands the basics.

109 Nakanochō, Ise-Shi, Mie 516-0034. ④ 0596/22-4101. Fax 0596/22-4102. 10 units, 3 with bathroom. ¥12,000 ($100/£50) per person. Rates include 2 meals. No credit cards. Station: Ise-Shi, then bus no. 01 or 02 from platform 7 another 9 min. to the Nakanochō stop (1 min.). Amenities: Coin-op washer/dryer; museum; communal fridge. In room: A/C, TV.

⑩⑩⑩ Hoshidekan ★★ Finds Catering to the health conscious, this inexpensive 85-year-old wooden Japanese Inn Group ryokan has several tatami rooms with windows framed with gnarled roots and bamboo (they simply don't make windows like this anymore) encircling an inner courtyard. It's nothing fancy, but it's run by a friendly, spry 80-something woman who is a strong advocate of macrobiotic vegetarian meals, which are served in your simple tatami room. Both Japanese and Western meals are available, but we prefer the ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) Genmai teishoku vegetarian course for dinner. The food, however, is only one of the reasons to stay here. We also like the bicycles (¥300/$2.50/£1.25 per day), which you can use to visit the Ise Grand Shrines and the nearby Kawasaki historic district.

2–15-2 Kawasaki, Ise-Shi, Mie 516-0009. ④ 0596/28-2377. Breakfast ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) extra; dinner ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) extra. AE, MC, V. Station: Ise-Shi, then a 7-min. walk in the opposite direction from the shrine; look for the sign on the right that says HOSHIDE. Amenities: Macrobiotic restaurant (reservations required); bike rentals; in-room massage; coin-op washer and dryer; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/organic tea, no phone.

Thalassa Shima ★★ Although the approach to this luxury hotel doesn't seem to promise much, inside it's another story. Everything about this sophisticated seaside luxury hotel is focused on its stunningly beautiful setting on the sea, with nary another building in sight. It has a soothing, subdued atmosphere, fitting for a resort dedicated to healing. Thalassa Shima offers thalasso therapy, which uses seawater, seaweed, and sea-mud treatments to combat stress, fatigue, and excess weight, as well as aromatherapy and other techniques. My coauthor was skeptical that a 1-night stay involving a seaweed bath, an underwater-jet treatment, a massage bath, and pressure therapy could make much difference, but she has to admit she left the hotel much more relaxed and feeling beautiful! Rooms—all of which have small balconies facing the sea—are large, well appointed, and full of amenities. Ask for a room on a higher floor for more expansive sea views, and at check-in, reserve a dinner table at either the Lumiere with its nouvelle French cuisine or the classic Japanese restaurant, both with views of the sea. There's a glass-enclosed swimming pool, as well as a public beach a short walk away.

Thalasso therapy treatment from ¥14,700 ($123/£62). AE, DC, MC, V. Free 25-min. shuttle bus every hour from JR or Kintetsu Toba Station. Amenities: 2 restaurants; bar; thalasso therapy center w/pool overlooking the bay, exercise room, full French thalasso therapy and other therapies, massage room, sauna, and Jacuzzi; sundries shop; aesthetic salon; room service (8–10am, noon–5pm, 9:15–10:15pm); in-room massage; dry-cleaning/laundry service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV w/free videos/DVDs and players on request; minibar w/free drinks, hot-water pot w/herb tea, hair dryer, safe, bathroom scale.

KASHIKOJIMA

①12 Ishiyama-So ★ Finds If you're looking for an inexpensive, unusual place to stay, a good choice is this family-run minshuku located on a small island just a stone's throw from the Kashikojima pier. It can be reached only via the hotel's own private boat—call to let them know you've arrived at Kashikojima; the boat will arrive shortly, and you'll be delivered right to the ryokan's front door. Its location on the water, with a lobby done up in Southeast Asian decor and floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking the water, gives it a slightly exotic atmosphere, right up to the small crabs that scurry in through the front door. There's a sun deck overlooking the bay, you can swim off the dock (because of boat traffic, though, you shouldn't go farther out than the dock), and footpaths crisscross the small island. The owner, who speaks English, is remodeling all the rooms himself. Two rooms are Western style and all face the bay. Note that only Japanese meals are served and must be paid for in cash.

Dinner ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) extra. MC, V. A 2-min. walk from the station to Kashikojima pier, then a 2-min. boat trip. In room: A/C, coin-op TV, hot-water pot w/tea, no phone.

Shima Kanko Hotel ★★ ★ Sitting on a hill above Ago Bay, this is a resort hotel in the old tradition, established in 1951 and boasting impeccable service and great views. It was the hotel of choice of the Showa Emperor; he stayed here five times. The present emperor stayed here in 2001. The hotel boasts its own garden (cared for by three gardeners), at the edge of which is the lovely outdoor pool. I especially like the pathway leading down to a private dock where you can sit and watch pearl cultivators at work on their rafts. On the hotel's roof is an observatory, great for watching the beautiful sunsets; the coffee shop's outdoor terrace is another wonderful place to soak up the view. The hotel is known for its service, its collection of museum-quality art work by Japanese artists of the later 19th century, and for its restaurants; it is hard to decide which is better, the Japanese seafood restaurant, where each dish is exquisitely arranged, or the French restaurant La Mer, famous for its abalone and Mie beef. Most rooms have views of the bay and are spacious, and despite periodic updating, they retain a pleasant old-fashioned, '50s atmosphere with their shoji screens and wooden furniture. At press time, a new building with 51 suites and a spa was under construction.

WHERE TO DINE

Shima Peninsula is understandably famous for its seafood. In addition to the choices below, resorts and hotels throughout the Shima Peninsula offer wonderful seafood dining. For a splurge, I recommend La Mer ★★ in the Shima Kanko Hotel (see above), which serves its own delightful French cuisine. Mie beef, lobster, and abalone are house specialties, with set lunches starting at ¥6,000 ($50/£25) and set dinners at ¥12,500 ($104/£52). Reserve a window seat and get there before sunset. It's open daily from 11:30am to 2pm and 6 to 8:30pm.

①13 Sushi Kyu ★★ Kids SUSHI/LOCAL SPECIALTIES Located on the main street of Oharai-machi in a 130-year-old former ryokan, this traditional restaurant offers tatami seating at low tables with a view out over the river. Waitresses in samue (traditional Japanese worker clothes) serve sushi and local cuisine from a Japanese menu. Try the tekone sushi (raw bonito marinated with soy sauce and mixed with vinegared rice) served in a wooden tub or the obento of various delicacies. Like many family-type restaurants, there's also a child's plate with rice, soup, fried shrimp, salad, dessert, and drink for ¥630 ($5.25/£2.65).

20 Uji Nakanokiri-machi, Ise. ☎ 0596/27-0229. Set meals ¥1,050–¥2,100 ($8.75–$18/£4.40–£9). No credit cards. Daily 11am–7:30pm, except on Tues and the 1st and last day of every month, when it closes 2 hr. earlier in summer and 3 hr. earlier in winter. Station: Ise-Shi, then bus no. 51 or 55 or the CAN-Bus to the Inner Shrine stop, from which it's a 5-min. walk to Oharai-machi historic district.

①14 Osakaya SUSHI Located 2 blocks inland from Mikimoto Pearl Island on the other side of the train tracks, this simple local eatery with tatami, table, and counter seating offers assorted sushi platters (nigiri-zushi) and sushi rolls (maki-zushi), but the specialty is ebi fry, humungous shrimp deep-fried in batter. I recommend the set meal for ¥3,460 ($29/£15), which includes ebi fry, sashimi, rice, soup, and vegetables.

4164 1-chome, Toba. ☎ 0599/25-2336. Nigiri sushi platter ¥1,050–¥3,700 ($8.75–$31/£4.40–£15); set meals ¥1,470–¥3,460 ($12–$29/£6–£15). AE, MC, V. Fri–Wed 11am–2pm and 4–8:30pm (last order). Station: Toba. Walking in the direction of Mikimoto Pearl Island, turn right under the tracks and take the 2nd street left; Osakaya will be on the right.

3 More of Old Japan: Kanazawa ★★

622km (386 miles) NW of Tokyo; 224km (140 miles) NE of Kyoto

On the northwest coast of Honshu on the Sea of Japan, Kanazawa is the gateway to the rugged, sea-swept Noto Peninsula. It was the second-largest city (after Kyoto) to escape bombing during World War II, and some of the old city has been left intact, including a district of former samurai mansions, old geisha quarters, Edo-Era canals, and tiny narrow streets that run crookedly without rhyme or reason (apparently to confuse any enemies foolish enough to attack). Kanazawa is most famous for its Kenrokuen Garden, one of the most celebrated gardens in all of Japan. It's the main reason people come here, though several fine museums nearby are worth a visit, too. Kanazawa is also renowned for its crafts.

Kanazawa first gained notoriety about 500 years ago, when a militant Buddhist sect joined with peasant fanatics to overthrow the feudal lord and establish its own autonomous government, an event unprecedented in Japanese history. The independent republic survived almost 100 years before it was attacked by an army of Oda Nobunaga, who was trying to unite Japan at a time when civil wars wracked the nation. Kanazawa was subsequently granted to one of Nobunaga's retainers, Maeda Toshiie, who constructed a castle and transformed the small community into a thriving castle town. The Maeda clan continued to rule over Kanazawa for the next 300 years, amassing wealth in the form of land and rice and encouraging development of the arts. Throughout the Tokugawa shogunate, the Maedas remained the second-most powerful family in Japan and controlled the largest domain in the country. The arts of Kutani ware, Yuzen silk dyeing, lacquerware, and Noh theater flourished—and enjoy popularity in Kanazawa even today. Japan's fourth-largest city at the end of the Feudal Era, Kanazawa now has a population of 455,500 and is capital of Ishikawa Prefecture.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By JR Train Direct trains from Osaka (via Kyoto) depart hourly; the ride takes less than 3 hours and costs ¥6,930 ($58/£29) for an unreserved seat. From Nagoya, direct trains depart for Kanazawa every hour and take about 3 hours; the cost is ¥6,620 ($55/£28) for an unreserved seat.

From Tokyo, take the Joetsu Shinkansen to Echigo-yuzawa and switch there for the limited express Hakutaka train to Kanazawa. The trip takes about 4½ hours and costs ¥11,840 ($99/£50).

By Bus JR buses depart six times a day from Ikebukuro Station's east exit in Tokyo, arrive in Kanazawa 7½ hours later, and cost ¥7,840 ($65/£33). Buses also depart four to six times daily from Nagoya and Kyoto stations; both trips take about 4 hours and cost ¥4,060 ($34/£17).

VISITOR INFORMATION Be sure to pick up the flyer "Kanazawa" at the Tourist Information Centers in Tokyo, at the Narita or Kansai international airports, or at the local Tourist Information Center (☎ 076/232-6200) inside Kanazawa Station (you can also download it from the Japan National Tourist Organization's website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under "Browse by Destinations"). To find the center, turn right after passing through the wicket (you'll be heading toward the East Gate exit); it will soon be on your left beside a shopping arcade. Open daily 9am to 7pm (with English-speaking volunteers on duty 10am–6pm), it distributes an English-language map and brochure. You can also book hotel rooms here. Visit the city's home page at www.city.kanazawa.ishikawa.jp.

INTERNET ACCESS The Ishikawa Foundation for International Exchange, a 5-minute walk from the east exit of Kanazawa Station (on the road running between the Miyako and Nikko hotels), on the third floor of the Rifare building at 1–5–3 Honmachi (☎ 076/262-5931), has four computers you can use free of charge for 30 minutes daily 8:30am to 5:15pm. The Seattle's Best coffee shop in the APA Hotel (☎ 076/231-8111) next to Kanazawa Station's west exit has Wi-Fi, if you brought your own laptop, while two computers in the lobby are available for ¥100 (85¢/45p) for every 10 minutes.

GETTING AROUND Kanazawa's attractions spread south and southeast from the station (take the East Gate exit). Katamachi, 3.2km (2 miles) southeast of the station, is Kanazawa's downtown. Sights are too far-flung to see everything on foot, so the easiest way to get around Kanazawa is by bus. All major lines depart from Kanazawa Station, and as many as 15 lines pass Kenrokuen Garden. Take a ticket when boarding the bus and pay when you get off; the fare is ¥200 ($1.65/85p) to most sights in the city.

Easiest for tourists, however, is the Kanazawa Loop Bus (Shu-yu Bus), which departs from platform 1 at Kanazawa Station's east exit every 15 minutes and travels to all the tourist sights, making 19 stops in a circular route. Stops are announced in English and displayed on a digital board at the front of the bus. A single ride costs ¥200 ($1.65/85p) and a 1-day pass, which also allows rides on city buses, costs ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10). The bus runs daily from 8:30am to 6pm.

You can also travel around Kanazawa by bicycle. JR Rental Cycle (☎ 076/261-1721; daily 8am–8pm), at the west exit of Kanazawa Station, rents bicycles for ¥1,200 ($10/£5) per day.

EXPLORING KANAZAWA

Much of Kanazawa's charm lies in the atmosphere of its old neighborhoods. Be sure to wear your good walking shoes, as the best way to explore various parts of the city is on your own two feet. One suggested itinerary for tackling the city's sights is to take the Loop Bus to the Higashi Chaya district, then another Loop bus onward to Kenrokuen and the sights in its vicinity, and then reboard the bus or walk the 15 minutes to the Nagamachi Samurai district. Directional English-language signs to major sights are posted throughout the city.

THE TOP ATTRACTION

Kenrokuen Garden ★★☎ At one time, Kanazawa possessed an impressive castle belonging to the powerful Maeda clan, but it was destroyed by fire several times, the last time in 1881. Near the garden entrance is one of the few original structures remaining, the handsome Ishikawamon (Ishikawa Gate), which used to be the south entrance to the castle. Observing how big and grand the gate is, you can appreciate the magnitude of the original Maeda castle. Remarkably, its roof tiles are actually lead, in case emergency dictated they be melted down for musket balls. The area just beyond the gate is the newly created Kanazawa Castle Park (☎ 076/234-3800; Mar–Oct 15 daily 7am–6pm; Oct 16–Feb daily 8am–4:30pm), which contains a botanical garden and a reconstructed castle building. Skip the empty reconstruction (admission: ¥300/$2.50/£1.25 adults, ¥100/85¢/40p under 17) unless you're especially interested in building techniques, but the botanical garden with its contemporary layout is worth a stroll.

Just southeast of Kanazawa Castle Park is Kanazawa's main attraction, the 10-hectare (25-acre) Kenrokuen Garden ★★☎. The largest of what are considered to be the three best landscape gardens in Japan—the other two are Kairakuen Garden in Mito and Korakuen Garden in Okayama—it's considered by some to be the grandest. Its name can be translated as “a refined garden incorporating six attributes”—spaciousness, careful arrangement, seclusion, antiquity, elaborate use of water, and scenic charm. Ponds, trees, streams, rocks, mounds, and footpaths have all been combined so aesthetically that the effect is spellbinding. Best of all, unlike most other gardens in Japan, there are no surrounding skyscrapers to detract from splendid views.

Altogether, it took about 150 years to complete the garden, which served as the outer garden of Kanazawa Castle. The fifth Maeda lord started construction in the 1670s, and successive lords added to it according to their individual tastes. The garden as you now see it was finished by the 12th Maeda lord in 1822; only after the Meiji Restoration was it opened to the public. In addition to cherry trees, irises, ponds, and other elements of natural beauty, there are several historic structures here, including a tea-ceremony house, a former samurai house and, most important, Seisonkaku Villa (see below). Plan on 1½ hours of blissful wanderings.

Tip: You may want to arrive at dawn or near the end of the day, as Kenrokuen Garden is a favorite destination of Japanese tour groups, led by guides who explain everything in detail—through loudspeakers.

1–4 Kenroku-machi. ☎ 076/234-3800. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, free for seniors over 65, ¥100 (85¢/45p) children 6–18. Mar to mid-Oct daily 7am–6pm; mid-Oct to Feb daily 8am–4:30pm. Loop Bus: Kenrokuen-shita (stop no. 9, 3 min.).

IN THE VICINITY OF KENROKUEN GARDEN

The Ishikawa Prefectural Art Museum (Ishikawa Kenritsu Bijutsukan; www.ishibi.pref.ishikawa.jp) is closed for renovation until the end of 2008. Ask the tourist office for an update on its reopening, because you won't want to miss its scrolls, paintings, Kutani ware, and changing items that may range from samurai costumes belonging to the Maeda family to kimono, as well as contemporary oil paintings and decorative art by artists who were born in Ishikawa, lived here, or had some connection to the prefecture, many of them National Living Treasures.

Ishikawa Prefectural Museum for Traditional Products and Crafts (Ishikawa Kenritsu Dento Sangyo Kogeikan) ★★

If you have time to visit only one museum in Kanazawa, this is the one to choose. It's by far the best place in town to view and learn about all the beautiful handcrafted items for which Kanazawa has long been famous. There are English-language explanations, a detailed English-language pamphlet, and a free audio guide that describes how the crafts are made. You can see the famous Kutani pottery, first produced under the patronage of the Maeda clan in the 1600s and known for its hues of green, red, purple, navy blue, and yellow, as well as displays of Kaga Yuzen dyeing and hand-painting on silk (Kanazawa is known for its bold and clear picturesque designs). Also on display are Kanazawa lacquerware (which uses raised lacquer painting), paulownia woodcrafts, metalwork, family Buddhist altars, Kanazawa gold leaf, wooden molds for sweets, koto and shamisen stringed instruments, drums, lion masks, bambooware, fishing hooks, flies, rods, folk toys, Japanese paper (washi), umbrellas, and even fireworks. Schedule about an hour to appreciate everything.

1–1 Kenroku-machi. ☎ 076/262-2020. Admission ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) seniors, ¥100 (85¢/45p) under 17. Apr–Nov daily 9am–5pm (closed 3rd Thurs of every month); Dec–Mar Fri–Wed 9am–5pm. Loop Bus: Hirotsaka (stop no. 10, 6 min.). Next to Seisonkaku Villa.

①15 Seisonkaku Villa ★★ Just outside the Kodatsuno (southeast) exit of Kenrokuen Garden is this must-see villa, built in 1863 by the 13th Maeda lord as a retirement home for his widowed mother. Elegant and graceful, it has a distinctly feminine atmosphere with delicately carved, brightly painted wood transoms and painted shoji screens. The bedroom is decorated with tortoises painted on the shoji wainscoting;

tortoises were associated with long life, and it must have worked—the mother lived to be 84. Expect to linger about 20 minutes here.

1–2 Kenroku-machi. ㊟ 076/221-0580. Admission ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) junior-high and high-school students, ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) children. Thurs–Tues 9am–5pm. Loop Bus: Hirosaka (stop no. 10, 5 min.). Next to the Ishikawa Prefectural Museum for Traditional Products and Crafts.

21st Century Museum of Contemporary Art Kanazawa's newest museum, centrally located between Kenrokuen Garden and the Katamachi shopping district, is ensconced in a striking circular building that has no front or back, allowing visitors to explore it from all directions. Galleries, which range from bright spaces with sunlight pouring through glass ceilings to darkened rooms with no natural light, display a collection that concentrates on works of the past 15 years, particularly of Japanese artists born after 1965, along with contemporary works from around the world shown in changing exhibitions.

1–2–1 Hirosaka. ㊟ 076/220-2800. www.kanazawa21.jp. Admission ¥350 ($2.90/£1.45) adults, ¥280 ($2.35/£1.15) university students, under 18 free; more for special exhibitions. Sun and Tues–Thurs 10am–6pm; Fri–Sat 10am–8pm. Loop Bus: Hirosaka (stop no. 10, 2 min.).

THE NAGAMACHI SAMURAI (BUKE YASHIKI) DISTRICT

About a 15-minute walk west of Kenrokuen Garden and just a couple minutes' walk west of Katamachi (Kanazawa's main shopping district), the Nagamachi Samurai District is basically a few streets lined with beautiful wooden homes hidden behind gold-colored mud walls and bordered by canals left over from the Edo Period. An unhurried stroll in the neighborhood will give you an idea of what a feudal castle town might have looked like. But only fleetingly: Lord Maeda had as many as 8,000 samurai retainers, who in turn had their own retainers, making the samurai population here very large indeed. Though there is not much to see, the Nagamachi Samurai Rest House, in a samurai house, is free and open daily 9am to 5pm. Volunteer guides, some of whom speak English, are on hand to answer questions and show the area. To reach the district from Katamachi, take the side street to the right of the Excel Hotel Tokyu.

Nomura Samurai House ♣ Stop 20 minutes here to see how samurai lived back in the Edo Period. Occupied by members of the Nomura family for 10 generations, this traditional Japanese home boasts a drawing room made of Japanese cypress, with elaborate designs in rosewood and shoji screens painted with landscapes, and a tea-ceremony room upstairs (tea costs ¥300/$2.50/£1.25). Rooms overlook a small, charming garden with a miniature waterfall, a winding stream, huge carp, and stone lanterns. Personal effects of the Nomura family and other objects from the Edo Period are on display, including a samurai outfit, the family altar, and a nightingale box (deliberately dark so the nightingale would sing).

1–3–32 Nagamachi. ㊟ 076/221-3553. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.65) high-school students, ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) children. Apr–Sept daily 8:30am–5:30pm; Oct–Mar daily 8:30am–4:30pm; closed the 16th and 17th of every month. Loop Bus: Kohrinbo (stop no. 15, 5 min.). Take the side street to the right of the Excel Hotel Tokyu, turn right at the T, and then turn left; catty-corner from the Nagamachi Samurai Rest House.

OTHER SIGHTS

Higashi Chaya District There are approximately 50 geisha practicing their trade in three old entertainment quarters in Kanazawa, including this one. A walk here reveals rather solemn-looking, wood-slatted facades of geisha houses dating from the 1820s, where men of means have long come to be entertained with music, dancing, songs, the tea ceremony, poem recitals, and other pleasurable pursuits. Geisha still perform at seven houses in the Higashi Chaya District, but most of the other former geisha homes have been turned into shops and restaurants. For an inside peek at the geisha world, visit the 185-year-old ¹¹⁶ Shima Geisha House, 1-13-21 Higashiyama (☎ 076/252-5675; daily 9am-6pm), a former tearoom where merchants as well as men of letters came to watch geisha perform. Inside, you'll find rooms that were allotted to personal use, as well as to performing, along with displays of ordinary artifacts from combs, pipes, and game boards to cooking utensils. Architectural details worth noting include: several stairways (so that customers could come and go without being seen); a small Shinto shrine at the entrance to the home; a more elaborate family Buddhist altar in a place of honor in a front room; the gleaming wood-lacquered surfaces of furniture; and the cloisonné door pulls on sliding doors. Admission is ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for children; but you'll probably want to enjoy tea in the new addition facing a garden, which, depending on the accompanying sweet, costs ¥500 to ¥700 ($4.15/£2.15 to $5.85/£2.90) more. It takes 10 minutes or so to tour the house.

In a former chishiya or pawn shop, the Higashi Chaya Resthouse (Kukeikan), open daily 9am to 5pm, has volunteer guides (some speak English) and a map of the area. To reach it, take the Loop Bus to Hashibacho (stop no. 6); walk back to the first street and turn right; they can direct you to the other sites.

¹¹⁷ Myoryuji Temple 妙吉祥 Myoryuji Temple (1-2-12 Nomachi; ☎ 076/241-0888) is popularly known as Ninja-dera (Temple of the Secret Agents) because of its secret chambers, hidden stairways, tunnels, and trick doors. Built by the Maeda clan for family prayer in 1643, it looks rather small from the outside, just two stories high to comply with height restrictions during the Edo Period. Inside, four stories are evident, but even this is false: Three more levels are concealed. The fortresslike structure contains an amazing 29 stairways and a labyrinth of corridors, along with such trick devices as pitfalls to trap unsuspecting intruders, slatted stairs where lances could make stabs at passing legs, escape hatches, hidden stairways, and rooms that could be opened only from the outside—just one more example of how deep paranoia ran during the Edo Period. Although rumor has it that a tunnel once connected the temple to the castle, a river running between them makes it unlikely.

You must phone ahead for a reservation; chances are good that you'll be able to see it the same day you call. To ensure that you don't get lost (which would be quite easy because of all the trick doors), you'll be grouped with other visitors and led by a guide who, unfortunately, describes everything in Japanese only. However, demonstrations of the various trick devices are fairly self-explanatory and there's an English-language pamphlet. Tours, given daily from 9am to 4:30pm (to 4pm in winter), last 30 minutes and cost ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) for adults and ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for children (however, the temple does not recommend the tour for children and children younger than 6 are not admitted). To reach it, take the Loop Bus to Jusangenmachi (stop no. 13), cross the bridge you see straight ahead of you, take the second left (Teramachi), and then take the first right. It will be on your right.

SHOPPING

Kanazawa's most famous products are its Kutani pottery, with its bright five-color overglaze patterns, and its hand-painted Yuzen silk. Kanazawa also produces maki-e lacquerware, sweets, toys, wooden products, and almost all of Japan's gold leaf. For convenient shopping for these and other souvenirs, try the Omiyage Kan shopping arcade right in Kanazawa Station.

For department stores, boutiques, and contemporary shops, visit the Katamachi and Tatemachi shopping streets, within walking distance of Kenrokuen Garden and the Nagamachi Samurai district. Omicho Market, just off Hyakumangoku Dori between the station and Kenrokuen Garden, is the city market with more than 200 stalls selling seafood, vegetables, and fruit.

Ishikawa Prefectural Products Center (Kanko Bussankan) Located just north of Kenrokuen Garden, this is the place to come for one-stop shopping of all the products Ishikawa Prefecture is famous for. The ground floor sells crafts ranging from lacquerware and pottery to glassware and toys, while the second floor houses a restaurant. Open daily 10am to 6pm (closed some Tues Nov–Mar). 2–20 Kenroku-machi. ☎ 076/222-7788. Loop Bus: Kenrokushita (stop no. 9, 2 min.). Backtrack to Hyakumangoku Dori and turn right.

①18 Kaga Yuzen Dento Sangyo Kaikan To learn about Yuzen cloth, there's a museum here where you can ask to see the 20-minute, English-language video that describes the techniques of Yuzen cloth dyeing and the role it played in Kanazawa history (admission: ¥300/2.50/£1.25). Otherwise, take the stairs to the left of the entryway to the basement shop, where you can purchase scarves, purses, fans, ties, clothing, furushiki (traditionally used for wrapping presents), and other items made from hand-dyed Yuzen cloth, which borrows heavily from nature for its designs—mainly flowers, animals, and landscapes. Open Thursday to Tuesday 9am to 5pm. 8–8 Kosho-machi. ☎ 076/224-5511. Loop Bus: Kenrokushita (stop no. 9, 2 min.). Cross Hyakumangoku Dori and turn right, then left after the parking lot.

Kutani Kosen Pottery Kiln (Kutani Kosengama) ★ If your interest lies in pottery, it's worth a visit to this Kutani-ware kiln and shop, open since 1870 and about a 10-minute walk from Myoruyji Temple. In addition to browsing its showroom, you can also see the entire process of producing handmade Kutani ware, including the kilns heated by pine and the painting, on a 15-minute tour led by a guide who speaks some English. Open daily 9am to noon and 1 to 5pm. 5–3–3 Nomachi. ☎ 076/241-0902. City Bus No.1 or 2: 20 min. from Kanazawa Station from platform 8 to the Nomachi Eki stop (1 min.).

①19 Sakuda Thinking about wallpapering a room in gold leaf? Then you'll certainly want to pay a visit to Sakuda, located in a modern building in the Higashi Chaya district. (As much as 98% of Japan's entire national output of gold leaf is produced in Kanazawa.) Here you can watch artisans at work, pounding the gold leaf and spreading it until it's paper-thin and translucent; it's the equivalent of pounding a ¥10 coin into the size of a tatami mat. But most people come here to shop for gold-leafed vases, boxes, chopsticks, bowls, trays, screens, furniture, and—this being Japan—golf balls and clubs. You can even buy gold flakes to add to your coffee or sake. Don't miss the second-floor bathrooms; the women's is done entirely in gold leaf, the men's in platinum. The staff was serving complimentary tea spiked with gold leaf to everyone who dropped by during my last visit. Open daily 9am to 6pm. 1–3–27 Higashiyama. ☎ 076/251-6777. Loop Bus: Hashibacho (stop no. 6, 4 min.).

①20 Shamisen no Fukushima Finds There used to be other makers of the three-stringed shamisen instrument in Kanazawa to keep the geisha supplied with one of the tools of their trade, but this shop in the Higashi Chaya District is the only one remaining. While you may not be in the market for a shamisen, you can have a 30-minute lesson in English (¥300/$2.50/£1.25) between 10am and 4pm, followed by a cup of tea. You can also visit the small showroom upstairs where you can see how these instruments are made, including the cat and dog skin used to cover the sound box (cat skin is more expensive). Open Monday to Saturday 10am to 5:30pm; closed the second and fourth Saturdays of the month and holidays. 1–8 Higashiyama. ☎ 076/252-3703. Loop Bus: Hashibacho (stop no. 6, 2 min.). On Kannon-machi street.

①21 Tawaraya Ame (Kids) They've been selling Japanese confectionery from this traditional wood-slatted building since 1830. Tawaraya makes two types of candy from rice and barley, using malt instead of sugar, and now touts the candy as health food. One of the candies is soft like honey, purportedly developed for babies who, for one reason or another, could not be breastfed. The other is hard and comes in a wooden bucket; the staff recommends breaking the hard candy with a hammer (kids love this) and putting it in a refrigerator. Soft lollipops and hard candy (true jawbreakers!) are also available. Open Monday to Saturday 9am to 6pm; Sunday 9am to 5pm. 2–4 Kobashimachi. ☎ 076/252-2079. Loop Bus: Kobashi (stop no. 3, 2 min.). Cross the bridge and turn left.

WHERE TO STAY

Most of the expensive accommodations and some of the moderately priced hotels add a surcharge averaging ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) per person during peak season—New Year's, Golden Week (Apr 29–May 5), and mid-July through mid-November. We've indicated those that do in the listings below.

Directions are from Kanazawa Station; minutes in parentheses indicate the walking time required from the bus stop.

Hotel Nikko Kanazawa ★★☆☆ This 29-story high-rise was designed by a Japanese-French team, who succeeded in giving it a boutique-hotel ambience despite its size. Its lobby exudes a French-colonial drawing room atmosphere, adorned with a bubbling fountain, rattan chairs stuffed with pillows, fake trees, antiques, and Asian decorative art ranging from ginger jars to Japanese lacquered boxes. The English-speaking concierge staff receives high marks, and its location in front of the station can't be beat for convenience. Rooms are spacious, all with double-size or larger beds and decent-size bathrooms. Sink areas are separated from the bathrooms in doubles and twins, the most expensive of which add vanities. Higher-priced rooms offer great views from Kanazawa's tallest building.

Executive floor from ¥19,057 ($159/£79) single; ¥35,805 ($298/£149) twin. AE, DC, MC, V. MODERATE

APA Hotel Kanazawa-Ekimae Although just a business hotel, this place does have a special feature that sets it apart: large public baths complete with sauna and a rooftop outdoor bath, all free to hotel guests. Other pluses include a convenient location just steps away from Kanazawa Station; bold use of bright colors that are a welcome relief from the usual bland white of most business hotels; and a Seattle's Best cafe (with free Wi-Fi). If you're not a fan of public baths, however, you might choose to stay elsewhere; the hotel is not geared toward tourists, little English is spoken, and rooms are so minuscule that if you open your luggage you may have to leap to reach your bed. Even the deluxe corner rooms would be considered small in a regular hotel. But rooms are clean and have basic necessities, including small windows that open.

If you'd rather be in the heart of the city, the APA Hotel Kanazawa-Chuo, 1–5–24 Katamachi (☎ 076/235-2111; fax 076/235-2112), offers similar-size rooms at the same rates—along with a Seattle's Best with Wi-Fi—except the water tapped for its public bath is from hot springs.

1–9–28 Hirooka, Kanazawa, Ishikawa 920-0031. ☎ 076/231-8111. Fax 076/231-8112. 456 units. ¥8,000–¥9,000 ($67–$75/£33–£38) single; ¥12,500 ($104/£52) double; ¥13,500–¥18,000 ($113–$150/£56–£75) twin. AE, MC, V. Station: Kanazawa (west exit, 2 min.). Amenities: 3 restaurants; bar; public baths with sauna (free for hotel guests); in-room massage; coin-op washer and dryer; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, free dataport, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Kanazawa Manten ★ Value A fountain at the entrance, a front desk backed by trees, jazz playing in the hotel restaurant, two separate lounges with computers free for guests (the largest one for nonsmokers), and attentive service all conspire to make this business hotel seem like it's more expensive than it is. Alas, the overwhelmingly single rooms (there are only 72 twin rooms and 10 doubles) are no different or larger than those of any other business hotel, with semi-double-size beds that take up most of the floor space. On the bright side, the windows can be opened or covered by panels for complete darkness. There's no hot-water pot with tea in the rooms, but on each floor there's a convenience corner with hot water and cups, as well as a microwave, trouser press, and vending machines. In short, the cramped quarters and self-serve philosophy of the upper floors reinforce the business-hotel status, but at least in the lobby you can feel grand.

1–6–1 Kita-yasue, Kanazawa, Ishikawa 920-0022. ☎ 076/265-0100. Fax 076/265-0120. 551 units. ¥6,300 ($53/£26) single; ¥10,000 ($83/£42) double; ¥12,600 ($105/£53) twin. AE, MC, V. Station: Kanazawa (west exit, 3 min.). Turn right out of the station's west exit and continue along the tracks. Amenities: Restaurant; lounge; in-room massage; coin-op laundry; nonsmoking rooms; lounge computer w/free Internet access. In room: A/C, TV, dataport, fridge, hair dryer.

Kanazawa Miyako Hotel Although the hotel's cheerless exterior could use an update and the lobby is purely functional, all of the rooms have been nicely updated and, except for the singles, are among the largest for their price in Kanazawa. Add to that the Miyako name (synonymous with service), nonsmoking restaurants (a rarity in Japan), and a convenient location (across the street from and linked to the station via an underground passage), and you'll see why I like this lodging. There are even rooms for ladies with a vanity and toiletry bag that includes a pedicure kit, bath gel, and other female-oriented amenities. I also like rooms facing the station's bus terminal; when a Loop Bus pulls out, I know I have 15 minutes to make the next one.

6–10 Konohanacho, Kanazawa, Ishikawa 920-0852. ☎ 076/261-2111. Station: Kanazawa (east exit, 1 min.). Amenities: 2 restaurants; bar/lounge; summertime beer garden; tour desk; salon; room service (7–10am and 5pm–9:30pm); in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV w/pay movies, free dataport (some rooms), minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Ginmatsu Staying in this small, spotless ryokan nestled in a neighborhood of homes in the Higashi Chaya district is like living with a family. It takes its name from the 150-year-old pine tree near an entrance adorned with photos of the family's cat and local sites. Rooms are simple tatami with no bathrooms, no views, and no frills, but the dining room is pleasant, decorated with Japanese masks and kimono cloth depicting dancers, and there's a house computer guests can use for free.

WHERE TO DINE

Kanazawa's local specialties, known collectively as Kaga Ryori, consist of seafood, such as tiny shrimp and winter crabs, as well as freshwater fish, duck, and mountain vegetables.

All directions are from Kanazawa Station.

AROUND KANAZAWA STATION

Le Grand Chariot ★★ FRENCH The highest spot in Kanazawa, this combination lounge and restaurant offers great views, particularly at sunset, making this a good romantic splurge. The sophisticated lounge occupies the center of the room, while dining tables line windows at either side with the best ringside views. From the west windows you can even see the Japan Sea on the horizon. The menu has only a few a la carte choices and is mostly for fixed-price meals that change but have included options such as snapper with sauce Provençale or lobster champagne with watercress sauce, all artfully presented though portions can be small. Live music serenades you from 8:30 to 11pm, but the ¥840 ($7/£3.50) cover charge is waived for diners.

AROUND KENROKUEN GARDEN

⑫② Miyoshian ★★ (Finds KAGA KAISEKI) A great place to try the local Kaga cuisine right in Kenrokuen Garden, this 100-year-old restaurant consists of three separate wooden buildings, the best of which is a traditional room extending over a large pond. This is where you'll probably dine, seated on tatami with a view of an ancient pond (giant carp swim in the murky waters). Only set meals of Kaga cuisine are served, all featuring jibuni (a duck-and-vegetable stew eaten primarily in winter). The more expensive the meal, the more dishes it adds. The ¥1,575 ($13/£7) yugao meal includes soup, jibuni, sashimi, a seasonal dish such as eel on rice, and pickles. The ¥3,150 ($26/£13) chakaisekifu meal adds such dishes as salmon, crab, tofu, and various small delicacies. Lunch is served from 11am to 2pm, but you can also come just for green tea and sweets for ¥525 ($4.40/£2.20).

Kenrokuen Garden, 1–11 Kenrokumachi. ☎ 076/221-0127. Kaga teishoku ¥1,575–¥3,150 ($13–$26/£6.50–£13). MC, V. Thurs–Tues 9am–4pm. Loop Bus: Kenrokuenshita (stop no. 9), then turn right after entering the park (5 min.).

KATAMACHI & THE NAGAMACHI SAMURAI DISTRICT

Just north of the Saigawa Ohashi Bridge is an area full of restaurants and drinking establishments, radiating from Katamachi Shopping Street and Saigawa Odori (called Chuo Dori by the locals).

Aglio Olio PASTA Located beside a flowing canal between Katamachi and the Nagamachi Samurai District, this simple eatery with only a few tables and a counter is owned by a nisei (second-generation Japanese) from Brazil who offers a few pasta dishes such as lasagna or spaghetti with a beef tomato sauce. The lunch special, which changes daily, includes pasta, salad, and bread.

①23 Hamacho ★ JAPANESE SEAFOOD Hamacho offers seafood and vegetables in season; the menu, written on a blackboard but in Japanese only, changes according to what's fresh and available and may include imo (Japanese potatoes), freshly picked mushrooms, vegetables, various seafood selections, and sashimi. Just tell Mr. Ishigami, the owner and chief chef, how much you want to spend and he'll do the rest. If there's anything you don't like, be sure to tell him that, too. Sit at the counter where you can watch the preparation of your set meal, which may include grilled fish or shrimp, noodles, tofu, sashimi, soup, and vegetables.

2–27–24 Katamachi. ☎ 076/233-3390. Reservations recommended. Set meals ¥5,000–¥10,000 ($42–$83/£21–£42). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 5–11pm. Closed holidays. Loop Bus: Katamachi (stop no. 14, 2 min.). From the bus stop, backtrack to Saigawa Dori and turn right (west); it's set back from the road on the left, beside a small canal.

Kincharyo VARIED JAPANESE This, without a doubt, is Katamachi's easiest restaurant to find: It's located on the third floor of the very visible Excel Hotel Tokyu. Sister restaurant to a famous 80-year-old restaurant in the Teramachi Temple district (near Myoryuji Temple), this one is popular with Japanese women, perhaps because it's a nonsmoking restaurant. The menu includes tempura, Kaga kaiseki, sushi, and steak, but most popular are the obento with a variety of dishes for ¥1,732 to ¥3,465 ($14–$29/£7–£14).

①24 Kitama ★★ VARIED JAPANESE/KAGA Sitting on tatami mats, you'll have a pleasant view of moss-covered greenery at this modern restaurant with a 140-year-old history. The Kojitsu obento (¥2,100/$17/£8.50), served in an upright lunch box, features sashimi, small pieces of pork and fish, fried shrimp, a soybean patty, and various seasonal vegetables. The jibun teishoku (¥1,890/$16/£8), with duck stew, clear soup, pickled vegetables, rice, and hors d'oeuvres, is also quite satisfying. The restaurant is also known for its tempura and kaiseki (artfully prepared multicourse meals) starting at ¥3,990 ($33/£17).

2-3-3 Katamachi. ☎ 076/261-7176. Set meal ¥1,050-¥3,990 ($8.75-$33/£4.40-£17). Daily 11:30am-8:30pm (last order). Closed irregularly. Loop Bus: Katamachi (stop no. 14, 2 min.). 4 Osaka

553km (343 miles) W of Tokyo; 42km (26 miles) SW of Kyoto; 339km (212 miles) E of Hiroshima

Although its history stretches back almost 1,500 years, Osaka first gained prominence when Hideyoshi Toyotomi, the most powerful lord in the land, built Japan's most magnificent castle here in the 16th century. To develop resources for his castle town, he persuaded merchants from other parts of the nation to resettle in Osaka. During the Edo Period, the city became an important distribution center as feudal lords from the surrounding region sent their rice to merchants in Osaka, who in turn sent the rice onward to Tokyo and other cities. As the merchants prospered, the town grew and such arts as Kabuki and Bunraku flourished. With money and leisure to spare, the merchants also developed a refined taste for food.

Nowadays, Osaka, capital of Osaka Prefecture on the southern coast of western Honshu, is the mover and shaker of this region of Japan, known as Kansai. An industrial city with a population of about 2.6 million, it's the third-most populated city in Japan (after Tokyo and Yokohama). The legacy of the city's commercial beginnings is still present; Osakans are usually characterized as being outgoing and clever at money affairs. (One Osakan greeting is "Are you making any money?") Osaka has a reputation throughout Japan as an international and progressive business center and is known for its food, castle, port, underground shopping arcades, and Bunraku puppet theater. It also boasts the oldest state temple in Japan, one of nation's best aquariums, and the only Universal Studios outside the United States. Because of its international airport, it also serves as a major gateway to the rest of Japan. Indeed, some travelers base themselves in Osaka, taking day trips to Kyoto, Nara, Kobe, and Mount Koya.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE

BY PLANE Osaka's Kansai International Airport (KIX; ☎ 072/455-2500; www.kansai-airport.or.jp) receives both domestic and international flights; for details on the international carriers that fly here, see "Getting There," in chapter 2.

The two major domestic airlines that fly into KIX are Japan Airlines (JAL; ☎ 800/525-3663 in the U.S. and Canada, or 0120/25-5971 toll-free in Japan; www.jal.com) and All Nippon Airways (ANA; ☎ 800/235-9262 in the U.S. and Canada, or 0120/029-222 toll-free in Japan; www.anaskyweb.com). From Tokyo's Haneda and Narita airports, flight time is about 1¼ hours. A JAL fare is ¥20,600 ($172/£86) one-way.

Arriving at KIX Arriving at KIX, you experience Japan at its modern best. Constructed on a huge synthetic island 4.8km (3 miles) off the mainland in Osaka Bay and connected to the city by a six-lane highway and two-rail line bridge, this 24-hour airport boasts the latest in technology—glass elevators ferry passengers to the four floors of the complex in an atrium setting, dozens of computers spread throughout the terminal provide Internet access for ¥100 (83¢/45p) per 10 minutes, and touch screens provide information in many languages. And, like the city itself, it's traveler-friendly: Signs are clear and abundant, and facilities—which range from restaurants and shops to a post office (second floor south, near JAL counter; daily 8am–7pm), ATMs that accept foreign credit cards, a children's playroom in the international departure area (free of charge), and dental and medical clinics—are seemingly endless.

Getting from KIX to Osaka Taxis are prohibitively expensive: Expect to spend at least ¥17,000 ($142/£71) for a cab to the city center. Easiest, especially if you have luggage, is the Kansai Airport Transportation Enterprise (☎ 072/461-1374; www.kate.co.jp), which provides bus service to major stations and hotels in Osaka. Most fares cost ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50), and tickets can be purchased at counters in the arrival lobby. Another bus service, the OCAT Shuttle 880 (☎ 06/6635-3030), travels from KIX to the Osaka City Air Terminal (a downtown bus station for shuttle buses going to the airport), next to JR Namba Station (the major train station in Namba) in the heart of Osaka, every 30 minutes for ¥880 ($7.35/£3.70).

If you're taking the train into Osaka (stations: Osaka, Tennoji, or Shin-Osaka) or even farther to Kyoto, simply walk through KIX's second-floor connecting concourse (baggage carts are designed to go on escalators and as far as train ticket gates) and board the limited express JR Haruka, which travels to Tennoji and Shin-Osaka stations before continuing to Kyoto. The fare to Shin-Osaka is ¥2,470 ($21/£11) for the 45-minute trip, with departures generally twice an hour. Slower is the JR rapid (JR Kanku Kaisoku), which travels from the airport to Tennoji and Osaka stations before continuing to Kobe. The 65-minute trip to Osaka Station costs ¥1,160 ($9.65/£4.85). Note: When returning to the airport from Osaka, make sure you're in a compartment that goes all the way to KIX; not all of them do.

If you have a Japan Rail Pass, you can ride these trains for free. Exchange your voucher at the Kansai Airport (rail) Station on the third floor (daily 6am–11:30pm).

Next to the JR trains in the same station at the airport is the private Nankai Line, which has three types of trains to Namba Nankai Station. The sleek rapid a (pronounced “rapito alpha”) train reaches Namba in 30 minutes. There’s one train an hour, and ordinary reserved seats cost ¥1,390 ($12/£6). The rapit b (“rapito beta”) at the same price stops at more stations, including Sakai, and takes 35 minutes. You can also take an ordinary Nankai Express Line for ¥890 ($7.40/£3.70) and reach Namba in 42 minutes.

Itami Airport If you’re arriving on a domestic flight, chances are you’ll arrive at Itami Airport (☎ 06/6856-6781), north of the city. Buses connect to various parts of Osaka; to Osaka Station, the ride takes 25 minutes and costs ¥620 ($5.15/£2.60).

BY TRAIN Osaka is 3 hours from Tokyo by Shinkansen bullet train; tickets are ¥13,240 ($110/£55) for a reserved seat (the Nozomi Shinkansen, which is not valid with a Japan Rail Pass, is faster and more expensive). All Shinkansen bullet trains arrive at Shin-Osaka Station at the city’s northern edge. To get from Shin-Osaka Station to Osaka Station and other points south, use the most convenient public transportation, the Midosuji Line subway; the subway stop at Osaka Station is called Umeda Station. JR trains also make runs between Shin-Osaka and Osaka stations.

If you haven’t turned in your voucher for your Japan Rail Pass yet, you can do so at Osaka Station’s or Shin-Osaka Station’s Green Windows (daily 5:30am–11pm).

If you’re arriving in Osaka from Kobe or Kyoto, the commuter lines, which will deliver you directly to Osaka Station in the heart of the city, are more convenient than the Shinkansen, which will deposit you at out-of-the-way Shin-Osaka Station.

BY BUS JR night buses depart from both Tokyo (Yaesu exit; ☎ 03/3215-1468) and Shinjuku (new south exit; ☎ 03/5379-0874) stations several times nightly, arriving at Osaka Station the next morning. The trip from Tokyo takes about 8 hours and costs ¥8,610 ($72/£36). Cheaper yet are JR day buses from Tokyo Station to Osaka Station costing ¥6,000 ($50/£25), and a twice-a-night JR bus from Tokyo station and once a night from Shinjuku station costing only ¥5,000 ($42/£21). Tickets can be bought at any major JR station or at a travel agency.

VISITOR INFORMATION

AT THE AIRPORT The Kansai Tourist Information Center (☎ 072/456-6025; daily 9am–9pm Nov–Mar, 8:30am–8:30pm Apr–Oct) counters are near both the south and north end of the International Arrivals Lobby. IN TOWN At Osaka Station, the Visitors Information Center Umeda (☎ 06/6345-2189; daily 8am–8pm) is at the east (Midosuji) exit of JR Osaka Station in a kiosk; the English-speaking staff gives out good maps of the city and can assist in securing a hotel room. Another center is just east of the central exit of Shin-Osaka Station on the third floor (☎ 06/6305-3311; daily 8am–8pm). Note that if you’re arriving by Shinkansen, you’ll be up on the fourth floor, so simply go down one flight to the tourist office. At JR Namba Station, you’ll find the Visitors Information Center Namba (☎ 06/6211-3551; daily 8am–8pm) across from Starbucks in the basement of the Midosuji Grand Building (exit 24 of the underground) on the northwest corner of Midosuji and Senichimae. Other tourist information centers are located just outside Universal City Station (☎ 06/4804-3824; daily 9am–8pm) and at JR Tennoji Station (☎ 06/6774-3077; daily 8am–8pm).

To find out what’s going on in Osaka, buy a copy of Kansai Time Out (www.kto.co.jp), a monthly magazine sold at bookstores for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) with information on sightseeing, festivals, restaurants, and other items of interest pertaining to Osaka, Kobe, and Kyoto. Kansai Scene (www.kansaiscene.com) is a free bilingual magazine also available online with articles, reviews, listings, and information on the Kansai area.

Another source of information available free at tourist offices and at many hotels is Meet Osaka, a quarterly pamphlet with maps and information on sightseeing, Bunraku, festivals, concerts, and special exhibits and events. ORIENTATION

Osaka is divided into various wards, or ku, the most important of which for visitors are Kita-ku (North Ward), which encompasses the area around Osaka Station; and Chuo-ku (Central Ward), where you'll find Osaka Castle and Namba, the heart of the city. Some city maps divide Osaka by location: Kita (North), around Osaka Station; Minami (South), around Namba and Shinsaibashi; Higashi (East), around Osaka Castle; and Nishi (West) which is Osaka's bay area. Shin-Osaka Station, three subway stations north of Osaka (Umeda) Station, is a tourist wasteland, though it does have a few hotels.

AROUND OSAKA STATION Kita-ku embraces the area around Osaka and Umeda stations and includes many of the city's top hotels, the city's tallest buildings, lots of restaurants, and several shopping complexes, mostly underground.

AROUND OSAKA CASTLE Osaka Castle, which lies to the east, is the historic center of the city. It's in Chuo-ku, the Central Ward, which stretches through the city center.

MINAMI/NAMBA Four subway stops south of Umeda Station is Namba (also referred to as Minami, or South Osaka), with a cluster of stations serving subways, JR trains, and Kintetsu and Nankai lines, all of which are connected to one another via underground passageways. This is the heart of the city, bustling with the spirit of old Osaka, where you'll find more hotels, Osaka's liveliest eating and entertainment district centered on a narrow street called Dotombori (also written Dotonbori), and

Tips A Note on Directions

For all the attractions, accommodations, and restaurants listed below, I've included the nearest subway or JR station followed by the walking time to the establishment once you reach the indicated station (in parentheses).

major shopping areas such as the enclosed pedestrian streets Shinsaibashi-Suji and America-Mura with imported goods from America. Farther south is Den Den Town, Osaka's electronics district; and Dogayasuji, famous for restaurant supplies. Connecting Kita-ku with Namba is Osaka's main street, Midosuji Dori, a wide boulevard lined with gingko trees and name-brand shops.

AROUND TENNOJI PARK At the south end of the JR Loop Line is Tennoji-ku, which was once a thriving temple town with Shitennoji Temple at its center. In addition to a park with a zoo, it boasts Spa World, one of Japan's biggest and most luxurious public bathhouses.

OSAKA BAY & PORT West of the city around Osaka Bay is where you will find Universal Studios Japan and Universal CityWalk shopping and dining complex; Tempozan Harbour Village with its first-class aquarium, shopping complex, and Suntory Museum; and domestic and international ferry terminals.

GETTING AROUND

Despite its size, I find Osaka easier to get around than other large Japanese cities because there are lots of English-language signs and information. The exception is Osaka Station, used for JR trains, and its adjoining Umeda Station, used by subway lines and private railway lines Hankyu and Hanshin. Underground passages and shopping arcades complicate navigation; there's no escaping—you will get lost.

When exploring by foot, it helps to know that most roads running east and west end in "dori," while roads running north and south end in "suji," which means "avenue."

BY SUBWAY Osaka's user-friendly subway network is easy to use because all lines are color-coded and the station names are in English (even English-language announcements are on many lines). The red Midosuji Line is the most important one for visitors; it passes through Shin-Osaka Station and on to Umeda (the subway station next to Osaka Station), Shinsaibashi, Namba, and Tennoji. Fares begin at ¥200 ($1.65/85p) and increase according to the distance traveled.

TRANSPORTATION PASSES If you think you'll be traveling a lot by subway on a given day, consider purchasing a 1-Day Pass (Ichinichi-Joshaken) for ¥850 ($7.10/£3.55), which allows unlimited rides on subways and buses all day. On the 20th of each month (or on the following day if the 20th falls on a Sun or holiday) and every Friday, this pass (nicknamed No-My-Car-Day) costs just ¥600 ($5/£2.50) and offers slight discounts to several attractions. There's also a prepaid card for ¥3,000 ($25/£13) that gives you ¥3,300 ($28/£14) worth of travel on subways and buses in Osaka.

For sightseeing, there's also the Osaka Unlimited 1-Day Pass which costs ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) and allows unlimited rides on subways, city buses, and private railways in Osaka plus free entrance to 24 attractions, including Osaka Castle, Floating Garden Observatory, and Osaka International Peace Center. If you're a visitor to Japan, you're also entitled to the Osaka Unlimited 2-Day Pass for ¥2,700 ($23/£12), valid only on subways but also providing the same free admission as the 1-Day pass but for 2 days; for this you must show your passport.

For trips outside Osaka, the Kansai Thru Pass (Surutto Kansai) allows foreigners (you must show your passport) to ride subways, private railways (no JR trains), and buses in Osaka, Kyoto, Nara, and Kobe, with a 2-day pass costing ¥3,800 ($32/£16) and a 3-day pass costing ¥5,000 ($42/£21). Children pay half-price. You would have to do quite a bit of traveling to make this worthwhile.

The above passes can be purchased at KIX KAA Travel Desk (first floor international arrivals) or at the Visitor Information Centers in Osaka, Namba, or Shin Osaka.

For JR trains, there's the Kansai Area Pass available for 1 day (¥2,000/$17/£8.50) to 4 days (¥6,000/$50/£25), available at major JR stations in the Kansai area.

BY JR TRAIN A Japan Railways train called the Osaka Kanjo Line, or JR Loop Line, passes through Osaka Station and makes a loop around the central part of the city (similar to the Yamanote Line in Tokyo); take it to visit Osaka Castle. Fares begin at ¥120 ($1/50p).

SEEING THE SIGHTS NEAR OSAKA STATION

Floating Garden Observatory (Kuchu Teien Tenbodai) This futuristic observatory 167m (557 ft.) in the air looks like a space ship floating between the two towers of the Umeda Sky Building. Take the superfast glass elevator from the East Tower building's third floor; you'll then take a glass-enclosed escalator that also bridges the two towers before depositing you on the 39th floor. I'm not afraid of heights, but taking an escalator over thin air in an earthquake-plagued nation certainly caught my attention; it made the "floating" observatory feel safe in comparison. From here, you have an unparalleled view of Osaka, making it a popular nightspot for couples on dates. My own interest in the place, however, has waned since the female attendants stopped wearing cone-shaped hats.

Umeda Sky Building, 1-1-88 Oyodo-naka, Kita-ku. ☎ 06/6440-3901. www.skybldg.co.jp. Admission ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Daily 10am-10:30pm. Station: JR Osaka or Umeda (Central North exit of JR Osaka Station, 9 min.).

Museum of Oriental Ceramics (Toyotomi Bijutsukan) ★★☆☆ Finds This modern facility, about a 15-minute walk south of Osaka Station on Nakanoshima Island in the Dojima River, is my favorite museum in Osaka. Indeed, its 2,700-piece collection of Chinese, Korean, and Japanese ceramics—of which 300 are on display at any one time on a rotating basis—ranks as one of the finest in the world. Built specifically for the collection, the museum does a superb job showcasing the exquisite pieces as the masterpieces they truly are, in darkened rooms that utilize natural light and computerized natural-light simulation. Korean celadon, Chinese ceramics from the Song and Ming dynasties, Arita ware from the Edo Period, and much more are on display. Even if you've never given ceramics more than a passing glance, you're likely to come away with a heightened sense of appreciation. You'll want to spend 30 minutes or more here.

1–1–26 Nakanoshima, Kita-ku. ☎ 06/6223-0055. www.moco.or.jp. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) students, free for children. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5pm. Closed during exhibition changes. Station: Yodoyabashi or Kitahama (5 min.).

Sega Amusement Theme Park (Umeda Joypolis) ★★ (Kids) I suppose it could be argued that you haven't experienced today's Japan unless you've visited at least one Joypolis, the reigning king of amusement arcades. This one, on the eighth and ninth floors of a shopping arcade complete with a Ferris wheel on top, overloads the senses with lots of flashing lights, bells and whistles, and throngs of squealing kids and teenagers. In addition to arcade games, virtual rides simulate gliding through the air or shooting the rapids of a wild river. Note: Children under the age of 16 aren't allowed here after 7pm, those under 18 aren't allowed after 10pm and some "rides" carry height restrictions, with rules enforced by what—the joy police?

HEP FIVE, Umeda Kita-ku. ☎ 06/6366-3647. Free admission; attractions ¥500–¥600 ($4.15–$5/£2.10–£2.50). Daily 11am–11pm (you must enter by 10:15pm). Station: JR Osaka or Umeda (5 min.).

AROUND OSAKA CASTLE

Osaka Castle (Osaka-jo) ★★ First built in the 1580s on the order of Toyotomi Hideyoshi, Osaka Castle was the largest castle in Japan, a magnificent structure used by Toyotomi as a military stronghold from which to wage war against rebellious feudal lords in far-flung provinces. By the time he died in 1598, Toyotomi had accomplished what no man had done before: crushed his enemies and unified all of Japan under his command.

After Toyotomi's death, Tokugawa Ieyasu seized power and established his shogunate government in Edo. But Toyotomi's heirs had ideas of their own: Considering Osaka Castle impregnable, they plotted to overthrow the Tokugawa government. In 1615, Tokugawa sent troops to Osaka where they not only annihilated the Toyotomi insurrectionists but destroyed Osaka Castle. The Tokugawas rebuilt the castle in 1629, but the main tower was destroyed by lightning 36 years later, and the rest burned in 1868 as the shogunate made their last stand against imperial forces and what later became known as the Meiji Restoration.

The present Osaka Castle dates from 1931 and was extensively renovated in 1997. Built of ferroconcrete, it's not as massive as the original but is still one of Japan's most famous castles and is impressive with its massive stone walls, black and gold-leaf trim, and copper roof. Its eight-story keep (donjon) rises 39m (130 ft.), with an observation platform on the top floor offering bird's-eye views of the city. The rest of the donjon houses a museum that uses videos, holograms, models, and artifacts to describe the life and times of Toyotomi Hideyoshi and the history of the castle. Unfortunately, most explanations are in Japanese only, but there's plenty to see, including a folding screen with scenes of the intense fighting that took place between Toyotomi and Tokugawa forces, samurai armor and gear, a full-scale reproduction of Toyotomi's Gold Tea Room, and a model of Osaka Castle during the Toyotomi Era. If you want, you can have your photo taken in period clothing for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25). You'll probably spend about 45 minutes here.

1–1 Osakajo, Chuo-ku. ☎ 06/6941-3044. www.osakacastle.net. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, free for junior-high-age children and younger. Daily 9am–5pm. Station: Osakajo-Koen on the JR Loop Line or Morinomiya (15 min.); or Temmabashi or Osaka Business Park (10 min.).

Osaka International Peace Center ★ Located on the southern edge of Osaka Castle Park, this museum strives for global peace by educating present and future generations about the horrors of war, related by those who survived it. Unlike other museums in Japan dedicated to peace—including those in Hiroshima and Nagasaki—this one does not shy away from Japan's role in the Asian conflict, including its war campaign in China, the abduction of Koreans to work in dangerous areas, and massacres committed by Japanese in Singapore, Malaysia, and elsewhere. But its main focus is on wartime death and destruction, with personal testimonies of air raid survivors (15,000 people died during World War II air raids on Osaka), displays centering on the suicide attacks by kamikaze pilots at the end of the war, graphic photographs of Hiroshima and Nagasaki after the atomic bombs were dropped, and a section devoted to the horrors of the Auschwitz concentration camp. You'll probably spend 45 sobering minutes here.

AROUND TENNOJI

Shitennoji Temple Founded 1,400 years ago as the first—and therefore oldest—officially established temple in Japan, Shitennoji Temple is the spiritual heart of Osaka. It was constructed in 593 by Prince Shotoku, who is credited with introducing Buddhism to Japan. However, like most wooden structures in Japan, its buildings have been destroyed repeatedly through the centuries by fire and war, including the 1615 Tokugawa raid on Osaka Castle, and World War II. And through the centuries, the buildings have been faithfully reconstructed exactly as they were in the 6th century, with the Main Gate, the five-story Buddhist Pagoda, the Main Golden Hall, and the Lecture Hall all on a north-south axis. Japanese flock to Shitennoji to pay respects to Prince Shotoku, who remains a revered, popular figure even today. There's also a turtle sanctuary. But the best thing to do here is wander the temple's newly restored Japanese Landscape Garden, first laid out during the Tokugawa regime and a lovely oasis with its manicured bushes, meandering streams, and waterfall.

Shitennoji 1-11-18, Tennoji-ku. ☎ 06/6771-0066. Admission to temple buildings ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25); garden admission ¥200 ($1.65/85p). Daily 8:30am–4:30pm (garden daily 10am–4pm). Station: Shitennoji-mae Yuhigaoka (exit 4, 5 min.); or JR Tennoji (north exit, 10 min.).

Spa World ★ This is one of the most luxurious and ambitious bathhouses I've seen. It can accommodate up to 5,000 people and draws upon hot springs brought up from 891m (2,970 ft.) below the earth's surface. On its roof, in a large hangarlike room, is a covered swimming complex that includes a pool, a slide, a wave pool, a sunning terrace, and a wading pool (bathing-suit rentals available). The rest of the large complex is divided into themed, geographical bathing zones, which are rotated between the sexes and include luxurious locker rooms. At the Asian Zone, for example, Middle Eastern music and tiled mosaics set the tone for the Turkish bath, while China is represented by a medicinal bath. Massage is also available. If you're timid about going to a public bath, this one will convert you. If you're already a fan, you'll want to move in—note, however, that at 5am you're charged for a new day. And sorry, people with tattoos—associated with the Japanese mafia—are not allowed.

3-2-24 Ebisu-higashi, Naniwa-ku. ☎ 06/6631-0001. Admission weekdays ¥2,700 ($23/£11) adults, ¥1,500 ($13/£6.25) children; weekends and holidays ¥3,000 ($25/£13) adults, ¥1,700 ($14/£7) children. Daily 10am–8:45am. Station: Shin-Imamiya or Dobutsuenmae (2 min.).

OSAKA BAY AREA

Osaka's well-developed waterfront offers a quick getaway for Osakans wishing to escape urban life. In addition to shopping malls, an aquarium, and other attractions, it boasts Universal Studios Japan, one of Japan's major draws.

Osaka Aquarium (Kaiyukan) ★★☆☆ Kids Of all the aquariums in Japan, this is probably my favorite. One of the world's largest—encompassing 26,570 sq. m (286,000 sq. ft.) and containing 2.9 million gallons of water—it's constructed around the theme “Ring of Fire,” which refers to the volcanic perimeter encircling the Pacific Ocean. Tours begin through a tunnel filled with reef fish, followed by an escalator ride to the eighth floor; from there, you'll pass through 16 different habitats ranging from arctic to tropical as you follow a spiraling corridor back to the ground floor, starting with the daylight world—a Japanese forest—above the ocean's surface and proceeding past Antarctica, Monterey Bay, the Great Barrier Reef, and other ecosystems as you travel to the depths of the ocean floor. The walls of the aquarium tank are constructed of huge acrylic glass sheets, making you feel as if you're immersed in the ocean. You'll see 30,000 specimens representing 580 species; stars of the show include whale sharks (the largest fish in captivity), Antarctic penguins, the odd-looking ocean sunfish (which has the circumference of a truck tire but is as flat as a pancake), and the Japan giant spider crab with its incredible 3m (9¾-ft.) span. English-spoken audio guides are available for rent for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25). Allow about 1½ hours to tour the aquarium, avoiding weekends.

1–1–10 Kaigan-dori, Minato-ku. ☎ 06/6576-5501. www.kaiyukan.com. Admission ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) adults, ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) children 7–15, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.65) children 4–6. Daily 10am–8pm. Closed 7 days a year (in June and in winter). Station: Osakako (5 min.).

Suntory Museum ★ The Suntory Museum, which you can tour in about 30 minutes, is that fantastically modern-looking structure you see near the aquarium, designed by well-known architect Tadao Ando. It stages changing exhibitions in airy rooms against a dramatic background of the sea beyond its glass walls. Past exhibits have included Art Deco, posters by Toulouse-Lautrec, paintings by German expressionists, and glass by Emile Gallé; call or check the Meet Osaka quarterly for current information. There's also a 3-D IMAX theater with scenes so real you'll think you are part of the film, a good museum shop, the Sky Lounge (perfect for taking a break), and a restaurant, Café Solare (p. 399).

1–5–10 Kaigan-dori, Minato-ku. ☎ 06/6577-0001. www.suntory.com/culture-sports/smt. Admission to either museum or IMAX theater ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) adults; ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) seniors, high-school, and university students; ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) children. Museum Tues–Sun 10:30am–7:30pm; IMAX Tues–Sun 11am–7pm (last show). Station: Osakako (5 min.).

Tips Mutineers Need Not Apply

The quickest and most scenic way to travel between Suntory Museum/aquarium and Universal Studios is via the Captain Line shuttle boat (☎ 06/6573-8222), which departs every 30 minutes and charges ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for the 10-minute ride. A bonus: The boat ticket includes a ¥200 ($1.65/85p) discount for the aquarium.

Universal Studios Japan (★★★ Kids) Following the tradition of Universal's Hollywood and Orlando theme parks, this park takes guests on a fantasy trip through the world of American blockbuster movies, with thrill rides, live entertainment, back-lot streets, restaurants, shops, and other attractions based on actual movies. Board a boat for a harrowing encounter with a great white straight out of Jaws, escape a T-Rex as you roller-coaster your way through a setting of Jurassic Park, fly and leap at high speed among skyscrapers in the Amazing Adventures of Spider Man—The Ride, and see, feel, and smell Sesame Street 4-D Movie Magic or Shrek's 4-D Adventure (4-D in movie lingo means there are smells and other sensations). Unfortunately, most of the attractions have been dubbed into Japanese (I wonder why the original English isn't available on audio guide), so it helps to know the movies beforehand. Plan for an entire day here, but note that it is immensely popular: Avoid weekends, arrive early, and buy a Universal Express Pass Booklet, which allows priority entry into designated rides. The price of these varies by type, age, and advance purchase, so check the website (go to "Studio Guide") for the one that suits your needs.

2-1-33 Sakurajima, Konohana. ☎ 06/6465-3000. www.usj.co.jp. Studio Pass to all attractions ¥5,800 ($48/£24) adults, ¥4,800 ($40/£20) seniors, ¥3,900 ($33/£17) children 4-11. Daily, generally 9am-7pm (to 9pm in peak season), but hours vary so call ahead or ask tourist information. Station: Universal City (5 min.).

IN NEARBY TAKARAZUKA

Northwest of Osaka, the town of Takarazuka is synonymous with the all-female Takarazuka Troupe. Founded in 1914 to attract vacationers to Takarazuka, the troupe proved instantly popular with the general public, whose taste turned from traditional Japanese drama to lively Western musicals and entertainment. Performances are held at the Takarazuka Grand Theatre (☎ 0570/00-5100; <http://kageki.hankyu.co.jp/english/index.html>) most days throughout the year (closed Wed), usually at 1pm on weekdays and at 11am and 3pm on weekends and holidays. Tickets range from about ¥3,500 to ¥9,000 ($29-$75/£15-£38). For more information on the troupe, see the "Takarazuka Kagekidan" section on p. 213.

SHOPPING

Osaka is famous in Japan for shopping, in no small part because of the discerning nature of the Osakans themselves. Osaka, after all, developed as a commercial town of merchants—and who knows merchandise better than the merchants themselves?

Osaka must rank as one of the world's leading cities in underground shopping arcades. Enter the vast underground arcades in Umeda (where the JR, Hanshin, subway, and Hankyu train lines intersect) with such names as White Umeda, Hankyu Sanbangai, Diamor Osaka, and Dojima Underground Shopping Center, and you may never emerge in this lifetime. Crysta Nagahori, connecting Nagahoribashi Station to Yotsubashi-suji, has a glass atrium ceiling, flowing streams of water, and 100 shops, making it one of the largest—if not the largest—shopping malls in Japan. Nearby are Namba Walk, Nan-nan Town, and Namba City, all interconnected by underground passageways.

There are plenty of aboveground shopping options as well. Den Den Town (Station: Nipponbashi or Ebisucho) is Osaka's electronics shopping region (Den is short for "electric"), similar to Tokyo's Akihabara and just as good. Some 200 open-fronted shops here deal in electrical and electronic equipment, from rice cookers and refrigerators to DVD players, MP3 players, calculators, cameras, and computers. As in Tokyo, shops specializing in manga, anime, and costumes have also moved in, especially on Sakai Suji. Mandarake, 3–7–6 Nipponbashi (☎ 06/6645-0772), is one of the most well-known (and hard to miss with its bright red exterior). It's open daily noon to 8pm, but most stores here are open daily 10am to 8pm.

Running north to south and a few blocks east of Nankai Namba Station is Sen-nichimae Doguya-suji, a covered shopping lane with about 45 open-fronted shops selling all the pots, pans, dishes, and implements you'd ever need to prepare and serve Japanese food. Chopsticks, chopstick rests, pottery, lacquerware, frying pans, trays, kitchen knives, rice bowls, plastic food, and lots of gift ideas are here at very inexpensive prices—not surprising, as Osaka is known as the food capital of Japan.

Midosuji Dori, a wide boulevard lined with ginkgo trees running north and south in the heart of the city, is the city's calling card for name-brand boutiques. Just to the east is Shinsaibashi-suji, a covered promenade with many long-established shops, some dating back to the Edo Period. On the other side of Midosuji Dori is America-Mura, a popular spot for young Japanese shopping for T-shirts, Hawaiian shirts, ripped jeans, and other American fashions at inflated prices; its biggest marketplace is Big Step. Teens also flock to Marui 0101, a seven-story department store on the corner of Shinsaibashi-suji and Nankai Dori, and to HEP FIVE, a huge shopping complex near Umeda with a Joypolis amusement arcade and a Ferris wheel on top.

Universal CityWalk, near Universal Studios, offers everything from Hello Kitty goods to Italian imports. In Rinkan Town near KIX airport is Rinku Premium Outlets, one of the largest outlet malls in Japan, with some 150 shops.

WHERE TO STAY

Most of Osaka's hotels are clustered around Osaka Station. In the listings below, the nearest subway or JR station is indicated followed by the number of minutes it takes to walk from the station to the hotel (in parentheses).

AROUND OSAKA & SHIN-OSAKA STATIONS

Very Expensive

The Ritz-Carlton, Osaka ★★☆☆ Opened in 1997, The Ritz-Carlton's first Japanese venture rejected the grandiose marble lobbies popular in Japan favored at the time, choosing instead a small and intimate one, done in old-world style with overstuffed sofas, 100-year-old Persian carpets, Italian marble fireplaces, stunning flower arrangements, crystal chandeliers, antiques, and museum-grade landscape paintings and portraits from the 18th and 19th centuries. Unique standouts include The Bar with its 110 kinds of whiskey, 50 kinds of cigars, and live music nightly; La Baie, rated by many as Osaka's best French restaurant; a very popular afternoon tea served in the lobby lounge with live classical music; and a health club free to hotel guests. Stylish rooms—located from the 24th through 37th floors and among the largest in the city—offer panoramic views, especially from deluxe corner rooms, as well as goose-down pillows and comforters; terry robes; and 37-inch TVs with hook-ups for video cameras, iPods, and computers. Spacious marble bathrooms feature lit magnifying mirrors, separate areas for the shower stall, tub, and toilet, and two sinks.

Rihga Royal Hotel ★ Osaka's oldest hotel opened in 1935, later expanding and becoming part of the Rihga chain. Located on Nakanoshima, an island in the middle of the Dojima River in the heart of Osaka (a 10-min. ride from Osaka Station), it enjoys a good reputation among Japanese and a high occupancy rate on weekends, due in no small part to the convention center next door. It offers a wide range of facilities, including a 60-store shopping arcade, a deli with health-conscious choices, and—at the other end of the extreme—the best-stocked hotel gourmet foods shop I've seen, with 700 eye-popping pastries and delicacies. It also has one of my favorite lobby lounges in the city—a restful oasis where you can sip your drink and watch a cascading waterfall against a backdrop of cliffs and foliage. Comfortable guest rooms have a range of rates and interior designs, from modern to classical drawing-room style. Of the hotel's many restaurants, most renowned is the Chambord, offering French cuisine and views from the 29th floor. In short, you could do much worse than this hotel despite the crowds.

Westin Osaka ★★ Located next to the futuristic-looking Umeda Sky Building (with its Floating Garden Observatory), the Westin has generously sized guest rooms with expansive city views and a laid-back, yet chic, interior that make it a top choice for business travelers and tourists alike. Guest rooms, which increase in price the higher they are, come with Heavenly beds and all you might expect, including shower stalls separated from tubs and, on higher floors, two basins instead of one. L-shaped corner rooms are especially good, with separate sleeping and lounging areas. Joggers take note: There's a map featuring 3- and 5-mile runs from the hotel.

Moderate

Hotel Granvia Osaka Kids You can't get any closer to Osaka Station than this hotel, with discounts for holders of Japan Rail Passes making it even more attractive for train travelers. Parents might also rejoice at discounts offered for Universal Studios. But there are prices to pay: a ground-floor lobby that's hard to find in the maze that is Osaka Station, and elevators that are crowded with hungry masses on their way to the hotel's many 19th-floor restaurants. Rooms, on floors 22 to 26, are cramped except those on deluxe floors. Families may want to opt for one of the huge “Corner Family” rooms (though they’re a steep ¥58,905/$490/£245), while those in search of R&R might find relaxation in the 24th-floor Freja rooms, designed with unique Scandinavian furnishings and aromatherapy amenities. The hotel provides direct access to the Daimaru department store in the basement.

Hotel Laforet Shin-Osaka I can’t think of any reason to stay near Shin-Osaka Station except for the sheer convenience of nearby bullet trains, as there are no attractions here and the rest of Osaka is just a short subway ride away. If you’re unconvinced, this modern hotel is your best bet, just a minute’s walk from the station and offering comfortable rooms with contemporary decor. Deluxe rooms are swankier, with massage chairs and round desks.

Inexpensive

Family Inn Fifty’s Edobori ★ Value This motel-like facility, south of Nakanoshima island, offers low prices and no-nonsense clean but small rooms, outfitted with double bed, sofa bed, wall-mounted TV, and tiled bathroom (but no closet). Check-in is automated, but humans behind the front desk can help with the process (you’ll need a credit card). You pay extra for toothbrushes and slippers here. The catch is that the place is a bit of a chore to reach from Osaka Station (you have to change subway lines) or take JR bus no. 88 from Osaka Station 15 minutes to Tosabori Ni Chome stop, then a 2-minute walk. Once you’re settled, you’ll find its location fine.

Hotel Il Monte ★★ Finds Open since 1997, this smart-looking hotel has a convenient location that brings in both business and leisure travelers and is my top choice for budget accommodations near the station. A small reception on the third floor has a helpful staff. Breakfast is the only meal available, and in the lobby you’ll find coffee and computers with Internet connection available free to guests. AROUND OSAKA CASTLE

New Otani Osaka   In a business park that's home to corporate headquarters for KDD, NEC, Sumitomo, and other big companies, this Leading Hotel of the World member attracts both business and tourist clientele. Its proximity to Osaka Castle Park, popular with joggers, families, and young Japanese, and its varied public facilities, ranging from a multitude of restaurants to a fitness club, give the property something of an "urban resort" atmosphere. Everything about the hotel's public spaces is visually pleasing, from the airy, four-story atrium lobby with a sunken lounge in its center to the indoor pool with its glass-vaulted ceiling. Rooms, however, are rather standard, with rates based on size, height, and view. The best rooms provide the city's most dramatic views of Osaka Castle, which is lit at night, but at fairly hefty prices.

Hotel Nikko Osaka  A white monolith soaring 32 stories aboveground (and with four stories of shopping and parking underground), the Nikko has a great location above a subway station and is right on Osaka's most fashionable boulevard, Midosuji Dori, making its lobby lounge a popular spot for locals meeting friends. In fact, location is mainly what you're paying for here: There is no health club, and guests are overwhelmingly business travelers. Rooms have a pleasing, clean modern design, with indirect lighting, focused bedside lights, LCD TVs, and air purification/ionization machines, and because there are no high buildings to obstruct views, city panoramas are a plus from most floors. Still, you'll pay more for rooms on higher floors and for more space. This is a good choice if you want to be in the midst of Osaka's shopping and nightlife.

Swissôtel Nankai Osaka ★★ This 36-story hotel exudes luxury, from its sophisticated, four-story lobby to its spacious, well-appointed rooms. Not surprisingly, guests include international flight crews in addition to tourists and business executives. At arrival at Nankai Namba Station, all guests have to do is use the hotel courtesy phone on platform 9 to let alert staff they need help with their luggage, and a helpful concierge desk offers a handy guide telling how to reach many tourist sights and nearby cities. Spacious rooms have wide windows providing city views. For business travelers, Business Advantage rooms offer ergonomic chairs, larger desks, and office supplies, the best of which have a Japanese atmosphere with a low bed on a raised tatami floor.

Hotel Metro The 21 Value Opened in 1996, this hotel has a great location for night owls, just a few minutes' walk from Dotombori, Osaka's main nightlife district. Its mostly single rooms, along with 100 twins and doubles, are very small but clean and modern, with higher rates charged for higher floors. There's also a ladies' floor for extra security, decorated with a more feminine touch and adding women's toiletries. Stock your empty fridge with purchases from the ground-floor 7-Eleven.

Hotel Dormy-Inn One of the few inexpensive hotels in the shopping and nightlife area of Shinsaibashi, and the only one in America-mura, this 2005 chain entry offers standard business-type rooms, spotlessly clean with two kinds of pillows and sliding window panels to cut out light and highway noises, as well as 10 combination rooms with tatami areas and twin beds (a bargain at ¥9,200/$77/£38 for a single). Public baths made of cedar are a plus, but alas, little English is spoken.

Of

course, at these rates, you can't expect accommodations much larger than shoeboxes. There are no views to speak of, though rooms facing Yasaka Jinja shrine are quieter.

Hotel Nikko Bayside ★★ Kids On Osaka Bay right next to Universal Studios Japan and Universal CityWalk with its many shops and restaurants, this is the biggest player in luxury accommodations near Japan's most popular theme park, providing direct train service to Osaka Station and shuttle buses to Kansai airport eight times a day. A great family hotel, it offers a play area for little ones in the lobby; discounts for families; child-size character slippers and special pajamas; and bathrooms with stepstools to help kids reach the sink and amenities including famous character-brand sponges, cups, and toothbrushes. Gadgetry, such as toilet lids that pop open when the door opens, amuse the young at heart. Adults appreciate the Starbucks and 24-hour convenience store with drinks and snacks (operating as tenants in the building), as well as the 31st-floor spa with baths filled with hot-spring water pumped from 1,000m (3,280 ft.) below the earth. Standard rooms are average-size, with one loveseat instead of armchairs and nonfunctional desks that double as vanities. Deluxe and family rooms add more space and large bathrooms with separate areas for the shower, tub, and toilet.

Imperial Hotel Osaka (Teikoku Hotel) ★★ Although a bit off the beaten track, this luxury hotel's location on the cherry tree-lined Okawa River is great for jogging and imparts a relaxing, resortlike setting despite the adjoining OAP; a large office building that attracts business travelers, but also contains shops and restaurants. To help offset its location, the hotel provides free shuttle service to Osaka Station and bicycles to explore the area (it's a 10-min. ride to Osaka Castle). Like its Tokyo namesake, its bold interior designs show the same Frank Lloyd Wright inspirations, including an Old Imperial Bar that pays homage to the American architect. The hotel's fitness center is the largest and best equipped in the city, while restaurants take advantage of the river and city views. It goes without saying that this Osaka property offers the same faultless service as the famed Tokyo Imperial. The high-ceilinged guest rooms offer large windows with remote-control drapes and great views (request rooms facing the river), good working desks, down pillows and comforters, fluffy bathrobes, aromatherapy cosmetics, and marble bathrooms with magnifying mirrors and vanity stools at sinks.

Hotel International House Osaka  The International House is a modern facility used for international seminars, conventions, and meetings. It includes this hotel, used mainly by those attending seminars but also open to the public; try to book well in advance. Rooms are spartan with about as much personality as those in a business hotel, but they have everything you need, including tiny tiled bathrooms, yukata, and a small desk. Some 40 of the 50 rooms are singles, making this a great choice for the single traveler, but note that they don't have closets and are fairly small. The twins, however, are of adequate size.

WHERE TO DINE

There's a saying among Japanese that whereas a Kyotoite will spend his last yen on a fine kimono, an Osakan will spend it on food. You don't have to spend a lot of money, however, to enjoy good food in Osaka. Local specialties include Oshi-zushi (pressed square-shaped sushi), udon noodles with white soy sauce, and takoyaki (wheat-flour dumplings with octopus).

Osaka is probably best known, however, for okonomiyaki, which literally means “as you like it.” Its origins date from about 1700, when a type of thin flour pancake cooked on a hot plate and filled with miso paste was served during Buddhist ceremonies. It wasn't until this century that it became popular, primarily during food shortages, and gradually, other ingredients such as pork, egg, and cabbage were added. Today, Osaka is literally riddled with inexpensive okonomiyaki restaurants—more than 4,000 of them.

AROUND OSAKA STATION

In addition to the choice below, two good restaurants, Bar Tachibana and Namaste, listed below in the Namba section have branches near Osaka Station.

Enoteca  CONTINENTAL Shelves filled with wine bottles line the walls of this upscale shop, in the back of which is a casual restaurant specializing in meals that complement our favorite form of the grape. The relaxed ambience and reasonably priced food drew us in (okay, so the wine had something to do with it), but what better way to imbibe a celebratory glass or two than with selections of cheese, smoked salmon, a classic croque-monsieur, or the day's lunch? The menu is limited, but the fun part is selecting a bottle of wine from the shop (corkage fee is ¥1,000/$8.75/£4.40) to accompany your meal.

Herbis Plaza, 2nd floor, 2-5-25 Umeda. ☎ 06/6343-7175. Main dishes ¥600–¥1,600 ($5–$13/£2.50–£7.50); set lunch ¥880 and ¥1,100 ($7.30 and $9.15/£3.65 and £4.60). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–9:30pm (last order). Station: Nishi-Umeda (3 min.). South of Osaka Station in the Herbis Plaza complex adjacent to the Ritz-Carlton.

In addition to the choices here, a fun place for a meal is Takimikoji Village, located in the basement of the same building as the Floating Garden Observatory (p. 384). It's a re-created Showa-Era 1920s and 1930s Japanese village, boasting everything from an old-fashioned sweets shop and a barbershop to a post office and a miniature shrine. There are about a dozen restaurants here—branches of well-known Osaka establishments—serving okonomiyaki, kushikatsu, teppanyaki, noodles, yakitori, and more. Most lunches cost less than ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) and dinners less than ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50), making it popular with those who work in the area. It's open daily; lunch is served from about 11:30am to 2pm and dinner from 5 to 10:30pm.

Capricciosa (Kids) PIZZA/PASTA This chain restaurant is very popular with students and families for its pizza and pasta, available in regular size (good for one person) or large size for hearty appetites or two diners. The English-language menu lists everything from pizza capricciosa (with bacon, salami, onion, and more) to spaghetti with eggplant and spinach in meat sauce. The salads are big enough for two to share. While the cheesy decor and fake plants just don't do it for me, a walk through Yodobashi Camera shop with its endless stock is a trip.

There's a branch in the Namba Oriental Hotel Building, 2-8-17 Sennichimae (☎ 06/6644-8330; Station: Midosuji), open daily 11am to 10:30pm.

Yodobashi Camera, 8th floor, 1-1 Obukacho. ☎ 06/6488-2271. Pizza and pasta ¥981–¥1,420 ($8.15–$12/£4.10–£6) for small sizes, ¥1,120–¥1,734 ($9.40–$14/£4.70–£7) for large sizes. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Station: JR Osaka or Umeda (1 min.). Just north of the station.

AROUND OSAKA CASTLE INEXPENSIVE

Panorama Sky Restaurant Asahi (Value) VARIED WESTERN Views and the beer are the best reasons to pay a visit to this Asahi beer hall, which does provide panoramic city views but none of the castle. Popular with area office workers, it offers pizza, pasta, beefsteak, and rather mundane choices from an English-language menu. The set lunches are a bargain and come with salad, rice, vegetables, and all-you-can-drink tea, coffee, or juice. Or, come for a snack and wash it down with a mug or two of Asahi beer.

IMP Building, 26th floor, 1-3-7 Shiromi Chuo-ku. ☎ 06/6946-2595. Main dishes ¥980–¥2,500 ($8.15–$21/£4.10–£11); set lunches ¥850–¥1,200 ($7.10–$10/£3.55–£5) weekdays, ¥900–¥1,500 ($7.50–$13/£3.75–£6.50) weekends and holidays. AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 11:30am–2pm and 4:30–10pm; Sat–Sun and holidays 11:30am–10pm. Subway: Osaka Business Park (1 min.). JR train: Osakajo-Koen (4 min.). In Osaka Business Park, across from the New Otani Hotel.

NAMBA

Dotombori (or Dotonbori), a narrow pedestrian lane just off Midosuji Dori that flanks the south bank of the Dotombori River Walk, is the center of Osaka's most famous nightlife district, which radiates from Dotombori on both sides of the canal; you'll find lots of restaurants and bars in this area. A healthy choice in Namba Station (just outside the south exit near Namba Park) is Japanese Organic Café (☎ 06/6644-2782) serving inexpensive soups, brown rice balls, curry, and organically grown coffee, with main dishes priced below ¥700 ($5.85/£2.95). It's open Monday to Friday 8am to 10pm and Saturday and Sunday 10am to 10pm.

Tablva 36 ★★ ITALIAN Panoramic city views and expertly prepared Italian cuisine marry here for a fine dining experience. Lunch buffets offer so many choices, it's hard to know where to begin and when to say enough, though wills may falter at the gelati counter. Changing a la carte dishes may include grilled lamb with rosemary and Mediterranean vegetables and breast of chicken filled with Fontina cheese and sun-dried tomatoes.

Swissôtel 36F, 5-1-60 Namba, Chuo-ku. ☎ 06/6646-1111. ①27 Kani Doraku CRAB Specializing in kani (crab), this restaurant is difficult to miss: It has a huge model crab on its facade, moving its legs and claws. Part of a chain originating in Osaka a couple of decades ago, this is the main shop of more than 50 locations throughout Japan, including another one just down the street at 1-6-2 Dotonbori (☎ 06/6211-1633). Dishes range from crab-suki, crab-chiri (a kind of crab sukiyaki), and fried crab dishes to crab croquette, roasted crab with salt, crab salad, crab sushi, and boiled king crab. The easiest thing to do, however, is to order a set meal from the display case outside or from the menu with its photos. This main location occupies several floors, with some tables offering a view of the water.

1-6-18 Dotonbori. ☎ 06/6211-8975. Set dinners ¥4,400-¥10,500 ($37-$88/£18-£44); set lunches ¥1,900-¥3,800 ($16-$32/£8-£16). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am-11pm. Station: Namba (exit 14, 2 min.). On Dotonbori beside the Ebisu-bashi Bridge.

①28 Bar Tachibana TOFU/VARIED JAPANESE Whether you are sightseeing in Dotombori or viewing Kabuki, this restaurant, in a lovely, typical Japanese setting in the basement of the Shochikuza Theater, is a good pick. A microbrewery (¥450/$3.75/£1.90 for a glass of light or dark beer), Tachibana specializes in tofu, with tofu included in most of the set meals. There's no English-language menu, but a changing daily lunch and the tempura teishoku are affordable and delicious. You can see famous Kabuki actors dining here, but how could you recognize them without their makeup?

Another Tachibana (☎ 06/4796-5770) is located in the basement of the Hilton Hotel in Umeda, open Monday through Friday 11am to 3pm and 5 to 11pm and Saturday 11am to 11pm.

Osaka Shochikuza Theater, 2nd basement, 1-9-19 Dotombori. ☎ 06/6212-6074. Main dishes ¥680-¥1,700 ($5.65-$14/£2.85-£7); set dinners ¥2,730-¥6,090 ($23-$51/£12-£26); set lunches ¥850-¥2,940 ($7.10-$24/£3.55-£12). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am-11pm. Station: Namba (exit 14, 2 min.). Look for its improbable entrance, on Dotombori near the bridge.

Cui-daore ★★ Kids VARIED JAPANESE Cui-daore is famous for its clown model outside the front door, which began beating a drum and wiggling its eyebrows shortly after the place first opened in 1950. The restaurant's name means to "eat your way to bankruptcy" in reference to the Osakan joy of eating, but a look at the prices in the extensive plastic-food display case shows you can dine very reasonably here on a great variety of food ranging from tempura and yakitori to sushi, shabu-shabu, kaiseki, and even Western food. What's more, the restaurant is very user-friendly; items in the display cases are identified in English and by number for easy ordering, and there's also an English-language menu.

There are eight floors of dining, and prices increase the higher you go. On the ground floor is a modern, family-style dining area, serving Western dishes. From the clown outside to the food inside, this is a great place to bring youngsters; a child's set meal (¥840/$7/£3.50) includes a pair of black glasses just like the clown's. On the second floor is an izakaya, or Japanese-style pub, open from 5pm, where you can order a beer, yakitori, and snacks. In winter, the third floor serves nabe (one-pot stews) in a quiet and comfortable setting, while the top floors have higher priced meals such as sukiyaki, shabu-shabu, and kaiseki starting at ¥5,000 ($42/£21).

1–8–25 Dotonbori. (C) 06/6211-5300. Set meals ¥840–¥8,000 ($7–$67/£3.50–£33). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Station: Namba (exit 14, 2 min.).

(129) Fugetsu OKONOMIYAKI Big Step is the biggest shopping complex in America-Mura, young Osakans' favorite place to shop for American clothing. As such, this branch of a famous okonomiyaki restaurant appeals to young diners with its hip, modern interior, pop music, and individual booths for dining. I recommend the squid, octopus, and pork fried noodles (yakisoba) or the butatama, an okonomiyaki with pork and egg from the English-language menu.

Big Step, 3rd floor, 1–6–14 Nishi Shinsaibashi. (C) 06/6258-5189. Okonomiyaki ¥560–¥1,150 ($4.65–$9.60/£2.35–£4.80); yakisoba ¥620–¥1,190 ($5.15–$9.90/£2.60–£4.95). AE, MC, V. Daily 11am–9:30pm (last order). Station: Shinsaibashi (2 min.).

Hermanos MEXICAN Good for a quick fix if you're craving Mexican food, this tiny, brightly colored restaurant offers all the classics, from enchiladas to burritos, tostadas, and tacos. A basket of small chips and sauce arrive at your table free if you order food and show them this book. Hot salsa music adds to the atmosphere. Strawberry margaritas, anyone?

2–3–23 Dotombori. (C) 06/6213-9612. Combination plates ¥1,100–¥1,900 ($9.15–$16/£4.60–£8). AE, MC, V. Tues–Sun 5pm–midnight. Station: Namba (5 min.). On the west end of Dotombori (west of Midosuji Dori) just past the Dotombori Hotel.

Namaste ★★ INDIAN This is a good place for hot and spicy Indian food, including tandoori and chicken, mutton, prawn, fish, and vegetable curries. The owner, who will wait on you, is so friendly and happy, you might think he's reached nirvana. You can reach yours by telling him how hot to make your food. The set lunches are a particularly great deal.

A second Namaste, located in Umeda in the basement of the Ekimae Dai 4 building, 1–11–4 Umeda (C) 06/6345-7774, has the same great food and same great owner.

Rose Building, 3–7–28 Minami Semba. (C) 06/6241-6515. Main dishes ¥750–¥1,500 ($6.25–$13/£3.15–£6.25); set dinners ¥1,980–¥4,300 ($17–$36/£8.50–£18); set lunches ¥785–¥1,980 ($6.30–$17/£3.15–£8.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–3pm and 5:30–11pm. Station: Shinsaibashi (exit 1, 3 min.). 3 blocks north of the Sony Tower Building; walk north on Midosuji Dori, turn east (right) at the Rolex shop and walk past the Shinsaibashi-Suji covered pedestrian shopping street; it will be on the right.

OSAKA BAY AREA

In addition to the choices below, Universal CityWalk has lots of restaurants, most of which are open daily from 11am to 10pm, including Bubba Gump's (C) 06/4804-3880 for shrimp and Hard Rock Cafe (C) 06/4804-3870 with its T-shirts for sale and a menu of burgers, steaks, sandwiches, and barbecued ribs.

Café Solare PASTA This casual, airy, and down-to-earth restaurant, with some tables offering a view of the harbor, is convenient if you're visiting the Suntory Museum or nearby Osaka Aquarium (you don't have to buy museum admission to eat here). The pasta is freshly made, and there are also salads, soups, and other items at the self-service counter. After eating, you might want to retire to the museum's ninth-floor Sky Lounge (Tues–Sun 11:30am–9pm), offering cocktails and other drinks, a limited menu and daily set lunches, and views of the harbor and port.

PERFORMING ARTS

BUNRAKU The National Bunraku Theater, 1–12–10 Nipponbashi, Chuo-ku (☎ 06/6212-2531 for information, or 06/6212-1122 for reservations), was completed in 1984 as the only theater in Japan dedicated to Japanese traditional puppet theater. Productions are staged five times a year, with most productions running for 2 to 3 weeks at a time and held daily at 11am for Part 1 and at 4pm for Part 2. When Bunraku is not being performed, other traditional performing arts are often shown, including classical Japanese music. English-language programs are available. To find out whether a performance is being held, check Meet Osaka or contact one of the visitor information centers (see “Essentials” on p. 380). Tickets usually run ¥2,300 to ¥5,800 ($19–$48/£9.50–£24). The National Bunraku Theater is located east of Namba and the Dotombori entertainment district, a 1-minute walk from exit 7 of Nipponbashi Station.

KABUKI The Osaka Shochikuza, 1–9–19 Dotombori, Chuo-ku (☎ 06/6214-2211; Station: Namba), was built more than 50 years ago but was remodeled in 1997 as part of a revival of interest in Kabuki. Traditional Kabuki is performed in January, July, and some other months of the year (the schedule changes yearly), and performances start usually at 11am and 4:30pm, with tickets ranging from ¥4,200 to ¥13,650 ($35–$114/£18–£57) for major performances. Performance information is also listed in Meet Osaka. The theater is located on Dotombori, just west of the Ebisu-bashi Bridge.

LIVE MUSIC Billboard Live Osaka, Basement 2 of the Herbis Plaza Building, 2–2–22 Umeda (☎ 06/6342-7722, reservations required; Station: Nishi-Umeda), offers live music ranging from jazz and R&B to funk, reggae, or bossa nova, with several levels surrounding the stage providing good views. Steely Dan, Sa-Ra, Rickie Lee Jones, Sean Lennon, and George Benson have played here. Tickets average ¥5,400 to ¥8,000 ($45–$67/£23–£33) for most acts, with popular artists costing up to ¥21,000 ($175/£88).

THE BAR SCENE

Osaka's liveliest—and most economical—nightlife district radiates from a narrow pedestrian lane called Dotombori (or Dotonbori), which flanks the south bank of the Dotombori Canal. About a 2-minute walk from exit 14 of Namba Station or less than a 10-minute walk from Shinsaibashi Station, it's lined with restaurants and drinking establishments and is good for a lively evening stroll even if you don't wish to stop anywhere.

Cinquecento This bar is a cut above the rest with its sophisticated decor, pasta, burgers, and other Western fare, not to mention that all food and drink are priced at only ¥500 ($4.20/£2.10). Of note is the red Wall of Shame, where gold plaques identify those crazy enough to have consumed 100 shots in one sitting. Daily 7:30pm to 5am. Matsumiya Building, 10–1–2 Higashishinsaibashi. ☎ 06/6213-6788. Station: Nigahoribashi or Nipponbashi (5 min.). Off Sakai Suji Dori.

Murphy's Of Osaka's several Irish pubs, this is probably the most popular (and our favorite), drawing a mixed crowd of both Japanese and foreigners and offering live Irish music most Wednesdays. Fish and chips or shepherd's pie are reasonable and surprisingly good, but you can also make a meal of the Guinness or Kilkenny Ale. Monday through Thursday 5pm to 1am; Friday to Saturday 5pm to about 3am. Lead Plaza Building, 6th floor, 1–6–31 Higashi Shinsaibashi. ☎ 06/6282-0677. Station: Nagahoribashi (1 min.) or Shinsaibashi (4 min.). On Suzuki St. (1 block north of Europa Dori/Shimizu Dori), the road to the south of the Daimaru department store, several blocks east of the Shinsaibashi-suji covered arcade, on the right in a small building with lots of tiny bars.

Pig and Whistle This is probably the best-known and one of the oldest ex-patriate bars in Osaka, as well as one of the easiest to find. Through the years, the number of foreign customers has fallen to less than 15% (I remember when it was almost exclusively foreign), but remaining are its dartboards for entertainment, happy hour until 7:30pm, and munchies that include, of course, fish and chips. Hours are Sunday through Thursday 4:30pm to midnight, Friday and Saturday 4:30pm to 1am. Across Building, 2nd floor, 2–6–14 Shinsaibashi-Suji. ☎ 06/6213-6911. Station: Namba or Shinsaibashi (4 min.). On the east side of Midosuji St., 2 blocks north of Dotombori Canal.

Sam & Dave Four With exposed, wrapped pipes and fluorescent lighting, this bar with a dance floor and pool table stages events several times a month, including salsa lessons every Tuesday. Happy hour is until 9pm. It attracts both a Japanese and gaijin crowd.

Attracting a larger foreign clientele is Sam & Dave Five in Nagahoribashi, across from the post office (☎ 06/6251-5333), which has a bigger dance floor and holds salsa nights on Thursdays. It's open Wednesday to Friday 7pm to 5am and Saturday 10pm to 8am. Sam & Dave Two Shinsaibashi, 1 block east of Midosuji Street near Softbank (☎ 06/6243-6848), has a Japanese clientele and is the hot spot for hip-hop, soul, and R&B. Hours are Tuesday through Sunday 7pm to 4am, Friday to Saturday 7pm to 5am. Plaza Umeshin Building, 4–15–19 Nishi-tenma. ☎ 06/6365-1688. Fri–Sat ¥1,080–¥2,000 ($9–$17/£4.50–£8.50) cover, which includes 1 drink. Station: JR Kitashinchi (2 min.), Umeda (5 min.), Osaka (7 min.). Southeast of Osaka Station on a triangle-shaped parcel of land where Midosuji Dori curves southward before crossing the river and Nakanoshima Island.

589km (366 miles) W of Tokyo; 75km (47 miles) W of Kyoto; 31km (19 miles) W of Osaka

In January 1995, the world was riveted by news of one of the worst natural disasters of that decade: the Great Hanshin Earthquake that struck Kobe, killing more than 6,400 people and destroying much of the city. In the years since, Kobe has risen from the ashes with more attractions, hotels, and urban redevelopment than ever before and with only a few telltale signs of the city's grimmest hours. Indeed, if it weren't for several earthquake memorials and a museum dedicated to the event, visitors would never guess at the devastation of just 13 years ago.

Blessed with the calm waters of the Seto Inland Sea, Kobe (the capital of Hyogo Prefecture) has served Japan as an important port town for centuries. Even today its port is the heart of the city, its raison d'être. I find Kobe's port fascinating. Unlike many harbor cities where the port is located far from the center of town, Kobe's is right there, demanding attention and getting it. One of the first ports to begin accepting foreign traders in 1868 following Japan's 2 centuries of isolation, this vibrant city of 1.5 million inhabitants is quite multicultural, with foreigners from more than 110 different nations residing here. Each group of immigrants has brought with it a rich heritage, and there are a number of fine restaurants serving every kind of cuisine—Western, Chinese, Korean, and Indian—as well as many steakhouses offering that famous local delicacy, Kobe beef.

Equally famous is Kobe's wonderful nightlife, crammed into a small, navigable, and rather intimate quarter of neon lights, cozy bars, brawling pubs, and sophisticated nightclubs. As one resident of Kobe told me, "We don't have a lot of tourist sights in Kobe, so we make up for it in nightlife." Yet the attractions Kobe does offer are unique to Japan, including a neighborhood of Western-style residences built around the turn of the 20th century, and a museum devoted to fashion. The people of Kobe are also proud of the 1998 opening of the world's longest suspension bridge, Akashi Kaikyo, one of a series of bridges linking Honshu with Shikoku.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane If you're arriving at Kansai International Airport (KIX; see "Getting There," under Osaka, on p. 380), there are a couple options for travel onward to Kobe. Easiest are the limousine buses departing KIX every 20 minutes for Sannomiya Station, costing ¥1,800 ($15/£7.50) one-way and taking about 75 minutes. If you want to use your Japan Rail Pass, take a kaisoku (rapid train making only major stops) to Osaka Station and change there for the JR Kobe Line's 20-minute ride to Sannomiya Station (considered the heart of the city). If you're staying in a hotel closer to Shin-Kobe Station, take the JR Haruka train from the airport to Shin-Osaka Station and transfer there for a speedy Shinkansen connection to Shin-Kobe Station (see the Osaka section on p. 381 for detailed information).

If you're arriving at Kobe Airport, which opened in 2006 on Port Island to serve domestic flights, you can take the Portliner Monorail to Sannomiya Station in 16 minutes for ¥320 ($2.65/£1.35).

By Train The Shinkansen bullet train takes ¾ hours from Tokyo, 31 minutes from Kyoto, and about 14 minutes from Osaka; the fare from Tokyo for an unreserved seat is ¥13,760 ($115/£57). All Shinkansen trains arrive at Shin-Kobe Station, which is linked to Sannomiya Station (considered the heart of the city) via a 3-minute subway ride (or a 20-min. walk). If you're arriving from nearby Osaka, Kyoto, Himeji, or Okayama, it may be easiest to take a local train stopping at Sannomiya Station if you're staying in one of the area's hotels.

By Bus Buses depart from Tokyo Station's Yaesu south exit for Kobe every night at 9:50pm, arriving in Kobe at 7:30am. They also depart nightly from Shinjuku Station's New South Exit at 11pm, arriving in Kobe at 7:46am. The one-way fare is ¥8,690 ($72/£36).

VISITOR INFORMATION There are tourist information offices at Shin-Kobe Station (☎ 078/241-9550; daily 9am–6pm) and outside the west exit of Sannomiya Station on Flower Road in the Kotsu Center Building (☎ 078/322-0220; daily 9am–7pm). The English-speaking staff can provide maps and sightseeing information and make hotel reservations. Ask here for your Kobe Welcome Coupon, which offers discounts on the City Loop Line and most museums. Tourist information is available online at www.feel-kobe.jp.

Information on Kobe's sights, festivals, and attractions appears in the monthly Kansai Time Out, available at bookstores, restaurants, and tourist-oriented locations for ¥315 ($2.60/£1.30).

INTERNET ACCESS The Litz Comic Café, on the sixth floor of the Tatsumi Building at 5–3–2 Asahi Dori (☎ 078/241-8815) is open 24 hours and charges ¥480 ($4/£2) for the first hour and then ¥50 (42¢/21p) for each subsequent 30 minutes. It's located southeast of Sannomiya not far from the bus station, down a small street parallel to the tracks (there's a Starbucks on the corner), on the sixth floor above a pachinko parlor. The Hyogo International Plaza, located a 10-minute walk south of Nada Station in the new HAT urban renewal development at 1–5–1 Kaigandori, Wakinohama, Chuo-ku (☎ 078/230-3060; Mon–Fri 9am–8pm, Sat 9am–5pm), offers free Internet access.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Squeezed between Mount Rokko rising in the north and the shores of the Seto Inland Sea to the south, Kobe stretches some 29km (18 miles) along the coastline but in many places is less than 3.2km (2 miles) wide. It's made up of many wards (ku) such as Nada-ku, Chuo-ku, and Hyogo-ku. The heart of the city lies around Sannomiya, Motomachi, and Kobe stations in the Chuo-ku (Central Ward). It's here you'll find the city's nightlife, its port, its restaurants, its shopping centers, and most of its hotels. Unlike most other Japanese cities, many of the major streets in Kobe have names with English-language signs posted, so it's easier to get around here than elsewhere. Additionally, the maps provided by the tourist office are good.

Because the city isn't very wide, you can walk to most points north and south of Sannomiya Station. South of Sannomiya Station is the Sannomiya Center Gai covered-arcade shopping, beyond which lies Kobe's business and administrative district. North of Sannomiya Station are bars and restaurants clustered around narrow streets such as Higashimon Street. Kitano-zaka leads uphill to Kitano-cho (usually shortened to Kitano) with its Western-style houses, about a 15-minute walk north of Sannomiya Station. Shin-Kobe Station is a 20-minute walk north of Sannomiya. Running from Shin-Kobe Station south through Sannomiya all the way to the port is a flower-lined road—called, appropriately enough, Flower Road.

About a 10-minute walk west of Sannomiya Station is Motomachi Station, south of which lies the fashionable Motomachi covered-arcade shopping street, Chinatown, and Meriken Park, established to commemorate the birthplace of Kobe's port. The next stop on the JR line from Motomachi Station is Kobe Station, just south of which is Harborland, a waterfront development with hotels, restaurants, and the colorful Mosaic outdoor restaurant and shopping complex.

Two train stops east of Sannomiya Station is Nada Ward, home of several renowned breweries, as well as one of the city's most ambitious urban renewal projects. Called HAT Kobe (an abbreviation of Happy Active Town), it's a mixed-use neighborhood of apartment complexes, research facilities, schools, and museums, including the new Disaster Reduction and Human Renovation Institution, which chronicles the Great Hanshin Earthquake.

Because of restricted space, Kobe has also constructed two artificial islands in its harbor, Port Island and Rokko Island. Farther afield, on Mount Rokko, is the Arima Onsen Spa.

A 13km (8-mile) City Loop Line bus, distinguished by its old-fashioned appearance, passes all major attractions, including Kitano, Chinatown, Meriken Park, and Harborland. Buses run every 15 to 20 minutes from about 9am to 5 or 6pm, with the route marked on the map distributed by the tourist office. It costs ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for adults and ¥130 ($1.10/55p) for children per ticket. A 1-day pass, allowing you to get off and reboard as often as you like, costs ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70) for adults and ¥330 ($2.75/£1.40) for children.

You can also use the JR Local Commuter train, which includes stops at Sannomiya, Motomachi, and Kobe stations, if you don't mind walking to destinations north and south of its stations (the City Loop Line buses will get you closer to major attractions). The subway is useful only for transportation between Shin-Kobe and Sannomiya stations. The Portliner Monorail connects Sannomiya with Port Island, while the Rokko Liner travels between JR Sumiyoshi Station and Rokko Island.

EXPLORING THE CITY

In addition to the sights below, you might wish to drop by City Hall on Flower Road, where on the 24th floor there's an observatory open free to the public daily from 9am to 9pm (8:15am–10pm weekends and holidays). Farther south on Flower Road, at the southern end of Higashi Yuenchi Park, is the Memorial Zone, where the Flame of Hope created by flames gathered from cities all over Japan burns in memory of those lost in the earthquake. Nearby, an underground passageway leads to a meditation rotunda inscribed with the names of the quake's victims. Further evidence of Kobe's horrific disaster can be found at Meriken Park, a 10-minute walk south of Motomachi Station or a minute's walk from the Meriken Park stop on the City Loop Line bus. On its eastern edge is the Port of Kobe Earthquake Memorial, dedicated to the thousands of people who lost their lives in the tragic 1995 earthquake. Established with the intent of preserving some of the quake's horrific force (250,000 buildings and homes were destroyed), it shows unrepaired damage, including tilted lampposts and a submerged and broken pier.

KITANO

When Kobe was chosen as one of five international ports following the Meiji Restoration, foreign traders and diplomats who settled here built homes in much the same style as those they left behind in their native lands. Approximately 30 of these Western-style homes, called ijinkan, remain on a hill north of Sannomiya Station called Kitano-cho. Because the area seems so exotic to young Japanese, this is the number-one draw for domestic visitors, who come also to shop the area's many boutiques.

Approximately 20 Victorian- and Gothic-style homes are open to the public, many with lovely views of the sea from verandas and bay windows. Although you may not be interested in visiting all of them, Kitano is very pleasant for an hour's stroll. It's located about a 15-minute walk north of Sannomiya Station or a 10-minute walk west from Shin-Kobe Station. Or take the City Loop Line to Kitano Ijinkan.

Two of the more interesting homes open to the public are the Moegi no Yakata, 3-10-11 Kitano-cho (☎ 078/222-3310; daily 9am-6pm), a pale-green, 100-year-old home built for a former American consul general, Hunter Sharp, and filled with antiques; and Kasamidori-no-Yakata ♣, 3-13-3 Kitano-cho (☎ 078/242-3223; daily 9am-6pm; closed first Tues in June, Sept, Dec, and Mar), popularly referred to as the Weathercock House because of its cock weathervane. This 1909 brick residence was built by a German merchant and is probably Kobe's most famous home if not its most elaborate. Admission to either home, located across from one another, is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults, or purchase a combination ticket for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10). High school-age kids and younger enter free.

Another home of note (because it contains porcelain, glass, and art, not because of its historical value) is Uroko no Ie, 2-20-4 Kitano-cho (☎ 078/242-6530; daily 9am-6pm in summer, to 5pm in winter), which has a castlelike exterior and is nicknamed the Fish-Scale House because of its slate walls. It contains lovely antiques, including Meissen porcelain and Tiffany glass, as well as a small private museum of Western 18th- to 20th-century art, with a few works by Andrew Wyeth, Utrillo, and others. Admission is ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for children.

A GARDEN RETREAT If you're a gardener, want a respite from city life, or simply want to spend an hour in a cooler climate, take the Shin-Kobe ropeway located next to Shin-Kobe Station for a 10-minute ride to the Nunobiki Herb Garden ♣ (☎ 078/271-1160), with its lovely, meandering, fragrant gardens planted with various flowering shrubs and herbs and offering great views over Kobe. Be sure to take the ropeway to the end (don't get off at the first stop) and then walk downhill. The garden opens daily at 10am, closing at 5pm on weekdays and 8:30pm on weekends, holidays, and peak season (mid-July to Aug). From December to March it closes daily at 5pm. It's closed for 2 weeks in January. Admission, including round-trip by ropeway, is ¥1,200 ($10/£5) for adults, half-price for children.

CHINATOWN ♣

Like the Kitano-cho area, Chinatown (called Nankin-machi), a 3-minute walk south of Motomachi Station (or to the Sakaemachi 1-chome stop on the City Loop Line bus), is worth a walk-through for its lively street scene, with sidewalk vendors selling snacks and with open-fronted souvenir shops and produce stands. If the sidewalk vendors tempt you, eat your snack in the central square called Nankin Park, adorned with statues representing the animals of the 12-year Chinese astrological calendar. Chinatown's public restroom, called Garyoden, which means "palace of a secluded wise man," is certainly one of Japan's most colorful—its outer wall is decorated with five-clawed dragons and is based on a famous Chinese epic about a dragonlike hero; it's located a block off the main street. You may also want to come to Chinatown for a meal (see "Where to Dine," beginning on p. 409).

KOBE HARBORLAND

Kobe Harborland is a leisure center that's fun to stroll and browse. It's a few minutes' walk from either Kobe Station or Meriken Park, or you can take the City Loop Line to Harborland. For shopping, stop by Harbor Circus with its many boutiques or Kobe Hankyu department store, but best is Mosaic, an outdoor restaurant and shopping complex designed to resemble a Mediterranean village. Through the use of varying architectural and color schemes, it avoids the generic mall atmosphere, and by offering a diversity of ethnic goods and foods, it mirrors Kobe's international roots. Shops here are open daily from 11am to 8pm.

Beside it is Mosaic Garden, a small amusement park for younger children complete with kiddie rides, carousel, roller coaster, enclosed Ferris wheel, and games arcade. It's open from 11am to 10pm daily, with rides costing ¥300 to ¥600 ($2.50–$5/£1.25–£2.50).

MUSEUMS WORTH CHECKING OUT

If you're on your way to the Disaster Reduction and Human Renovation Institution, below, it might be worthwhile to check out what's being shown at the Hyogo Prefectural Museum of Art practically next door (☎ 078/262-0901; www.artm.pref.hyogo.jp). Designed by renowned Japanese architect Tadao Ando, it displays contemporary art, prints, sculpture, and other works produced by artists with connections to Hyogo Prefecture, as well as temporary exhibits from around the world. It's open Tuesday through Sunday from 10am to 6pm and charges ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for high-school and college students, and ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for children; temporary exhibits cost more.

Disaster Reduction and Human Renovation Institution ★★ Despite its rather official-sounding name, this facility (consisting of two museums) gives a human dimension to the Great Hanshin Earthquake, which measured 7.3 on the Richter scale. Sheathed in glass and built to withstand both vertical and horizontal earthquakes, it vividly conveys what happened during the first moments of the earthquake and the weeks, months, and years that followed. English-speaking volunteers are on hand to help explain some of the museum's more technical displays.

A visit to the Disaster Reduction Museum begins with a powerful 7-minute film that re-creates the exact moment the earthquake struck, with computer-generated scenes that show buildings imploding or bursting into flames and highways collapsing. From the movie theater, visitors emerge into a life-size diorama depicting a typical Kobe neighborhood destroyed by the quake. They then enter another movie theater where a 13-minute documentary shows actual footage shot shortly after the quake and during the weeks that followed, presented through the eyes of a teenage survivor. Other displays in the museum concentrate on the individual experiences of survivors, emergency relief, and reconstruction. A hands-on section helps visitors learn how construction techniques can minimize and even prevent earthquake damage and dispenses information on disaster management.

Connected to the Disaster Reduction Museum is the Human Renovation Museum (good for kids), which focuses on the significance and preciousness of life with a 3-D movie about the life of a leaf, a nature display about ecosystem interdependence, a movie about the role the brain plays on a person's mental condition, and the importance of communication (through a hands-on music session).

There is no other facility in Japan quite like this one; you can easily spend an hour and a half in these unique museums.

1–5 Wakinohama Kaigan-Dori, Chuo-ku. ☎ 078/262-5050. www.dri.ne.jp. Admission to either museum is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) high-school and college students, ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) children. A combination ticket for both museums is ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) adults, ¥640 ($5.35/£2.70) high-school and college students, ¥400

($3.35/£1.70) children. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5:30pm (to 7pm Fri–Sat). You must enter 1 hr. before closing. Station: JR Nada (10 min. south).

Hakutsuru Sake Brewery Museum ★ Everything you ever wanted to know about sake production is available at this former brewery, with English-language videos and pamphlets describing the various painstaking steps and comparing the old techniques to those used today. Hakutsuru, established in 1743, is one of many sake breweries in this part of Kobe; its actual brewery is now across the street (closed to the public). Plan on spending 30 minutes on your self-guided tour, which ends with hints on how to enjoy sake and—what would a brewery tour be without this?—free tastings.

4–5–5 Sumiyoshi-minami-machi, Higashinada-ku. ☎ 078/822-8907. Free admission. Tues–Sun 9:30am–4:30pm. Station: Hanshin Sumiyoshi (5 min.); JR Sumiyoshi (15 min.).

Kobe Fashion Museum ★ Finds Opened in 1997 and located on artificial Rokko Island, this is Japan's first museum devoted to fashion, housed in a contemporary, sophisticated setting that does justice to the highbrow costumes it contains. Temporary displays devoted to individual designers (there was a great show by John Galliano on one of my visits, in a setting designed by Japanese architect Tadao Ando) allow closer inspection than you could ever get at a fashion show. Other displays, which are imaginative tableaux complete with visual images, music, and lighting, may feature anything from 20th-century gowns by Christian Dior and Nina Ricci to extravagant Kabuki costumes or ethnic clothing worn by indigenous peoples from around the world. Displays change four or five times a year, rotating the many costumes owned by the museum. In all, a very entertaining, unique museum, and a must-see if you're addicted to fashion and have an extra hour.

2–9 Koyochi-naka, Rokko Island. ☎ 078/858-0050. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) children and seniors. Thurs–Tues 10am–6pm. Closed 1 week during exhibit changes. Take the local JR train to Sumiyoshi Station, transferring there for the Rokkoliner monorail to Island Center.

Hotel Okura Kobe ★★ Kids This majestic 35-story hotel has the prestige of the Okura name, as well as a grand location right beside Meriken Park; it's within easy walking distance of the Motomachi covered shopping arcade and Chinatown. Its inviting lobby has views of a small garden (the only hotel garden in downtown Kobe)

On the opposite side of Mount Rokko is Arima Onsen, one of Japan's oldest hot-spring spas. There are two public baths here: the ⁽¹³⁰⁾ Kin-no-Yu (☎ 078/904-0680), or Gold Spring, with copper-colored waters that have twice the salinity and iron of seawater; and the ⁽¹³¹⁾ Gin-no-Yu (☎ 078/904-0256), or Silver Spring, with transparent water rich in carbonic acid. It's said that if you bathe in both these waters and drink carbonated water, you'll be cured of all ailments. The Kin-no-Yu, open daily 8am to 10pm (closed the second and fourth Tues of every month), charges ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70), while the Gin-no-Yu, open daily 9am to 9pm (closed the first and third Tues of every month), charges ¥550 ($4.60/£2.30). Buses from Sannomiya Station reach Arima Onsen in 40 minutes and cost ¥680 ($5.65/£2.85) one-way. You can also travel by train to Rokko Station, followed by a trip via cable car, bus, and ropeway. against a backdrop formed by the port. Each elegantly appointed room has all the comforts you'd expect of a first-class hotel, plus the bonus of great views from its more expensive rooms, which are on higher floors facing the harbor or the city with Mount Rokko rising behind it. In short, this hotel appeals to everyone from businessmen on weekdays to tourists on weekends. Even the imperial family makes this their home base when in Kobe. Tip: Upon check-in, ask for immediate free membership in the Okura Club International, which allows late checkout, free use of the health club and both outdoor and indoor pools, and other privileges.

Hotel Monterey Amalie ★ Taking its name from a long-ago Dutch sailing vessel and decorated with a nautical theme, this property is part of a smart chain of boutique hotels that targets mostly female Japanese travelers with old-world European decor and atmosphere. From its ivy-covered facade to whitewashed walls (some of which could use a fresh coat) and heavy-beamed ceilings, it looks much older than its 1992 construction date. Wood-floored guest rooms feature natural wooden furniture, sheer curtains and heavy wooden shutters, tiled bathrooms, and free-standing wardrobes. Ask for a room overlooking Ikuta Shrine, but because occupancy is an enviable 85%, book early. Otherwise, try nearby sister hotel Monterey Kobe (☎ 078/392-7111), with similar prices and a cloisterlike atmosphere.

Hotel Tor Road ★ An imitation fireplace, knickknacks on the mantle, antiques, a drop-leaf desk, and dark-wood wainscoting lend an English country atmosphere to this tourist hotel's lobby. The decent-size rooms are clean and tastefully decorated with double-size beds and larger-than-usual bathrooms, with twins and doubles even providing a separate sink area. The most expensive rooms are so-called “designer theme rooms” on the ninth floor. The “cat” room, for example, has the logo of a cat repeated on the drapes, pillows, sheets, and elsewhere, but I fail to see why anyone would pay more for it.

Kobe Meriken Park Oriental Hotel ★★ An outstanding location on a spit of land jutting seaward from the edge of Meriken Park (it's practically on the water and surrounded by a park) makes this Kobe's best hotel with a view—which it capitalizes on by providing each room with a balcony with views of Kobe's harbor and of the city as it rises up the hills. Popular with couples (weddings are big here), the hotel looks like one of the many cruise ships that dock nearby, rising 14 stories in a lopsided half circle. Its center is hollow, an airy atrium filled with palm trees and bubbling fountains. In addition to standard rooms, there are more expensive Com'fill rooms (designed to “fill you with comfort” with higher-quality beds and aromatherapy) and Sea'fill rooms (where earth tones are fused with red and blue, meant to relay sea sunsets) on higher floors, with corner rooms providing views even from their bathrooms. A free shuttle provides service to both Sannomiya and Kobe stations every 20 or 30 minutes.

Seaside Hotel Maiko Villa Kobe ★ Kids Located on a hill in West Kobe beside the world's longest suspension bridge, about a 20-minute train ride from Sannomiya Station, Maiko Villa is a bit far from the town center but its inconvenient location does offer some advantages, including cheaper prices than those of hotels in the center. Situated near the sea with the sound of seagulls and the faint scent of saltwater, it exudes a resortlike atmosphere, making it a good place to relax in a more leisurely setting—at the man-made sandy beach nearby or the hotel outdoor pool (July–Aug). Its grounds are lovely, with ancient dwarf pines that date from the early 1900s, when Emperor Meiji once had a second home here. Popular with vacationing Japanese and for marriage ceremonies (more than 700 a year), the modern hotel offers a variety of rooms, most with views of the sea, fishing boats, and the bridge (which changes color at night). Best are the deluxe twins—corner rooms, they boast heart-shaped tubs where you can bathe looking out at the sea. Avoid the singles facing inland; they are used mainly by bus drivers and tour guides. Better and almost as reasonable are the rooms with both tatami areas and twin beds in the annex, almost all with balconies facing the sea. In addition to the outdoor pool and nearby beach, kids will like the playground across the street.

Green Hill Hotel Urban Between Sannomiya and Shin-Kobe stations, this simple business hotel with mostly single rooms in a dormitory-like setting is primarily a place to park your head at night. Rather shabby rooms are about as small as they come, most without closets and with glazed windows and minuscule plastic-unit bathrooms. Best are the Japanese rooms. Free tea is dispensed from machines on each floor. Staff at the front desk doesn't speak much English. Don't confuse this with the older Green Hill Hotel around the corner.

WHERE TO DINE

With its sizable foreign population, Kobe is a good place to dine on international cuisine, including Indian and Chinese food. The greatest concentration of Chinese restaurants is along a pedestrian lane in Chinatown, called Nankin-machi by the locals, just a 2-minute walk south of Motomachi Station. If you're on a budget, you may just want to wander through and buy sticky buns or other inexpensive fare from street stalls.

KOBE AFTER DARK

Kobe has a wide selection of English-style pubs, bars, ex-patriate hangouts, and nightclubs. All the establishments below are easily accessible to foreigners, and most are within walking distance of Sannomiya Station.

THE CLUB & MUSIC SCENE

Garage Paradise Candlelight, gauzy curtains draped from the high ceiling, Roman statues, a copper and stone bar, and stone walls set the scene at this basement with five sets of good, live music nightly. The interesting setting attracts the local foreigner clientele. Open daily 6pm to 3am (Sun to 2am). Kobe Yamashita Building, basement, 1-13-7 Nakayamate Dori. ☎ 078/391-6640. Cover Sun–Thurs ¥520 ($4.30/£2.15); Fri–Sat ¥720 ($6/£3). Station: Sannomiya (10 min.). On Yamate Kansen Dori east of Higashimon, catty-corner from Nishimura coffee shop.

Satin Doll This traditional jazz club first opened in 1972 and remains one of the city's top venues. Its sophisticated interior offers table and bar seating with some city views. There are three live music sets nightly (7, 8:30, and 10pm), an English-language menu offering mainly snacks, and a wine list. Open Tuesday to Sunday 6pm to midnight. Bacchus Building, 1-26-1 Nakayama Dori. ☎ 078/242-0100. Cover from ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10), more for international acts, plus ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) table charge. Station: Sannomiya (10 min.). On Yamate Kansen Dori opposite Higashimon Dori.

Sone Kobe's oldest and best-known jazz club has changed little since its 1969 opening, offering the same traditional jazz, including Dixieland ensembles and piano-vocalist duos, in a clubby, dated atmosphere. There are four stages nightly, and most people come to eat; the Japanese-language menu lists pasta, pizza, fish, and Kobe steaks, with set meals starting at ¥2,100 ($17/£8.75). Open daily 5pm to 12:30am (Sun to midnight). 1-24-10 Nakayamate Dori. ☎ 078/221-2055. Cover usually ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75). Station: Sannomiya (5 min.). North of the station on the left side of Kitano-zaka.

THE BAR SCENE

Blue Fox Irish Pub Only in cosmopolitan Kobe would an ex-pat from India succeed with an Irish bar, but the friendly atmosphere draws in the crowds, as does the live music most nights of the week—everything from blues, country-and-western, and Irish—for which there's never a cover charge. Of course, offering sporting events shown on big screens doesn't hurt either. Guinness and Kilkenny, sandwiches and Indian fare priced less than ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20), and a welcoming ambience make this a good place to relax after a hard day of sightseeing, especially if you come for happy hour (5–8pm), when drinks (except Guinness and Kilkenny) are ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10). Open daily 5pm to 1am. Konan Asett Sanmei Building, 7th floor, 1-21-2 Kitano-gasa Dori. ☎ 078/321-6022. Station: Sannomiya (1 min.). On Ikuta Shinmichi St. 1 block west of Kitanozaka.

Second Chance This all-nighter, in business an astonishing 32 years (which makes it older than most of its customers), is a small, one-room bar favored by night owls who don't mind the rather sparse furnishings with Hawaiian touches. Decorated with surfboards and mock thatched roofs, it's where people congregate when the other bars have had the good sense to close down for the night. Open daily 6pm to 5am. Takashima Building, 2nd floor, 2-1-12 Nakayamate Dori. ☎ 078/391-3544. Station: Sannomiya (10 min.). On Yamate Kansen Dori west of Higashimon and catty-corner from Nishimura coffee shop.

Smokey This place is one of a kind—a tiny bar with only eight seats at the counter, all under the watchful eye of 80-something bartender Kamogawa-san, who worked at several hotels (he even served Marilyn Monroe and Joe DiMaggio at the old Kobe Oriental Hotel) before opening his own bar in 1955. Now the oldest bar in Kobe, it's filled with memorabilia of a lifetime, and if you ask, Kamogawa-san will drag out his photographs of actors, actresses, comedians, baseball players, sumo wrestlers, and politicians who have sat here. He's also likely to show you a few of his magic tricks when he's not busy changing records on his old player. There's no cover or table charge, but the average bill is about ¥4,500 ($38/£19). (There are never prices posted in these kinds of bars and there are no menus; most customers are regulars and they don't come just for one drink—they come for the evening. The price above includes such snacks as nuts and whatever other dishes are offered that day.) As this place is tiny, even regular clientele often call to reserve a seat. Open Monday to Saturday 5 to 11pm. 1-9-1 Nakayamate Dori. ☎ 078/391-0257. Station: Sannomiya (4 min.). North of the station on the left side of Kitano-zaka.

Starlight Lounge For cocktails with a view, head to this classy lounge on the 35th floor of Hotel Okura Kobe in Meriken Park, with two-tiered seating for optimal views. Note: No children are allowed after 5pm, and on Saturday nights there's live music, for which there's a ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) charge. Open Monday to Friday 6pm to midnight and Saturday and Sunday from 1pm to midnight. 2-1 Hatoba-cho. ☎ 078/333-3521. Station: Motomachi (10 min. south). Loop Line bus: Meriken Park (1 min.).

6 The Temples of Mount Koya ★★

748km (465 miles) W of Tokyo; 199km (124 miles) S of Osaka

If you've harbored visions of wooden temples nestled in among trees whenever you've thought of Japan, the sacred mountain of Mount Koya is the place to go. It's all here—head-shaven monks, religious chanting at the crack of dawn, the wafting of incense, temples, towering cypress trees, tombs, and early-morning mist rising above the treetops. Mount Koya—called Koyasan by Japanese—is one of Japan's most sacred places and the mecca of the Shingon Esoteric sect of Buddhism. Standing almost 900m (3,000 ft.) above the world, the top of Mount Koya is home to more than 115 Shingon Buddhist temples scattered through the mountain forests. Some 50 of these temples offer accommodations, making this one of the best places in Japan to observe temple life firsthand.

A World Heritage Site, Koyasan first became a place of meditation and religious learning more than 1,190 years ago when Kukai, known posthumously as Kobo Daishi, was granted the mountaintop by the imperial court in 816 as a place to establish his Shingon sect of Buddhism. Kobo Daishi was a charismatic priest who had spent 2 years in China studying Esoteric Buddhism before returning to his native land to spread his teachings among Japanese. Revered for his excellent calligraphy, his humanitarianism, and his teachings, Kobo Daishi remains one of the most beloved figures in Japanese Buddhist history. When he died in the 9th century, he was laid to rest in a mausoleum on Mount Koya. His followers believe Kobo Daishi is not dead but simply in a deep state of meditation, awaiting the arrival of the last bodhisattva (Buddha messiah). According to popular belief, priests opening his mausoleum decades after his death found his body still warm.

Through the centuries, many of Kobo Daishi's followers, wishing to be close at hand when the great priest awakens, have had huge tombs or tablets constructed close to Kobo Daishi's mausoleum, and many have had their ashes interred here. Pilgrims over the last thousand years have included emperors, feudal lords, samurai, and common people, all climbing to the top of the mountain to pay their respects. Women, however, were barred from entering the sacred grounds of Koyasan until 1872.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE The easiest way to get to Koyasan is from Osaka. Ordinary express (kyuko) trains of the Nankai Line depart from Osaka's Namba Station every half-hour or hour bound for Gokurakubashi, and the trip south takes about 1 hour and 40 minutes. If you want to ride in luxury, use one of the limited-express cars with reserved seats that takes about 1 hour and 15 minutes. After arriving at the last stop, Gokurakubashi, you continue your trip to the top of Mount Koya via a 5-minute ride in a cable car. The entire journey from Namba Station to Mount Koya costs ¥1,230 ($10/£5) one-way, including the cable car; if you take the faster limited express, it'll cost ¥760 ($6.35/£3.20) extra. You'll save money, however, with Nankai's discount ticket called Koyasan Free Servic for ¥2,780 ($23/£12), which includes round-trip travel by ordinary express train from Osaka's Namba Station and the cable car, plus unlimited rides on Koya's buses for 24 hours and slight discounts to the attractions listed below. For more information on travel to and around Koyasan, go to www.nankai.co.jp/koyasan.

VISITOR INFORMATION At the top of Mount Koya is Koyasan Station, where you'll find a booth of the local tourist office, the main office of which is located approximately in the center of Koyasan village near Kongobuji Temple. You can pick up a map of Koyasan and book a room in a temple at either office, but it is recommended that you fax ahead for a reservation (see "Where to Stay & Dine," below). Both offices are open daily from 8:30am to 4:30pm in winter (Nov–Feb), to 5pm the rest of the year. The main office has a computer with Internet access you can use for free, as well as a 90-minute rental audio guide for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) that's highly useful for learning more about what you're seeing throughout Koyasan, including the location of famous mausoleums and tombstones in Okunoin. For more information, contact the Koyasan Tourist Association (☎ 0736/56-2616) or check the websites www.koya.org/eng and www.shukubo.jp/eng.

GETTING AROUND Outside the cable car station, you must board a bus that travels 2km (1¼ miles) along a narrow, winding road to the village of Koyasan and then continues along the main street all the way through town to the Okunoin-mae and Ichinohashi bus stops, the location of Kobo Daishi's mausoleum. The bus passes almost all the sights along the way, as well as most temples accommodating visitors and the Koyasan Tourist Association's main office. Buses depart every 30 or 40 minutes between 6:29am and 7pm; the trip to Okunoin-mae takes 20 minutes and costs ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70). Otherwise, once you're settled in at your temple accommodations, you can probably walk to Okunoin and other locations mentioned below.

EXPLORING MOUNT KOYA

THE TOP ATTRACTION The most awe-inspiring and magnificent of Koyasan's many structures and temples, Okunoin ★★ contains the mausoleum of Kobo Daishi. The most dramatic way to approach Okunoin is from the Ichinohashi bus stop, where a pathway leads 1.6km (1 mile) to the mausoleum. Swathed in a respectful darkness of huge cypress trees forming a canopy overhead are monument after monument, tomb after tomb—approximately 200,000 of them, all belonging to faithful followers from past centuries. The audio guide from the tourist office (see “Visitor Information,” above) will guide you to the most famous tombstones, including those of the Toyotomi, Shimadzu, Maeda, Asano, and Matsudaira clans.

I don’t know whether being here will affect you the same way, but I was awestruck by the sheer density of tombstones, the iridescent green moss, the shafts of light streaking through the treetops, the stone lanterns, and the gnarled bark of the old cypress trees. Together, they present a dramatic picture representing a thousand years of Japanese Buddhist history. If you’re lucky, you won’t meet many people along this pathway. Tour buses fortunately park at a newer entrance to the mausoleum at the bus stop called Okunoin-mae. I absolutely forbid you to take this newer and shorter route; its crowds lessen the impact of this place considerably. Rather, make sure you take the path farthest to the left, which begins near the Ichinohashi stop. Much less traveled, it’s also much more impressive and is one of the main reasons for coming to Koyasan in the first place. And be sure to return to the mausoleum at night; the stone lanterns (now lit electrically) create a mysterious and powerful effect.

At the end of the pathway, about a 30-minute walk away, is the Lantern Hall, or Torodo, which houses about 21,000 lanterns, donated by prime ministers, emperors, and others. Two sacred fires, which reportedly have been burning since the 11th century, are kept safely inside. The mausoleum itself is behind the Lantern Hall. Buy a white candle, light it, and wish for anything you want. Then sit back and watch respectfully as Buddhists come to chant and pay respects to one of Japan’s greatest Buddhist leaders. Many who have successfully completed the pilgrimage to Shikoku island’s 88 Buddhist temples conclude their journey here.

MORE TO SEE & DO (134) Kongobuji Temple 法華寺, located near the main Koyasan Tourist Association office in the center of town (☎ 0736/56-2011), is the central monastery headquarters of the Shingon sect in Japan. Although Kongobuji was originally built in the 16th century by Toyotomi Hideyoshi to commemorate his mother’s death, the present building is 150 years old, reconstructed following a fire. Pictures by famous artists from long ago decorate the rooms, including those depicting Kobo Daishi’s trip to China, and the huge kitchen, big enough to feed multitudes of monks, is also on view. The most important thing to see, however, is the temple’s magnificent rock garden, reputedly the largest in Japan and said to represent a pair of dragons in a sea of clouds. If it’s raining, consider yourself lucky—the wetness adds sheen and color to the rocks. Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults and ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for children.

Another important site is the Garan 願王院 (☎ 0736/56-3215), the first buildings constructed on Koyasan and still considered the center of religious life in the community. It’s an impressive sight with a huge main hall (kondo), first built in 819 by Kobo Daishi; a large vermilion-colored pagoda (daito), which many consider to be Koyasan’s most magnificent structure and which is very much worth entering (¥200/$1.65/85p each for the kondo and daito); and the oldest building on Mount Koya, the Fudodo, which was built in 1197. Next to the complex is the (135) Reihokan Museum (☎ 0736/56-2029), displaying wooden Buddha sculptures, scrolls, art, and other Koyasan treasures spread through two buildings, with exhibitions changed four times a year. Admission here is ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for adults, ¥350 ($2.90/£1.45) for students, and ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for children.

All of the sites above are open daily: 8:30am to 4:30pm November to April, and 8:30am to 5:30pm May to October.

WHERE TO STAY & DINE

Although this community of 4,000 residents has the usual stores, schools, and offices of any small town, there are no hotels here. The only place you can stay is at a temple, and I strongly urge you to do so.

Japanese who come here have almost always made reservations beforehand, and you should do the same. You can make reservations by calling the temple directly or through travel agencies such as JTB. You can also make reservations upon arrival in Koyasan at either Tourist Association office before 4pm (see “Essentials,” above), but I suggest faxing a minimum of 3 days in advance to be sure you can get a space (fax 0736/56-2889), especially during peak travel seasons; include your name, address, phone and fax numbers, dates of stay, and number of people in your party.

WHAT IT’S LIKE TO STAY AT A KOYASAN TEMPLE Prices for an overnight stay in one of the temples, including two vegetarian meals, range from ¥10,000 to ¥15,000 ($83–$125/£42–£63) per person, depending on the temple and room. You may need to supply your own towel and toiletries. Check-in is around 3pm (5pm at the latest) and checkout is at 9am.

Your room will be tatami and may include a nice view of a garden. Both baths and toilets are communal. High-school and college students attending Koyasan’s Buddhist university live at the temple; they’ll bring your meals to your room, make up your futon, and clean your room. The Buddhist vegetarian meals (shojin ryori) served are generally quite good, and because Buddhist monks are vegetarians but not teetotalers (beer and sake are made of rice and grain), alcoholic drinks are readily available at the temples for an extra charge. Meals are at set times. Dinner is at 5:30pm, and because the students must leave for school, breakfast is usually served by 7:30am. The morning religious service is at 6 or 6:30am; you don’t have to attend, but I strongly recommend that you do. There’s something uplifting about early-morning meditative chanting, even for nonbelievers; some temples include sacred fire ceremonies as well.

Below are just a few of the dozens of area temples open to overnight guests (rates are based on two people to a room). They’re all located very near the indicated bus stop. All of them have public baths, but none offer rooms with bathrooms.

⑬③ Eko-in ★ This 100-year-old temple, with origins stretching back almost 1,100 years when Kukai was said to have erected a stupa on this site, has nice grounds and is nestled in a wooded slope an easy walk from Okunoin. For centuries it enjoyed support of the Shimadzu clan of southern Kyushu. It’s known for its excellent Buddhist cuisine, and the master priest will give Zazen meditation lessons if his schedule permits. Every morning there’s both a chanting service and a fire ceremony. Most rooms have nice sitting alcoves, and towels and yukata are provided. Reservations should be made in advance, especially for peak season; there’s always someone here who speaks a little English.

Koyasan 497, Koya-cho, Ito-gun, Wakayama-ken 648-0211. ☎ 0736/56-2514. Fax 0736/56-2891. ekoin@mbox.co.jp. 36 units, none with bathroom. ¥10,000–¥15,000 ($83–$125/£42–£63) per person. Rates include 2 meals. AE, MC, V. Bus: Karukayado-mae. Amenities: Computer w/free Internet access. In room: TV (most rooms), hot-water pot w/tea, no phone in some rooms.

137 Rengejoin Temple ★★ This temple's head priest speaks English, so a lot of foreigners are directed here; it's a good place to meet people and to find out about Buddhism. It's also one of the few temples that may take you in without a reservation. Established 900 years ago, it was rebuilt 150 years ago after a fire. Rooms have views of a nice garden with a pond; pluses are the English-language videos placed in some rooms that explore the history and significance of Mount Koya and Kongobuji Temple, as well as morning services conducted in both Japanese and English. The disadvantage is that it's on the opposite end of town from Okunoin, about a 50-minute walk away.

Koyasan 700, Koya-cho, Ito-gun, Wakayama-ken 648-0211. ☎ 0736/56-2233. Fax 0736/56-4743. 48 units, none with bathroom. ¥11,550–¥15,750 ($96–$131/£48–£66) per person. Rates include 2 meals. No credit cards. Bus: Ishinguchi stop. In room: TV, hot-water pot w/tea, no phone.

138 Shojoshinin ★★ Of all Koyasan's temples, this one has the most curb appeal. Originating as a thatched hut built by Kukai more than 1,150 years ago and once the second-largest temple in Koyasan after Kongobuji, today it boasts attractive 150-year-old buildings against a wooded backdrop, including a large wooden structure with rooms overlooking a small garden and pond. Towels and yukata are provided. It's usually full in August and peak seasons, so make reservations early. It has a great location at the beginning of the tomb-lined pathway to Okunoin, making it convenient for your late-night stroll to the mausoleum.

Koyasan 566, Koya-cho, Ito-gun, Wakayama-ken 648-0211. ☎ 0736/56-2006. Fax 0736/56-4770. 30 units, none with bathroom. ¥9,500–¥15,000 ($79–$125/£40–£63) per person. Rates include 2 meals. No credit cards. Bus: Ichinohashi. In room: TV (most rooms), hot-water pot w/tea, no phone in most rooms.

139 Tentokuin The rooms of this temple, which dates from 1622, are located in a new annex. Most look out onto the garden, which in the 1930s was described as one of the most beautiful places in Japan. With a natural mountain background, the garden is of the “borrowed landscaping” style and retains its layout design dating from the Momoyama Period. Rates depend on room size and garden view. One priest speaks English.

Koyasan 370, Koya-cho, Ito-gun, Wakayama-ken 648-0211. ☎ 0736/56-2714. Fax 0736/56-4725. 55 units, none with bathroom. ¥9,500–¥15,000 ($79–$125/£40–£63) per person. Rates include 2 meals. AE, V. Bus: Senjuin-bashi. In room: TV, hot-water pot w/tea, no phone.

7 Himeji, A Castle Town ★

640km (400 miles) W of Tokyo; 130km (81 miles) W of Kyoto; 87km (54 miles) E of Okayama

The main reason tourists come to Himeji, in Hyogo Prefecture, is to see its 400-year-old beautiful castle, which embodies better than any other castle the best in Japan's military architecture. If you were to see only one castle in Japan, this is my pick.

Because of the castle's proximity to Himeji Station on the Shinkansen line, many tourists stop only long enough to see the castle and a few other sites before continuing onward. I've included a few recommendations, however, for those wishing to make an overnight stop.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE A stop on the Tokaido/Sanyo Shinkansen bullet train, which runs between Tokyo and Kyushu, Himeji is about 3½ hours from Tokyo, 1 hour from Kyoto, and less than a half-hour from Okayama. The fare from Tokyo is ¥14,700 ($123/£61) for a nonreserved seat.

VISITOR INFORMATION The Himeji City Tourist Information Center (☎ 079/285-3792) is located at the central exit of the station's north (castle) side, to the left after you exit from the ticket gate. It's open daily from 9am to 5pm, but foreigners are asked to visit the center between 10am and 3pm when an English-speaking volunteer is on hand to answer questions. Another tourist office, Himeji Kanko Navi Port (☎ 079/287-3658), is located on Otemae Dori, Himeji's main road, on the right side just before the castle and is open daily from 9am to 5pm. Some tourist information is also available online at www.city.himeji.hyogo.jp and www.himeji-kanko.jp.

If you're stopping in Himeji only for a few hours to see the castle, deposit your luggage in the coin lockers just beside the tourist office or underneath the Shinkansen tracks.

INTERNET ACCESS Jyukukan Himeji, beside the Himeji Washington Hotel Plaza, Higashi Ekimai-cho 98 (☎ 079/286-6006), is open 24 hours and charges ¥290 ($2.40/£1.20) for the first 30 minutes and then ¥100 (85¢/45p) for each subsequent 15 minutes.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND You can walk to Himeji's attractions. The main road in town is Otemae Dori, a wide boulevard that stretches from Himeji Station north to Himeji Castle (you can walk the distance in about 15 min.). To the east (right) of Otemae Dori are two parallel streets, Miyukidori and Omizusui, both covered shopping arcades. If you want, you can use a bicycle free of charge from 9am to 6pm. Just fill out an application form (before 4pm) at either the station's tourist information counter or Himeji Kanko Navi Port and then exchange the ticket for a bicycle. Finally, red-painted tourist buses make runs from 9am to 4:30pm daily (to 5pm weekends and holidays) every 15 to 30 minutes from Himeji Station to the castle and beyond and cost ¥100 (85¢/45p) per ride or ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) all day.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

Himeji Castle ★★ As soon as you exit from Himeji Station, you'll see Himeji Castle straight ahead at the end of a wide boulevard called Otemae Dori. Perhaps the most beautiful castle in all of Japan, Himeji Castle is nicknamed "White Heron Castle" in reference to its white walls, which stretch out on either side of the main donjon and resemble a white heron poised in flight over the plain. Whether it looks to you like a heron or a castle, the view of the white five-story donjon under a blue sky is striking, especially when the area's 1,000 cherry trees are in bloom. This is also one of the few castles in Japan that has remained virtually as it was since its completion in 1618, surviving even the World War II bombings that laid Himeji city in ruins. From 1956 to 1964, the castle underwent massive restoration, during which parts were totally disassembled and then rebuilt using traditional methods. In 1993 it became Japan's first listing in UNESCO's World Heritage List.

Originating as a fort in the 14th century, Himeji Castle took a more majestic form in 1581 when a three-story donjon was built by Toyotomi Hideyoshi during one of his military campaigns in the district. In the early 1600s, the castle became the residence of Ikeda Terumasa, one of Hideyoshi's generals and a son-in-law of Tokugawa Ieyasu. He remodeled the castle into its present five-story structure. With its extensive gates, three moats, turrets, and a secret entrance, it had one of the most sophisticated defense systems in Japan. The maze of passageways leading to the donjon was so complicated that intruders would find themselves trapped in dead ends. The castle walls were constructed with square or circular holes through which gun muzzles could poke; the rectangular holes were for archers. There were also drop chutes where stones or boiling water could be dumped on enemies trying to scale the walls.

On weekends (and sometimes weekdays), volunteer guides hang around the castle ticket office who are willing to give guided tours of the castle for free. It gives them an opportunity to practice their English while you learn about the history of the castle and even old castle gossip. But even if you go on your own, you won't have any problems learning about the history of the castle, as there are good English-language explanations throughout the castle grounds. With or without a guide, you'll spend at least 2 hours here. But beware, there are lots of stairs. Tip: A combination ticket, allowing discounted admission to both the castle and Koko-en (see below), is available at either entrance.

68 Honmachi. ☎ 079/285-1146. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) children. Combination ticket to both Himeji Castle and Koko-en ¥720 ($6/£3) adults, ¥280 ($2.35/£1.15) children. June–Aug daily 9am–6pm; Sept–May daily 9am–5pm. You must enter 1 hr. before closing time. A 15-min. walk straight north of Himeji Station via Otemae Dori.

①40 Koko-en ★★☆☆ Finds Although laid out only in 1992, this is a wonderful garden, occupying land where samurai mansions once stood at the base of Himeji Castle, about a 5-minute walk away. Actually it's composed of nine separate small gardens, each one different and enclosed by traditional walls, with lots of rest areas to soak in the wonderful views. The gardens, typical of those in the Edo Period, include a garden of deciduous trees, a garden of pine trees, a garden of flowers popular during the Edo Period, tea-ceremony gardens, and traditional Japanese gardens with ponds, waterfalls, and running streams. If you wish, relax at the Souju-an teahouse in the Cha-no-niwa (tea-ceremony garden) with tea and a sweet (¥500/$4.15/£2.10; 10am–4pm) or dine at a restaurant overlooking a carp pond (see “Where to Dine,” below). In any case, I wouldn't miss this special place. If you don't stop (but how could you resist?), you can stroll through all the gardens in about 45 minutes.

68 Honmachi. ☎ 079/289-4120. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) children. Combination ticket to both Himeji Castle and Koko-en ¥720 ($6/£3) adults, ¥280 ($2.35/£1.15) children. Daily 9am–5pm (to 6pm May–Aug). A 15-min. walk north of Himeji Station; turn left in front of Himeji Castle (the entrance will be on your right).

A PILGRIMAGE TO MOUNT SHOSHA & ENGYOJI TEMPLE

If you're staying overnight, you might consider a half-day trip to Mount Shosha (called Shoshazan in Japanese; ☎ 079/266-3327), the 360m-high (1,200-ft.) mountain retreat of Engyoji Temple, founded more than 1,000 years ago by a holy man who received enlightenment from the God of Wisdom and Intellect. Since then, Japanese have flocked to the mountain to seek purification of both body and spirit. Many make it a fun day's outing as well, bringing obento lunch boxes with them to enjoy under the wooded trees. No doubt, the fact that scenes from The Last Samurai starring Tom Cruise were shot here boosted its popularity. But I like this 3- to 4-hour excursion mainly for the lovely hike. The temple buildings spread along the mountaintop are a bonus.

To reach Shoshazan, take bus no. 8 from in front of Himeji Station or Himeji Castle 25 minutes to the last stop (fare: ¥260/$2.15/£1.10). From there, board a ropeway (cable car) that departs every 15 minutes and costs ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) round-trip (half-price for children). Make sure to check when the last ropeway departs the mountain (5pm in winter; 6 or 7pm in summer).

After paying an admission of ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for admission to temple grounds (children get in free), you'll walk 20 minutes to reach the Maniden, the main temple building. An impressive, cliffside wooden structure dedicated to the Goddess of Mercy, it was first constructed in 970, burned to the ground almost 1,000 years later, and was reconstructed in 1932. Other highlights among the many other structures spread along the mountaintop are the Jikido, a former dormitory for priests-in-training (this, together with Jogyodo and Daikodo, make up the Three Temples, where The Last Samurai was filmed) and the five mausoleums of the Honda clan, rulers of Himeji Castle in the 17th century.

WHERE TO STAY EXPENSIVE

Hotel Nikko Himeji 🌟🌟 The Nikko chain took over this existing hotel in 2005, already considered Himeji's best but now a notch higher due to renovated rooms (redone in subdued natural colors and with duvets) and better service. Of course, rates are also higher. Its location (only a 1-min. walk from Himeji Station's Shinkansen side) is a definite plus, as are its many restaurants, its top-floor lounge with a view of the castle, and its health club. In addition, some of its double rooms offer views of the castle in the distance; ask for a room on a higher floor facing north.

100 Minami-ekimai-cho, Himeji 670-0962. ☎ 079/222-2231. Fax 079/224-3731. www.hotelnikkohimeji.co.jp. 257 units. ¥10,925–¥11,200 ($91–$93/£46–£47) single; ¥20,700–¥26,850 ($173–$223/£86–£117) twin; ¥20,700 ($173/£86) double. AE, DC, MC, V. A 1-min. walk from the south (Shinkansen) exit of Himeji Station. Amenities: 4 restaurants; bar; lounge; health club w/20m (66-ft.) indoor lane pool, sauna, whirlpool, and exercise room (fee: ¥1,500/$13/£6.50); salon; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, satellite TV w/pay movies, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

MODERATE

Claire Higasa This family-owned hotel is a good bet. Although distinctly a business hotel with its 50 single rooms, coin-operated fax and photocopy machine in the lobby, and soda and noodle vending machines, several pluses—such as soothing music and flower arrangements in the lobby and an accommodating, English-speaking staff—take it out of the ordinary. Ask for a room with castle view on the sixth or seventh floor for the same price. The bathrooms are tiny and the shower/sink combination faucet a bit mind-boggling for the technically challenged, but who cares when the large seventh-floor public baths with Jacuzzi jets have castle views?

22 Junishomae-cho, Himeji 670-0911. ☎ 079/224-3421. Fax 079/289-3729. www.hotel-higasa.com. 60 units. ¥6,510–¥7,350 ($54–$61/£27–£31) single; ¥13,650 ($114/£57) twin; ¥14,700 ($123/£61) double; ¥12,600 ($105/£52) Japanese-style double. MC, V. Station: Himeji (north exit, 5 min.). Walk north on Utomae-Dori toward the castle and after the Shirogane intersection (the one with a large, one-way street named Junishomae Dori and a traffic light) take the next left; it's 4 short blocks farther, on the left across from a small park. Amenities: Japanese-style pub (3-min. walk from hotel); in-room massage; coin-operated washer/dryer; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; non-smoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Himeji Washington Hotel Plaza Some of the staff at this business hotel speak a little English, and everyone is extremely helpful. Rooms are tiny but cheerful (the cheapest doubles couldn't get much tinier), with windows that open (though some face another building), panels that close for complete darkness, and slippers that, so the hotel claims, are washed after every guests' use (my goodness, what do the other hotels do?). The lobby is on the second floor, above an Internet cafe.

Toyoko Inn Himeji-eki Shinkansen Minami-guchi ★ Value This budget hotel chain beats all the rest with free use of computers in the lobby with Internet access (and free Wi-Fi in the lobby for those traveling with laptops), free domestic phone calls from lobby phones, a choice of two free movie channels nightly (not always in English), and low prices. Opened in 2004, next to Himeji Station's south (Shinkansen) exit, it offers tiny rooms, with singles from the ninth floor boasting views of the castle in the distance.

WHERE TO DINE

Just east of Otemae Dori, the main drag from Himeji Station to the castle, is a parallel street called Miyukidori, a covered shopping arcade with lots of restaurants and coffee shops.

In the listings below, directions are from Himeji Station.

①41 Asaka Sushi SUSHI This is sushi Himeji-style; you order by the plate, and then, using cups of sauce and brushes at your table, you brush on your sauce yourself. There's no menu at this small neighborhood eatery, very much a local place with room for only 10 patrons, but there's a display case outside. The nigiri will give you one sushi each of octopus, squid, shrimp, tuna, and whitefish; the anago is five pieces of grilled conger eel on rice; the tekka is eight pieces of tuna and rice rolled in nori seaweed. Each plate costs ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70).

106 Shiroganemachi. ☎ 079/222-3835. Sushi ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) a plate. No credit cards. Mon–Sat 10:30am–6pm. Walk north on Otemae Dori toward the castle until you come to the 1st one-way street with a traffic light (Junishomae Dori; the intersection is called Shirogane); turn left and then right. It'll be on your left (3 min.).

①42 Kassui-ken ★ EEL/NOODLES This charmless restaurant would not have much to recommend it except for one overwhelming feature: It overlooks a waterfall and koi pond in lovely Koko-en Garden. It's certainly the most picturesque place in town to try Himeji's specialty, conger eel. If that's too exotic, however, it also serves a few noodle dishes, spaghetti, curry rice, and fried rice. Or you can stop just for dessert or a refreshing drink of beer, soda, or coffee; but avoid the busy lunchtime crowd.

Koko-en 68 Honmachi. ☎ 079/289-4131. Main dishes ¥840–¥1,050 ($7–$8.75/£3.50–£4.40); set meals ¥1,575–¥2,100 ($13–$18/£6.50–£9). No credit cards. Daily 9:30am–4:30pm (9:30am–5:30pm Mar–Aug). Inside Koko-en (p. 419).

Sainte Vierge ★★ FRENCH This is Himeji's fanciest place for French cuisine, with an elegant drawing-room ambience and white table-clothed tables spaced far apart for privacy. Only set meals are served, giving choices of fish, meat, or both as main courses, along with side dishes. Because this is a popular wedding venue, especially on weekends, be sure to call first to see whether it's open to the public.

Konyamachi 23. (C) 079/223-1122. Set dinners ¥2,310–¥11,550 ($19–$96/£10–£48); set lunches ¥2,000–¥3,800 ($17–$32/£8.50–£16). AE, DC, MC, V. Wed–Mon noon–2pm and 6–8pm (last order). Walk north on Otemae Dori toward the castle and take the 2nd right after the Shirogane intersection (there’s a bank here); it’s past the 2 covered shopping arcades, on the right.

8 Okayama: Gateway to Shikoku

733km (455 miles) W of Tokyo; 218km (136 miles) W of Kyoto; 160km (100 miles) E of Hiroshima

Okayama is a major gateway to the island of Shikoku (see chapter 10), thanks to the Seto Ohashi Bridge, which measures almost 9.5km (6 miles) in length and connects Okayama Prefecture on Honshu island with Sakaide on Shikoku. Before the bridge was built in 1988, it took an hour by ferry to reach Shikoku, whereas traveling by train or car along the double-decker bridge cuts travel time down to just 15 minutes. Now there are two other bridges linking Honshu with Shikoku (one near Kobe and the other in Hiroshima Prefecture), but they’re for vehicular travel only (no train service).

For those of you less interested in bridges, Okayama and its environs are important for other reasons as well. Okayama city, capital of Okayama Prefecture with a population of 700,000, boasts one of the most beautiful gardens in Japan. In nearby Kurashiki (see “Kurashiki, Market Town of Many Charms,” beginning on p. 430), a historic quarter ranks as one of the most picturesque neighborhoods in Japan. And scattered through Okayama Prefecture are so-called International Villas, accommodations located primarily in rural areas and catering especially to foreigners, with amazingly low rates.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE Okayama is a major stop on the Shinkansen Tokaido/Sanyo Line, about 4 hours from Tokyo (fare: ¥15,850/$132/£66 for an unreserved seat), 1 hour and 15 minutes from Kyoto (fare: ¥6,820/$57/£28), and 50 minutes from Hiroshima (fare: ¥5,350/$45/£22).

Buses depart nightly from Shinjuku Station’s west exit in Tokyo: at 9:15pm, arriving at Okayama Station the next day at 7:35am (Ryobi Bus Co.; (C) 03/3743-0022), and at 8:30pm, arriving at 7:50am (Shimoden Bus Co.; (C) 03/5438-8511). The fare for both is ¥9,800 ($82/£41) one-way. From Tokyo Station, JR buses ((C) 03/3844-0489) depart from the Yaeu south exit at 9:20pm and arrive in Okayama at 7:15am, for ¥10,000 ($83/£42).

Flights from Tokyo to Okayama Airport ((C) 086/294-5201; www.okayama-airport.org) take about 1 hour and 15 minutes and cost ¥27,100 ($226/£113). An airport limousine bus shuttles passengers to Okayama Station in about 30 minutes for ¥680 ($5.65/£2.85).

VISITOR INFORMATION Before departing Tokyo or Narita or Kansai airports, stop by the Tourist Information Center for the leaflet “Okayama, Kurashiki and Seto Ohashi Bridge,” which contains useful information on train transportation to Okayama and important sights in the prefecture (you can also download it from the Japan National Tourist Organization’s website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under “Browse by Destinations”). In Okayama, the Okayama City Tourist Information Office ((C) 086/222-2912; daily 9am–6pm) is inside Okayama Station near the central exit of the east side (look for the sign displaying a question mark). The office is well prepared for foreign visitors, supplying English-language maps and brochures.

Just a 4-minute walk from Okayama Station is the Okayama International Center, 2-2-1 Hokancho (☎ 086/256-2000; Mon-Sat 9am-5pm), where you can get more detailed information, obtain a better map of Okayama than those available at the station, take Japanese lessons (offered Tues-Sat for ¥200/$1.65/85p per lesson), and log onto the Internet. The multilingual staff here is very helpful and is happy to steer you to Okayama Prefecture's International Villas, your hotel, or your next destination. To find the center, take the west exit of the station and turn right (north) onto the main street running in front of the station until you come to a 7-Eleven, where you should turn left; the center is the big building on your right. More information on Okayama is available on the Internet at www.pref.okayama.jp and www.city.okayama.okayama.jp.

INTERNET ACCESS You can check and send e-mail at the Okayama International Center (see "Visitor Information," above) free of charge, but you're limited to 30 minutes of usage and because there are only two computers, you may have to wait. Otherwise, head to Club Mont Blanc on the sixth floor of the OPA building across from Okayama Station's east exit, 6-3 Honmachi (☎ 086/224-7050), open 24 hours and charging ¥290 ($2.40/£1.20) for 30 minutes.

GETTING AROUND Okayama's sights are all clustered within walking distance of each other, due east of Okayama Station. You can walk from Okayama Station to Okayama Castle in about 30 minutes via Momotaro Odori street. Otherwise, board a streetcar from Okayama Station's east side bound for Higashiyama (platform 1) and disembark about 6 minutes later at the Shiroshita streetcar stop (the third stop; to your right will be the very noticeable Okayama Symphony Hall building). Pay the ¥100 (85¢/45p) fare when you get off. From here you can continue walking straight ahead (east) 15 minutes to Okayama Castle and then visit nearby Korakuen Garden and Yumeji Art Museum.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

Korakuen Garden ★★☆☆ Okayama's claim to fame is this garden, considered one of Japan's three most beautiful landscaped gardens (the other two are in Kanazawa and Mito). Completed in 1700 by the Ikeda ruling clan after 14 years of work, its 11 hectares (28 acres) are graced with a pond, running streams, pine trees, plum and cherry trees, flowering bushes such as azaleas and hydrangeas, bamboo groves, tea-houses, and tea plantations. The surrounding hills, as well as Okayama's famous black castle, are incorporated into the garden's design (luckily, laws limiting the size of surrounding buildings protect the views). Its name, Korakuen, means "the garden for taking pleasure later," which has its origins in an old saying: "Bear sorrow before the people; take pleasure after them." This garden differs from most Japanese gardens in that it has large expanses of grassy open areas—the first Japanese garden to do so and still a rarity in crowded Japan. Other unusual features worth seeking out are the

Tips When You're Done Sightseeing

The fastest way to return to Okayama Station is by bus no. 1 from the Korakuen-mae bus stop, located outside Korakuen Garden just before the bridge to Yumeji Art Museum.

Ryuten, a wooden pavilion that straddles a stream where you can soak your feet, and an enclosure of red-crested cranes. You can easily spend an hour here.

1–5 Korakuen. © 086/272-1148. Admission ¥350 ($2.90/£1.45) adults, ¥140 ($1.15/60p) children, free for seniors. Combination ticket to Okayama Castle and Korakuen Garden ¥520 ($4.35/£2.20) adults, ¥260 ($2.15/£1.10) children. Apr–Sept daily 7:30am–6pm; Oct–Mar daily 8am–5pm. Streetcar stop: Shiroshita (20 min.). Continue walking straight east and then turn left for the footbridge.

Okayama Castle  Originally built in the 16th century, Okayamajo was destroyed in World War II and rebuilt in 1966. Thanks to its black exterior, it has earned the nickname “Crow Castle”; it was painted black to contrast with neighboring Himeji’s famous White Heron castle. Unlike castles of yore, an elevator whisks you up to the fourth floor of the donjon. The top floor affords a good view of the park and the city beyond, while the other floors contain a few swords, samurai outfits, lacquerware, and other Edo-Period items, most identified in Japanese only and quickly seen in 15 minutes or so. There’s also a children’s play area with old-fashioned toys, but probably the most rewarding thing to do here is to try on a kimono and have someone snap a picture of you with your own camera. Donning costumes is free, but only five participants are accepted at 10 and 11am, and 1, 2, and 3pm. Frankly, if you’ve seen other Japanese castles, you might just want to photograph this one from the outside and move on. For a fairy-tale fantasy indulgence, you can rent swan-shaped paddle boats on the river below the castle (just be glad your neighbors aren’t here to see you).

2–3–1 Marunouchi. © 086/225-2096. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥120 ($1/50p) children. Combination ticket to Okayama Castle and Korakuen Garden ¥520 ($4.35/£2.20) adults, ¥260 ($2.15/£1.10) children. Daily 9am–5pm. Streetcar: Shiroshita stop (15 min.). Continue walking east; it will be on your right.

 Yumeji Art Museum (Yumeji-Kyodo Bijutsukan) This museum, in a brick building topped by a cock weathervane just a few minutes’ walk north of Korakuen, is dedicated to the works of Yumeji Takehisa. Born in Okayama Prefecture in 1884, Yumeji is sometimes referred to as Japan’s Toulouse-Lautrec and is credited with developing the fin de siècle Art Nouveau movement in Japan. This collection includes some of his most famous works, mostly in the sparse, Nihonga style of painting. Beautiful women were his favorite subjects. The small three-room exhibition, with displays changed every 2 months, can be toured in about 15 minutes.

Joypolis

If you have children in tow, you might want to temper Okayama’s cultural offerings with some good old-fashioned fun at Joypolis, 2–10–1 Shimoishii (© 086/232-8790; daily 10am–midnight), a chain of Japan’s most sophisticated and largest video-game arcades. In addition to a toddler’s play area, pachinko, slot machines, video games, virtual horse races, and simulators (how good are you at skateboarding or racing cars?), there are 3-D motion rides and other amusements. Entry is free, with most attractions individually priced between ¥300 and ¥600 ($2.50–$5/£1.25–£2.50). With or without kids, it’s worth visiting one of these eye-opening arcades at least once while you’re in Japan. To reach it, take the east exit from Okayama Station and turn right (south) onto Shiyakusho Suji street. Note: You must be 17 or older to stay after 6pm and 19 or older to stay after 10pm.

2-1-32 Hama. ☎ 086/271-1000. Admission ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) students, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Tues-Sun 9am-5pm. Streetcar: Shiroshita stop (23 min.). Just north of Korakuen Park, a short walk across Horai-bashi Bridge.

A CYCLING EXCURSION

For some rural R&R, head west from Okayama city to the historic Kibiji District, once home to the ancient Kibi kingdom and known today for its huge burial mounds, temples, shrines, and five-story pagoda, all connected via a marked biking path that traverses this pastoral landscape. It's fun to cycle from one historic destination to the next, but what I like most about this ride is its rural setting, through villages, past peach groves, and along paddies (much of the bike path is actually on the same raised walkways farmers use to separate and dam their paddies and to get to their fields).

Rental bikes (☎ 0866/92-0233) are available daily 9am to 6pm to the right outside Soja Station, which you can reach in 34 minutes by JR train from Okayama Station (fare: ¥430/$3.60/£1.80), with trains running two to three times an hour. Bikes rent for ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for 2 hours, plus ¥200 ($1.65/85p) each additional hour. Although you can return bikes to Soja Station, I suggest forking out an additional ¥600 ($5/£2.50) drop-off fee and cycling the bike path's entire 16km (10 miles) to Ichinomiya Station, where you can ditch the bike and hop on a train for an 11-minute ride back to Okayama Station (fare: ¥200/$1.65/85p). It takes 3 to 4 hours to bike the 16km (10 miles) and stop at sights along the way. Caveat: Although the bike path is well marked most of the way, with signs in English saying KIBIJI DISTRICT with a picture of a bike, I got lost trying to find Ichinomiya Station. Villagers are apparently used to lost cyclers and soon had me merrily on my way. Be sure to pick up a cycling map when you rent your bike; the Okayama International Center also has information on the Kibiji District (see "Visitor Information," above).

SHOPPING

You can choose from a sampling of products and crafts made in Okayama Prefecture at the ⁽¹⁴⁴⁾ Okayama Prefectural Product Center (Okayama-ken Kanko Bussan Sen-ta), 1-5-1 Omotecho (☎ 086/234-2270; daily 10am-8pm, closed second Tues each month), conveniently located beside (south of) the Shiroshita streetcar stop on the first floor of Okayama Symphony Hall (a round purple building). Bizen pottery (unglazed pottery with a history stretching back 1,000 years), rush-grass mats (igusa), wooden trays, bamboo ware, papier-mâché toys, sake, and more are all for sale here.

For general shopping, there's a large underground shopping arcade called Ichibangai at Okayama Station, with boutiques selling clothing, shoes, and accessories. Across from the station and connected to Ichibangai is Takashimaya department store. In the heart of the city, just south of Shiroshita streetcar stop, is the 1km (half-mile) Omotecho covered shopping arcade (shotengai), where you'll find Tenmaya, Okayama's largest department store.

WHERE TO STAY EXPENSIVE

Hotel Granvia Okayama ★★ Owned by the West JR Railway Group and offering a discount for holders of a Japan Rail Pass, this hotel boasts a great location just east of Okayama Station (although connected to the station via a second-floor walkway, it might be easier to find if you go out the east central exit and look for it on your right). Rooms, on the 8th to 18th floors, with the best city views offered by more expensive twins and doubles on higher floors, have blackout curtains and good bedside reading lamps. Most singles face another building. Among the hotel's several food-and-beverage outlets, best are those on the 19th floor with great views; among these, Applause, a classy cocktail lounge with a curved window facade, is a favorite for drinks (but note that there's a ¥1,050/$8.75/£4.40 music charge after 8pm).

Hotel Okura Okayama ★★ This Western-style hotel joined the Okura family in 2007 but has been a local favorite since its 1973 opening. Located on a hill above the city and surrounded by greenery, it has a resortlike holiday atmosphere. The lobby, with a restful view of wooded hills and a waterfall, boasts an impressive four-story wall made of Bizen-yaki ceramic tiles, for which Okayama Prefecture is famous. Comfortable, larger-than-average rooms face either the city or woods. City views are more dramatic; these rooms come with a map to help you pick out the speck of the castle, which you can just barely see if you squint. No matter—the night views are even better. Restaurants also take advantage of the hotel's location with views of either greenery or great city panoramas. In summer there's a rooftop beer garden. The main drawback to staying here is one of access—there are free shuttle buses from the station but only in the evenings (at 6:30pm, 7:30pm, and 8:40pm) and the no. 12 bus from Okayama Station's no. 9 platform departs for the hotel only seven times a day.

Value Countryside Delights: Okayama Prefecture's International Villas

If you're not on a tight schedule and you don't mind roughing it a bit, you might consider treating yourself to a few days in the countryside around Okayama at one of the prefecture's International Villas. Financed and maintained by the Okayama Prefectural Government, these small country inns are the brainchild of a former Okayama governor, who wished to repay the kindness he received from foreigners during his trips abroad as a youth. Established in the late 1980s/early 1990s, they were originally open only to foreigners and their Japanese guests; now, all but one are open to foreigners and Japanese alike.

Altogether, there are five International Villas, most in small villages or in rural settings 1 to 2 hours by train or bus from Okayama city. One, modeled after a traditional soy-sauce warehouse, is located in a mountain village named Fukiya, an old copper-mining town that has changed little since the mid-19th century. In Hattoji, accommodations are in a 19th-century renovated thatched farmhouse. In Ushimado, you'll stay in a modern exposed-beam villa with sweeping views of the Seto Inland Sea—this one's probably the most popular among young backpackers craving isolation (though beware; it's a long, steep hike from the bus stop). Also offering great views is the villa on Shiraishi Island in the Seto Inland Sea, which features beaches, shrines, hiking trails, and accommodations in an airy glass-and-wooden building (this one is open only to foreigners and their Japanese guests). In Takebe, known for its adjoining hot-springs bathhouse, you'll stay in an innovative wooden building designed to resemble a traditional wooden barge.

All of these villas are remarkable, small with only a half-dozen or so simply furnished guest rooms (only those in Ushimado and Takebe have private bathroom), free laundry facilities, and communal kitchens (no meals are served), though you should do your grocery shopping before arriving at the villa, as stores may not be close at hand; restaurants may also be scarce.

If these villas were privately owned, you'd easily pay more than twice what you'll be charged. The cost of staying at an International Villa is only ¥2,500 ($21/£10) per person per night for foreigners and ¥3,000 ($25/£13) for Japanese (add ¥500/$4.15/£2.10 for single occupancy), plus a one-time ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) International Villa membership fee, valid for 2 years. Children under 7 stay for free. Payment must be made in cash at each villa, but reservations can be made up to 3 months in advance by contacting the Okayama International Center, 2-2-1 Hokancho, Okayama 700-0026; or by calling ☎ 086/256-2535 from 9am to noon and 1 to 5pm (Japan time) Monday through Saturday; you can also fax the center at 086/256-2576. Comfort Hotel  Value This hotel has a great location for sightseeing, across from the Shiroshita streetcar stop and halfway between Okayama Station and the castle, a 15-minute walk from each. Spotlessly clean and opened in 2005, it offers small but modern mostly double rooms (a rarity in Japan, as most Japanese couples prefer twin beds), along with such perks as free rental bikes, free breakfasts, and free coffee in the lobby from 3pm to midnight.

1–13 Marunouchi, Okayama 700-0823. ☎ 877/424-6423 in the U.S. or 086/801-9411. Fax 086/801-9495. www.comfortinn.com. 208 units. ¥5,800 ($48/£24) single; ¥8,500–¥10,000 ($71–$83/£35–£41) double; ¥12,000 ($100/£50) twin. Rates include continental breakfast. AE, DC, MC, V. Streetcar: Shiroshita (1 min.; across the intersection to the right). Amenities: Free rental bikes; in-room massage; coin-operated laundry; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms; lobby computers w/free Internet access. In room: A/C, cable TV w/pay movies, free Wi-Fi, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

 Matsunoki Ryokan   Finds This family-owned enterprise welcomes foreigners and gives them (to my mind) special treatment. Although it offers rooms with and without bathrooms in a cluster of three buildings, foreigners are automatically given rooms in the newer, main building, all with bathrooms at a price normally given to bathroomless units (only if accommodations in the main building are full, which rarely happens, are foreigners shunted to the older buildings). Spotless rooms are mostly Japanese style, though three Western-style rooms are available, with glazed windows that open. The owners speak some English and offer a small gift to those who make reservations through Matsunoki's Web home page. Meals are served in a cheerful communal dining hall (Western breakfasts are available), but even better is the ryokan's nearby Matsunoki-Tei (see "Where to Dine," below). You'll like this place, especially because they will do your laundry for free.

Breakfast ¥600 ($5/£2.50) extra; dinner ¥1,300 ($11/£5.40) extra. V (5% extra if paying by credit card). Station: Okayama (west exit, 2 min.). Walk west on the street to the north of NHK; it's just past the New Station Hotel, on the right. Amenities: Restaurant; room service (3pm–10:50pm); coin-op washer and dryer; free same-day laundry service for clothes that do not need ironing; lobby computers w/free Internet access. In room: A/C, TV w/free videos, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

WHERE TO DINE

Okayama's most famous dish is Okayama barazushi, which features Seto Inland Sea delicacies and fresh mountain vegetables. Traditionally served during festive occasions, it consists of a rice casserole laced with shredded ginger and cooked egg yolk and is topped with a variety of goodies, including conger eel, shrimp, fish, lotus root, and bamboo.

Kuriya Sen   KAISEKI/TEPPANYAKI For a memorable meal with a view, head to this 20th-floor restaurant with sweeping views over the city, located in the ANA Hotel across from Okayama's west exit. With a modern, minimalist design, it offers changing kaiseki meals for lunch and dinner, along with grilled steaks and seafood prepared at a 12-seat teppanyaki counter. A stylish bar on the same floor offers cocktails with the same mesmerizing views.

①46 Matsunoki-Tei ★★ Value KAISEKI/SHABU-SHABU The family who has long run the inexpensive Matsunoki ryokan (see "Where to Stay," above) also owns this very refined Japanese restaurant, located in an older house in a beautiful traditional setting. Dining here is a luxurious experience, as you sit in a private tatami room (some with leg wells under the table) and enjoy well-prepared dishes brought by an efficient and courteous staff. Although kaiseki is one of the most expensive meals you can have in Japan, it's quite reasonable here, and the all-you-can-eat shabu-shabu has a 2-hour time limit (indicate whether you want kaiseki or shabu-shabu when making your reservation). Even more economical are the obento lunch boxes for ¥1,700 ($14/£7) and more elaborate mini-kaiseki lunches.

20-1 Ekimotomachi. ☎ 086/253-5410. Reservations required by noon for evening meals. Kaiseki ¥3,700-¥10,000 ($31-$83/£15-£42); all-you-can-eat shabu-shabu ¥3,400 ($28/£14); set lunches ¥1,700-¥4,000 ($14-$33/£7-£17). No credit cards. Daily 11am-2pm and 5-10pm. See Matsunoki (under "Where to Stay," above) for directions.

Petite Mariée ★ FRENCH Brick walls, a beamed ceiling, French music, a large bouquet of flowers, and numerous European knickknacks set the mood at the tiny (nonsmoking) Petite Mariée, which serves inexpensive yet good French food. The set meals change monthly, but my ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) set lunch consisted of creamy mushroom potage, bread, seafood soufflé, vegetables, and coffee or tea. A glass of wine with lunch costs only ¥105 (85¢/45p) extra. Unfortunately, set meals are written in Japanese only (though the main dishes of set meals are displayed outside), while the a la carte menu, which may include roast lamb or scallops, is in French. Nevertheless, this is a civilized place for a meal.

1-3-8 Yanagimachi. ☎ 086/222-9066. Main dishes ¥1,780-¥5,770 ($15-$48/£7.40-£24); set lunches ¥1,050-¥2,100 ($8.75-$18/£4.40-£8.75); set dinners ¥2,650-¥8,950 ($22-$75/£11-£37). MC, V. Thurs-Tues 11:30am-2pm and 5-9pm (last order). Closed the 3rd Tues of every month. Station: Okayama (an 8-min. walk southeast). Take the central (east) exit, turning right (south) onto Shiyakusho-suji; go 1 block past the gas station (it will be on your right) and turn left onto Akura Dori. It's 2 blocks farther on your right.

Tenbo WESTERN/JAPANESE For Western fare near the castle and Korakuen, head for the Okayama Plaza Hotel's ninth-floor restaurant, which has the added benefit of castle views. Because the a-la-carte menu is limited to only a few dishes such as seafood pilaf and rice curry, you'll probably want to order one of the set meals that change monthly, described only in Japanese but usually featuring fish or beef for Western fare. Japanese set meals include obento lunch boxes, tempura, and the local favorite, barazushi. Or, if it's not crowded, you can come just for a drink. This is a nice place to relax after a day of sightseeing.

Okayama Plaza Hotel, 2-3-12 Hama. ☎ 086/272-1201. Set meals ¥1,800-¥5,500 ($15-$46/£7.50-£23). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am-8:30pm (last order). Bus: Okaden bus from gate 4 to Yumeiji-kyodo Bijutsukan-mae (1 min.). Streetcar stop: Shiroshita (15 min.). Just north of Korakuen Park, a short walk across the Asahigawa River via the Horai-bashi Bridge (entrance to the hotel is from the north).

In addition to the choices below, there are some inexpensive, rustic snack houses along the moat that separates Okayama Castle and Korakuen Garden, at Tsukimi Bridge, where you can order a drink, noodles, or ice cream and relax with a view of the castle. Most are open daily 8:30am to 5pm (to 4:30pm in winter).

(147) Okabe Finds TOFU This informal eatery in the heart of Okayama is a local institution, popular for its specialty, homemade tofu. There's no problem ordering, as it serves only two teishoku, both with soup, rice, and pickled vegetables: the Okabe teishoku with two kinds of tofu, the other a rice bowl (donburi) topped with namayuba, a kind of tofu. Seating is along one long counter, behind which an army of women scurry to get out orders. It's simple but atmospheric.

1–10-1 Omotecho. ☎ 086/222-1404. Tofu teishoku ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90); donburi ¥750 ($6.25/£3.15). No credit cards. Mon–Sat 11:30am–2pm. Closed national holidays. Streetcar: Shiroshita (2 min.). Walk south through the Omotecho covered shopping arcade a couple minutes to the stoplight and turn right (west); it's on the left, on a corner. You'll see Okabe's open-fronted tofu shop; the restaurant is around the corner.

(148) Shikisai VARIED JAPANESE Located just outside the entrance to Korakuen Garden (its name translates as “Four Seasons of Color”), this modern restaurant is decorated with Bizen pottery and Japanese ikebana and is a good place to try Okayama specialties for lunch, including barazushi (¥1,575/$13/£6.50) and seasonal dishes such as nabe (a one-pot stew eaten in winter), sea eel (anago), and mini-kaiseki meals, as well as soba and udon noodles. The menu is written in Japanese only, so look at what others are eating. Top it off with Doppo, a locally brewed beer.

1–5 Korakuen-gaien. ☎ 086/273-3221. Set lunches ¥1,155–¥2,100 ($9.60–$18/£4.80–£9). No credit cards. Daily 11am–3pm. Streetcar: Shiroshita (11 min.). Located just north of the main entrance gate, next to a souvenir shop.

(149) Yamadome ★ KUSHIKATSU This 40-year-old restaurant was recently renovated and now sports a classy modern interior, classical music, and local artist's work on the walls. It serves fried foods on a stick, from beef to fish to vegetables. The menu is in Japanese only, but the owner speaks English. A 10-stick kushikatsu course will set you back ¥1,350 ($11/£5.50).

1–22 Tenjincho. ☎ 086/224-6886. Kushikatsu sticks ¥120–¥170 ($1–$1.40/50p–70p); set lunches ¥630–¥1,270 ($5.25–$11/£2.60–£5.30); kushikatsu sets ¥1,350–¥2,290 ($11–$19/£5.50–£9.50). No credit cards. Mon–Sat 11am–2:30pm and 5–9pm. Closed 1 week in mid-Aug. Streetcar: Shiroshita (1 min.). Just north of the streetcar stop, on a side street across from a gas station (which you can see from the stop).

9 Kurashiki, Market Town of Many Charms ★★

26km (16 miles) W of Okayama

If I were to select the most picturesque town in Japan, Kurashiki would certainly be a top contender. Here, in the heart of the city, clustered around a willow-fringed canal, is a delightful historic district of old buildings and ryokan perfect for camera buffs.

As an administrative center of the shogunate in the 17th century, Kurashiki blossomed into a prosperous market town where rice, sake, and cotton were collected from the surrounding region and shipped off to Osaka and beyond. Back in those days, wealth was measured in rice; large granaries were built to store the mountains of granules passing through the town, and canals were dug so that barges laden with grain could work their way to ships anchored in the Seto Inland Sea. Kurashiki, in fact, means “Warehouse Village.”

It's these warehouses, still standing, that give Kurashiki its distinctive charm. Kurashiki is also known throughout Japan for its art museums, including the prestigious Ohara Museum of Art with its collection of European and Japanese art. For these reasons, Kurashiki is hardly undiscovered, and Japanese flock here in droves, especially in summer months. Yet despite its overcrowdedness, Kurashiki still rates high on my list of places to see in Japan.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Train If you're arriving in Kurashiki by Shinkansen (which takes about 4½ hr. from Tokyo, excluding transfers, and almost 2 hr. from Kyoto), you'll arrive at Shin-Kurashiki Station, about 9.5km (6 miles) west of Kurashiki Station and the heart of the city; the local train that runs between the two stations departs about every 15 minutes and takes 9 minutes. However, because there are no through Shinkansen trains from Tokyo directly to Shin-Kurashiki Station (except for the Nozomi, which does not accept the JR Rail Pass; all others require a change of trains in Okayama), because not all Shinkansen trains stop in Kurashiki, and because Shin-Kurashiki Station is not the town's most convenient station for sightseeing, if you're coming from the east it's much easier to disembark from the Shinkansen in Okayama and transfer to the local Sanyo train for the 14-minute ride directly to Kurashiki Station (fare: ¥320/$2.65/£1.35).

By Bus The same buses that depart from Tokyo's Shinjuku station for Okayama (see "Okayama: Gateway to Shikoku," on p. 422) continue onward to Kurashiki, arriving in Kurashiki about 40 minutes after their Okayama stop and costing ¥10,000 ($83/£42) one-way.

VISITOR INFORMATION There's a tourist information office outside the south (main) exit of Kurashiki Station, on the second floor of the Terminal Hotel to the right, open daily 9am to 7pm. Another information office, called the Kurashiki-Kan, is right on the canal in the historic district and has a rest area with tables and vending machines; open daily 9am to 6pm (to 5:15pm in winter), it was built in 1916 and is ironically the only Western-looking wooden building in the area. Both offices distribute maps and brochures, including the useful "Walking Map of Kurashiki." For more information, call ☎ 086/422-0542.

ORIENTATION The willow-lined canal, called the Bikan Historical Quarter, is only a 10-minute walk from Kurashiki Station; take the south exit and walk south on Chuo Dori, turning left just before the Kurashiki Kokusai Hotel. In fact, you can walk virtually everywhere of interest in Kurashiki; the Bikan Historical Quarter is zoned mostly for pedestrians.

EXPLORING THE BIKAN HISTORICAL QUARTER & ENVIRONS

Kurashiki's historic old town is centered on a canal lined with graceful willows and 200-year-old granaries made of black-tile walls topped with white mortar. Many of the granaries have been turned into museums, ryokan, restaurants, and boutiques selling hand-blown glass, Bizen pottery, papier-mâché toys, women's ethnic clothing imported from Bali and India, and mats and handbags made of igusa (rush grass), a local specialty. Street vendors sell jewelry, their wares laid out beside the canal, and healthy young boys stand ready to give visitors rides in rickshaws.

A resident advised me that, because of the crowds that descend upon Kurashiki during the day (about four million tourists come here a year), I should get up early in the morning before the shops and museums open and explore this tiny area while it's still under the magic spell of the early-morning glow. "Real lovers of Kurashiki come on Monday," he added. "Because that's when most everything is closed, and there are fewer people." I've found that early evening is also a magical time to walk the streets, especially after sunset when many buildings along the canal are illuminated.

Do try to avoid weekends, but no matter when you come, you're likely to fall under the city's spell. One of the most rewarding things to do in Kurashiki is simply explore (don't neglect the side streets between the canal and Achi Shrine on Tsurugatayama Park; even rain only enhances the contrasting black and white of the buildings).

THE MUSEUMS & OTHER SIGHTS

Japan Rural Toy Museum (Nihon Kyodogangu-Kan) ★★ Kids Almost next to the Folkcraft Museum is this museum with its delightful and colorful display of traditional and antique Japanese toys from every prefecture. Opened in 1967, it has thousands upon thousands of items crammed into four rooms, including kites (200 of them!), miniature floats, antique Japanese dolls, masks, and spinning tops. Incidentally, the huge top in the corner helped the owner of the museum, Hiroyuki Ohga, gain entry into the Guinness World Book of Records in 1983—by spinning 1 hour, 8 minutes, and 57 seconds. You can tour the museum in much less time than that—30 or 40 minutes. A large store at the entrance sells great traditional Japanese toys.

1–4–16 Chuo. ☎ 086/422-8058. Admission ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) junior-high and high-school students, ¥200 ($1.70/85p) children. Daily 9am–5pm. On the canal.

Kurashiki Folkcraft Museum (Kurashiki Mingei-Kan) Under the slogan USABILITY EQUALS BEAUTY, this museum contains folk-crafts not only from Japan but from various other countries as well, giving unique insight into their cultural similarities and differences as reflected in the items they make and use in daily life. Spread through three old rice granaries, displays change three times a year and may include baskets, ceramics, glass, textiles, and woodwork. Unfortunately not all items are identified in English, but you'll appreciate their beauty. Plan on 30 minutes here.

1–4–11 Chuo. ☎ 086/422-1637. Admission ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) university and high-school students, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Tues–Sun 9am–5pm (to 4:15pm Dec–Feb). On the canal, beside the Kurashiki-Kan tourist office.

Ohara Museum of Art (Ohara Bijutsukan) ★★ This is by far Kurashiki's most impressive museum, a must-see even on a short list of sightseeing. Ohara Magosaburo, who believed that even people in remote Kurashiki should have the opportunity to view great works of art (that's his beautiful mansion across the canal from the museum), founded it in 1930 as Japan's first museum of Western art. The main building, a two-story stone structure resembling a Greek temple, is small but manages to contain the works of such greats as Picasso, Matisse, Vlaminck, Chagall, Manet, Monet, Degas, Pissarro, Sisley, Toulouse-Lautrec, Gauguin, Cézanne, El Greco, Renoir, Miro, Kandinsky, Klee, Pollack, Jasper Johns, Oldenburg, Frank Stella, Rothko, De Kooning, Warhol, and Hundertwasser. The museum has expanded so much since its founding that several annexes have been added over the years. A crafts gallery housed in a renovated granary contains works by some of my favorites, including ceramics by Hamada Shoji, Bernard Leach, and Kawai Kanjiro; and woodblock prints by Munakata Shiko, who lived in Kurashiki 3 years. An annex is devoted to Japanese artists painting in the Western style and to contemporary Japanese artists, which makes for a fascinating comparison. Yet another building displays ancient Chinese art, primarily from prehistoric times to the Tang Dynasty (A.D. 618–907). Allow 1½ hours to see everything, but because your ticket is good all day, you don't have to see it all at once. An audio guide, which will direct you to the most important works in the main gallery, is available for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10).

1–15 Chuo. ☎ 086/422-0005. www.ohara.or.jp. Admission ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) adults, ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) seniors, ¥600 ($5/£2.50) university and senior-high students, and ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) children. Tues–Sun 9am–5pm. On the canal.

①50 Ohashi House (Ohashi-tei) Built in 1796 by a wealthy rice merchant, this traditional mansion is typical of the era, with front rooms used for entertaining guests and for business (the doorsill leading to the warehouse can be removed for easy transport), and the rear used as family living quarters. A front gate, usually allowed only the samurai class, is proof how important the Ohashi family was; another unique feature is a guest house, rare in merchant's homes. Once much larger (a hotel occupies the former garden), the home's 20 remaining rooms contain family heirlooms but are otherwise fairly empty. It's the only merchant's house open to the public, so come for a 15-minute spin through if you've never seen the inside of a traditional Japanese home. 3–21–31 Achi. ☎ 086/422-0007. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.20) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) seniors and children. Tues–Sun 9am–5pm. Across Chuo Dori from the Bikan Historical Quarter, behind the Nikko Hotel.

IVY SQUARE

A 1-minute walk from the canal and museums is a complex called Kurashiki Ivy Square, 7–1 Honmachi. Built as a cotton mill by a local spinning company in 1889, this handsome redbrick complex shrouded in ivy has been renovated into a hotel, restaurants, museums, and a few boutiques and galleries selling crafts. It's especially romantic in the evening when, from mid-July to the end of August, there's a beer garden in the inner courtyard (daily 6–9:30pm) and classical music wafts from loudspeakers built into the courtyard's brick floors.

Museums at Ivy Square include Kojima Torajiro Memorial Hall (☎ 086/422-0010), named for and displaying paintings by the local artist who went to Europe to purchase most of the pieces in the Ohara museum (he died, however, before completion of the museum). It's open Tuesday to Sunday from 9am to 5pm. Most unique, however, in my opinion, is the ①51 Orgel Musée (☎ 086/427-3904), where 30-minute concerts on 30 antique organs, player pianos, and music boxes from Europe, the United States, and Japan take place. You must enter on the hour, at 10am, 11am, 1pm, 2pm, 3pm, 4pm, and 5pm. Admission for both museums is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults and ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for children.

ESPECIALLY FOR KIDS

Tivoli Park Kids This branch of Copenhagen's Tivoli Park imitates the real thing with reproduction 19th-century buildings, flower beds, shows, and rides, including a Ferris wheel, carousel, roller coaster, kiddie rides, 3-D motion theater, and water slide. Even a copy of the Little Mermaid herself is here. What makes it particularly attractive is that it's only a minute's walk from Kurashiki Station and, except during Golden Week and mid-August, is hardly ever crowded. Young Japanese come here on dates, when it's all lit up at night.

12–1 Kotobuki Cho. ☎ 086/434-1111. Admission for everything ¥3,400 ($28/£14) adults, ¥2,400 ($20/£10) seniors and children, free for children under 6. Generally daily 10am–7 or 8pm, but varies with the season. Closed end of Jan/beginning of Feb. Station: Kurashiki (north exit, 2 min.).

WHERE TO STAYEXPENSIVE

152 Ryokan Kurashiki ★★ ★ (Finds) The best place to stay to get a feeling for old Kurashiki is right in the heart of it—in one of the old warehouses on Kurashiki's picturesque willow-lined canal. This venerable ryokan consists of an old mansion and three converted rice-and-sugar warehouses more than 250 years old, all interconnected in its own little compound. Filled with antiques and curios, it has long, narrow corridors, nooks and crannies, and the peaceful sanctuary of an inner garden. There's no other ryokan in Japan quite like this one. Its five rooms, which are actually two- and three-room suites consisting of a tatami living room and sleeping quarters with Western-style beds, are simply elegant, with antiques placed here and there, two TVs, and Jacuzzi tubs. Two are big enough for up to six people. Guests can elect to eat in their room, in a tatami room overlooking the canal, or in a delightful terrace tea lounge overlooking a small garden (Western-style breakfasts are available).

4-1 Honmachi, Kurashiki 710-0054. ☎ 086/422-0730. Fax 086/422-0990. www.ryokan-kurashiki.jp. 5 units. ¥28,000–¥48,000 ($233–$400/£117–£200) per person. Rates include 2 meals but exclude service charge. Rates ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) higher in peak season. AE, DC, MC, V. In the Bikan Historical Quarter, on the canal. Amenities: Restaurant; tea lounge; in-room massage. In room: A/C, cable TV, fridge, hot water pot w/tea, safe, Jacuzzi tub.

153 Tsurugata ★★ ★ Rustic furniture, gleaming wood, and high ceilings are trademarks of this ryokan, on the canal in the Bikan Historical Quarter's oldest building, constructed in 1744. It was once a merchant's house and shop selling rice, cotton, seafood, and cooking oil. The most expensive rooms have a view of the garden with its 400-year-old pine trees and stone lanterns, while the least expensive rooms are on the second floor without a view. All rooms, however, have private toilets, and there are public baths. This ryokan is owned by the Kurashiki Kokusai Hotel, which has long been the most popular hotel for foreign visitors (see below).

1-3-15 Chuo, Kurashiki 710-0046. ☎ 086/424-1635. Fax 086/424-1650. 11 units, all with toilet, 3 with bathroom. ¥12,600–¥33,600 ($105–$280/£53–£140) per person. Rates include 2 meals. Rates ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) higher in peak season. AE, DC, MC, V. In the Bikan Historical Quarter, on the canal. Amenities: Restaurant; in-room massage; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea.

Hotel Kurashiki If you prefer a hotel near Kurashiki Station, you can't get any closer than this Japan Railways Group combination business-tourist hotel above the station (holders of the Japan Rail Pass can get a discount). Its rooms are spotless and pleasantly decorated, with double-paned windows to shut out noise and nicely tiled bathrooms instead of the usual one-unit cubbyholes of most business hotels. The most expensive singles have double-size beds and sofas, making them quite roomy for Japan, though the cheapest rooms in all categories are quite small. Personally, I think it's a shame to come all this way and miss out staying in the Bikan Historical Quarter, but if it's convenience you want, this is your best bet (some rooms face Tivoli Park). The rates below reflect both room types and the seasons.

Kurashiki Ivy Square Hotel ★ An interesting place to stay and a good choice in this price category, this hotel opened in 1974 in a brick converted cotton mill on Ivy Square. Much of the architectural style of the old mill has been left intact, and rooms have a rural, simple atmosphere. Some rooms face a tiny expanse of green grass and an ivy-covered wall or a canal with koi fish (much better than those facing a parking lot). Deluxe rooms are actually two-room suites. The Bikan Historical Quarter is just a minute's walk away, but the train station is a 25-minute hike away.

Kurashiki Kokusai Hotel ★★ This has long been Kurashiki's most popular Western-style hotel—and it's easy to see why. This delightful hotel, built in 1963, blends into its surroundings with black-tile walls set in white mortar. Its atmosphere is decidedly old-fashioned, which only adds to the charm. Look for the two huge woodblock prints in the lobby, Great Barriers of the Universe, by Japanese artist Munakata Shiko (you can see more of his work at the Ohara Museum). Rooms have nice touches of locally made crafts that lift them out of the ordinary, including woven place mats, Kurashiki glass lampshades, and woodblock prints by a local artist. Female travelers receive a flower in their room. A newer annex offers slightly larger (mostly) twin rooms with larger bathrooms, but I prefer the smaller (and cheaper) rooms in the old building facing the back with a pleasant view of the Ohara Museum, garden greenery, and the black-tile roofs of the old granaries.

INEXPENSIVE

Hotel Grace Kurashiki Located off Chuo Dori just a couple minutes' walk from the Bikan Historical Quarter, this spare but pleasant hotel caters to business travelers during the week and to tourists on weekends. Rooms are mostly singles (couples able to share a small bed can stay in one for ¥6,500/$54/£27), with only 12 doubles and four twins, but in any case couples will have to do the “rock, paper, scissors” game to see who gets the one luggage rack. For the best views, ask for a room on the 10th floor facing the historic quarter.

Toyoko Inn Kurashiki Minamiguchi Value Opened in 2000, this inexpensive business hotel has a good location between Kurashiki Station and the Bikan Historical Quarter, above a convenience store. It also tries harder than most business hotels to draw in customers, offering free Internet access from two computers in the lobby, free domestic calls from lobby phones, free Wi-Fi in the lobby, two free movies that change monthly, and free breakfast. Rooms are tiny, with most of the room taken up by double- or queen-size beds, but the price is right. Ask for a room on a top floor for unobstructed city views.

Young Inn Kurashiki For inexpensive rooms close to the station, you might try this rather different kind of place (at least for Japan). A redbrick building, it has an informal youth-hostel feel and seems more European than Japanese. Painted in bright colors, it looks as though it might have been rather chic at one time but has faded over the years. It caters mainly to young people and has two to three beds per room (all with sink); the beds are arranged on different levels in bunk-bed style. In fact, the three-bed rooms on the fifth floor have to be seen to be believed—the third bed (which is actually a semi-double-size, so four can stay here) is about 3m (10 ft.) off the floor, and you have to climb a ladder to reach it. Definitely for the nimble who are unafraid of heights. The English-speaking owner also dabbles on the Internet; ask to check your e-mail on the computer in the coffee shop. The 10 nonsmoking rooms all have private bathrooms, and four rooms have free Wi-Fi (make requests when making reservations). Cinderella wannabes take note: There's a midnight curfew.

WHERE TO DINE

If you're here in summer, you might wish to take advantage of an evening beer garden. You'll find them atop the Hotel Kurashiki, in the courtyard of Ivy Square, and on the lawn of the Kokusai Hotel. The first two offer only all-you-can-eat-and-drink sets for around ¥3,500 ($29/£15), while the last option has an a-la-carte menu as well.

MODERATE

Hachikengura ★★ FRENCH Occupying a converted rice granary that once belonged to the Ohashi family (described above), this is my top pick for an atmospheric meal, boasting a soaring wood-beamed ceiling, tiled walls, a worn wooden floor, and a window with views of the Ohashi mansion kitchen. Traditional French cuisine, such as duck confit or quail stuffed with foie gras, is served in a nouvelle style. You can eat here more economically if you come for lunch.

El Greco Coffeehouse COFFEE SHOP El Greco is Kurashiki's most famous coffee shop, open since 1959 and simply decorated with a wooden floor, wooden tables and benches, vases of fresh flowers, and El Greco prints. It serves coffee, fruit juice, milkshakes, ice cream, and cake from an English-language menu.

1–11 Chuo. ☎ 086/422-0297. Coffee ¥450 ($4.30/£2.15). No credit cards. Tues–Sun 10am–5pm. Next door to the Ohara Museum in an ivy-covered stone building.

154 Kamoi ★ SUSHI This sushi restaurant, occupying a 200-year-old rice granary on Kurashiki's willow-fringed canal, is simply decorated with stark-white walls, dark wooden beams, and a collection of cast-iron teapots. Because the menu is in Japanese, select from the plastic-food display outside the front door or from the pictures from the menu. In addition to sushi set meals, other set meals include a tempura teishoku, the Kamoi Teishoku (featuring sashimi and barazushi—a rice dish covered with vegetables and seafood and commonly served during festivals), and—my favorite—the Kurashiki Obento with tempura, vegetables, rice, and soup.

1–3–17 Chuo. ☎ 086/422-0606. Set meals ¥1,260–¥2,100 ($11–$18/£5.50–£9). No credit cards. Thurs–Tues 10am–6pm (closed 2nd Mon of each month). Catty-corner across the canal from the Ohara Museum of Art.

155 Kanaizumi UDON Kanaizumi, housed in a warehouse-style building with tall ceilings, is easy to spot: Just look for its chef rolling out udon behind a large window open to the street (though he's on duty only from 11am–1pm daily). In addition to the thick, handmade wheat udon noodles, tempura, sashimi, and local cuisine is served, but all fixed-price meals come with udon. As the menu is in Japanese only, make your selection from the display case or from pictures in the menu.

8–33 Honmachi. ☎ 086/421-7254. Udon ¥578–¥1,103 ($4.80–$9.20/£2.40–£4.60); set meals ¥1,418–¥1,995 ($12–$17/£6–£8.50). AE, MC, V. Tues–Sun 11am–8pm. Behind (east of) Ryokan Kurashiki.

Kiyutei STEAKS Enter through the front gate just off the canal, pass through the small courtyard, and go into a small room dominated by a counter with cooks grilling steaks, the specialty of the house. There's an English-language menu; you're probably best off ordering one of the set meals, which offer also grilled salmon, the day's fish, and other choices in addition to steak.

1–2–20 Chuo. ☎ 086/422-5140. Set meals ¥1,300–¥3,700 ($11–$31/£5.50–£16). AE, DC, MC, V. Tues–Sun 11am–9pm (Dec–Feb Tues–Sun 11:30am–8:30pm). On the canal, across from the main entrance of the Ohara Museum of Art.

Kuku CURRIES A cute little shop with just a counter and three tables and jazz background music, this is an inexpensive alternative if you're searching for something different. Its curries on the English-language menu run the gamut from Thai green or red curry to curries with eggplant, chicken, or pork, and there's an assortment of Asian beers, from Thailand, the Philippines, Indonesia, and India. It's near the Bikan Historical District, on a picturesque lane (if it weren't for those darn overhead electric/telephone lines), but ask the tourist office for directions.

11–19 Honmachi. ☎ 086/424-3075. Curries ¥650–¥900 ($5.40–$7.50/£2.70–£3.75); set lunches ¥980–¥1,200 ($8.15–$10/£4.10–£5); set dinner ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50). No credit cards. Thurs–Tues 11:30am–8pm. A 4-min. walk northeast of the historic district.

Ristorante Rentenchi PIZZA/PASTA This cozy, tiny restaurant (with an English-language menu), run by a kind husband-and-wife team, is a good choice for inexpensive dining between Kurashiki Station and the Bikan Historical Quarter. Neapolitan-style, thick-crust pizza from a wood-burning oven is the specialty, most with one or two toppings, though several more can be added upon request.

2–19–18 Achi. ☎ 086/421-7858. Reservations recommended. Pizza and pasta ¥950–¥1,800 ($7.90–$15/£3.95–£7.50); set lunches ¥1,050–¥2,800 ($8.75–$23/£4.40–£12). AE, MC, DC, V. Wed–Mon 11:45am–2pm and 6–10pm. An 8-min. walk south of Kurashiki Station on Chuo Dori, on the left side (look for the Italian flag).

10 Off the Beaten Path: Matsue

724km (450 miles) SW of Tokyo; 186km (116 miles) NW of Okayama; 402km (251 miles) NE of Hakata (Fukuoka)

Capital of Shimane Prefecture and with a population of about 150,000, Matsue lies near the northern coast of western Honshu. It's off the beaten track for most foreign tourists, who tend to keep to a southerly route in their travels toward Hiroshima and Kyushu. Japanese, however, are quite fond of Matsue, and a fair number of them choose to spend their summer vacation in and around this pleasant small town, visiting its castle and other sights, including a nearby museum highlighting contemporary Japanese art in a fantastic garden setting. Hugging the shores of Lake Shinji and Nakaumi Lagoon, cut in half by the Ohashi River, and crisscrossed by a network of canals, Matsue is a pretty castle town blessed with Edo-Era architecture, particularly along the castle moat where many samurai settled. All these things conspire to make a trip to Matsue—despite its out-of-the-way location—very worthwhile.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Train The easiest way to reach Matsue is from Okayama via a 2½-hour JR limited express train ride that costs ¥4,850 ($40/£20) for an unreserved seat. There's also one train a day, the Isokaze, that travels between Kokura in eastern Kyushu and Matsue in about 6 hours, costing ¥4,000 ($33/£17) for an unreserved seat.

By Bus A bus departs from Tokyo's Shibuya Station (in front of Mark City) nightly at 8pm, arriving at Matsue Station at 6:35am and costing ¥11,550 ($96/£48) one-way. From Hiroshima, 14 buses depart daily, taking 3½ hours and costing ¥4,000 ($33/£17) one-way.

VISITOR INFORMATION At the Tokyo or Narita or Kansai airport Tourist Information Centers, be sure to pick up the leaflet "Matsue and Izumo Taisha Shrine" (you can also download it from the Japan National Tourist Organization's website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under "Browse by Destinations"). Upon arrival at Matsue Station, stop off at the Matsue International Tourist Information Office (☎ 0852/21-4034; daily 9am–6pm), located in a contemporary-looking kiosk in front of the station's north exit, where you can pick up English-language brochures on Matsue and Shimane Prefecture and a good map of the city. More information is available online at www.kankou.pref.shimane.jp and www.city.matsue.shimane.jp.

INTERNET ACCESS Kunibiki Messe, Matsue's convention center a 10-minute walk north of Matsue Station, has computers with free Internet connections at its International Center on the third floor (☎ 0852/31-5056). It's open Monday to Friday from 9am to 7pm and Saturday from 9am to 5pm.

MAIL The main post office, where you can obtain cash from an ATM, is a 5-minute walk from the north exit of Matsue Station, on the street that runs in front of the station to your right (east).

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Matsue's attractions lie to the northwest of the station and across the Ohashi River, and although buses run virtually everywhere, you can easily cover most distances on foot. Matsue Castle is about a 30-minute walk from Matsue Station, with most attractions located just north of the castle along a picturesque moat on a street called Shiomi Nawate. To the west of Matsue Station, about a 10-minute walk away, is Lake Shinji, famous for its sunsets.

If you prefer to ride, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) buys you an all-day pass for the Lake Line, which features red, old-fashioned buses running every 20 minutes in a 1-hour loop through the city beginning at Matsue Station and stopping at most tourist sights daily between 8:40am and 6pm. Single trips cost ¥200 ($1.65/85p). Note that only major stops are flashed in Roman letters inside the bus.

GOODWILL GUIDES Although Matsue's sights are concentrated in one area of town and are easy to find on your own, you may want a "goodwill guide" to show you around, especially if you're going to Izumo Taisha Shrine. Established by the Japan National Tourist Organization, the goodwill guide network is composed of volunteers with foreign-language abilities who act as guides in their city. All you have to do is pay their transportation costs and entrance fees into museums and sights—and it's nice if you buy them lunch, too. If you wish to have a guide, apply at the tourist information office 2 or 3 days in advance (by phone ☎ 0852/27-5843; by fax 0852/27-2598).

SEEING THE SIGHTS

International visitors are entitled to 50% discounts at Matsue Castle, Buke Yashiki, Lafcardio Hearn Memorial Museum, Adachi Museum of Art, and a few other attractions by showing their passport at attraction entrances. The prices below are the regular fare, without the discount.

Matsue Castle ★★ First built in 1611 and partly reconstructed in 1642 and again in the 1950s, Matsue Castle is the only castle along this northern stretch of coast built for warfare as opposed to serving merely as a residence. It's also one of Japan's few remaining original castles—that is, it's not a ferroconcrete reconstruction. Rising up from a hill about 1.6km (1 mile) northwest of Matsue Station with a good view of the city, the five-story donjon (which actually conceals six floors to give its warriors a fighting advantage) houses the usual daimyo and samurai gear, including armor, swords, helmets, and lacquerware that belonged to the Matsudaira clan, who ruled for 10 generations.

Lafcadio Hearn (a European who lived in Matsue in the 1890s, adopted Japanese citizenship, and wrote extensively about Japan and Japanese) said of Matsue Castle: "Crested at its summit, like a feudal helmet . . . the creation is a veritable architectural dragon, made up of magnificent monstrosities." As you walk through the castle up to the top floor, notice the staircase. Although it looks sturdy, it's light enough to be pulled up to halt enemy intrusions. Concealed holes on the second floor could serve as drop chutes for raining stones down on invaders. The top floor, with windows on all four sides from which the feudal lord could command his army, is one of the few watchtowers remaining in Japan. And to think the castle almost met its demise during the Meiji Restoration when the ministry of armed forces auctioned it off, hoping to rid the city of its Feudal-Era landmark. Luckily, former vassals of the clan pooled their resources and bought the castle keep. In 1927, the grounds were donated to the city.

Also on castle grounds is the Matsue Kyodo Kan, a Western-style, Meiji-Era building built in 1903 to accommodate Emperor Meiji should he ever turn up (he never did). Today it houses the Matsue Historical Museum, with free admission to its changing exhibits. You can tour this and the castle in less than an hour.

1–5 Tonomachi. ☎ 0852/21-4030. Admission ¥550 ($4.60/£2.30) adults, ¥280 ($2.35/£1.20) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm (to 6:30pm Apr–Sept). Lake Line bus: Stop no. 7, Matsue-jo Otemae (1 min.). Or a 30-min. walk northwest of Matsue Station.

ATTRACTIONS NEAR THE CASTLE

Most of these attractions are located on Shiomi Nawate, a small, picturesque street beside the castle's north moat. I've listed them in geographic order, walking from east to west.

156 Teahouse Meimei-an This is one of Japan's most renowned and well-preserved thatch-roofed teahouses, built in 1779 upon orders of a 29-year-old lord of the Matsudaira clan. It's located at the top of a flight of stairs, from which you have a good view of Matsue Castle (read: photo op). Note the waiting room (and its ancient toilet), for guests awaiting a summons to the teahouse. A separate building offers the bitter Japanese green tea and sweets for an additional ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70), which you might find refreshing before you move on to your next destination.

278 Kitahori-cho. ☎ 0852/21-9863. Admission ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) students, free for children. Daily 9am–5pm (green tea served until 4:15pm). Lake Line bus: Stop no. 9, Shiomi Nawate (4 min.). Or a 5-min. walk northeast of Matsue Castle, back from Shiomi Nawate on a small side street and up a flight of stairs to the left.

157 Buke Yashiki ★ This ancient samurai house, facing the castle moat, was built in 1730 and belonged to the Shiomi family, one of the chief retainers of the Matsudaira feudal clan residing in the castle. High-ranking samurai, the Shiomi family lived pretty much like kings themselves, having separate servants' quarters, a tearoom, and even a shed for their palanquin. Compared with samurai residences in wealthier regions of Japan, however, this samurai house is considered rather austere. As you walk around it, peering into rooms with their wooden walls slid open to the outside breeze, you'll see furniture and objects used in daily life by samurai during the Edo Period. You can see it all in 10 minutes.

305 Kitahori-cho. ☎ 0852/22-2243. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm (to 6:30pm Apr–Sept). Lake Line bus: Stop no. 10, Koizumi Yakumo Kinenkan-mae (3 min.). Northeast of Matsue Castle across the moat, on Shiomi Nawate.

Lafcadio Hearn Memorial Museum (Koizumi Yakumo Kinenkan) Here you'll find memorabilia of writer Lafcadio Hearn (1850–1904) including his desk, manuscripts, photographs, and smoking pipes. Japanese are fascinated with this man who married the daughter of a Matsue high-ranking samurai, became a Japanese citizen, and adopted the name Koizumi Yakumo. He was one of the first writers to give Japanese the chance to see themselves through the eyes of a foreigner and to describe Japan to the outside world. His books still provide insight into Japanese life at the turn of the 20th century and are available at all bookstores in Japan with an English-language section.

Because most Japanese will assume it's out of respect for Hearn that you've come to Matsue, you may want to read one of his books before coming here. His volume Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan contains an essay called "In a Japanese Garden," in which he gives his impressions of Matsue, where he lived for 15 months before moving to Kumamoto to teach English.

For die-hard Hearn fans, next to the memorial is Lafcadio Hearn's Old Residence (☎ 0852/23-0714), a Japanese-style house (and former samurai mansion) where Hearn lived in 1891. It has a pleasant, small garden immortalized in Hearn's essay "In a Japanese Garden." Admission here is ¥350 ($2.90/£1.45) for adults, ¥180 ($1.50/75p) for children. It's open daily 9am to 5pm (10am–4:40pm Dec–Feb). You can tour both the museum and the residence in 30 minutes.

322 Okudani-cho. ☎ 0852/21-2147. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm (to 6:30pm Apr–Sept). Lake Line bus: Stop no. 10, Koizumi Yakumo Kinenkan-mae (1 min.). On Shiome Nawate north of Matsue Castle.

①58 Gesshoji Temple ★ This is the family temple and burial ground of the Matsudaira clan, feudal lords of Matsue and the surrounding region. It was established back in 1664 by Matsudaira Naomasa, whose grandfather was the powerful Tokugawa Ieyasu. Nine generations of the Matsudaira clan are buried here, each in his own small compound spread throughout the solemn grounds (allow 20 min. to see all of them). What I like most about this cemetery is that it seems ancient and forgotten; you might find yourself the only living soul here. At the grave of the sixth lord is a stone turtle (described by Hearn as “the monster tortoise”) famous for midnight strolls that terrorized residents; if you rub its head, you’ll have good luck. Stop for ceremonial green tea (¥400/$3.35/£1.70) in a room of a modern building facing a great little garden. And in June, temple grounds are famous for stunning hydrangeas—don’t miss it.

Sotonakabara-cho. ☎ 0852/21-6056. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) high-school students, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) children. Daily 8:30am–5:30pm (to 5pm Nov–Mar). Lake Line bus: Stop no. 15, Gesshoji-mae (4 min.). A 15-min. walk west of Matsue Castle.

A MUSEUM ON THE SHORES OF LAKE SHINJI

Shimane Art Museum (Kenritsu Bijitsukan) This modern museum with huge glass windows overlooking Lake Shinji showcases works by artists of Shimane Prefecture, as well as art that employs water as a theme. Most of the permanent collection consists of works by Japanese artists, though there are also a few pieces by Monet, Courbet, and Rodin. In addition to its many paintings, woodblock prints, photography, crafts, and ceramics, there’s a rooftop terrace and an outdoor sculpture garden (free of charge) along Lake Shinji, perfect for a sunset stroll. In fact, the museum is so attuned to sunsets that in summer it remains open 30 minutes past sunset. You can see the permanent exhibit in about 30 minutes.

1–5 Sodeshi-cho. ☎ 0852/55-4700. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, free for children. Special exhibitions cost extra. Wed–Mon 10am–6:30pm (Mar–Sept closes 30 min. after sunset). Lake Line bus: Stop no. 27, Kenritsu Bijitsukan (in front of the museum). Or a 15-min. walk west of Matsue Station.

BOAT TRIPS

The Horikawa Pleasure Boat Tour (Horikawa Meguri; ☎ 0852/27-0417) is a tour of the castle moat aboard flat-bottom boats (take off your shoes and sit on tatami) with a rooftop canopy that lowers for tight squeezes under bridges. It’s a picturesque, relaxing way to see the city, with trips around the castle lasting about an hour. In winter, you can keep warm huddled under a kotatsu (a kind of heated blanket). Note, however, that commentary is in Japanese only. Boarding spots are at Karakoro Hiroba near the Kyobashi Bridge (Lake Line Bus stop no. 6) and Otemae near Matsue Castle (Lake Line Bus stop no. 8). Boats run every 15 minutes daily from 9am to 5pm (to 6pm in summer) March through October and in November from 9am to 4pm; every 20 minutes daily from 10am to 3pm December through February. Tickets cost ¥1,200 ($10/£5) for adults and half-price for children, but you can get a 30% discount if you’re a foreigner by showing your passport.

SHOPPING

For one-stop shopping for locally crafted goods, visit the Shimane Prefectural Products and Tourist Center (Shimane-ken Bussankanko-kan), 191 Tonomachi (☎ 0852/22-5758; Mon–Sat 9:30am–6pm, Sun and holidays 9am–6pm), just southeast of Matsue Castle (Lake Line bus to stop no. 8 to Otemae, then a 1-min. walk). In a modern building that resembles the black-and-white structures typical of the region, the center sells everything from ceramics and abacuses (one of the few prefectures in Japan that still produces them) to toys, jewelry, and foodstuffs, all products of Shimane Prefecture. On the second floor are displays showing how various local products are produced, as well as an English-language DVD about the prefecture (instructions for how to work the player, however, are in Japanese only, so ask someone to help you, as all the buttons are also in Japanese only).

Another interesting place to shop is the Karakoro Art Studio, Kyomise Karakoro Hiroba Square (☎ 0852/20-7000; Wed–Mon 9:30am–6:30pm), a handsome, century-old former bank renovated into studios and shops selling locally made sweets, tea, jewelry, glassware, woodworking, and other crafts. Changing exhibitions are held in the basement vaults. It's located south of the castle on the moat; both the Lake Line bus and Horikawa Pleasure Boat Tour stop here.

EASY SIDE TRIPS

IZUMO GRAND SHRINE (IZUMO TAISHA) Overrated The most important religious structure in the vicinity of Matsue is easy to see on a half-day side trip, but come only if you have extra time. Izumo Taisha, 195 Kizuki Higashi, Taisha-cho (☎ 0853/53-3100; daily sunrise–sunset), is considered one of Japan's holiest shrines because, according to popular lore, all the gods in the Shinto pantheon gather here for 1 month every autumn to determine the world's fate for the upcoming year. In Izumo this month is called the "Month with the Gods." Everywhere else in Japan, it's referred to as the "Month without Gods," because they're all away performing their duty here, housed in those long buildings flanking both sides of the main shrine. Otherwise, like the Ise Grand Shrines, the main shrine here, reconstructed in 1744, is considered too sacred for mere mortals and is hidden away from close inspection. You'll have to content yourself with a picture showing how it looked 1,000 years ago, when it was reputedly 23m (78 ft.) higher to heaven on top of huge pilings. This makes it the oldest site of a Shinto Grand Shrine displaying the Taisha style of architecture. It's dedicated to Okuninushi-no-kami, the Shinto deity responsible for medicine, farming, and happiness. To the left of the main shrine is the marriage shrine, where you'll see people throwing coins up into the bristled ends of thick, twisted rice ropes adorning the entrance; legend has it that if a coin gets stuck in the bushy end, the thrower will have good luck in marriage.

It's a 30- to 40-minute JR train ride from Matsue Station to Izumoshi Station (¥570/$4.75/£2.40), followed by a 30-minute bus ride (¥460/$3.85/£1.90) bound for Izumo Taisha ("Taisha-yuki"; get off at the last stop). Or, for a more atmospheric journey, you can also reach Izumo Taisha Shrine by taking the private Ichibata train from Matsue Shinjiko Onsen Station (departures are once or twice an hour) 55 minutes to Izumo Taisha-mae Station (only a couple of trains a day travel directly; otherwise you'll have to change trains in Kawato). The train stops at stations no larger than American closets and costs ¥790 ($6.60/£3.30). From Izumo Taisha-mae Station it's a 15-minute walk to the shrine. Admission to the shrine is free.

ADACHI MUSEUM ★★☆☆ Finds I was blown away the first time I laid eyes on the Adachi Museum, 320 Furukawa-cho, Yasugi (☎ 0854/28-7111; www.adachimuseum.or.jp; daily 9am–5:30pm, to 5pm Oct–Mar), which houses one of Japan's premier collections of Japanese modern art (from the Meiji, Taisho, and Showa periods) amid a meticulously sculpted garden that I consider one of Japan's finest. Exhibitions, which are changed four times a year to reflect the seasons, are comprised of 200 works and include the largest collection of distinguished painter Yokoyama Taikan, with at least 20 of his 130 works here always on display. A Ceramics Hall displays works by Kawai Kanjiro and Kitaoji Rosanjin.

But what makes this museum truly unique is its perfectly landscaped garden, crafted to complement Taikan's masterpieces and continually visible through cleverly crafted windows to incorporate it into the museum's artwork. The effect is surreal, as though the garden is a still picture, a scroll, a Taikan painting. There are several outdoor viewing spots, as well as a coffee shop overlooking a koi pond and two teahouses serving traditional cakes and powdered green tea (one with a nice view of a moss garden). You'll want to spend at least 1½ hours here, more if you opt for the audio guide, which costs ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) extra and describes 130 works of art.

Admission to the museum is ¥2,200 ($18/£9) for adults, ¥1,700 ($14/£7) for university students, ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for high-school students, and ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for children, but foreigners can get a 50% discount by showing their passport. To get there, take the JR train from Matsue Station 20 minutes to Yasugi, and then board one of the free shuttle buses that departs eight times a day for the 20-minute ride to the museum. (At last check, buses departed for Adachi at 9:25, 10:35, and 11:25am and at 12:20, 1:20, 2:10, 3:25, and 4:20pm, but you'd be wise to verify this.) There are also city buses, but they're infrequent. In any case, as there are very few buses, it's best to work out a schedule with the Matsue tourist office. A certain travel writer got stranded out here and had to hitchhike.

159 Minami-Kan ★★ Finds You'll be treated like royalty here at this ryokan, located right beside Lake Shinji. Although parts of the ryokan, including its lobby and rooms with private bathroom, are modern, the original building stems from 1888 and boasts several great tatami rooms with nice wood detailing (these have private toilets but no tubs). Most rooms have views of the lake, but if you really want to feel special, stay in the two-room garden cottage right beside the lake with views of the lake and a garden. Minami-Kan is also renowned for its cuisine, open to the public for lunch daily from 11:30am to 2:30pm, with set meals costing ¥2,200 to ¥5,000 ($18–$42/£9–£21).

Hotel Ichibata ★ Matsue's best-known tourist hotel is the Hotel Ichibata, which first opened its doors more than 40 years ago in a part of town called Matsue Shinjiko Onsen, a hot-spring spa. Pluses include the hotel's indoor and outdoor hot-spring public baths with views over Lake Shinji and a nearby jogging path that hugs the shores of the lake. Just behind the hotel is the private Ichibata Line train to Izumo Taisha. None of the singles or doubles has a view of the lake, but the more expensive twins and all the Japanese-style rooms do, including some combination-style rooms with both beds and tatami area.

Matsue New Urban Hotel Although it's a business hotel with the usual vending machines in the lobby, this property near Lake Shinji (with free morning shuttle service from the station) and within walking distance of Matsue Castle and other tourist sights offers large hot-spring baths and rooms with great views of the lake. Rooms facing away from the lake are slightly cheaper, though some of these on higher floors do have views of Matsue Castle in the distance. By the way, this is the newest of four Urban hotels in Matsue. The original hotel, next door, and the two you can see from the station's north exit are more worn, with fewer amenities, but they are less expensive.

Tokyu Inn Part of a national business hotel chain, the Tokyu Inn is a good choice for travelers who want to spend the night close to Matsue Station. Rooms are small and generic but have everything you need, including Tempur Comfort Pillows that mold to your head; bathrooms are a bit larger than in most business hotels. Paying slightly higher rates in each category will get you a larger bed in single rooms and a larger room in double and twin rooms. There are also ladies' rooms equipped with humidifiers, irons, and female-oriented toiletries.

①60 Ryokan Terazuya ★★ Value Terazuya offers good value for your money, but it also offers something money can't buy: true hospitality. This Japanese inn has been in business since 1893, owned by the Terazu family, who has shown so much kindness to foreigners that many consider their stay here a highlight of their trip. The Terazus treat guests like family, teaching them the tea ceremony in the tearoom, showing them how to make sushi in the communal dining hall, giving calligraphy lessons, and singing traditional Noh songs in the tatami-matted party room. They've even been known to escort guests to the onsen. The postwar building, while nothing special on the outside, is spotless and colorfully decorated inside. Located across from a small shrine, it's also near the Shimane Art Museum and Lake Shinji, making it convenient for watching those famous sunsets. And although it's only a 7-minute walk from Matsue Station (head west along the north side of the railroad tracks), the Terazus will pick you up if you call ahead. If faxing, please do so during Japanese business hours so as not to wake them.

WHERE TO DINE

Much of Matsue's regional cuisine comes from Lake Shinji, including sea bass, smelt, carp, freshwater eel, and a small black clam (shijimi, popular in soups). Warigo soba, which comes with stacked layers of noodles, to which you add grated daikon radish, yam, fish flakes, seaweed, and other condiments, is also popular.

Ji Beer Kan GRILLED MEAT In a large, airy setting beside the castle moat west of the Hearn Memorial Hall, this is Matsue's microbrewery/restaurant (every town seems to have one now). You'll find it on the second floor above a souvenir shop. Three different kinds of beer are brewed: a pilsner, a fruity pale ale, and an herb-flavored ale; a sampler of all three costs ¥950 ($7.90/£3.95). The fare is Genghis Khan, with strips of beef or pork that you cook on a grill at your table, with set meals including all the vegetables, rice, and salad you can eat. If all you want is a beer, buy one from a counter in the souvenir shop and take it outside to enjoy at the tables beside the moat.

509-1 Kuroda-cho. ☎ 0852/55-8877. Set meals ¥2,100-¥7,500 ($18-$63/£9-£32); set lunches ¥900-¥1,300 ($7.50-$11/£3.75-£5.50). AE, MC, V. Daily 11am-5pm. Lake Line bus: Stop no. 11, Horikawa Yuransen Noribo (1 min.).

①61 Kyoragi ★★ LOCAL SPECIALTIES Located across from Ji Beer Kan (above), this modern restaurant with a wood interior, lots of windows, and both tatami and table seating specializes in dishes based on original Izumo recipes, using organic meats and vegetables whenever possible. There are pictures of some of the set meals offered on the Japanese-language menu, including the very tasty Hanagoromo set meal for ¥1,680 ($14/£7) with lots of local delicacies. Another set meal, served only for dinner for ¥2,625 ($22/£11), allows you to choose from almost a dozen different kinds of fresh fish for your main course, along with side dishes that change weekly. From Tuesday to Friday, there's a daily set lunch for only ¥735 ($6.10/£3.05).

512-5 Kuroda-cho. ☎ 0852/25-2233. Set meals ¥1,260-¥3,150 ($11-$26/£5.50-£13). DC, MC, V. Tues-Sun 11am-2pm and 5-9:30pm (open on holiday Mon, closing Tues instead). Lake Line bus: Stop no. 11, Horikawa Yuransen Noribo (1 min.).

River View ★ Value CONTINENTAL Decorated in white, with a large wooden terrace (open only in summer) overlooking a river and jazz background music, this restaurant turns out very good dishes that might include mustard steak, grilled fish, vegetable risotto, shoulder pork roast, or grilled chicken. Portions are small, so order several dishes if you're hungry, or go for one of the set meals such as the one for ¥3,150 ($26/£13), which offers five dishes to be shared by two people.

562-1 Otesemba-cho. ☎ 0852/60-6122. Main dishes ¥800-1,680 ($6.65-$14/£3.35-£7); set dinners ¥2,520-¥3,150 ($21-$26/£11-£13); set lunches ¥850-¥1,600 ($7.10-$13/£3.55-£6.50). AE, MC, V. Wed-Mon 11:30am-2pm and 5:30-11pm. A 3-min. walk north of Matsue Station, 2 blocks behind Tokyu Inn.

162 Daikichi ★ Finds YAKITORI Daikichi means "big happiness," and judging from the English-speaking owner's smiling face, that's the order of the day. Customers seem to be content, too, as they crowd into this small counter-seating restaurant. A branch of an Osaka yakitori-ya, Daikichi offers an English-language menu of various yakitori, including chicken, minced chicken meatballs, and chicken with leek or green pepper (which come with two sticks per dish), as well as its own brand of sake and wine. There's a ¥200 ($1.65/85p) snack charge.

491-1 Asahimachi. ☎ 0852/31-8308. Yakitori ¥200-¥300 ($1.65-$2.50/85p-£1.25). No credit cards. Daily 5pm-1am. From Matsue Station's north exit, walk past the buses and turn left on the main street; it will be on your right, before Toyoko Inn (2 min.).

163 Kaneyasu ★ Value FISH/VARIED JAPANESE This modest one-counter place with tatami rooms upstairs has good food and is run by grandmotherly, bustling women. It has been around for more than 40 years, and most of its customers are local working people, so avoid the noontime rush. It has a great lunch teishoku, which includes a piece of yakizakana (grilled fish), vegetable, soup, tofu, rice, and tea. In the evening, such dishes as grilled fish, yam, bamboo, seasonal dishes, and various vegetables are available, but it's probably easier to order one of the two set meals, both of which feature locally caught seafood.

569-3 Otesemba-cho. ☎ 0852/21-0550. Set dinners ¥1,500-¥2,000 ($13-$17/£6.50-£8.50); lunch teishoku ¥650-¥900 ($5.40-$7.50/£2.70-£3.75). No credit cards. Mon-Fri 11am-2pm; Mon-Sat 5-9pm. Closed holidays. 1 block north of the main street that runs in front of Matsue Station's north exit.

164 Yakumoan ★★ Finds SOBA NOODLES A wonderful place to stop off for lunch if you're sightseeing along Shiomi Nawate north of Matsue Castle, this lovely soba shop with a teahouselike atmosphere is surrounded by a stone wall with a large wooden entryway, a grove of bamboo, bonsai, a Japanese garden, and a pond full of prize carp. Part of the restaurant, a former samurai residence, dates from 200 years ago. Its specialty is noodles, all handmade, including the local specialty Warigo soba and udon. You'll find a plastic-food display case to the left as you step through the entryway. Seating is at either tables or tatami.

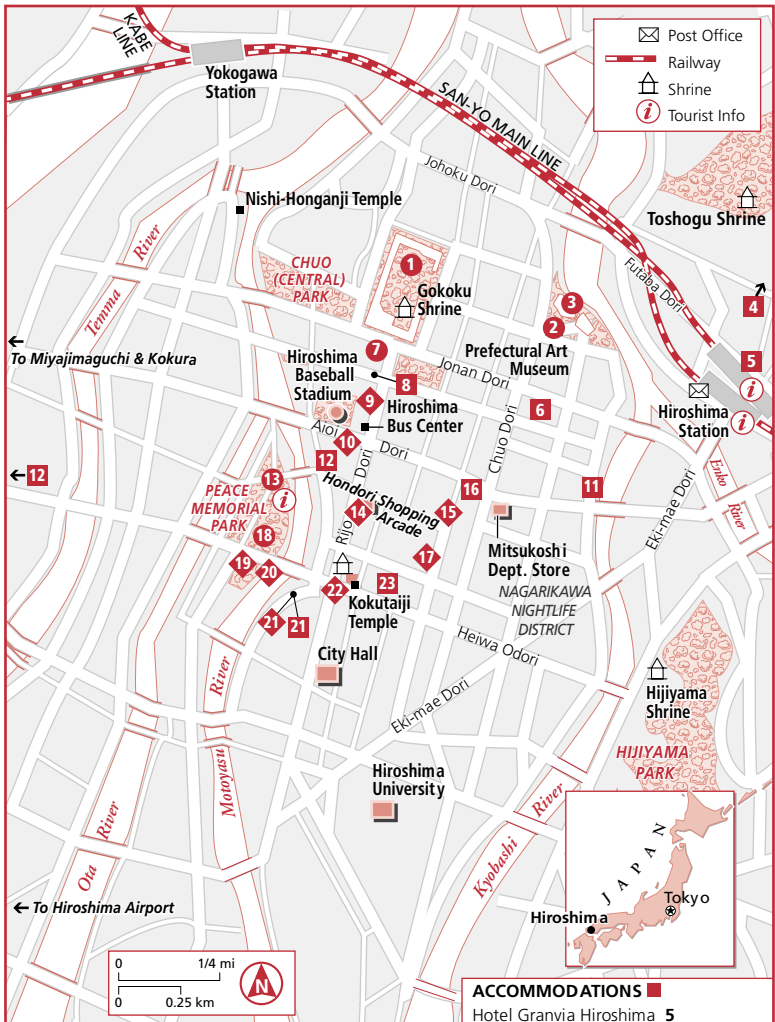

308 Kitabori-cho. ☎ 0852/22-2400. Noodles set meals ¥1,100-¥1,320 ($9.15-$11/£4.60-£5.50). No credit cards. Daily 9:30am-4pm (last order). Lake Line bus: Stop no. 10, Koizumi Yakumo Kinenkan-mae (1 min.). On Shiomi Nawate St., near the Buke Yashiki samurai house.

But unlike other cities, Hiroshima's past is clouded: It has the unfortunate distinction of being the first city ever destroyed by an atomic bomb. (The second city—and it is hoped the last—was Nagasaki, on Kyushu island.)

It happened one clear summer morning, August 6, 1945, at 8:15am, when a B-29 approached Hiroshima from the northeast, passed over the central part of the city, dropped the bomb, and then took off at full speed. The bomb exploded 43 seconds later at an altitude of 600m (1,980 ft.) in a huge fireball, followed by a mushroom cloud of smoke that rose 8,910m (29,700 ft.) in the air.

There were approximately 350,000 people living in Hiroshima at the time of the bombing, and almost a third lost their lives on that day. The heat from the blast was so intense that it seared people's skin, while the pressure caused by the explosion tore clothes off bodies and caused the rupture and explosion of internal organs. Flying glass clothes through flesh like bullets, and fires broke out all over the city. But that wasn't the end of it: Victims who survived the blast were subsequently exposed to huge doses of radioactive particles. Even people who showed no outward signs of sickness suddenly died, creating panic and helplessness among the survivors. Today, aging blast survivors still continue to suffer from the effects of the bomb, with a high incidence of cancer, disfigurement, scars, and keloid skin tissue.

Ironically, Hiroshima's tragedy is now the city's largest tourist draw, and visitors from around the world come to see Peace Memorial Park with its haunting museum. But Hiroshima, laced with rivers and wide, tree-lined boulevards, boasts other worthwhile attractions as well, including several excellent museums. Hiroshima is also the most popular gateway for trips to nearby Miyajima, a jewel of an island considered to be one of Japan's most scenic spots, covered later in this chapter.

GETTING THERE By Plane Flights from Tokyo's Haneda Airport take about 1 hour and 20 minutes and cost ¥28,300 ($236/£118) to Hiroshima Airport (☎ 0848/86-8151; www.hij.airport.jp), which is also served by flights from Seoul, Beijing, Shanghai, Taipei, and Bangkok. Limousine Buses connect the airport with Hiroshima Station's Shinkansen (north) exit in 48 minutes, costing ¥1,300 ($11/£5.40) one-way.

By Train Hiroshima is about 6 hours from Tokyo by Shinkansen bullet train (you have to change trains in Okayama or Osaka if you have a Japan Rail Pass, because only the Nozomi, which is not covered by the pass, covers the entire distance in 4 hr.), 3 hours from Kyoto, and 1 hour and 20 minutes from Hakata Station on Kyushu. The fare from Tokyo is ¥17,540 ($146/£73) for an unreserved seat; ¥10,280 ($86/£43) from Kyoto.

By Bus Buses depart from Tokyo Station every night at 8 and 9pm, both reaching Hiroshima Station at 8am the next morning. The one-way fare is ¥11,600 ($97/£48). From Osaka, buses depart six times a day, taking 5 hours to reach Hiroshima and costing ¥5,000 ($42/£21).

By Boat You can also reach Hiroshima by high-speed boat from Matsuyama on Shikoku in 1 hour and 10 minutes for ¥6,300 ($53/£27), but slower ferries, which cover the distance in 2 hours and 30 minutes, are cheaper (¥2,900/$24/£12) and provide better views of the Seto Inland Sea. Hiroshima Port, in Ujina, is connected to Hiroshima Station by streetcar in 43 minutes.

VISITOR INFORMATION Before leaving Tokyo or the Narita or Kansai airports, pick up a copy of the leaflet “Hiroshima and Miyajima,” at the Tourist Information Center. (You can also download it from the Japan National Tourist Organization’s website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under “Browse by Destinations.”)

In Hiroshima, you’ll find two local tourist offices at Hiroshima Station. The main office (☎ 082/263-6822), at the north exit where Shinkansen bullet trains arrive, is open daily from 9am to 12:30pm and 1:30 to 5:30pm. The other tourist office (☎ 082/261-1877), at the station’s south exit, is open daily from 9 to 11:30am and 12:30 to 5:30pm. A third tourist office is located in the center of Peace Memorial Park in the Rest House (☎ 082/247-6738; daily 9:30am–6pm Apr–Sept, 8:30am–5pm Oct–Mar). All three facilities have English-language brochures of both Hiroshima and Miyajima with maps. Online information on Hiroshima is available at www.hiroshima-navi.or.jp and www.pref.hiroshima.lg.jp.

INTERNET ACCESS There are coin-operated computers at two locations in Hiroshima Station that cost ¥100 (85¢/45p) for every 15 minutes. They’re even equipped with headphones for all you Skype users. Otherwise, most convenient for longer navigation is Media Café Popeye, located in the Hondori covered shopping arcade (☎ 082/545-0369) above a shop called Beams. It’s open 24 hours and charges ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for the first 30 minutes, then ¥63 (60¢/30p) for each subsequent 10 minutes.

MAIL Hiroshima’s main post office, 2–62 Matsubara-cho (☎ 082/261-6401), is located to the right after exiting from Hiroshima Station’s south side. You can get cash from international credit cards here Monday to Saturday 5am to 11:55pm and Sunday 5am to 10pm.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND One legacy of Hiroshima’s total destruction was its rebirth into one of Japan’s most navigable cities, with wide, open boulevards instead of the usual cramped streets. Hiroshima’s main attractions, including Peace Memorial Park, Hiroshima Castle, Shukkei-en Garden, Hiroshima Prefectural Art Museum, and Hiroshima Museum of Art, lie to the west and southwest of Hiroshima Station. The most convenient mode of transportation in the city is streetcar, which costs only ¥150 ($1.25/65p) one-way; children pay half fare. If you need to transfer to another line, ask the driver for a transfer (norikae) card, which you then pass through the card machine upon alighting from the first streetcar and again when boarding the second streetcar. When you arrive at your destination, return the card to the streetcar driver. A 1-day pass, which you can buy from the conductor, costs ¥600 ($5/£2.50). Be sure to pick up a streetcar map from the tourist office.

It’s probably easiest to make the circuit to Hiroshima’s centrally located attractions on foot. From Hiroshima Station, you can walk to Shukkei-en Garden and the Prefectural Art Museum in about 15 minutes, from which it’s another 10-minute walk to Hiroshima Castle. You can walk onward to Peace Memorial Park in about 15 minutes, passing the Hiroshima Museum of Art and the A-Bomb Dome on the way. Just east of Peace Park is the Hondori covered shopping arcade and its neighboring streets, considered the heart of the city with its many department stores, shops, and restaurants.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

As you walk around Hiroshima today, you’ll find it hard to imagine that the city was the scene of such widespread horror and destruction just a little more than 60 years ago. On the other hand, Hiroshima doesn't have the old buildings, temples, and historic structures that other cities have, yet it draws a steady flow of travelers who come to see Peace Memorial Park, the city's best-known landmark (Hiroshima draws 9.4 million tourists a year, 217,000 of them from other countries). Dedicated to peace, the city also seems committed to art: In addition to its fine art museums, you'll find statues, stone lanterns, memorials, and sculptures lining the streets.

PEACE MEMORIAL PARK & ENVIRONS

Peace Memorial Park (Heiwa Koen) ★★ lies in the center of the city. English-language signs all over the city indicate how to reach it. From Hiroshima Station, take streetcars no. 2 or 6 to the Genbaku-Domu-mae (in front of the Atom Bomb Dome, which is just north of the park) stop. The first structure you'll see as you alight from the streetcar is the A-Bomb Dome, the skeletal ruins of the former Industrial Promotion Hall, left as a visual reminder of the death and destruction caused by the atomic bomb. Across the river is the park; it takes about 10 minutes to walk from its north-end to the museum.

Along the way you'll see the park's most touching statue, the Children's Peace Monument, dedicated to the war's most innocent victims, not only those who died instantly in the blast but also those who died afterward from the effects of radiation. It's a statue of a girl with outstretched arms, and rising above her is a crane, a symbol of happiness and longevity in Japan. The statue is based on the true story of a young girl, Sadako, who suffered from the effects of radiation after the bombing in Hiroshima. She believed that if she could fold 1,000 paper cranes she would become well again. However, even though she folded more than 1,000 cranes, she still died of leukemia. Today, all Japanese children are familiar with her story, and around the memorial are streamers of paper cranes donated by schoolchildren from all over Japan. To the east of the statue is the Rest House, where you'll find a branch of the Hiroshima Tourist Office.

Also in Peace Memorial Park is a Cenotaph for Korean Victims. It's a little-publicized fact that 20,000 Koreans were killed that fateful summer day, most of them brought to Japan as forced laborers. The monument reads: "The Korean victims were given no funerals or memorial services and their spirits hovered for years unable to pass on to heaven." It's significant to note that for 29 years, the cenotaph remained outside the park. In 1999, Hiroshima's mayor, calling for an end to prejudice against Korean residents in Japan, gave the memorial a new home within Peace Memorial Park.

Between the statue and the museum is the Memorial Cenotaph, designed by Japan's famous architect Kenzo Tange (who also designed the Tokyo Metropolitan Government offices in Shinjuku; see p. 187). Shaped like a figurine clay saddle found in ancient tombs, it shelters a stone chest, which in turn holds the names of all of those killed by the bomb. An epitaph, written in Japanese, carries the hopeful phrase, "Let all the souls here rest in peace, for we shall not repeat the evil." If you stand in front of the cenotaph, you'll have a view through the hollow arch of the Peace Flame and the A-Bomb Dome. It is said that the Peace Flame will continue to burn until all atomic weapons vanish from the face of the earth and nuclear war is no longer a threat to humanity.

East of the Peace Flame is the Hiroshima National Peace Memorial Hall for the Atomic Bomb Victims (☎ 082/543-6271), dedicated to atomic bomb victims. Its

Hall of Remembrance, a 360-degree panorama recreating the bombed city as seen from the hypocenter, is made of 140,000 tiles, the number of people estimated to have died by the end of 1945. The rest of the memorial is a vast, computerized audiovisual library with information on victims, their histories, and photos. The English-language leaflet not only provides excellent information but also gives access to the large-screen computers (insert it to activate them). Admission is free and it's open the same hours as the Peace Memorial Museum.

Just beyond is the main focus of the park, the Peace Memorial Museum (Heiwa Kinen Shiriyokan) ★★☆☆, 1–2 Nakajima-cho, Naku-ku (☎ 082/241-4004; www.pcf.city.hiroshima.jp; daily 8:30am–6pm Mar–Nov [until 7pm in Aug], daily 8:30am–5pm Dec–Feb). It comprises two buildings: the East Building, which tells of Hiroshima before the bomb fell and what happened to the city in the following months and years, and the West Building, which concentrates on that fateful August day. Entrance to the museum is in the East Building; admission is ¥50 (40¢/20p). Although an audio guide is available for an additional ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25), you can learn just as much by reading the excellent English-language descriptions throughout the museum. You must enter 30 minutes before closing time, but you'll need at least 1 hour here to do the museum justice.

The newer East Building addresses Hiroshima's militaristic past, challenging the city's former self-characterization as a blameless victim. In great detail, it explains why Hiroshima was selected as the blast site: As Imperial Headquarters, Hiroshima was home to Japan's military command center as well as a military supply base (Mitsubishi, which produced war ships, was based here). It also gives food for thought as to why the bomb was dropped, suggesting that the high cost to develop the bomb (called the Manhattan Project), coupled with the desire to establish U.S. supremacy over the Soviet Union and facilitate defeat in Japan, all played a role. TV screens show actual footage of the bomb being dropped and its aftermath. A 360-degree photograph shows Hiroshima's utter destruction. The museum also documents Hiroshima's current dedication to the abolition of nuclear weapons; a globe of the world provides a chilling map of nuclear proliferation. On the ground floor is the Video Theatre, where two English-language documentaries are shown throughout the day. One is an appeal for peace from a mother's point of view, with footage of the bombing, while the second film takes a more scientific look at the atomic bombs in both Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

The West Building concentrates on the suffering caused by the atomic bomb, beginning with panoramas of scorched earth and seared victims and photographs of the atomic bomb that destroyed the city and the intensity of the blast's epicenter. It then shows in graphic detail the effects of the blast on bodies, buildings, and materials. Most of the photographs in the exhibit are of burned and seared skin, charred remains of bodies, and people with open wounds, while displays explain the effects of radiation, including hair loss, keloid scars, leukemia, and cancer. There's a bronze Buddha that was half-melted in the blast and melted glass and ceramics. Tattered clothing and other personal effects are accompanied by short biographies of their owners, many of them children and teenagers and many of whom died in the blast.

Needless to say, visiting Peace Memorial Park is a sobering and depressing experience but perhaps a necessary one. And to think that what was dropped on Hiroshima is small compared to the bombs of today; by 1961, the Soviet Union had tested a hydrogen bomb 3,300 times more powerful than the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima. From the museum, the closest streetcar stop is Fukuro-machi, where you can catch streetcar no. 1 for Hiroshima Station.

MORE SIGHTS & ATTRACTIONS

Hiroshima Castle ★★ Completed in 1591 but destroyed in the atomic blast, Hiroshima Castle was reconstructed in 1958. Its five-story wooden donjon is a faithful reproduction of the original, but the main reason to come here is the very good museum housed in the castle's modern interior, which can be toured in about 30 minutes. The museum is devoted to Hiroshima's history as a flourishing castle town, with good English-language presentations. It also gives the best description I've seen on castles in Japan, including differences in architecture between those built on hills (for defense) and those built on plains (mainly administrative). Videos describe Hiroshima's founding and the construction of Hiroshima Castle, while displays explain the differences in lifestyle between samurai and townspeople, the hierarchy of the feudal administration system, and other aspects of Edo life. There's also samurai gear, models of old Hiroshima and the castle, and, for children, a kimono and samurai outfit they can try on. The top of the donjon provides a panoramic view of the city. 21-1 Moto-machi, Naka-ku. ☎ 082/221-7512. Admission ¥360 ($3/£1.50) adults, ¥180 ($1.50/75p) children. Daily 9am-6pm (to 5pm on weekdays Dec-Feb, 6pm weekends). A 15-min. walk north of Peace Memorial Park, or a 25-min. walk west of Hiroshima Station. Streetcar: 1, 2, or 6 to Kamiya-cho (10 min.).

Hiroshima Museum of Art (Hiroshima Bijutsukan) ★★ Finds This gem of a private museum, housed in a modern round building in a park in the heart of the city, has a permanent collection of some 200 paintings, half by French painters from Romanticism to Ecole de Paris and presented in chronological order in four rooms. Though small, virtually every piece is by a well-known artist, including Delacroix, Courbet, Corot, Manet, Monet, Renoir, Degas, Toulouse-Lautrec, Rousseau, Cézanne, Gauguin, van Gogh, Matisse, Picasso, Braque, Utrillo, Chagall, and Modigliani. Also on display are about 90 works by Japanese artists in the Western style from the Meiji Era to the present, including works by Kuroda Seiki and Kishida Ryu-sei. You'll spend an hour here.

3-2 Motomachi, Naka-ku. ☎ 082/223-2530. www.hiroshima-museum.jp. Admission ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) adults, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) university and high-school students, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) junior-high and elementary students. Special exhibits cost more. Daily 9am-5pm. Streetcar: 1, 2, or 6 to Kamiya-cho (Kencho-mae exit, 3 min.). In Chuo Park, across from the Rihga Royal Hotel (Hiroshima's tallest building).

Hiroshima Prefectural Art Museum (Hiroshima Kenritsu Bijutsukan) The main focus of this museum is art created by artists who have some kind of relationship to Hiroshima Prefecture, including Aimitsu (look for his self-portrait), Minami Kunzo, Kobayashi Senko, and Hirayama Ikuo (famous for his paintings of Hiroshima after the atomic bomb, especially The Holocaust of Hiroshima), as well as works from the 1920s and 1930s by non-Japanese artists who have influenced contemporary art in Japan such as Salvador Dalí, Lyonel Feininger, Picasso, and Thomas Hart Benton. Asian decorative arts, including ceramics and lacquerware, round out the permanent collection. If you purchase a combination ticket to Shukkei-en Garden, you can enter the garden directly from the museum. Plan on about 30 minutes here.

2-22 Kaminobori-cho, Naka-ku. ☎ 082/221-6246. www1.hpam-UNET.ocn.ne.jp. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults; ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) university students; free to high-school, junior-high, and elementary students. Combination ticket for museum and Shukkei-en Garden ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults and ¥380 ($3.15/£1.60) students. Tues-Fri and Sun 9am-5pm; Sat 9am-7pm. Streetcar: 9 to Shukkeien-mae (1 min.). Adjacent to Shukkei-en Garden; a 15-min. walk from Hiroshima Station.

Shukkei-en Garden Shukkei-en Garden, which means “landscape garden in miniature,” was first laid out in 1620 by a master of the tea ceremony, with a pond constructed in imitation of famous Lake Xi Hu in Hangzhou, China. Using streams, ponds, islets, and bridges, it was designed to appear much larger than it actually is and is best viewed on a 30-minute circular stroll. Like everything else in Hiroshima, it was destroyed in 1945, but amazingly, it looks like it’s been here forever. Unfortunately, like most gardens in Japan, tall neighboring buildings detract from the garden’s beauty (there ought to be a law), but it’s still a pleasant respite from city traffic.

2–11 Kaminobori-cho, Naka-ku. ☎ 082/221-3620. Admission ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) adults, ¥180 ($1.50/75p) university and high-school students, ¥120 ($1/50p) children. Combination ticket for Hiroshima Prefectural Art Museum and the garden ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults and ¥380 ($3.15/£1.60) students. Daily 9am–6pm (to 5pm Oct–Mar). Adjacent to Hiroshima Prefectural Art Museum.

EXPLORING SIGHTS OF THE SETO INLAND SEA

BY BOAT Stretching between Honshu and the islands of Shikoku and Kyushu, the Inland Sea is dotted with more than 3,000 pine-covered islands and islets, part of which is protected as Seto-Naikai (Seto Inland Sea) National Park. Hiroshima Prefecture serves as a departure point for boats traveling to islands throughout the Seto Inland Sea and to Shikoku. For an interesting day’s excursion, I suggest taking the Shinkansen 30 minutes to Mihara (fare: ¥2,220/$19/£9.50), from which you can take a high-speed boat operated by Mihara-Setoda Kyodo Line (☎ 0848/64-0564) 30 minutes to Setoda on Ikuchijima island. Ferries depart approximately once an hour, with one-way fares costing ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35).

From Setoda’s ferry pier, it’s about a 10-minute walk to Choseizan Kosanji Temple ★★, at 553–2 Setoda (☎ 0845/27-0800; www.kosanji.or.jp). This place is like no other, a re-creation of famous historic buildings from throughout Japan, erected by a former businessman-turned-Buddhist-priest over a 30-year period beginning in 1936 in honor of his mother. Occupying a picturesque, hillside setting with many flowering trees, the grounds contain remakes of Byodojin Temple outside Kyoto, Nikko’s Yomeimon Gate, Horyuji’s Hall of Visions in Nara, and other important buildings, all expertly crafted. Be sure to tour Choseikaku Villa, built in 1927 as the home of the priest’s beloved mother and employing an amazing variety of woods for its intricately carved transoms, paneling, and other traditional features. Another highlight is the grotto cave (beside Byodojin Temple). Stretching 350m (1,155 ft.), it depicts unfortunate souls in hell being burned, chopped to pieces, eaten by animals, and suffering other gruesome forms of torture, for crimes ranging from murder and thievery to drinking too much or having sex with a nun. After passing through caves and Buddhist statues, you then emerge to see a 15m (50-ft.) statue of the Goddess of Mercy, hoping by now that she is, indeed, merciful. On the crest of the hill is the Heights of Eternal Hope for the Future, a huge white-marble installation by a Hiroshima sculptor; its jagged edges resemble a glacier and there’s a coffee shop here in what looks like an igloo. Other things to see include museums showcasing art relating to Buddhism, the tea ceremony, and modern Japanese art.

Admission to Kosanji Temple, open daily 9am to 5pm, is ¥1,200 ($10/£5) for adults, ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) for high-school students, and free for children. By the way, near the front gate to Kosanji is a branch of a famous ice-cream shop, (165) Dolce, Kosanji-mae Ten (☎ 0845/26-4036), renowned for its Hakata-no-shio, an ice cream that contains salt obtained from seawater (and tastes much better than it sounds). Ikuchijima is also known for its many outdoor sculptures placed around the island and for its 800m (2,640-ft.) Sunset Beach, a popular swimming destination.

BY BICYCLE A more active way to see the Seto Inland Sea is to cycle across on the Shimanami Kaido (also referred to as the Nishi Seto Expwy. and the Setouchi Shimanami Seaway), an 80km (50-mile) route between Onomichi in Hiroshima Prefecture and Imabari on Shikoku Island. The route travels over six islands connected by seven bridges, with numerous temples (including Kosanji, above), sightseeing spots, restaurants, and inns along the way. Rental bikes are available at ⁽¹⁶⁶⁾ Onomichi Ekimae Kowan Chushajo, 9 Higashi Goshochō, Onomichi City (☎ 0848/22-5332), open daily 7am to 6pm. Bikes cost ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for a day, plus a deposit of ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20). If you wish to make a one-way trip and leave your bike in Imabari or at one of the 14 cycle rental stops along the way, you forfeit your deposit. The bridges along the route charge a toll, which you deposit into a box on the honor system, for a total of ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) if you go all the way to Shikoku (you can buy prepaid toll tickets at the Onomichi cycling shop so you don't have to fish for change). To reach Onomichi from Hiroshima, take the JR Sanyo Honsen line 1½ hours to Onomichi Station (fare: ¥1,450/$12/£6), from which it's a 3-minute walk to the port where the cycling company is located. If you have a Japan Rail Pass, it's quicker to take the Shinkansen 30 minutes to Mihara, followed by a 10-minute local train (fare: ¥230/$1.90/95p) to Onomichi Station.

If you wish to cycle but have no interest in going all the way to Shikoku (truth be told, the beginning of the biking trail, from Onomichi, is not that interesting), I suggest taking the ferry from Mihara to Setoda (described above) and renting a bike at the Setoda-cho Kanko Annaisho (in front of the Hirayama Ikuo Museum; ☎ 0845/27-0051; daily 9am–5pm). You can cycle around Ikuchijima in a couple of hours. Or, you can bike from Kosanji over the Tataro Ohashi bridge to Oyamazumi Shrine (with a fantastic collection of samurai weaponry; see p. 480), on Omishima island, in about 2 hours. You can drop off your bike at the rental shop there, take a bus 9 minutes to Inokuchi-ko (buses depart approximately twice an hour; fare: ¥200/$1.65/85p), and from there take a high-speed boat for ¥1,070 ($8.75/£4.40) back to Mihara for the Shinkansen to Hiroshima (at last check, afternoon boat departures were at 3:36 and 4:55pm but you should confirm this).

For more information on cycling the Shimanami Kaido, see the section on Matsuyama in chapter 10.

WHERE TO STAY EXPENSIVE

Rihga Royal Hotel Hiroshima (★☆☆) Opened in 1994, the 33-story Rihga Royal stands out as Hiroshima's tallest hotel and has a convenient location in the heart of the city between Hiroshima Castle and Peace Park. It's connected to a large complex called Motomachi CRED, which includes the Pacela shopping mall and Sogo department store. A sophisticated, European atmosphere and polished service make it a favorite among foreign travelers; even the lobby lounge—with its tall ceiling and circular glass facade—makes for a cheerful meeting place. Large rooms with luxurious furnishings come with plenty of features, including semi-double-size beds in the singles and twins, and magnifying mirrors and lots of counter space in the bathrooms. Rates are based on floor height and room size, but even some of the cheapest twins have views of the castle or Peace Park. The best views, however, are from top floors with panoramas of the Seto Inland Sea (you can even see Miyajima). A nice touch are the pictorial maps in each room describing the view, but the best view of all is afforded from the 33rd floor Rihga Top lounge.

6–78 Motomachi, Naka-ku, Hiroshima 730-0011. ☎ 082/502-1121. Fax 082/228-5415. www.rihga.com. 491 units. ¥15,015 – ¥17,325 ($125–$144/£62–£72) single; ¥21,945 – ¥31,185 ($182–$260/£91–£130) double; ¥23,100 – ¥35,805 ($192–$298/£96–£149) twin; from ¥38,115 ($318/£159) executive twin. AE, DC, MC, V. Streetcar: 1, 2, or 6 to Kamiya-cho (1 min.). Amenities: 7 restaurants; 2 bars; lounge; atrium-style pool w/Jacuzzi and sauna (¥3,150/$26/£13); health club (¥3,150/$26/£13); concierge; shopping arcade; salon; barber; room service (7am–11:30pm); in-room massage; babysitting; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms; executive-level rooms; health and dental clinic. In room: A/C, cable TV w/pay movies, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, bathroom scale, trouser press.

MODERATE

Hotel Granvia Hiroshima ★ Owned by JR West (and offering discounts to holders of the Japan Rail Pass), this hotel is convenient for short stays because it's connected to the Shinkansen (north) side of the station. Inconvenient, however, is that to get to Hiroshima's sights and streetcars, which are on the other side of the station, you have to navigate a confusing underground passage (if you have a rail pass, you can pass through the station, which is much quicker). Rooms are comfortable but are small and have no view, unless you count views of the Shinkansen pulling into the station. A plus are the hotel's many dining options, including one serving Hiroshima-style okonomiyaki.

1–5 Matsubara-cho, Minami-ku, Hiroshima 732-0822. ☎ 082/262-1111. Fax 082/262-4050. www.hgh.co.jp. 410 units. ¥10,741 – ¥16,747 ($90–$140/£45–£70) single; ¥17,902 – ¥21,945 ($149–$183/£75–£91) double; ¥20,212 – ¥34,650 ($168–$289/£84–£144) twin. 20% discount for holders of Japan Rail Pass. AE, DC, MC, V. Attached to Hiroshima Station. Amenities: 9 restaurants; 2 bars; lounge; outdoor beer terrace (summer only); access to health club in Hiroshima Station w/gym, indoor pool, and sauna (discount ticket at concierge desk ¥2,620/$22/£11); concierge; tour desk; business center; shopping arcade; salon; room service (7–10am and 5–11pm); in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, cable TV, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Hotel Sunroute ★★ Although most hotels in this chain are strictly business hotels, this hotel's excellent location, next to the river and catty-corner from the museum in Peace Memorial Park, plus two very good restaurants with great views, makes it a popular choice for tourists as well (see Kissui, below, in the dining section). The highest-priced rooms have the additional advantage of views of the park and river; the cheapest rooms, however, are on low floors and have no views whatsoever. Nice touches are bedside reading lights that can be dimmed and chilled glasses in the fridge.

3–3-1 Otemachi, Naka-ku, Hiroshima 730-0051. ☎ 082/249-3600. Fax 082/249-3677. www.sunroute.jp. 284 units. ¥8,925 – ¥9,975 ($74–$83/£37–£42) single; ¥15,750 – ¥18,900 ($131–$158/£66–£79) double; ¥16,800 – ¥26,250 ($140–$219/£70–£109) twin. AE, DC, MC, V. Streetcar: 1 to Chuden-mae (3 min.). Backtrack north to Heiwa Odori and turn left; it's on your left before the river. Amenities: 2 restaurants; bar; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, satellite TV w/pay movies, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, trouser press.

Mitsui Garden Hotel Hiroshima ★ Located on Heiwa Odori (Peace Blvd.), about an 8-minute walk east of Peace Memorial Park, this is a smart-looking business hotel. Although not as convenient as the Sunroute (above), it's classier, with a chic lobby outfitted in warm, dark browns and small rooms with a contemporary edge. I especially like the rooms on the Ladies' Floor, which are cheerfully done in yellow instead of the usual white. Room air conditioners can be set for either Celsius or Fahrenheit, taking away the guessing for most of us.

9–12 Naka-machi, Naka-ku, Hiroshima 730-0037. ☎ 082/240-1131. Fax 082/242-3001. www.gardenhotels.co.jp. 280 units. ¥9,500–¥11,000 ($79–$92/£40–£46) single; ¥17,500–¥21,000 ($146–$175/£73–£87) double; ¥17,500–¥26,000 ($146–$217/£73–£108) twin. AE, DC, MC, V. Streetcar: 1 to Fukuro-machi (5 min.). Walk south (the same direction as your streetcar) on Rijo Dori to Heiwa Odori (there's a small shrine on the corner) and turn left; it will be on your left. Amenities: 3 restaurants; bar; salon; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; non-smoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV w/pay movies, dataport, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

INEXPENSIVE

Regalo ★★ Finds Located on one of Hiroshima's many rivers, about halfway between Hiroshima Station and downtown, this small, personable hotel offers great value and is a true find—nicely decorated with an Italian flair and managed by a very friendly staff, some of whom speak English. The cheapest rooms have glazed windows facing the back, while rooms only slightly more expensive have refreshing views of the river. A very atmospheric Italian restaurant also capitalizes on the river view, while across the street, right beside the river, is the hotel's open-air pavilion cafe. There's a computer in the lobby you can use for free, as well as telephones with free domestic calls to land lines (in-room phones are only for receiving calls, not for making calls). In short, this establishment is a pleasant surprise compared to most inexpensive lodgings and has more personality than the Toyoko Inn chain.

9–2 Hashimoto-cho, Naka-ku, Hiroshima 730-0015. ☎ 082/224-6300. Fax 082/224-6301. info@regalo-h.com. 63 units. ¥6,500–¥7,000 ($54–$58/£27–£29) single; ¥9,500–¥10,000 ($79–$83/£40–£42) double; ¥9,800–¥10,000 ($82–$83/£41–£42) twin. Rates include breakfast. AE, DC, MC, V. Streetcar: 1, 2, or 6 to Kanayama-cho (2 min.). Walk back toward the bridge but don't cross it; turn left at the river. Or a 13-min. walk from Hiroshima Station. Amenities: Restaurant; cafe; tea lounge; in-room massage; coin-op washer and dryer; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms (only 4 twin rooms); computer in lobby w/free Internet access. In room: A/C, TV w/pay movies, dataport, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, no phone.

Sansui Ryokan ★ This is a good choice for travelers who like meeting locals rather than staying in impersonal hotels. It's run by motherly Katou-san, who cheerfully oversees operations, has kimono you can try on for free, and can even arrange lessons in calligraphy (¥1,500/$13/£6.50) and the tea ceremony (¥2,000/$17/£8.50) if you make reservations 3 weeks in advance. It has a cozy communal room, but note that tatami rooms on the second floor are reached by steep stairs. Best of all, it's only a few minutes' walk west of Peace Memorial Park.

4–16 Koami-cho, Naka-ku, Hiroshima 730-0855. ☎ 082/293-9051. Fax 082/233-2377. sansui@ccv.ne.jp. 6 units, none with bathroom. ¥4,200 ($35/£18) single; ¥7,500 ($63/£32) twin; ¥10,500 ($88/£44) triple. Breakfast ¥600 ($5/£2.50) extra. MC, V. Streetcar: 2 or 3 to Kaomi-cho (1 min.). Walk toward the river and turn left, then left again. Amenities: Rental bikes (¥300/$2.50/£1.25 per day); free coffee. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea, no phone.

Toyoko Inn Hiroshima-Eki Shinkansen-Guchi Value Although convenient if you're arriving by Shinkansen, this chain business hotel is inconvenient to the rest of the city, as streetcars depart from the other side of Hiroshima Station, reached only by underground passage unless you have a Japan Rail Pass. Still, it has the usual two computers in the lobby with free Internet access (and free Wi-Fi in the lobby for travelers with laptops), two free movie channels, and free domestic calls from lobby phones. There are other branches: Hiroshima-Eki Minamiguchi-Migi, 1–26 Nodori-cho (☎ 082/502-1045), but it's a 9-minute walk southwest of the station; and Toyoko Inn Hiroshima Heiwa-Odori, 5–15 Tanaka-machi (☎ 082/504-1045), which is closer to downtown, but it's a 7-minute walk from the nearest streetcar station, past the nightlife district.

EXPENSIVE

Atago ★★ TEPPANYAKI This teppanyaki steak restaurant, on the ground floor of an office building on Heiwa (Peace) Odori just east of Rijo Dori, is good and convenient if you're visiting the Peace Memorial Museum just across the river. It's strikingly modern with its marble tables and geometric lines, and chefs prepare steak and seafood before your eyes. The ¥2,900 ($24/£12) set steak lunch from the English-language menu includes salad, steak, a vegetable, miso soup, rice, and dessert.

7–20 Nakamachi. ☎ 082/241-9129. Reservations recommended. Set dinners ¥7,000–¥18,000 ($58–$150/£29–£75); set lunches ¥2,900–¥10,395 ($24–$87/£12–£43). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2pm and 5–9:30pm (last order). Streetcar: 1 to Fukuro-machi (2 min.). Between Shirakami-sha Shrine and ANA Hotel on Heiwa (Peace) Odori.

①67 Kanawa ★★ Finds OYSTERS There are 10,000 rafts cultivating oysters in Hiroshima Bay, with a yearly output of 30,000 tons of shelled oysters. Needless to say, oysters are a Hiroshima specialty, and this houseboat, moored east of Peace Memorial Park on the Motoyasu River at the Heiwa Odori Bridge, is one of the best places to enjoy them. Although winter is the optimal time for fresh oysters, the owner has his own oyster rafts and can harvest them also in summer, as well as freeze his best stock in January so he's able to serve excellent oysters year-round. This floating restaurant has been here more than 45 years, and dining is in tatami rooms with views of the river. The English-language menu lists set meals that feature oysters prepared various ways, including in the shell, fried, baked, steamed in soy broth, and marinated in vinegar. In addition to oysters, flounder, eel, and a few other dishes are available as well.

On the Motoyasu River, at Heiwa-Ohashi Bridge. ☎ 082/241-7416. Reservations required. Main dishes ¥1,000–¥2,800 ($8.35–$23/£4.20–£12); set dinners ¥8,500–¥11,000 ($71–$92/£35–£46); set lunches ¥3,100–¥6,500 ($26–$54/£13–£27). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–2pm; Mon–Sat 5–9pm; Sun and holidays 5–8:30pm (last order). Streetcar: 1 to Chuden-mae (3 min.). Backtrack north to Heiwa Odori and turn left; it's just past the Sunroute Hotel.

MODERATE

Kissui ★★ KAISEKI Convenience to Peace Memorial Park, great 15th-floor views, and beautifully prepared kaiseki meals make this an optimal choice for tourists. Though the menu is in Japanese only, choose from the various seasonal kaiseki and shabu-shabu set meals according to your budget, but no matter what you choose, you can't go wrong here.

Hotel Sunroute, 15th floor, 3–3–1 Otemachi. ☎ 082/249-5657. Kaiseki set meals ¥5,775–¥12,600 ($48–$105/£24–£53); shabu-shabu set meals ¥5,040–¥8,190 ($42–$68/£21–£38); set lunches ¥2,100–¥4,725 ($18–$39/£9–£20). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2pm and 5–8:30pm (last order). Streetcar: 1 to Chuden-mae (see directions to hotel, above).

INEXPENSIVE

In addition to the choices here, the Pacela building, part of the fancy Motomachi CRED (pronounced “ku-re-do” in Japanese) complex next to the Rihga Royal hotel, offers several ethnic choices, including restaurants serving Vietnamese, Korean, Chinese, Italian, and Indian cuisine.

Anderson Kitchen INTERNATIONAL Occupying an old, renovated bank building in the Hondori covered shopping arcade, this popular place not far from Peace Memorial Park has a gourmet food department on its ground floor offering baked goods, wine, and imported delicacies, while the second floor has a cafeteria with various counters specializing in different types of food—salads, sandwiches, pizza, pasta, steaks, Chinese dishes, desserts, or drinks. Just pick up a tray and select the items you want. You pay at the end of each counter.

7-1 Hondori. ☎ 082/247-2403. Dishes ¥600–¥1,360 ($5–$11/£2.50–£5.50). No credit cards. Daily 11am–9pm (last order). Closed some Wed. Streetcar: 1 to Hondori (1 min.); in the Hondori covered shopping arcade 1 block to the east.

①68 Kushinobo ★★ KUSHIYAKI This is a friendly, rub-elbows-with-the-locals kind of place, lively and crowded and decorated with Japanese knickknacks. It's located due east of the Hondori covered shopping arcade. Although kushiyaki connoisseurs like ordering skewers a la carte, you'll probably be better off ordering from the English-language menu, which lists only set meals. I always enjoy the Kushinobogozen with 10 skewers of vegetables, meat, and seafood plus fresh vegetables, rice, soup, and dessert, but what I like the most is watching skewers being prepared behind the counter and the friendly interactions between customers. The chef is a serious fellow, but he speaks English and somehow manages to keep all the orders straight.

Parco-mae, 7-4 Horikawa-cho. ☎ 082/245-9300. Reservations recommended. Set dinners ¥2,310–¥4,200 ($19–$35/£9.50–£18); set lunches ¥1,150–¥1,378 ($9.60–$12/£4.80–£6). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–1:30pm and 5–9:30pm (last order). Streetcar: 1, 2, or 6 to Hatchobori (2 min.). Walk south on Chuo Dori 2 blocks to Parco department store and turn right into a covered shopping arcade; take the 1st left and then the 1st right. Look for its bright red facade.

Motomachi CRED complex, 7th floor of Pacela, 78-6 Motomachi. ☎ 082/502-3340. Buffet lunch ¥1,575 ($13/£6.50) weekdays, ¥1,680 ($14/£7) weekends and holidays; buffet dinner ¥2,100 ($18/£9) weekdays, ¥2,310 ($19/£9.50) weekends and holidays. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–3pm and 5–9:30pm (last order). Streetcar: 1, 2, or 6 to Kamiya-cho (1 min.); follow the underground signs toward the Astram Line and take the exit on your left.

①70 Okonomi-Mura ★★ Finds OKONOMIYAKI Although the people of Osaka claim to have made okonomiyaki popular among the masses, the people of Hiroshima claim to have made it an art. Okonomiyaki is a kind of Japanese pancake filled with cabbage, meat, and other fillings. Whereas in Osaka the ingredients are mixed together, in Hiroshima each layer is prepared separately, which means the chefs have to be quite skilled at keeping the entire thing together. This is the best place in town to witness these short-order cooks at their trade, although the building doesn't look as though it contains restaurants. Its name means “okonomiyaki village,” and that's what it is—floors of individual stalls, dishing out okonomiyaki (the food still remains a dish for the masses). All okonomiyaki stalls offer basically the same menu—sit down at one of the counters and watch how the chef first spreads pancake mix on a hot griddle; follows it with a layer of cabbage, bean sprouts, and bacon; and then adds an egg on top. If you want, you can have yours with udon (thick wheat noodles) or soba (thin buckwheat noodles). The portion sizes are enormous; this is one of Hiroshima's most beloved establishments.

Wander through the area and stop at a stall that catches your fancy. Or, for a specific recommendation, try (171) Chii-chan (☎ 082/249-8102), on the second floor. It serves food until midnight (closed on Tues) and has an English-language menu. Chii-chan and his female staff sell between 200 and 500 okonomiyaki a day.

5–13 Shintenchū. ☎ 082/241-2210. Set meals ¥730–¥1,365 ($6.10–$11/£3.05–£5.50). No credit cards. Daily 11am–9pm, but some stalls stay open later. Streetcar: 1, 2, or 6 to Hatchobori (2 min.). Walk south on Chuo Dori 4 blocks (you'll see Yamada on the corner) and turn right.

Ristorante Mario ★★ (Value) ITALIAN Located south across Heiwa Odori from the Peace Memorial Museum, this casual restaurant beckons with a cozy, terra-cotta-hued interior, a glass facade open wide in nice weather, and a kind, welcoming staff. The food is good, too, with about a dozen kinds of pasta on the English-language menu, such as spinach and sweet-potato gnocchi with a cheese sauce. There are also a few main dishes of the day.

4–11 Nakashima-cho. ☎ 082/248-4956. Reservations recommended. Pasta ¥900–¥1,500 ($7.50–$13/£3.75–£6.50); set dinner ¥3,300 ($28/£14); set lunches ¥1,200–¥2,400 ($10–$20/£5–£10). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2:30pm; Mon–Fri 5–11pm; Sat–Sun 4–11pm. Streetcar: 1 to Chuden-mae (4 min.). Backtrack north to Heiwa Odori and turn left; it's beyond the river to the left.

(172) Sushi Tei ★ (Value) SUSHI Excellent sushi at reasonable prices is the reason this establishment is so popular. You'll be seated at the counters, as cooks shout greetings and orders back and forth. Ordering is made easy by an English-language menu. There are many other Sushi Tei restaurants in town, but this is perhaps the most convenient, as it is near the A-Bomb Dome, 1 block south of Aioi Dori, between the Kamiyacho and Genbaku-Dome-mae stops.

1–4–31 Otemachi. ☎ 082/545-1333. 1 piece sushi ¥105–¥525 (85¢–$4.35/45p–£2.20); sushi sets ¥840–¥2,100 ($7–$18/£3.50–£8.75). No credit cards. Mon–Sat 5pm–midnight; Sun and holidays noon–10pm. Streetcar: 1, 2, or 6 to Kamiyacho (1 min.).

12 Miyajima, Scenic Island in the Seto Sea ★★☆☆

13km (8 miles) SW of Hiroshima

Easily reached in about 30 minutes from Hiroshima, Miyajima is a treasure of an island only 2km (1¼ miles) off the mainland in the Seto Inland Sea. No doubt you've seen pictures of its most famous landmark: a huge red torii, or shrine gate, rising out of the water. Erected in 1875 and made of camphor wood, it's one of the largest torii in Japan, measuring more than 16m (53 ft.) tall. It guards Miyajima's main attraction, Itsukushima Shrine.

With the Japanese penchant for categorizing the “three best” of virtually everything in their country—the three best gardens, the three best waterfalls, and so on—it's no surprise that Miyajima is ranked as one of the three most scenic spots in Japan (the other two are Matsushima in Tohoku; and Amanohashidate, a remote sand spit, on the Japan Sea coast). Only 31 sq. km (12 sq. miles) in area and consisting mostly of steep, wooded hills, it's an exceptionally beautiful island, part of the Seto-Naikai (Inland Sea) National Park that is mostly water, islands, and islets. Of course, this distinction means it can be quite crowded with visitors, particularly in summer.

Miyajima has been held sacred since ancient times. In the olden days, no one was allowed to do anything so human as to give birth or die on the island, so both the pregnant and the ill were quickly ferried across to the mainland. Even today there's no cemetery on Miyajima. Covered with cherry trees that illuminate the island with snowy petals in spring, and with maple trees that emblazon it in reds and golds in autumn, Miyajima is home to tame deer that roam freely through the village, and to monkeys that swing through the woods. It's a delightful island for strolls and hikes—but avoid coming on a weekend.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE The easiest way to reach Miyajima is from Hiroshima. You can travel from Hiroshima by JR train, streetcar, bus, or boat, but the fastest and most reliable method is the train, which departs from Hiroshima Station approximately every 5 to 15 minutes, depending on the time of the day, and costs ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70; free for JR Rail Pass holders) for the 26-minute ride to Miyajimaguchi (if you're downtown or in Peace Memorial Park, you might find it easier to catch the train at Nishi-Hiroshima Station). Otherwise, a streetcar takes about an hour from Hiroshima Station to Hiroden Miyajima, the last stop, and costs ¥270 ($2.25/£1.15). All modes of transportation deposit you at Miyajima-guchi, from which it's just a couple minutes' walk to the ferry bound for Miyajima. There are two ferry companies offering the 10-minute ride to Miyajima for ¥170 ($1.40/70p), but if you have a Japan Rail Pass, you can ride on the JR ferry for free.

Alternatively, there's a boat that travels from downtown Hiroshima directly to Miyajima in 45 minutes. Operated by Aqua Net Hiroshima (☎ 082/240-5955), the Sekai Isan Koro boat departs from Motoyasu-bashi Bridge, near the A-Bomb Dome, five times daily. Fare is ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) one-way or ¥3,400 ($28/£14) round-trip; children pay half fare. Note that service is suspended during inclement weather and when the tide is low. From mid-January to February, it operates only Friday to Sunday and holidays.

VISITOR INFORMATION On Miyajima island, stop off at the Tourist Information Office (☎ 0829/44-2011), located in the Miyajima ferry terminal and open daily 9am to 7pm (to 6pm Dec to mid-Mar). It has an English-language flyer with a map, and the helpful staff can show where restaurants and accommodations are on the map or even make accommodations reservations for you. For ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) you can rent an English-spoken audio guide that describes the 20 places of interest noted on a companion map with a recommended walking tour—a great convenience. For more information, visit www.miyajima.or.jp.

GETTING AROUND You can walk to all the sights, accommodations, and restaurants listed below. If you wish to visit one of the island's beaches or explore more of the island, rental bicycles are available 8am to 5pm at the JR ferry pier (last checkout is 3pm) costing ¥320 ($2.65/£1.35) for 2 hours or ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) for the entire day. Inquire at the JR ticket window. Otherwise, shuttle buses travel to the beaches twice an hour in July and every 15 minutes in August for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25). Ask the Tourist Information Office for a schedule.

EXPLORING THE ISLAND

SEEING THE SIGHTS

Miyajima's major attraction, Itsukushima Shrine (★☆☆, 1–1 Miyajima-cho (☎ 0829/44-2020)), is less than a 10-minute walk from the ferry pier (turn right from the terminal), at the end of a long narrow pedestrian street called Omotesando Dori that is lined with souvenir shops and restaurants. Founded in 593 to honor three female deities, the wooden shrine is built over the water so that, when the tide is in, it appears as though the shrine is floating. A brilliant vermilion, it contrasts starkly with the wooded hills in the background and the blue of the sky above, casting its reflection in the waters below. If you do happen to see Itsukushima Shrine when the tide is in and it's seemingly floating on water, you should consider yourself very lucky indeed—most of the time the lovely shrine floats above a surface that's only a little more glamorous than mud. That's when imagination comes in handy (the Hiroshima tourist offices may have a tide calendar).

The majority of the shrine buildings are thought to date from the 16th century, preserving the original style of 12th-century architecture, but they have been repaired repeatedly through the centuries. Most of the shrine buildings are closed, but from sunrise to sunset daily (usually 6:30am–6pm in summer, to 5 or 5:30pm in winter), you can walk along the 231m (770-ft.) covered dock, which threads its way past the outer part of the main shrine and the oldest Noh stage in Japan. From the shrine, you'll have a good view of the red torii standing in the water. Bugaku (festival dances) are staged here 10 times a year (expect those days to be crowded with tour groups). An ancient dance performed to the accompaniment of court music, Bugaku was introduced to Japan centuries ago from India through China and Korea. The performer's costume is orange, matching the shrine around him. Admission to the shrine is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for college and high-school students, ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children.

Turn right upon exiting the shrine. After a few minutes, you'll come to the island's most interesting museum, the Miyajima Municipal History and Folklore Museum (Rekishi Minzoku Shiryokan)  , 57 Miyajima-cho (☎ 0829/44-2019; Tues–Sun 8:30am–5pm). It has a colorful, English-language brochure to guide you through the 170-year-old house (which once belonged to a wealthy soy-sauce merchant and is built around a small Japanese garden), as well as through several other buildings. Packed with items donated by the people of Miyajima, the museum is a window into commoners' daily lives in ages past, with farm tools, water jars, cooking objects, carved-wood boxes, furniture, lacquerware, combs, and much more. Be sure to see the narrow, three-room dwelling in the back of the museum complex, typical of the island. Admission is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults, ¥170 ($1.40/70p) for high-school students, and ¥150 ($1.25/65p) for junior-high and elementary students. It will take about 30 minutes to see everything.

Another sight worth exploring is Daisho-in Temple, on the slope of Mount Misen, 210 Miyajima-cho (☎ 0829/44-0111; daily 8am–5pm). One of the most famous Shingon temples in western Japan, it has numerous worthwhile sights spread on its leafy grounds, including a mandala made of colored sand that was created by Tibetan priests, a main hall where worshipers pray for health and contentment, and a hall dedicated to Kobo Daishi, founder of the Shingon sect (his remains are interred on Mount Koya). In Henshokutsu Cave are Buddhist icons and sand gathered from all 88 pilgrimage temples on Shikoku; making a round here is considered as auspicious as visiting the temples themselves. Other halls contain deities thought to bring good health and to save humans from earthly sexual desires. Every year there are fire-walking festivals here, in which worshipers walk over hot coals. An excellent brochure at the entrance describes the various sights, free to the public.

The other popular thing to do on Miyajima is to visit its highest peak, 525m (1,750-ft.) Mount Misen. Signs direct you to Momijidani Park, a pleasant hillside park covered with maple trees (spectacular in autumn) and cherry trees (heavenly in spring) and marked by a picturesque stream. From here, you can take cable cars to Mount Misen; round-trip tickets cost ¥1,800 ($15/£7.50) for adults and ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for children. However, you might wish to enjoy some of the scenery by walking back down (it takes about an hour), in which case one-way tickets cost ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) and ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) respectively. In any case, the summit of Mount Misen, a 30-minute walk from the cable car station, offers splendid views of the Seto-Naikai (Inland Sea) National Park, and Mount Misen itself is home to much of the island's wild monkey population. But it is best known for Kobo Daishi's visit in 806, when he spent a 100-day retreat here and is said to have lit the Eternal Fire, which has reputedly been burning for more than 1,200 years and was used to light the Peace Flame in Hiroshima's Peace Memorial Park.

Miyajima is also known for its beaches. If you're looking to swim, there are two beaches west of the town and shrine: Suginoura and Tsutsumigaura Natural Park (you can also camp here). Ask at the tourist office for a schedule of shuttle buses that will bring you to the beaches.

WHERE TO STAY

You can see Miyajima easily on a day's trip from Hiroshima, but because it's such a beautiful respite from city life and because most tourists are day-trippers, you'll enjoy the island much more if you stay behind after the last ferry leaves. An added benefit of a longer stay: Itsukushima Shrine is illuminated at night, a gorgeous sight overnights should not miss. I've therefore included a few recommendations on where to stay, but avoid Golden Week and weekends in July, August, October, and November (when maple leaves are in full color), because accommodations are usually full.

173 Guest House Kikugawa ★★ Value Located in a quiet residential neighborhood an easy walk from the ferry pier, this guesthouse is modern yet adheres to traditional Japanese design with its whitewashed walls, dark timber framing, white paper lanterns, and simple elegance. The owner, Kikugawa-san, speaks English and is an accomplished chef, serving French food with a Japanese twist in his pleasant restaurant with a restful view of a maple tree (advance reservations required). Six of the guest rooms are Western style and are rather ordinary, reflected in the cheaper room rates below. The two other more expensive rooms face the front and boast flowers, bilingual TV, and Washlet toilet; the smaller is a tatami room, while the larger has a tatami area and a loft with Western-style beds. Because this place is small, make reservations 6 months in advance if you want to stay here in July, August, October, or November. 66615-796 Miyajima-cho, Hatsukaichi-shi, Hiroshima-ken 739-0511. ☎ 0829/44-0039. Breakfast ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) extra; dinner ¥3,675 and ¥5,250 ($31/£15 and $44/£22) extra. AE, DC, MC, V.A 3-min. walk from the ferry terminal; walk through the short tunnel in front of the terminal toward the right and then turn right. Amenities: Restaurant. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

174 Iwaso Ryokan ★★ ★ Finds This is the most famous ryokan on the island, and with a history spanning more than 150 years, it was also the first ryokan to open on Miyajima, which explains its idyllic location in Momijidani Park. It's highly recommended for a splurge, with the price dependent on the room, its view, and the meals you select (when booking your room, be sure to specify any dietary needs such as vegetarian food only, whether you want a Western breakfast, or whether there are Japanese foods you cannot eat). The newest part of the ryokan was built in 1981, and though some of its newer rooms have very peaceful and relaxing views of a stream and woods, I prefer the rooms dating from about 80 years ago; they have more individuality. If you really want to go all out and live like a feudal lord, there are also a couple of separate cottages (hanare) that are more than 80 years old, all exquisitely decorated. Open your shoji screens to see maples, a gurgling brook, and woods, all in utter privacy. You'll be treated like royalty here, but of course you have to pay for it.

Momijidani, 345 Miyajima-cho, Hatsukaichi-shi, Hiroshima-ken 739-0522. ☎ 0829/44-2233. Fax 0829/44-2230. www.iwaso.com. 44 units, 36 with bathroom. ¥19,950–¥42,000 ($166–$350/£83–£175) per person. Cottages ¥36,750–¥42,000 ($306–$350/£153–£175) per person. Rates are higher during peak season and nights before holidays. Rates include 2 meals. AE, V. A 15-min. walk from the ferry pier in Momijidani Park. Pickup service available. Amenities: Hot-spring baths; in-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

①75 Miyajima Morinoyado ★★ Value You're forgiven if you pass this place by, thinking it must be an exclusive ryokan. Indeed, if it weren't a municipally owned Kokumin Shukusha (People's Lodge), rates here would easily be three times as much as they are. Though modern, it has a lovely Japanese design with a lobby overlooking a carp pond. On the other hand, the many school groups and families staying here leave no doubt that it's a public lodge, and it's quite a hike from the ferry pier. Both tatami rooms and Western-style twins—simple but spacious and spotless—are available, some with views of the bay. The public baths look onto rock gardens. Reservations should be made 1 year in advance, especially for August, but sometimes there are cancellations; when I dropped by on a weekday in June, rooms were available. Both Western and Japanese breakfasts are available; dinners are Japanese.

Miyajima-cho, Hatsukaichi-shi, Hiroshima-ken 739-0500. ☎ 0829/44-0430. Fax 0829/44-2248. 30 units, 26 with bathroom, 4 with toilet only. ¥8,400–¥11,865 ($70–$99/£35–£49) per person. ¥735 ($6.10/£3.05) more per person on Sat, nights before holidays, and during peak season (Apr–May and July–Aug). Discounts given for children. Rates include 2 meals. No credit cards. A 25-min. walk from the ferry pier, across from the aquarium and just before the tunnel. Amenities: Restaurant. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea.

Momiji-so ★★ This small, Japanese-style house has a great location in Momijidani Park, not far from the ropeway to Mount Misen, and has been in business for 90 years. Tatami rooms vary in size, though all have artwork, flowers, and views of the surrounding park; the best looks out over a koi pond. A plus is the nice outdoor Japanese restaurant serving noodles, barbecued conger eel on rice, and other dishes—weather permitting, you'll dine outside. Not much English is spoken, but they're used to foreigners and are very kind.

WHERE TO DINE

Note: There are no addresses in this section, because the village is small, and the address would only be meaningful to the postman.

①76 Fujitaya ★★ Finds ANAGOMESHI Although the building itself is not old, this pleasant restaurant has a history of more than 80 years and preserves a traditional atmosphere with its wooden ceiling, shoji lamps, and a back courtyard with a maple tree, moss-covered rocks, and water running from a bamboo pipe into a pool carved into a flat rock. Fujitaya serves only anagomeshi (barbecued conger eel on rice), which comes with side dishes (such as pickled vegetables), soup, and tea. It closes when it runs out of anago.

📍 0829/44-0151. Anagomeshi meal ¥2,300 ($19/£10). No credit cards. Mon–Fri 11am–4pm; Sat–Sun 11am–5pm. A 20-min. walk from the ferry pier, on the right side of the road leading toward Daishoin after exiting from Itsukushima Shrine. Look for its name written on an oversize paddle on its facade.

①77 Koumittei ★ OKONOMIYAKI Convenient to the ferry pier, this simple restaurant with counter, table, and tatami dining stays open later than most restaurants on the island and is one of the cleanest okonomiyaki restaurants we've seen. Both Hiroshima-style (which is prepared for you) and Kansai-style (which you prepare yourself) okonomiyaki are available from the English-language menu.

📍 0829/44-0177. Okonomiyaki ¥735–¥945 ($6.10–$7.85/£3.05–£3.95); set meals ¥1,050–¥1,260 ($8.75–$11/£4.40–£5.25). No credit cards. Thurs–Tues 11am–2:30pm and 5–9pm. A 1-min. walk from the ferry pier, catty-corner to the right.

①78 Tonookajaya NOODLES Dine inside or out at this tiny teahouselike shop next to the five-story pagoda. The shop serves mostly udon (thick wheat noodles), including udon with tempura, but it also offers a few other choices on its English-language menu, including a sweet rice porridge (amazake, served Oct–May). What makes this place especially interesting is the 200-year-old pine tree out front that has been guided through the centuries to attain its unique, horizontal shape. You can also come here just for drinks.

📍 0829/44-2455. Main dishes ¥580–¥750 ($4.85–$6.25/£2.40–£3.15). No credit cards. Daily 10am–5pm. A 10-min. walk from the ferry pier on the hill with the 5-story pagoda, down steps leading toward the bay.

Shikoku

The smallest of Japan's four main islands, Shikoku is also the one least visited by foreigners. That's surprising considering the natural beauty of its rugged mountains, its mild climate, and its most famous monuments—88 sacred Buddhist temples. Many Japanese wish to make a pilgrimage to all 88 temples at least once in their lifetime as a tribute to the great Buddhist priest Kobo Daishi, who was born on Shikoku in 774 and who founded the Shingon sect of Buddhism.

This pilgrimage has been popular since the Edo Period, as many believe that a successful completion of the tour exonerates Buddhist followers from rebirth. It used to take almost 2 months to visit all 88 temples on foot. Even today, you can see pilgrims making their rounds dressed in white—only now they're more likely to go by organized tour buses, which cut travel time down to 2 weeks.

GETTING TO SHIKOKU For centuries, the only way to reach Shikoku was by boat. However, the 1988 completion of the Seto Ohashi Bridge, which links Shikoku with Okayama Prefecture and accommodates both cars and trains, changed Shikoku forever. In 1999, the completion of a series of bridges spanning six scenic islands in the Seto Inland Sea connected Shikoku with Hiroshima Prefecture (complete with cycling paths offering scenic views and now one of Shikoku's hottest attractions), followed by a third bridge, for cars only, linking Shikoku with Kobe.

In any case, Shikoku is no longer as far off the beaten track as it used to be, simply because access is so easy. Shinkansen travelers can simply transfer in Okayama to trains bound for either Takamatsu or Matsuyama. The energetic can even cycle from Honshu to Shikoku on the Shimanami Kaido, the bike path stretching from Hiroshima Prefecture to Ehime Prefecture.

1 Takamatsu ★

805km (500 miles) W of Tokyo; 71km (44 miles) S of Okayama

The second-largest town on Shikoku, with a population of 426,000, Takamatsu, the capital of Kagawa Prefecture, is on the northeastern coast of the island, overlooking the Seto Inland Sea. Takamatsu means “high pine,” and the city served as the feudal capital of the powerful Matsudaira clan from 1642 until the Meiji Restoration in 1868. The Matsudairas are responsible for Takamatsu's most famous site, Ritsurin Park, one of the most outstanding gardens in Japan. Takamatsu also boasts more bonsai nurseries than anywhere else in Japan, while nearby is Kotohiragu Shrine, a popular mountaintop destination that requires a real workout just to see.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane JAL flies from Tokyo's Haneda Airport (¥27,100/$226/£113 for a one-way ticket) in 1 hour and 15 minutes. There is also air service from Osaka, Sapporo, Nagoya, and Fukuoka. An airport bus delivers passengers downtown in about 45 minutes for ¥740 ($6.15/£3.10).

By Train JR's Marine Liner trains depart from Okayama Station approximately twice an hour, reaching Takamatsu in an hour; the fare is ¥1,470 ($12/£6). From Matsuyama, trains take less than 2½ hours and cost ¥5,500 ($46/£23).

By Bus A JR bus (☎ 03/3516-1950) departs Tokyo Station nightly at 8:50pm and then picks up passengers at Shinjuku Station at 9:30pm, reaching Takamatsu at 7:33am the next day. The one-way fare is ¥10,000 ($83/£42).

VISITOR INFORMATION The Takamatsu Information Plaza (☎ 087/851-2009; daily 9am–6pm), located outside the main exit of the train station in a small building on the left side of the circular plaza, offers an English-language map of the city. You can also pick up the Shikoku Passport; although only in Japanese, it gives slight discounts to some of the listings below, including Ritsurin Park, Shikoku Mura, ANA Hotel Clement, and Royal Park Hotel Annex in addition to others. In addition, the Kagawa Welcome Card gives discounts to foreigners; you must download it at www.21kagawa.com/visitor.

Information is available online at www.city.takamatsu.kagawa.jp/kankou.

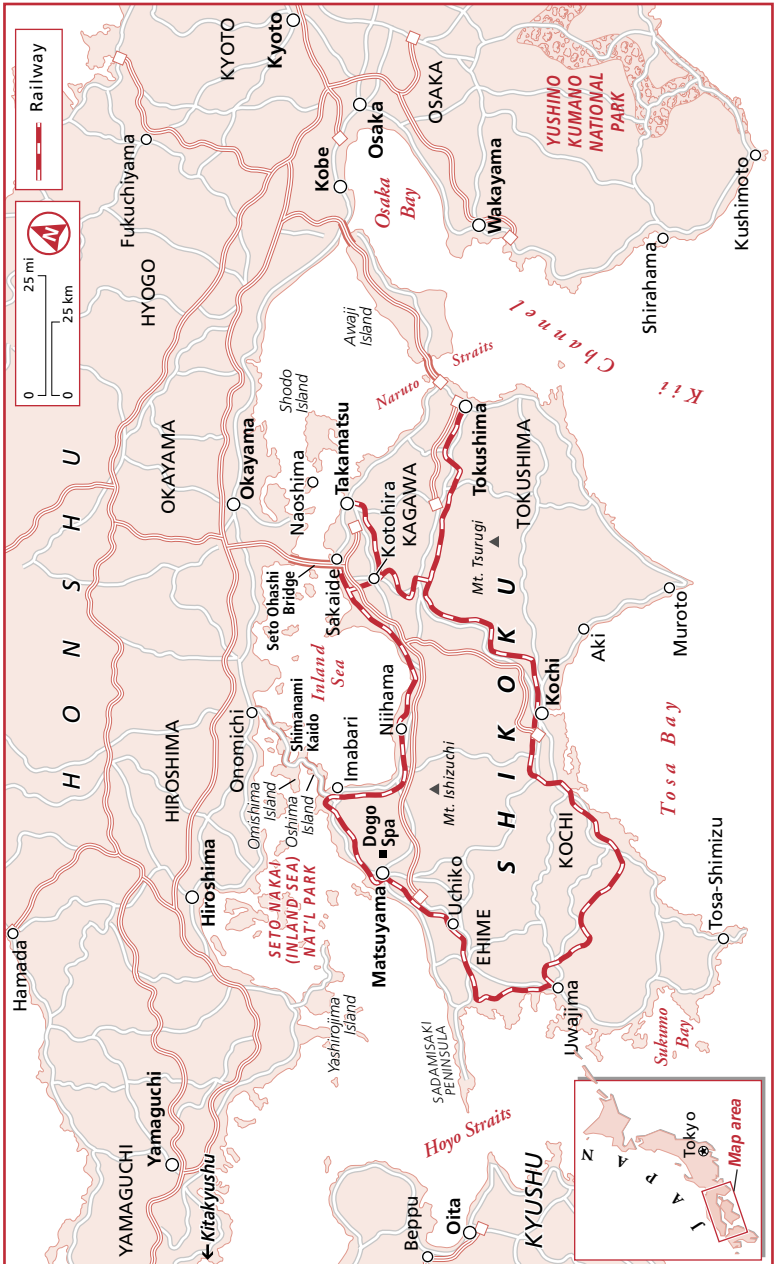

If you crave a bit of news from home or plan to remain in the area, head for I-Pal Kagawa, 1–11–63 Bancho (☎ 087/837-5908; Tues–Sun 9am–6pm), located about a 15-minute walk south of Takamatsu Station on Chuo Dori in the northwest corner of Central (Chuo) Park. Here you'll find magazines and newspapers in many languages, CNN on the tube, and three computers you can use free of charge for 30 minutes. This is also a good place to find out what's going on in the area.

INTERNET ACCESS In addition to I-Pal Kagawa (above), E-Topia Kagawa (☎ 087/822-0111), on the fourth and fifth floors of the Media Center next to Takamatsu Station, has 28 computers you can use for 1 hour for free (be sure to bring your passport with you for identification). It's open Tuesday to Sunday from 10am to 8pm.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Takamatsu Station, Takamatsu Port, and the local streetcar terminus are clustered at the north edge of the city on the coast of the Seto Inland Sea, in a new urban development called Sunport Takamatsu, which also includes the 30-story Takamatsu Symbol Tower, convention halls, exhibition and concert facilities, restaurants, shops, and offices. Office workers take respite along the Waterfront Harbor Walk and Tamamo Park, site of Takamatsu Castle's remains.

Most of the hotels and restaurants listed below, as well as Ritsurin Park, are located south and southeast of Sunport Takamatsu. Chuo Dori is the town's main avenue, running south from Sunport to Ritsurin Park and beyond. Bisecting Chuo Dori and paralleling it to the east are shopping arcades. In fact, a total of 4km (2½ miles) of covered shopping arcades make Takamatsu's the longest in Japan.

Although the main attractions of Takamatsu are spread out, they're easily reached from Takamatsu Station by JR train or by a commuter streetcar called the Kotoden Line. The Kotoden streetcar terminus, called Kotoden Chikko Station, is a 2-minute walk from Takamatsu Station's main exit, past the ANA hotel and to the right. Fares start at ¥180 ($1.50/75p). Two stops south on the Kotoden streetcar (or a 25-min.

walk from Takamatsu Station) is Kawaramachi Station, the heart of the city where you'll find many department stores, restaurants, and nightspots.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

Ritsurin Park ★★ Ritsurin Park was once the summer retreat of the Matsudaira family. Work on the park began in the 1600s and took about 100 years to complete. Using the backdrop of adjacent Mount Shiun in a principle known as “borrowed landscaping,” the 75-hectare (185-acre) park, Japan's largest, incorporates the mountain into its overall design. Basically, the garden, arranged around six spring-fed ponds and 13 scenic mounds, can be divided into two parts: a traditional, classical, southern garden; and a modern, northern garden, once a lord's private hunting grounds and with wide grassy lawns and huge lotus ponds. No matter the season, something is always in bloom, from plum and cherry trees in spring to camellias in winter (a bulletin board at the entrance identifies what's in bloom). English-speaking volunteers are on hand most days to provide free tours of Ritsurin if you wish.

The southern garden is the more interesting one, representing what's called a strolling garden, in which each bend of the footpath brings another perspective into view, another combination of rock, tree, and mountain. The garden is absolutely exquisite, and what sets it apart are its twisted, contorted pines. On one of my visits, a mist was rolling off Mount Shiun, lending mystery to the landscape; what better fits the image of traditional Japan than mist and pine trees? Altogether, there are 1,400 pine trees and 350 cherry trees in Ritsurin Park, which you should tour in a counterclockwise fashion to fully appreciate the changing views. Although I consider this garden just as beautiful as those in Okayama and Kanazawa, tall buildings on its eastern periphery detract from its overall effect; without them I would give this garden top rating.

There are a couple of things you can stop and see during your tour of the park. In the northern garden are the Sanuki Folk Art Museum (Sanuki Mingei Kan), which is included in the park's admission fee and displays local folk art and handicrafts such as ceramics, lacquerware, furniture, and items used in daily Edo life (regrettably, there are no English-language descriptions); and the Commerce and Industry Hall (Shokoshoreikan), which sells local products, including kites, masks, woodcarvings, umbrellas, fans, and food items. But my favorite thing to do is drop by Kikugetsu-tei (Scooping the Moon House) in the southern garden, with its teahouse dating from feudal days overlooking a pond. Powdered tea, used in tea ceremonies, costs ¥710 ($5.90/£2.95) for adults and ¥550 ($4.60/£2.30) for children. It takes about an hour to see the southern garden; add another half-hour if you also take in the northern garden.

1–20–16 Ritsurin-cho. ☎ 087/833-7411. Admission ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) adults, ¥170 ($1.40/70p) children. Daily sunrise–sunset (approximately 7am–5pm in winter, 5:30am–7pm June–Aug). Kotoden streetcar: Ritsurin-koen Station (10 min.). JR train: If you have a Japan Rail Pass, go by JR train toward Tokushima; get off at Ritsurin-koen Kita Guchi, turn right out of the station, follow the tracks to the 1st street, and turn right (4 min.).

Shikoku Mura Village ★★ On the northeastern edge of town, this open-air museum boasts more than 30 traditional houses, sheds, and storehouses dating from the Edo Period and collected from all over Shikoku. The structures, picturesquely situated on the wooded slope of Yashima Hill, include thatch-roofed homes of farmers and fishermen, century-old cottages used by lighthouse keepers, a rustic tea-ceremony house, a 250-year-old rural Kabuki stage, rice and soy-sauce storehouses, and sheds for pressing sugar and for producing paper out of mulberry bark. There's also a suspended

Finds Bonsai Is Big in Kinashi

If you've long admired the art of bonsai—the crafting of miniature pines and other trees through skillful manipulation—you might wish to take a stroll through Kinashi, a western suburb of Takamatsu. With more than 80 nurseries, half of them cultivating bonsai, Kinashi has been a center of bonsai since the Edo Period and remains the largest bonsai-growing region in Japan. To reach it, take a local JR train from Takamatsu Station two stations to Kinashi, walk north a few minutes, and then turn right onto Bonsai Street. One of the largest nurseries, (179) Nakanishi Chinshouen (☎ 087/881-2913), across the street from the station, is owned by a fifth-generation bonsai cultivator; some of the larger pines here were started by his ancestors. You're welcome to walk through this and other nearby nurseries. This is the only place I've ever seen bonsai groves, with hundreds of tiny pine trees planted in rows. On the 5th, 15th, and 20th of each month from 9am to 5pm, there's a Bonsai Auction on Bonsai Street, where serious bidding takes place.

bridge made of vines, once a familiar sight in Shikoku as a means for crossing the island's many gorges and ravines; if you look closely, however, you'll see that this one is reinforced by cables. It takes at least 1½ hours to stroll through the village (and there are lots of stairs). I heartily recommend a visit if you haven't had the opportunity to see similar villages in Takayama or Shirakawago, as they convey, better than anything else, rural life in Japan in centuries past.

91 Yashima-naka-machi. ☎ 087/843-3111. Admission ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) adults, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) high-school students, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) junior-high students, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm (to 4:30pm in winter). Kotoden streetcar: To Kotoden Yashima Station, about a 20-min. ride and then a 5-min. walk. JR train: Take a JR train bound for Tokushima and get off at Yashima Station (15 min.).

EASY SIDE TRIPS FROM TAKAMATSU

If you're spending more than a day in Takamatsu, these major attractions are worth the trek.

KOTOHIRA ★★ If you have 4 hours to spare, one of the best historical side trips you can take is to Kotohira, home of Japan's oldest Kabuki theater and of Kotohiragu Shrine ★★, 892 Kotohira-cho (☎ 0877/75-2121), one of Japan's oldest and most popular shrines (also known as Kompira Shrine). It takes about an hour to reach Kotohira by JR train from Takamatsu, but that isn't the end of it—the shrine itself is at the top of 785 granite steps, which on average take 40 minutes to ascend. If that's too much for you, you can hire one of the porters who wait at the bottom of the steps, but they'll take you only to the main gate (called Omon in Japanese), which is reached after climbing 365 steps. It costs ¥5,300 ($44/£22) one-way and ¥6,800 ($57/£28) round-trip to ride in these palanquins. What decadence.

Otherwise, begin the long trek up to Kotohiragu Shrine by taking the JR Kotohira Station's only exit. Walk straight past a small park (with a wooden tower lighthouse that served as a beacon for traveling pilgrims in the Edo Period), and pass the Kotoden Station. (You can also travel from Takamatsu in 1 hr. by Kotoden streetcar.) Turn left at the T-junction with a post office. You'll soon see, to the right, a sloping, narrow street lined with souvenir shops (though I wouldn't buy anything on the way up). Eventually, you'll reach the first flight of stairs. If you're making a detour to the Kabuki theater (described below), turn left after the 22nd step, from which the theater is only a 3-minute walk uphill on the right.

Fun Fact Doggedly Faithful

In the olden days, faithful who could not manage a trip to Kotohiragu Shrine in person would set a barrel adrift at sea, along with an offering and a plea for passing fishermen to take the offering to the shrine on their next pilgrimage. The more resourceful would even send dogs on the pilgrimage, with a tag that read “Kotohira Pilgrimage” and a pouch of money around their necks. Travelers who encountered the dogs used the money to buy the animals food and passage on boats until the dogs reached their destination.

At about the 475th step (in case you're counting), just past the stables to the right, you'll find Shoin, built in 1659 to receive important visitors. Its doors and alcoves contain paintings by Maruyama Ōkyo, a famous 18th-century landscape artist, making the building an Important Cultural Property. Especially famous is the painting of two tigers drinking from a stream. It's open daily from 8:30am to 4:30pm; admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for students, and free for children. After another 15-minute workout, you'll reach Hongu, the main shrine, where you'll be rewarded with a sweeping view of the surrounding countryside as well as of the shrine itself. Popularly known as Kompira-San, Kotohiragu Shrine was originally founded in the 11th century but has been rebuilt many times, with the main shrine buildings re-erected about 100 years ago. It's dedicated to the Shinto god of seafarers and voyagers (look for the Votive Picture Pavilion with photos of ships and other vessels that have asked for blessings) and, in recent years, has even become revered as the protector of foreign travelers. For my part, I was just thankful for having successfully traveled the stairs to the shrine. And to be honest, the shrine itself is not the main draw; most of the three million annual hikers, it seems, come for the hike itself and the comradeship it inspires. If you're still game (and want to say you went the entire distance), you can continue another 583 steps to Okunoyashiro. You can say your prayers here, but the inner shrine is closed to the public. Kotohiragu Shrine is open daily from sunrise to sunset (7pm in summer; 5pm in winter).

Because you're in the vicinity, you should make every effort to see the highly recommended (180) Kompira Grand Playhouse (Kompira O-Shibai or Kanamaruza) (★), 241 Otsu, Kotohira-cho (☎ 0877/73-3846), which was built to entertain the masses flocking to Kotohiragu Shrine. Located 300m (984 ft.) to the left of the 22nd step as you ascend, and then up the hill on the right, it's the oldest existing Kabuki stage in Japan, stunning in its simplicity and delightful in its construction. As there was no electricity when it was built in 1835, the sides of the hall are rows of shoji screens and wooden coverings, which can be opened and closed to control the amount of light reaching the stage. Notice the check-in counter at the entrance for wooden sandals (geta), tatami seating, paper lanterns, and revolving stage, which was turned by four men in the basement (be sure to check out the basement). You can also tour the various makeup and dressing rooms behind the stage and watch a video in Japanese. It's open daily from 9am to 5pm (except for 16 days in Apr when Kabuki is performed to sellout crowds) and charges an admission of ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300

($2.50/£1.25) for junior-high and high-school students, and ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for children (the Shikoku Passport offers a discount). Ask for the English-language handout.

BENESSE ART SITE NAOSHIMA ★★ Naoshima, a small island in the Seto Inland Sea, is devoted to contemporary art in a big way, with two striking museums, interactive installations housed in traditional buildings, and outdoor sculptures spread throughout the island, making it the nation's major destination for cutting-edge art in Japan. But more than that, Naoshima is a place of discovery, with a unique symbiotic relationship between natural scenic beauty and art. Plan on at least 6 hours for the experience, including the 50-minute ferry from Takamatsu. Note that for art venues closed on Monday, if Monday is a national holiday, they stay open but will close the next day, on Tuesday, instead.

Shikoku Kisen ferries (☎ 087/821-6798) depart Takamatsu Port six times daily (¥970/$9.25/£4.65 for a round-trip ticket) for Miyanoura Port on Naoshima (you can also reach Naoshima from Uno in Okayama Prefecture's in 20 min.; one-way fare: ¥280/$2.35/£1.20). At Miyanoura, if you turn left from the ferry pier and then right, you'll see the Tourist Information Center beside the fire station, open daily 8:30am to 6pm and offering an English-language map of the island, rental bikes (¥500/$4.15/£2.10 for the day), and schedules for buses that travel to all art sites (bus fare: ¥100/85¢/45p per ride).

From Miyanoura Port, you can take the bus 5 minutes (stop: Nokyo-mae, in front of JA Bank) or walk 30 minutes to Honmura, where you'll find a handful of Art House Projects, old buildings that have been remodeled by artists into interactive art installations. At Kadoya (by Miyajima Tatsuo), you'll see a 200-year-old farmhouse that contains a darkened room with a shallow pool of water and submerged colored numbers that blink on and off at varying frequencies, with the speed of each number controlled by an islander and each number representing a human life. Go'o Jinja is an Edo-Era shrine that has been transformed by Sugimoto Hiroshi, with glass stairs, white rocks, and a narrow underground passageway that leads to a tomblike space. Ishibashi is a restored family home of a salt-producing family now housing paintings by Senji Hiroshi, while Gokaisho, where residents once gathered to play the Japanese game go, contains Suda Yoshiro's Camelia art work. Haisha is a transformed dental clinic, but my favorite is Minamidera, a stark wooden building designed by famed architect Tadao Ando, with an installation by James Turrell called Backside of the Moon. After being led into a pitch-black room by staff, you wait about 10 minutes until your eyes adjust, when you see a faint glow ahead. You're told you can walk to the light to touch it, only to find . . . well, you'll have to "see" for yourself. Art House Projects are open Tuesday to Sunday 10am to 4:30pm and cost ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for a combination ticket for all six. Buy your ticket at the tourist office above, at Ueda's Tobacconist, across from Nokyo-mae bus stop, or the Honmura Lounge & Archive beside the bus stop.

From Honmaru, it's a 10-minute bus ride and a walk uphill to Benesse House, a museum designed by Tadao Ando and containing an expensive hotel (☎ 087/892-2030; rates begin at ¥31,185/$260/£130 for a twin), cafe, restaurant, and art by Jasper Johns, Robert Rauschenberg, Frank Stella, Jackson Pollock, Andy Warhol, and others who created site-specific art that takes Ando's architecture and Naoshima's natural beauty into consideration. It's open daily 8am to 9pm, with admission costing ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults and ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for children.

The nearby Chichu Art Museum, 3 minutes away by bus (there's a free shuttle bus between the two museums weekends and holidays) or a 30-minute walk, was also designed by Ando. It's a striking concrete structure with sharp angles, contemplative spaces, and only a few works of art, including a room of Monet paintings, light installations by James Turrell, and a room by Walter De Maria containing a huge granite ball and gold-leaf-covered bars. This museum is open Tuesday to Sunday 10am to 6pm (to 5pm Oct–Feb) and costs ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) for adults and free for children. From here, the bus back to Miyanoura Port takes 20 minutes.

Information on Benesse Art Site Naoshima is available at ☎ 087/892-2887 or www.naoshima-is.co.jp. General information on Naoshima is available from the Naoshima Tourism Association at ☎ 087/892-2299 or www.naoshima.net.

EXPENSIVE

ANA Hotel Clement Takamatsu ★★ Opened in 2001 in Sunport across from Takamatsu Station (and offering a discount to holders of a Japan Rail Pass), the city's most expensive hotel is also its most conspicuous: sleek, 21 stories high, cutting across the landscape like a white sail, and by far the best place in town. It's designed with an aquatic theme, with a cascading fountain in the sunlit lobby lounge, carpets and chandeliers with wavy patterns, bubbled or cracked glass in public places, and curving, seductive lines everywhere, even in corridors. It's the kind of place sightseers happily return to after a hard day's work. Room rates are based on size, floor, view, and amenities, with the best twin and double rooms offering views of the sea or nearby Tamamo Park, even from windows in the bathroom. But the least expensive rooms are also recommendable—spacious and chic with contemporary furnishings and good bedside reading lamps. Ask for a room on the highest available floor. Note that the cheapest double has only a semi-double bed.

MODERATE

Rihga Hotel Zest This beige-brick hotel, first opened in 1980 and adding an annex with more luxurious accommodations 10 years later, appeals to both business and leisure travelers with its convenient location on Chuo Dori next to Hyogomachi shopping arcade. It has an accommodating staff and offers a variety of rooms at different price ranges. The cheapest rooms, including all singles, are located in the main building and are narrow with tiny bathrooms. More expensive and spacious annex rooms sport shoji screens and window panels that close for complete darkness. There are also four combination rooms with both tatami areas and beds.

Royal Park Hotel Annex This business hotel, with imitation Art Deco decor in its lobby and hallways, offers mostly single rooms in a convenient location near Kawaramachi Station in the heart of the city's shopping and nightlife district. Rooms, though small, are pleasantly decorated, but it's been a while since I've seen pink-tiled bathrooms like those here. The cheapest singles are on lower floors where traffic is noisiest. The hotel's seven twins are all corner rooms, bright and large for the price with vanity/sink separate from the—you guessed it—pink bathrooms (which also have a sink). Little English is spoken.

In addition to the choice here, there's the Toyoko Inn Takamatsu Hyogomachi, 3-1 Hyogomachi (☎ 087/821-1045; www.toyoko-inn.com), an 8-minute walk southeast of Takamatsu Station on Chuo Dori beside the Hyogomachi arcade. It offers the usual freebies for which this chain is known, including lobby computers with Internet access; Wi-Fi in the lobby; domestic phone calls from lobby phones, nightly in-house movies, and room dataports. Singles go for ¥6,090 ($51/£25) and twins/doubles for ¥8,190 ($68/£34), including breakfast.

Business Hotel Parkside Takamatsu ★ Value Although a business hotel, this small, boutique-like hotel has a great location across from Ritsurin Park. Rooms are small, but who cares when you can open the window and look out over the fabled garden? Some rooms have only a partial view or none at all, so be sure to request a ring-side seat on an upper floor (note that nonsmoking rooms, unfortunately, are on the third floor). A bonus: The hotel provides discount tickets to Ritsurin Park.

WHERE TO DINE

Takamatsu is known throughout Japan for its sanuki udon—thick white noodles made from wheat flour. Takamatsu also has a fresh supply of fish from the Seto Inland Sea.

Tips A Note on Japanese Characters

Many hotels, restaurants, attractions, and other establishments in Japan do not have signs giving their names in Roman (English-language) letters. Appendix C lists the Japanese equivalents for all such places described in this guide. Thus, to find the Japanese characters for, say, Tenkatsu (below) refer to no. 181 in appendix C.

EXPENSIVE

Szechwan ★★☆☆ CHINESE Classic standards, such as bird's-nest soup, sweet-and-sour pork, and chicken with cashew nuts, receive innovative makeovers at this elegant 29th-floor restaurant with white tablecloths and background jazz music. Add panoramic views of the Seto Inland Sea and excellent service, and you're in for a memorable dining experience.

29th floor, Takamatsu Symbol Tower, 2–1 Sunport. ☎ 087/811-0477. Main dishes ¥1,800–¥3,500 ($15–$29/£7.50–£15); set lunches ¥1,500–¥3,500 ($13–$29/£6.50–£15); set dinners ¥5,250–¥10,500 ($44–$88/£22–£44). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–3pm and 5–10pm. Station: Takamatsu (1 min.).

MODERATE

①81 Tenkatsu TEMPURA/SUSHI This well-known tempura and sushi restaurant is in a modern-looking building with a plastic-food display case and a window where passersby can watch a chef prepare sushi. Inside the restaurant are tatami mats and tables, but I suggest sitting at the counter, which encircles a large pool filled with fish. As customers order, fish are swept out of the tanks with nets—they certainly couldn't be fresher. A photo menu (along with prices for fish in the tanks) and a display case help you choose. For a splurge, order a kaiseki course, beginning at ¥5,250 ($44/£22; reservations required for kaiseki).

7–8 Hyogomachi. ☎ 087/821-5380. Set lunches ¥840–¥2,100 ($7–$18/£3.50–£8.75); set dinners ¥1,050–¥3,675 ($8.75–$31/£4.40–£15). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Fri 11am–2pm and 4–10pm; Sat–Sun 11am–9pm. Station: Takamatsu (a 5-min. walk south from the station). Walk south on Chuo Dori until it intersects with a large covered pedestrian shopping arcade called Hyogomachi. Turn right and walk all the way through the arcade; upon emerging, you'll find the restaurant on your left.

①82 Tokiwa Saryo ★★☆☆ Finds VARIED JAPANESE This restaurant, easily spotted with its castlelike roof, occupies what was once a traditional Japanese inn and retains many of its original traditional features, including a delightful inner courtyard complete with a pond, dwarf pine trees, carp, and some lanterns (take off your shoes at the entrance and deposit them into a locker). For lunch, you'll probably want to order one of the set meals, such as obento lunch boxes or tempura and sashimi teishoku, made easy to choose from by photos in the Japanese-language menu. For dinner, mini-kaiseki meals are also available for ¥3,000 to ¥4,000 ($25–$33/£13–£17), but no photos are available for these, as they change with the season. At any rate, the food is delicious and very reasonably priced; you can't go wrong.

1–8–2 Tokiwa-cho. ☎ 087/861-5577. Set dinners ¥1,450–¥4,000 ($12–$33/£6.10–£17); set lunches ¥1,050–¥3,000 ($8.75–$25/£4.35–£13). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–2:30pm and 5–9:30pm (last order). Kotoden streetcar: Kawaramachi Station (2 min.). From the west exit (with its bus stop sign), take the side street south (to the left) parallel to Tokiwa-cho (a covered arcade); the restaurant will be on your right, on the corner.

INEXPENSIVE

①83 Kanaizumi SANUKI UDON This modern cafeteria is about as casual as you can get—your noodles (available in three sizes, warm or cold) are scooped for you as you go through the line and you choose your ingredients and side dishes, including tempura and sushi (¥80–¥180/65¢–$1.50/35p–75p). Be prepared for slippery noodles and the good-natured slurping sounds of a noodle shop.

9–3 Konyamachi. ☎ 087/822-0123. Sanuki udon ¥160–¥510 ($1.35–$4.25/70p–£2.10). No credit cards. Daily 9:30am–5:30pm. Station: Takamatsu (15 min.). Walk south of the station, the restaurant is off Chuo Dori to the right just before the city art museum.

184 Maruichi ★ YAKITORI Although a cozy and friendly drinking establishment, this is also a great place for an inexpensive meal. An English-language menu lists sashimi, Korean spiced cabbage (kimchi), fried chicken, tempura, and shrimp dumplings, and, of course, a variety of yakitori costing ¥140 to ¥240 ($1.15–$2/60p–£1) per skewer. An evening of eating, drinking, and merriment here should cost about ¥2,500 ($21/£10) per person, including the obligatory ¥280 ($2.35/£1.20) snack charge.

1–4–13 Tokiwa-cho. ☎ 087/861-7623. Main dishes ¥550–¥840 ($4.60–$7/£2.30–£3.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 5pm–1am. Kotoden streetcar: Kawaramachi Station (1 min.). Take the west exit (with the BUS STOP signs), use the upper promenade deck to cross the street, take the elevator to street level; and turn right to take the small alleyway. Maruichi is on the left, with white lanterns and a red, yellow, and green sign with a red circle.

Milano No Okazuyasan ★ NORTHERN ITALIAN Beneath an Italian flag is the recessed entrance to this cozy second-floor restaurant. Hospitable chef-owner Mr. Takeda serves mainly homemade pastas, from the usual spaghetti Bolognese with meat sauce to spinach fettuccine with cream sauce or veal ragout with white fettuccine, as well as a handful of pizzas and main dishes that might include seafood saffron risotto. Set lunches include all the salad and fresh-baked bread you can eat, plus a choice of soup, dessert, or coffee. Don't miss the homemade bread, and top it all off with a cappuccino and dessert.

Egou Building, 11–14 Kamei-cho. ☎ 0120-38-1782. Main dishes and pasta ¥840–¥1,280 ($7–$11/£3.50–£5.50); set lunches ¥840–¥945 ($7–$7.85/£3.50–£3.95); set dinners ¥1,880–¥4,680 ($16–$39/£8–£20). MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Kotoden streetcar: Kawaramachi (4 min.). Take the west exit (with the BUS STOP sign) and walk through the covered walking arcade (Tokiwa-cho) until the awning ends; continue straight and then start looking carefully for Milano on your left.

185 Shabutei Maru Value SHABU-SHABU This casual, small, second-floor eatery has inexpensive lunches of chicken, pork, and beef, with second helpings of rice and vegetables included in the price. From 5pm, it offers all-you-can-eat shabu-shabu (and in winter, sukiyaki) with a 90-minute time limit—kind of like an “on-your-mark, get-set, go” spree of uninhibited gorging. Ditto with all the beer, sake, or soft drinks you can drink if you pay ¥1,365 ($11/£5.50) more. Various grades of meat are available, from beef and pork (the cheapest) to top-grade wagyu beef. Seating is at counters or tables and, as you might have guessed, the place is usually very crowded.

8–8 Kamei-cho. ☎ 087/835-9842. Set lunches ¥499–¥1,890 ($4.15–$16/£2.10–£8); all-you-can-eat shabu-shabu dinners ¥2,310–¥7,035 ($19–$59/£9.50–£29) men, ¥2,100–¥6,510 ($18–$54/£9–£27) women. DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2pm and 5–10pm (last order). Kotoden streetcar: Kawaramachi (5 min.). Take the west exit and walk through the Tokiwa-cho covered arcade; it's catty-corner from the southeast corner of Chuo Park, just off Chuo Dori on Kikuchikan-dori.

2 Matsuyama Castle & Dogo Spa ★★

947km (588 miles) W of Tokyo; 192km (120 miles) E of Takamatsu; 211km (132 miles) SW of Okayama

Although Matsuyama is Shikoku's largest town and the capital of Ehime Prefecture with a population of more than 513,000, it has the relaxed atmosphere of a small town. Located on the island's northwest coast, Matsuyama features one of Japan's best-preserved feudal castles and what I consider to be the most delightful, historic public bathhouse in the country, located in Dogo Onsen. The nearby Shimanami Kaido, a series of bridges connecting Ehime and Hiroshima prefectures, has a dedicated cycling lane, with fantastic views of the Seto Inland Sea.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane Flights connect Matsuyama with Tokyo, Osaka, Nagoya, Fukuoka, Sapporo, Kumamoto, Kagoshima, and Okinawa. The flight from Tokyo takes 1 hour and 25 minutes and costs ¥29,300 ($244/£122). Buses connect the airport to downtown in 30 minutes for ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70).

By Train The easiest way to reach Matsuyama is by JR train from Okayama (on Honshu island), with 15 departures daily; the trip takes 2 hours and 40 minutes, and the fare is ¥6,120 ($51/£26). There are also hourly departures from Takamatsu, taking less than 2½ hours and costing ¥5,500 ($46/£23).

By Bus Buses depart nightly from Tokyo Station at 8:20pm and from Shinjuku Station at 7:10pm, arriving respectively at Matsuyama Station the next day at 8:36am and at Matsuyama Shieki (City Station) at 7:10am. One-way fares for either is ¥12,000 ($100/£50).

By Boat Matsuyama is also linked by ferry to various ports on Honshu and Kyushu islands, including Kobe (overnight trip time: 9 hr.), Osaka (overnight: 9½ hr.), Oita (near Beppu; 3½ hr.), and Hiroshima (70 min. by hydrofoil). The fare to Matsuyama is ¥6,300 ($52/£26) from Osaka or Hiroshima and ¥3,200 ($27/£14) from Beppu. Boats dock at Matsuyama Port (Matsuyama Kanko Ko), where buses transport passengers to Matsuyama Station in about 20 minutes for ¥450 ($3.75/£1.90).

VISITOR INFORMATION The Matsuyama City Tourist Information Office (☎ 089/931-3914; daily 8:30am–8:30pm) is inside JR Matsuyama Station to the left as you exit the wicket. Be sure to pick up the booklet “Shikoku Passport”; although only in Japanese, it provides many discounts on attractions, hotels, and restaurants. The Dogo Tourist Information Center (☎ 089/943-8342; 8am–8pm) is across the street from the Dogo Onsen streetcar stop. The Ehime Prefectural International Center (EPIC), located between Matsuyama Castle and Dogo Onsen (☎ 089/917-5678; Mon–Sat 8:30am–5pm), provides information on Ehime Prefecture, including Uchiko, Tobe, and the Shimanami Kaido cycling path. You’ll also find English-language newspapers and three computers you can use for free. To reach EPIC, take streetcar no. 3, 5, or 6 heading toward Dogo Onsen to the Minami-machi stop. Back-track and look to the right for the INFORMATION sign; the office is in a barrack partially hidden behind another building. More information is available online at www.city.matsuyama.ehime.jp.

INTERNET ACCESS In addition to EPIC, above, you can also check e-mail (and get information about the area) at COMS on the second floor of the Matsuyama International Center, 6–4–20 Sanbancho (☎ 089/943-2025; Tues–Sun 9am–5:30pm) for ¥100 (85¢/45p) an hour. It’s a 7-minute walk from either Matsuyama Station or Matsuyama Shieki; or take the streetcar to the Minami-horibata-cho stop.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND JR Matsuyama Station, which serves long-distance trains, is on the west edge of town, with most attractions, hotels, shopping, and restaurants spreading to the east. Matsuyama Castle lies less than 2.5km (1½ miles) due east of the station. Just southwest of the castle is the Okaido shopping arcade, a covered pedestrian passageway lined with restaurants and shops and considered to be the heart of the city. Dogo Onsen, Japan’s oldest hot-spring spa, is on the eastern edge of the city.

The easiest and most convenient form of transportation in Matsuyama is streetcar. The no. 5 line runs from Matsuyama Station to the Okaido arcade, Matsuyama Castle, and Dogo Onsen. The fare is ¥150 ($1.25/65p) per trip or ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for a 1-day pass (Ichinichi Joshaken). An old-fashioned locomotive-style streetcar nicknamed “Botchan” (after a novel by Natsume Soseki set in Matsuyama) runs between Matsuyama Station and Dogo Onsen. This costs ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) per ride but only ¥200 ($1.65/85p) if you have the 1-day pass.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

The Shikoku Passport gives discounts for both Matsuyama Castle and Dogo Onsen.

Matsuyama Castle ★★ Right in the heart of the city, Matsuyama Castle crowns the top of a 131m (435-ft.) hill, commanding an impressive view. It was built by feudal lord Kato Yoshiakira more than 400 years ago, later falling into the hands of the powerful Matsudaira family that ruled the surrounding region from here during the Edo Period. Like most structures in Japan, Matsuyama Castle has suffered fire and destruction through the ages, but unlike many other castles (such as those in Osaka and Nagoya), this one was renovated with original materials in the 1850s. There’s only one entrance, a pathway leading through a series of gates that could be swung shut to trap attacking enemies. A secret gate allowed a surprise rear attack, while drop chutes could be used to rain stones onto the enemy. Drums were used to communicate, whether it was to warn of invaders or simply give the time. The granary could store enough rice to feed 2,000 people for a year. The three-story donjon houses some samurai gear, swords, screens, and scrolls from the Matsudaira family, as well as photographs of Japan’s other castles. Allow yourself 30 minutes to tour the inside.

Surrounding the castle is a park; if you’re feeling energetic, you can walk uphill through the park to the castle in about 15 minutes. Otherwise, the easiest way to reach the castle is to take the streetcar to the Okaido stop, walk 5 minutes north on the street next to Starbucks, and then, from the east side of Katsuyama Hill, take a cable car or chairlift (more fun) from the modern cable station on the left side of the street (there’s also a walking path to the castle from here). A round-trip ticket for either the cable car or the chairlift, and including admission to the castle, costs ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults and ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for children.

☎ 089/921-4873. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) children. Daily 9am–5pm (to 4:30pm Dec–Jan and 5:30pm in Aug.). Streetcar: Okaido stop, then chairlift.

DOGO ONSEN (DOGO SPA) ★★★

Dogo Onsen boasts a 3,000-year history and claims to be the oldest hot-spring spa in Japan. According to legend, the hot springs were discovered after a white heron healed an injured leg by soaking it in the thermal mineral waters. Located in the city’s northeast, about a 20-minute streetcar ride from Matsuyama Station (take streetcar no. 5 to Dogo Onsen, the last stop), Dogo Spa can accommodate about 7,000 people in 34 hotels and ryokan, which means the narrow streets resound at night with the slap of thonged slippers and the occasional clatter of wooden platform sandals (geta) as vacationers go to the various bathhouses dressed in cotton robes (yukata). Friendly conversations start as tourists gather on the hour to see the Bochan clock (across from the historic Dogo Onsen streetcar station, built in 1895), an animated clock featuring characters from Natsume Soseki’s novel, and soak their feet in the nearby foot bath, one of 10 footbaths scattered through Dogo Onsen. Be sure to stop at the Dogo Onsen Tourist Information Center, located at the entrance to the shopping arcade, on the right.

Most of the hotels and ryokan in Dogo have their own hot-spring bath (onsen), but I suggest that no matter where you stay, you make at least one trip to Dogo Onsen

Honkan (★★★), 5–6 Yunomachi, Dogo (☎ 089/921-5141), a wonderful three-story public bathhouse built in 1894. A wooden structure with shoji screens, tatami rooms, creaking wooden stairways, and the legendary white heron topping the crest of its castle-like roof, this Momoyama-style building is as much a social institution as it is a place to soak and scrub. On busy days, as many as 4,000 people pass through its front doors. The water here is transparent, colorless, tasteless, and alkaline, helpful for rheumatism and neuralgia. At the very least, it makes your skin feel great—soft and smooth. The hottest spring water coming into the spa is 120°F (49°C); the coolest, 70°F (21°C). But don't worry—the waters are mixed to achieve a comfortable 108°F (42°C).

Bathing in the ground-floor granite bath, however, is just a small part of the experience here. Most people come to relax, socialize, and while away an hour or more, and I suggest you do the same. Although you can bathe for as little as ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for adults and ¥150 ($1.25/65p) for children 2 to 11, it's worth it to pay extra for the privilege of relaxing on tatami mats in a communal room on the second floor, dressed in a rented yukata, drinking tea from a lacquered tea set, and eating Japanese rice crackers. If the weather is fine, all the shoji screens are pushed open to let in a breeze, and as you sprawl on the tatami, drinking your tea and listening to the clang of the streetcar and voices of people coming and going, you can imagine that you've landed in ancient Japan. To my mind, the entire scene resembles an old woodblock print suddenly come to life. Be sure to take a peak inside the Botchan Room, said to be the favorite room of novelist Natsume Soseki.

The cost of the bath, yukata, crackers, and tea for 1 hour is ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35). Use of a smaller, more private bath and lounging area for an hour where tea and crackers are also served costs ¥1,200 ($10/£5) and includes a visit to Yushinden (see below). And if you really want to splurge for 1 hour and 20 minutes, you can rent a private tatami room on the third floor, which also comes with tea, sweets, and yukata, for ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50). Children 2 to 11 years old pay half-price for all these fares. This differentiation in luxury probably dates from the early days when there were separate baths for the upper class, priests, commoners, and even animals.

While at the spa, be sure to see the Yushinden, the imperial rooms built for the imperial family in 1899 for their visits to the spa and last used in 1952. You can take a tour of its rooms for ¥250 ($2/£1) for adults and ¥120 ($1/50p) for children.

The spa is open from 6am until 11pm, but you must enter by 10:30pm. The second floor closes at 10pm (you must enter by 9pm); you must enter the Yushinden by 9pm.

A NEARBY TEMPLE After your bath, you may want to visit Ishiteji Temple (★), 2–9–21 Ishite (☎ 089/977-0870), about a 15-minute walk east of Dogo Onsen Station; from the station, walk under the neon archway and keep going straight east. Built in 1318, it's the 51st of Shikoku's 88 sacred temples; with its blend of Chinese and Japanese styles, it is a good example of architecture of the Kamakura Period. You'll see statues of Kobo Daishi, as well as an old-fashioned arcade of stalls that seems little changed over the decades. Notice the huge straw sandals at the main gate; those with feet or leg ailments are thought to regain their health by touching them. You'll also see regular-size sandals at the temple, donated by older Japanese in hopes of regaining new strength in their legs (who knows, maybe they've been walking the pilgrimage). Behind the main temple is a tunnel containing stone statues representing the 88 temples of Shikoku; pausing in front of each statue is considered a short circuit to the actual pilgrimage, convenient for those who don't have time for the real thing but still hope for the pilgrimage's blessings. And by the way, all those paper cranes you see in front of the main hall were folded in prayer for world peace, a practice that started with the American invasion of Iraq. The temple is open 24 hours.

AN EASY SIDE TRIP TO UCHIKO ★★

If you have time for a side trip around Ehime Prefecture, I strongly recommend an excursion to the village of Uchiko, which has some fine old homes and buildings dating back to the Edo Period and the turn of the 20th century. Whereas about 70% of Matsuyama was destroyed during World War II, Uchiko was left intact, and a tiny part of the old historic district is a living memorial to the days of yore, when it prospered as a production center for wax. Even the 25-minute express train ride from JR Matsuyama Station (departing every hour or so; fare: ¥1,250/$11/£5.50) is enjoyable as you weave through valleys of wooded hills past grape, mikan orange, persimmon, rice, and tobacco farms. At Uchiko Station, ask for the “Visitors’ Guide” at the train station ticket window; it contains a map showing the 5-minute walk to Yokaichi, the historic part of town. There are also signs in English pointing the way. Because addresses in this village of 11,600 souls are only for postmen, I’ve omitted them. All sights listed below are open daily 9am to 4:30pm.

Your first stop from the station is (186) Uchiko-za (☎ 0893/44-2840), a Kabuki theater built in 1916 (look for the sign post on the left after you pass the creek). Though not as grand as the one near Takamatsu (p. 469), it’s a good example of how townspeople used to enjoy themselves years ago. It features a revolving stage, windows that can be opened and closed to control the amount of light reaching the stage, and a small display of memorabilia (note the ultimate platform shoes, geta, used by Bunraku puppeteers). Admission is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults, half-price for children. Although there’s a combination ticket for ¥700 ($5.85/£2.95) and ¥370 ($3.10/£1.55) respectively that allows admission to the theater, Museum of Commercial and Domestic Life, and Kami-Haga Residence listed below, you’ll get cheaper admission by using the Shikoku Passport at each attraction.

A 5-minute walk farther along the main street, on the right, is the Museum of Commercial and Domestic Life (Akinai to Kurashi Hakubutsukan) (☎ 0893/44-5220). This museum—once housing a pharmacy and built in typical Uchiko style—uses life-size figures, recordings (alas, only in Japanese), and authentic artifacts in its dioramas depicting the daily lives of a merchant and a druggist’s family. One of the dioramas, for example, is of a Taisho-Era pharmacy, with two figures kneeling on a tatami floor as they discuss the business at hand, while another shows a family eating, the servant seated on a step below to show a lower status. But my favorite is of the woman in the kitchen, complaining about all the work she has to do. Admission here is ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for adults, half-price for children.

As you continue your walk along Yokaichi’s quaint main street, you’ll pass galleries and shops, some offering bambooware, peaches, and other products from shelves on the sidewalk (payment is on the honor system; deposit your money in the proffered bamboo shaft). You might want to stop by the Machi-ya Shiriyokan (☎ 0893/44-2111), a restored home open free to the public (as an empty house, it wouldn’t be of much interest if it weren’t free), but don’t miss the Kami-Haga Residence ★ (☎ 0893/44-2771), which I consider the highlight of a trip to Uchiko. Built in 1894, the Kami-Haga Residence is especially grand, having once belonged to a merchant who made his fortune exporting wax. During the Edo and Meiji periods, Uchiko gained fame as a center of candle-making and wax production, producing about 30% of the country’s wax, used for lighting, umbrellas, and for the styling of elaborate Feudal-Era hairdos. You can see the traditional methods for wax production in the “wax museum” out back, as well as tour the house, built without nails and containing four toilets (two for the family, one for children, and one for guests); the mansion even contains a room used only for giving birth. A two-story part of the house, added during the Meiji Era, serves as a cafe, but you might have to rouse someone to be served. Admission is ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for adults, half-price for children.

Today, only one person carries on the wax-making tradition—a man named ⁽¹⁸⁷⁾Omori, who represents the sixth generation of candle-makers. Following the same techniques as those developed by his ancestors 200 years ago, he collects his own haze berries (a kind of sumac) and makes his candles by hand. You can observe him at his workshop, located on the right as you head back to the train station (☎ 0893/43-0385; Tues–Thurs and Sat–Sun 9am–5pm).

WHERE TO DINE A 10-minute walk east of Yokaichi (or a 15-min. walk from the train station), across the Oda River, is the Uchiko Fresh Foods Market, famous in Japan as one of the few co-ops where farmers can sell produce directly to consumers. Here, too, is Karari (☎ 0893/43-1122), a restaurant offering both Western and Japanese dishes featuring local ingredients. Nestled among trees beside the river and with large windows that almost make you feel like you’re dining in a tree house, it offers a weekend buffet for ¥1,350 ($11/£5.50) with 50 choices of dishes, while weekdays set meals go for ¥1,100 to ¥1,600 ($9.15–$13/£4.60–£6.50). It’s open daily 11am to 8:30pm (last order). No credit cards are accepted.

CYCLING THE SHIMANAMI KAIDO ★★

If you’re a bicyclist—and even if you’re not—you owe it to yourself to ride one of Japan’s most rewarding cycling routes: a dedicated biking and pedestrian lane that connects Ehime Prefecture on Shikoku with Onomichi in Hiroshima Prefecture on Honshu (Japan’s main island). Part of the Shimanami Kaido route (also called the Setouchi Shimanami Sea Route), which is actually a series of seven bridges that hopscotch across the Seto Inland Sea via six islands, the cycling path runs beside vehicular traffic on the bridges but often diverges from the highway on the islands. Needless to say, views of the sea and surrounding countryside are great, even from the bridges, and the pathway, clearly marked in green, is easy to follow (though steep in some areas). If you want, you can cycle the entire 80km (50-mile) distance between Shikoku and Honshu in less than 7 hours, whereupon you could either return to Shikoku by bus or continue your travels onward (send your luggage beforehand to your next hotel by takkyu-bin; see the “Help with Heavy Bags” tip on p. 80 in chapter 2). Or, you may wish to simply cycle for a few hours and then head back; or, you can go as far as you wish, leave your rental bike at one of 14 bike drop-off sites along the cycling path, and then catch a bus back (check bus schedules beforehand, as buses do not go to all drop-off sites). In my opinion, of the entire cycling path, the stretch from Shikoku is more scenic and easier to follow than the stretch closer to Hiroshima (for information on cycling the Shimanami Kaido from Hiroshima Prefecture, see p. 465). Note that the Shikoku Passport gives discounts at Shiyoden Treasure Museum and for bike rentals and accommodations at Sunrise Itoyama.

If you’re not going the distance, for a fun day’s outing I suggest bicycling to Omishima, an island you’ll reach in about 2 hours, where another 30 minutes of cycling will bring you to Oyamazumi Shrine, guarded by a 2,600-year-old tree. Worshipped through the years by samurai, the shrine is home to the Shiyoden Treasure Museum ★★ (☎ 0897/82-0032), with an astounding collection of helmets, armor, and swords, all donated to the shrine by warriors who wished to express thanks for victories in battle. The museum contains about 80% of Japan's samurai gear designated National Treasures (eight items; look for the red mark) or National Important Cultural Assets, including items once worn by Minamoto Yoshitsune and Minamoto Yoritomo (who donated his sword and outfit just before establishing his Kamakura shogunate in 1192). The museum is open daily 8:30am to 5pm; admission is ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults, ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) for students, and ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for children. By the way, there's a bike drop-off center just before the shrine, where you can leave your bike and catch a bus to Imabari (check bus schedules beforehand).

Rental bikes are available at the foot of the first bridge at Sunrise Itoyama (☎ 0898/41-3196; www.sunrise-itoyama.jp), which also offers a restaurant, showers, and rooms without private bathrooms beginning at ¥4,200 ($35/£18) for a single and ¥6,300 ($53/£26) for a twin. Bikes rent for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) a day, plus a ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) deposit which you forfeit if you decide to ditch your bike at one of the drop-off sites; be sure to ask the folks at Sunrise Itoyama for a bus schedule back. You'll also have the annoyance of bridge toll fees at varying distances, which you deposit into boxes on the honor system (or, you can purchase a coupon for ¥500/$4.15/£2.10 covering all the tolls at Sunrise Itoyama). There are also power-assisted bikes for ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35); I've rented one (in the interest of research, of course—twice) and found it helpful on the circular ramp that climbs 65m (213 ft.) just to meet the first bridge. However, power-assisted bikes must be returned to Sunrise Itoyama, and they have only enough juice to run about 4 hours or so. Sunrise Itoyama is open daily 8am to 8pm (to 5pm Oct–Mar).

To reach Sunrise Itoyama, take an express train from Matsuyama Station 30 minutes to Imabari, from where there are only three to five buses a day to Sunrise Itoyama. You'll probably find it easier, therefore, to take a local train 5 minutes onward from Imabari to Hashihama Station, from which the cycling center is a 20-minute walk.

①88 Yamatoya Besso ★★★ The ultimate ryokan experience awaits you at this famous ryokan in Dogo Onsen. It's the little things that make it special: the rustle of kimono as you're met by bowing, smiling women in the front courtyard; pillars of salt at the front door in good Shinto fashion; lit shoji lanterns guiding the way through hushed hallways; scrolls of haiku poems, in beautiful calligraphy, decorating all the rooms and changed seven times a year to fit the season. With a history dating back 140 years—it was rebuilt in 1988 as a refined, luxurious inn—it offers rooms that preserve the integrity of the past with TVs hidden behind shoji screens and old-fashioned cypress tubs that use water from the hot springs. For a real splurge, there are even four rooms with their own open-air tubs. Lavish kaiseki meals feature seafood of the Seto Inland Sea. The only thing lacking at this superb ryokan is the requisite garden.

ANA Hotel ★ Matsuyama's premier hotel (called Zenniku Hotel in Japanese) has a great location in the heart of the city, just a few minutes' walk to the Matsuyama Castle ropeway and the Okaido covered shopping arcade; streetcars heading for Dogo Onsen pass right in front of the hotel. Built in 1979 but constantly updated, it offers business hotel–like inexpensive singles (the cheapest listed here), as well as larger and well-appointed singles, twins, and doubles; ask for a double or twin with a castle view.

Rooms, which are graced with such architectural details as bamboo weavings and wood-carved transoms, vary in price according to amenities and view; the best have cypress tubs, toilets with heated seats, and views of the garden. One of the public baths is in a hut with a conical-shaped roof in the garden.

Hotel Patio Dogo ★ With a great location just across the street from the delightful Dogo Onsen Honkan spa, this comfortable, medium-class hotel offers semi-double beds in singles, and queens in the more expensive double rooms. Ah, space at last! Best are rooms on the second through fourth floors whose windows overlook the historic spa. The most expensive accommodations in each category are larger, corner rooms. In the evening, be sure to join all the other tourists staying in Dogo and wear your yukata across the street for a nighttime soak in the historic spa.

Old England Dogo Yamanote Hotel ★★ An outdoor terrace cafe; a lobby decorated in old-world style with wainscoting, chandeliers, and antique-filled cabinets; and classical music playing in the background transport a touch of England to the heart of Dogo Onsen. A sign outside declaring SINCE 1886 refers to a ryokan that once stood here, but the owner tore it down and opened this hotel in 2003. I just hope other ryokan don't follow suit. Still, this is a classy choice if you prefer a bed to a futon, with rooms sporting brocade bedspreads and curtains, wood floors, and roomy bathrooms (but note that the cheapest doubles are for semi-double-size beds). Although most people staying here pay rates that include meals in the hotel's good French restaurant, my rates below are for rooms only. The hotel doesn't offer much in the way of services, but it does have both indoor and outdoor public baths.

Although not much English is spoken, they're used to foreigners here. Clean but simple tatami rooms, all with sink and toilet, make it a good choice for young budget travelers, especially because they'll even wash and dry your clothes for free if you have a lot of laundry.

Kadota ★ FRENCH Chef Kadota, a gold medalist in the Culinary Olympics, worked at both the Okura Hotel and ANA Hotel Matsuyama before opening his own restaurant here in 1993. Small and cozy, with classical music playing in the background, flowers on every table, and French cuisine served on elegant tableware, it offers homemade appetizers, organic vegetables whenever possible, and—the house specialty—steaks and seafood in season. Your dinner may start with yellowtail sashimi in mandarin orange sauce or fish bouillabaisse, followed by Seto Inland Sea sea bream served in a white-wine sauce or steak in red-wine sauce with sweet-potato gratin.

①91 Kushihide Finds YAKITORI/CHICKEN Behind the counter of this 50-year-old eatery are some 400 individual sake cups inscribed with the names of regular customers; the cook joked that this way, the cups didn't have to be washed. Washed or unwashed, they're testimony to the popularity of this simple eating and drinking venue. As soon as you sit down, a large bowl of cabbage with a dip and an appetizer will be placed in front of you. The restaurant is famous for its fried chicken leg and thigh for ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75), included in some of the set meals, but it also offers other chicken dishes as well, including chicken sukiyaki, chicken burgers, fried chicken (senzanki), and even chicken sashimi (the restaurant claims to be one of the few places you can eat it safely, as the restaurant raises its own chickens and serves them the day of their demise). In fact, chicken or chicken broth is a part of virtually every dish offered here—even in its ice cream.

A Japanese-language menu with photos shows other set meals. In the evening, kaiseki, featuring sashimi, are also available.

Dogo Beer Bakushukan finds If you agree that “One gulp of beer taken just after a bath is the time when you feel most refreshed,” as proclaimed in this microbrewery's pamphlet, then after bathing at Dogo Onsen Honkan head straight across the street for some sake or beer. (The parent company has been a sake producer for more than a century; they opened a brewery in 1996 following deregulation, which had long assured a beer monopoly by the major players.) An upbeat establishment with an eclectic decor mixing the traditional (bamboo ceilings) and the modern (artwork), it offers German-style beers (pils, ale, and stout), along with typical Japanese pub grub, including boiled soybeans (edamame), yakitori, sashimi, and fried chicken, but it's most famous for its deep-fried fish paste (gyakoten).

Kyushu

The southernmost of Japan's four main islands, Kyushu offers a mild climate, famous hot-spring spas, beautiful countryside, national parks, and warm, friendly people. It also boasts a couple of high-tech theme parks that make it Japan's number-one destination for visitors from Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong, and other Asian cities.

Historians believe that Japan's earliest inhabitants lived on Kyushu before gradually pushing northward. According to Japanese legend, it was from Kyushu that the first emperor, Jimmu, began his campaign to unify Japan. Kyushu is therefore considered to be the cradle of Japanese civilization. And because Kyushu is the island closest to Korea and China, it has served through the centuries as a point of influx for both people and ideas from abroad, including those from the West.

1 Fukuoka

1,174km (730 miles) W of Tokyo; 450km (281 miles) W of Hiroshima

With a population of 1.41 million, Fukuoka is Kyushu's largest city and serves as a major international and domestic gateway to the island. On the northern coast of Kyushu, it lies closer to Seoul, Korea, than to Tokyo.

During Japan's feudal days, Fukuoka was divided into two distinct towns separated by the Nakagawa River. Fukuoka was where the samurai lived since it was the castle town of the local feudal lord. Merchants lived across the river in Hakata, the commercial center of the area. Both cities were joined in 1889 under the common name of Fukuoka. Fukuoka's main train station, however, is in Hakata and is therefore called Hakata Station. Hakata Station serves as the terminus of the Tokaido-Sanyo Shinkansen Line from Tokyo (though only Nozomi bullet trains, which aren't covered in the Japan Rail Pass, travel the entire distance; Hikari bullet trains require a transfer).

In the 13th century, Fukuoka was selected by Mongol forces under Kublai Khan as the best place to invade Japan. The first attack came in 1274, but Japanese were able to repel the invasion. Convinced the Mongols would attack again, Japanese built a 3m-high (10-ft.) stone wall along the coast. The second invasion came in 1281. Not only did the Mongols find the wall impossible to scale, but a typhoon blew in and destroyed the entire Mongol fleet. Japanese called this gift from heaven "divine wind," or kamikaze, a word that took on a different meaning during World War II when young Japanese pilots crashed their planes into American ships in a last-ditch attempt to win the war.

Today, Fukuoka is a modern, internationally oriented commercial and business center with a highly developed port and coastal area. Although it's not a must-see tourist destination, there are some interesting museums, shrines, and a temple worth seeing if you've arrived in Fukuoka on the Shinkansen.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane Direct flights connect Fukuoka Airport (☎ 092/621-6059; www.fuk-ab.co.jp) to a variety of international cities, including Beijing, Hong Kong, Seoul, and Bangkok, as well as numerous domestic cities. Flying time from Tokyo's Haneda Airport is 1½ hours; the regular, one-way fare costs ¥33,700 ($280/£140) on Japan Airlines. However, because of fierce competition on the Fukuoka–Haneda route, bargains do exist. Skymark (☎ 03/3433-7670 in Tokyo, or 092/736-3131 in Fukuoka), for example, a small airline serving Fukuoka, offers nine flights daily from Haneda to Fukuoka for as low as ¥16,900 ($140/£70) one-way, while even major airlines sometimes offer special rates depending on the time of day and season. To get into town, there's a subway station located directly under the domestic terminal of Fukuoka Airport (if you've arrived at the international terminal, take the free shuttle bus to the domestic terminal). The trip to Hakata Station takes only 5 minutes and to Tenjin takes 11; the fare is ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05), or you can purchase a 1-day subway pass for ¥600 ($5/£2.50) if you plan to sightsee the same day. Alternatively, there's Nishitetsu bus service directly from the domestic terminal to Hakata Station's bus terminal; departures are every 20 to 30 minutes and cost ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05).

By Train Fukuoka's Hakata Station is the last stop on the Nozomi Shinkansen bullet train from Tokyo, with the trip taking approximately 5 hours and costing ¥21,210 ($177/£88) for an unreserved seat. If you have a Japan Rail Pass, which doesn't cover Nozomi trains, you'll have to take the Hikari Shinkansen and change trains in Osaka or Okayama; the trip takes almost 6 hours, not including transfers. Hiroshima is 1 hour and 10 minutes away; Kyoto is 2 hours and 45 minutes away.

By Bus Buses depart from Tokyo's Shinjuku Station nightly at 9pm, arriving at Tenjin Station in the heart of the city at 11:20am the next morning. The fare is ¥15,000 ($125/£63) one-way. For more information, including fares from Fukuoka to other cities in Kyushu and beyond, call ☎ 0120/489-939 or go to the website www.nishitetsu.co.jp/bus/highway.

VISITOR INFORMATION Before leaving Tokyo or the Narita or Kansai airports, pick up a copy of the leaflet “Fukuoka” at the Tourist Information Center (you can also download it from JNTO's website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under “Browse by Destinations”).

Fukuoka Tourist Information Office (☎ 092/431-3003; daily 8am–7pm) is in Hakata Station near the East Gate. It has maps and sightseeing pamphlets. Ask, too, for Rainbow, a free monthly with concert, exhibition, events, and festival information; and Fukuoka Now, good for restaurant and nightlife listings. Be sure to pick up the free Welcome Card and accompanying guide, which gives overseas visitors discounts for selected hotels, restaurants, attractions, and shops (the card must be presented at check-in to receive hotel discount). On the Internet, sightseeing information is available at www.yokanavi.com and www.city.fukuoka.jp/index-e.html. Other useful sites include www.fukuoka-now.com (good for restaurants and nightlife) and www.fukuoka-tourism.net and www.across.or.jp, both with information on Fukuoka Prefecture, including Fukuoka City, Dazaifu, and Space World.

INTERNET ACCESS You can check e-mail 24 hours a day at Media Café Popeye, located on the eighth floor of the Kotsu Center, next to Hakata Station (☎ 092/432-8788). It charges ¥390 ($3.25/£1.65) for 1 hour.

MAIL & ATMs An international post office, with a counter for stamps and mail that is open 24 hours, as well as an ATM that accepts international credit cards, is located next to the Hakata (west) exit of Hakata Station.

ORIENTATION Although Hakata Station is the terminus for the Shinkansen bullet train and trains departing for the rest of Kyushu, with most of Fukuoka's hotels clustered nearby, the heart and business center of Fukuoka is an area to the west called Tenjin. It's home to several department stores, its own train station and bus center, a large underground shopping arcade, and restaurants. Just a few minutes' walk from Tenjin is Nakasu, one of Japan's most famous nightlife districts, with more than 2,000 bars, restaurants, and small clubs clustered on what's actually an islet bounded by the Nakagawa River.

Tips A Note on Japanese Characters

Many establishments and attractions in Japan do not have signs in Roman (English-language) letters. Those that don't are indicated in this guide with an oval with a number that corresponds to a number in appendix C showing the Japanese equivalent. Thus, to find the Japanese for, say, the Tochoji Temple (below), refer to no. 193 in appendix C.

Across the river from Nakasu (and a 10-min. walk west of Hakata Station) is Canal City Hakata, an intriguingly designed (by award-winning American architect Jon Jerde) entertainment, hotel, and shopping complex with 125 shops and restaurants. Also nearby and within walking distance are Tochoji Temple, Hakata Machiya Folk Museum, Kushida Shrine, and the Fukuoka Asian Art Museum.

GETTING AROUND You can walk from Hakata Station to most of the attractions recommended below.

By Subway This is the easiest method of transportation because there are only three major lines. One line connects Hakata Station to Tenjin (the third stop), passing Nakasu-Kawabata on the way—the stop for the Nakasu nightlife district. This same line will also take you to Fukuoka Airport. Stops are announced in English. Fares start at ¥200 ($1.65/85p), but if you think you'll be riding a lot, purchase a 1-day subway pass for ¥600 ($5/£2.50).

By Train Whereas Hakata Station serves as the terminus for the Shinkansen and Japan Railways trains departing for the rest of Kyushu, Tenjin has its own station, called Nishitetsu Fukuoka Station, located inside the Mitsukoshi department store building and useful for trips to Dazaifu.

By Bus The city's two bus terminals are located near Hakata Station at the Kotsu Center and in Tenjin near Nishitetsu Fukuoka Station and Mitsukoshi department store; both are clearly marked in English. Buses running inside the central Hakata-Tenjin District charge a flat fare of ¥100 (85¢/45p). Most useful for tourists is the so-called “¥100 Bus,” which sports a big ¥100 coin on its side and travels a circular route going both directions from Hakata Station to 18 stops in the downtown area, including Tenjin, Canal City, and the Hakata Riverain shopping/cultural complex.

EXPLORING THE CITY

About an 8-minute walk northwest of Hakata Station and located on the right side of Taihaku-dori is  Tochoji Temple, 2–4 Gokushomachi (☎ 092/291-4459; daily 9am–5pm; subway: one stop from Hakata Station to Gion, exit 1, 1 min; ¥100 Bus: Gion-machi, stop no. 16; look for a picture of a Buddha at the front gate). This modern reconstruction of a long-established temple may not look like much, but up on the second floor is Japan's largest seated wooden Buddha, measuring 9.9m (33 ft.) tall. Admission is free, but you are asked to refrain from taking photographs. Particularly interesting is the trip through the Hells of Buddhism, upon which you can embark by entering the small room to the left of the Buddha. After viewing colored reliefs of unfortunate souls burning in hell, being boiled alive, and suffering other tortures, enter the darkened, twisting passageway and walk through it guided by a rail, whereupon you'll reach the end—enlightenment! It's fun for older kids.

On the other side of Taihaku-dori Avenue, down the side street with a 7-Eleven and marked by a large cement gate (torii), is the ⁽¹⁹⁴⁾ Hakata Machiya Folk Museum (Hakata Machiya Furusato-Kan) ⚡, 6–10 Reisen-machi (☎ 092/281-7761; daily 10am–6pm; subway: Gion, exit 2, 4 min.; ¥100 Bus: Gion-machi, stop no. 16). This museum celebrates the history and cultural heritage of Hakata, the old merchants' town, concentrating primarily on the Meiji and Taisho eras. It occupies three buildings, two of which are Meiji-Era replicas; the third is an authentic, 150-year-old house of a weaver. On display are items used in everyday life, as well as dioramas depicting festivals, everyday street scenes, and a home typical of a Hakata merchant family. On a telephone, you can listen to Hakata-ben, the local dialect, which is quite difficult even for native Japanese speakers to understand. You can also watch artisans at work on Hakata's most famous wares, including the highly refined Hakata dolls, tops, wooden containers, and Hakata-ori cloth, used for obi sashes and famous for loin-cloths worn by sumo wrestlers. Be sure to see the 22-minute film of the Yamakasa Festival, Fukuoka's most famous festival, featuring races of men carrying enormous floats. Add another 30 minutes to see the museum itself and its crafts shop. Admission is ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for adults and free for children.

Beyond the Hakata Machiya Folk Museum is Kushida Shrine, 1 Kamikawabata-machi (☎ 092/291-2951; shrine grounds daily 24 hr.), Fukuoka's oldest shrine. Site of the Yamakasa Festival, it has long been the shrine for merchants praying for good health and prosperity. Most interesting is a tall, towering float on view year-round that is used in the Yamakasa Festival held in mid-July and decorated with dolls made by Hakata doll makers. Incredibly, the elaborate floats are made anew every year.

Walk through Kushida Shrine and turn right into the Kawabata-dori covered shopping arcade. Linking Canal City Hakata and Hakata Riverain, it was once the city's main shopping street but has been overtaken by the two complexes it connects. Halfway down is another float on view year-round that's used in the Yamakasa Festival. At the end of the arcade, across the street, is Riverain, where up on the seventh and eighth floors is the Fukuoka Asian Art Museum ⚡⚡⚡, 3–1 Shimo-Kawabata-machi (☎ 092/263-1100; <http://faam.city.fukuoka.jp>; Thurs–Tues 10am–8pm), the only museum I've seen in Japan devoted to contemporary and modern art from around Asia. From folk pop art to political art, the permanent exhibition presents the cutting edge of art from the Philippines, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, China, Mongolia, Korea, India, and other Asian countries, with changing displays culled from the museum's own collection. It's very much worth the hour you'll spend here and the ¥200 ($1.65/85p) admission for adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) for college and high-school students, and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for junior-high students and younger (special exhibits cost more). The closest subway station is Nakasu-Kawabata Station (exit 6) in front of Riverain; or take the ¥100 Bus to Kawabata-machi (stop no. 12).

If you're ready for dining or shopping, retrace your steps through Kawabata-dori arcade and take the escalator leading to Canal City Hakata, a virtual city-within-a-city complete with hotels, shops, restaurants, the Club Sega amusement arcade, and a 177m-long (590-ft.) canal that runs through its center.

EASY SIDE TRIPS FROM FUKUOKA DAZAIFU

If you have 4 or more hours to spare, I heartily recommend taking a side trip to Dazaifu, a pleasant village that is home to a shrine that is immensely popular with Japanese and the Kyushu National Museum. Dazaifu has a festive atmosphere, and one of the main reasons to visit, in my opinion, is to see everyone else.

The best way to reach Dazaifu is from Nishitetsu Fukuoka Station in Tenjin (located in the Mitsukoshi department store building). Take a limited express (tokkyu) of the Nishitetsu Tenjin Omuta Line (there are departures every 30 min.) 12 minutes to Futsukaichi (the second stop); transfer there (across the platform) for the 8-minute train ride on the Nishitetsu Dazaifu Line (two stops) to Dazaifu Station, the last stop (though there are a few trains that go directly from Fukuoka Station to Dazaifu). If you don't catch a limited express, the trip to Dazaifu can take about 50 minutes. In any case, the fare is ¥390 ($3.25/£1.65) one-way. The Dazaifu City Tourist Information Desk (☎ 092/925-1880; daily 9am–5:30pm), located inside Dazaifu Station, has an English-language pamphlet.

Dazaifu Tenmangu Shrine 天満宮, 4–7–1 Saifu Dazaifu (☎ 092/922-8225), is a 5-minute walk from the station, reached by taking a right onto a pedestrian lane lined with shops selling souvenirs, sweets, and crafts, followed by three bridges (representing the past, present, and future) spanning a turtle-filled pond in the kanji for “heart.” The shrine itself was established in 905, soon after the death of Sugawara Michizane, who was demoted from his position as Minister of the Right in Kyoto and exiled to Dazaifu, where he continued his scholarly studies despite extreme hardship. Today, Michizane is deified as the god of literature and calligraphy, which explains why this shrine is so popular. As the head office of 12,000 Tenmangu shrines spread throughout Japan and presided over by the 39th-generation Michizane descendant, it draws six million visitors a year, many of them high-school students praying to pass tough entrance exams into universities. Behind the main hall, which dates from 1591, hang wooden tablets, written with the wishes of visitors—mostly for successful examination scores. Also behind the main hall is an extensive plum grove with 6,000 trees; the plum blossom, in bloom from late January to March, is considered the symbol of scholarship.

Whatever you do, a must-see is Komyozenji Temple 香園寺, just a 2-minute walk from the shrine. This Zen temple boasts Kyushu's sole rock garden, arranged to form the Chinese character for “light.” In the back is also a combination moss-rock garden, representing the sea and land and shaded by maple trees. It's a glorious sight and is almost never crowded, except in autumn when changing maple leaves make it even more spectacular. To see it, take your shoes off, throw ¥200 ($1.65/85p) into the donation box, and walk to the wooden veranda in back where you can sit and meditate. It's open daily from 8am to 5pm.

Behind Dazaifu Tenmangu Shrine, to the right, is an escalator that will take you to the Kyushu National Museum, 4–7–2 Ishizaka (☎ 092/918-2807; www.kyuhaku.jp), which in 2005 opened as Japan's first new national museum in 100 years. Perched on a hillside, it's a strikingly modern structure that undulates down the slope in mimicry of the hills around it, with surrounding woods reflected on its glass facade. Through permanent and special exhibits, it focuses on Japan's cultural heritage, how that heritage has been influenced by other Asian cultures through the ages, and the role Kyushu has played in cultural exchange. Religious objects, musical instruments, ceramics, lacquerware, art, and other items from ancient to modern times from a number of nations are on display in permanent and special exhibits, including goods that reached Japan via the Silk Road and European trading ships. It's open Tuesday to Sunday from 9:30am to 5pm and costs ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75) for adults, ¥130 ($1.10/

Take Me Out to the Ballgame

If you're in town March through September, consider seeing the Fukuoka Softbank HAWKS baseball team play one of its 70-some home games in Fukuoka Dome, the first retractable-roof stadium in Japan. Tickets start at ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for an unreserved seat in the outfield and are available at major convenience stores or at the box office. Personally, I find watching the spectators as much fun as watching the game, with their coordinated cheering, flag waving, trumpet blowing, and more. Oddly enough, the roof is kept closed (in case it rains and so that players aren't distracted by their shadows) except for occasional night games and during the last 15 minutes of a game if it looks like the HAWKS are going to win. And this being Japan, the dome is part of a larger HAWKS Town complex with restaurants and other amusements. To reach HAWKS Town, take the subway to the Tojinmachi stop, from which it's about a 15-minute walk. Or take bus no. 39 or 306 from gate 5 of the Kotsu Bus Center in front of Hakata Station to the Fukuoka-Dome Mae. On game days, there are also special shuttle buses departing from the bus centers in Tenjin and Kotsu Center near Hakata Station.

SPACE WORLD

Space World, 4-1-1 Higashida (© 093/672-3600; www.spaceworld.co.jp), in the town of Kitakyushu, is a space travel-theme amusement park with thrill rides, including roller coasters, splash rides, a 98m-high (328-ft.) Ferris wheel, a movie theater with seats that move in sync with the action, an IMAX theater, kiddie rides, and Space Dome, in which visitors take a "shuttle" to a space station and then, from there, embark on roller-coaster journeys around the solar system or through a black hole. You'll probably spend a minimum of 4 hours here. An all-inclusive pass costs ¥4,200 ($35/£18) for adults (12 and older), ¥3,150 ($26/£13) for children ages 6 to 11, ¥2,100 ($18/£8.75) for seniors (proof of age required), and ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) for children ages 4 and 5. It's open daily 10am to 5pm, with extended hours holidays and weekends. It's closed the first 3 weeks of December and the last 2 weeks of February. To reach Space World, take a JR Kaisoku (express) train from Fukuoka's Hakata Station directly to Space World Station. The trip time is about 60 minutes, and the park is a 5-minute walk from the station. If you have a JR Rail Pass, it's quicker to take the Shinkansen bullet train 20 minutes from Hakata Station to Kokura Station, transferring there to a local line for the 10-minute ride to Space World. Likewise, if you're coming from Honshu via Shinkansen, transfer in Kokura. If you have luggage to stow, there are lockers at Kokura Station and at Space World's entrance.

EXPENSIVE

Grand Hyatt Fukuoka  Opened in 1996, Fukuoka's top hotel commands a grand setting in the innovative Canal City Hakata, with easy pedestrian access to the city's main sights. Its black-marbled lobby has a curved facade that overlooks the shopping complex, but for guests who desire solitude, the hotel also has its private roof garden. Service throughout the hotel is superb—along the order of “Your wish is our command.” Small but stylish rooms provide views of the private garden or the river and its night scenes. Besides all the luxury, a stay at the Grand Hyatt is fun, with Canal City's many shops and restaurants right outside the door.

II Palazzo ★★ Eye-catching with its brick-warehouse-meets-Art-Deco-temple architecture, this uniquely designed boutique hotel is the hotel of choice for artists, designers, and other creative folks. Jazz plays in the lobby with its soaring ceiling and wood and marble design. Contemporary rooms, innovative when they debuted in 1989, seem rather ordinary now, with marbled bathrooms thoughtfully divided by a large glass plate into “wet” areas (shower/bathtub) and “dry” areas (sink and toilet). Unfortunately, even though Canal City Hakata is just across the river, none of the rooms face the river or provide a view.

MODERATE

Canal City Fukuoka Washington Hotel Value Though part of a nationwide business-hotel chain, this Washington is different: It has more style and lots of pluses. For one thing, it's located in Canal City Hakata, Fukuoka's number-one shopping and entertainment complex, offering convenience right outside the front door. In addition, its rooms come with extras not usually found in business hotels, including LCD TVs. The cheapest singles face the Grand Hyatt above the Canal City complex, while higher-priced, larger singles and all twins and triples have better views outward toward the city. The downside: Its good location makes it popular; you'll find the lobby crowded at check-in and checkout times.

Dukes Hotel ★ Flower boxes, plants, and evergreens outside the front door hint that this is no ordinary hotel. Indeed, it's an inexpensive hotel with class, with a small but very civilized lobby that exudes charm and invites you to linger with its Chinese vases, palm trees, antiques, and classical music. Most of the rooms, tiny but comfy with a simple decor that suggests an English-style countryside manor, are singles, with only nine twins and nine doubles. In the world of cloned business hotels, this establishment, a short walk from Hakata Station in the direction of Canal City, is a welcome relief. Farther from the station but in the heart of the city (4 min. from the Nakasukawabata subway stop or Higashi-Nakasu/stop no. 11 of the ¥100 Bus), Dukes Hotel Nakasu, 1-1 Nakasunakashima-machi, Hakataku (☎ 092/283-2800), offers the same amenities and style at a cheaper price.

From the west (Hakata) exit, take the road straight ahead (the one to between Fukuoka City Bank and the red stone Center Building); it's down this street on your right in the 2nd block. Amenities: Cafe; souvenir/convenience shop; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, dataport (8th floor only), fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

JR Kyushu Hotel Fukuoka One block east of Hakata Station, this hotel beckons with a flower-lined entryway, a European-style lobby, and rooms that are larger than those in most business hotels. Though there are no doubles per se, two can tough it out in a single room with a semi-double-size bed for ¥13,800 ($115/£58). A ladies' floor offers specialized amenities. But the best reasons to stay here are its convenient location and the discount extended to those with Japan Rail Passes.

INEXPENSIVE

In addition to the choices here, the budget chain Toyoko Inn (www.toyoko-inn.com) has three locations within walking distance of Hakata Station. Toyoko Inn Hakata-guchi Ekimae, 1-15-5 Hakataekimae (☎ 092/451-1045), a 2-minute walk northwest of the station, has singles starting at ¥5,880 ($49/£25) and doubles at ¥7,560 ($63/£32), while Toyoko Inn Hakata Gion, 1-38 Gion-cho (☎ 092/281-1045), a 5-minute walk northwest of the station, and Toyoko Inn Hakata-eki Minami, 2-10-23 Hakataeki-minami (☎ 092/475-1045), a 13-minute walk southeast of the station, offer slightly cheaper rates. As with most Toyoko Inns, they offer computers in the lobby providing free Internet access, free nightly movies, complimentary breakfast, free dataports in the rooms, and free Wi-Fi in the lobby.

Hakata JBB Hotel In the heart of the city, beside the Hakata Machiya Folk Museum and within easy walking distance of Canal City Hakata, the Asian Art Museum, and other attractions, this is a simple but well-managed establishment under the watchful eye of friendly Yamada-san, who speaks English and offers coffee free of charge mornings in the lobby. Open-air passageways lead to tiny but well-kept rooms complete with toothbrush, shampoo, and pajamas. Beds are semi-double-size and are for single use, but married couples or two women can room together for ¥6,000 ($50/£25). You won't find anything in the city center cheaper than this.

Wafu Ryokan Kashima Honkan ★ Finds It comes as something of a surprise to find a traditional Japanese inn in the heart of Kyushu's largest city, and an inexpensive one to boot. Housed in a 100-year-old building with a homey atmosphere, an enclosed garden, and rambling hallways leading to simple tatami rooms, each one different, it's a good choice for budget-seeking traditionalists. Its convenient location, down the street from the Hakata Machiya Folk Museum, is another plus.

WHERE TO DINE

For one-stop dining, head to Canal City Hakata (☎ 092/282-2525), a 10-minute walk west of Hakata Station or a 1-minute walk from Canal City Hakata-mae bus stop no. 4. You'll find dozens of restaurants in this shopping complex, situated around a canal and water fountains and offering everything from Chinese, Italian, and Japanese cuisine to fast food and bar snacks. On the fifth floor is Ramen Stadium 2, with eight ramen (Chinese noodle) shops offering noodles, gyoza (dumplings), and other fare from different regions of Japan, including Tokyo, Sapporo, Kanagawa, Kyoto, Miyazaki, and Fukuoka. Pick your meal from the ticket vending machine outside each shop; there are photos of most selections, priced from ¥600 to ¥980 ($5–$8.15/£2.50–£4.10). Like most restaurants in Canal City, they're open from 11am to 11pm daily.

For a bit more local flavor, head to one of Fukuoka's famous 200 yatai stalls (street-side food stalls). Most are located in Tenjin and along the Nakagawa River, on Nakasu Island south of Kokutai-Doro Avenue. Most stalls sell ramen, though some also serve oden, yakitori, tempura, and other simple fare. They're open from about 6pm to 2am. Many nighttime revelers stop here before or after a spin through the Nakasu entertainment district. Choose a stall and sit down, and you'll be served a steaming bowl of ramen, most of which average about ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90).

Aroma's EUROPEAN Located on the lobby floor of the Grand Hyatt, which has a great location in Canal City, this upbeat, modern restaurant has a great lunch buffet serving mostly Mediterranean-inspired cuisine, including salads, antipasto, soup, and fish and meat entrees. In the evening, you can choose a set meal, or opt for a combination buffet/set meal that allows you to help yourself to an appetizer and dessert buffet and order your soup and main dish from a menu.

2 Nagasaki

1,329km (826 miles) W of Tokyo; 152km (95 miles) SW of Fukuoka

Unlike Kumamoto, Kagoshima, Beppu, and other well-known Kyushu destinations, Nagasaki doesn't have a castle, a famous landscaped garden, or hot-spring spas. Rather, its charm is much more subtle. Many people in Japan—including foreign residents—consider this city one of the country's most beautiful. It's a place of hills rising from the deep, U-shaped harbor with boats and ferries chugging back and forth, of houses perched on terraced slopes, of small streets and distinctive neighborhoods, and of people extremely proud of their hometown. Without a doubt, Nagasaki is one of Japan's most livable cities, despite its population of 454,000 residents. It's also perhaps Japan's most cosmopolitan city, with a unique blend of outside cultures interwoven into its history, architecture, food, and festivals.

Nagasaki, capital of Nagasaki Prefecture and located on the northwest coast of Kyushu, opened its harbor to European vessels in 1571 and became a port of call for Portuguese and Dutch ships; Chinese merchants soon followed and set up their own community. Along with traders came St. Francis Xavier and other Christian missionaries, primarily from Portugal and Spain, who found many converts among the local Japanese. During Japan's more than 200 years of isolation, only Nagasaki was allowed to conduct trade with outsiders and thus served as the nation's window on the rest of the world. Even today, Japanese come to Nagasaki for a dose of the city's intermingled cultures. Its harbor remains one of Japan's most active; it's home to the Mitsubishi shipyards.

All the city's major attractions are connected to its diversified, and sometimes tragic, past. Nagasaki is perhaps best known as the second city—and, I hope, the last city—to be destroyed by an atomic bomb.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane ANA and JAL serve Nagasaki Airport (☎ 0957/52-5555; www.nabac.co.jp/english) from Tokyo's Haneda Airport. Flight time is 1 hour and 50 minutes, and the fare is around ¥35,700 ($298/£149). Cheaper is Skynet Asia Airways (SNA; ☎ 0120/737-283 toll-free), a local airline connecting a few cities in Kyushu with Tokyo, with the regular Nagasaki-Tokyo fare of ¥28,500 ($238/£119) reduced to ¥11,500 ($96/£48) if you book 2 months in advance for selected days. Airport buses travel to Nagasaki Station in about 45 minutes for ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35).

By Train Trains depart Hakata Station in Fukuoka approximately twice an hour, arriving at Nagasaki Station about 2 hours later at a cost of ¥4,710 ($39/£20). From Tokyo, take the Shinkansen bullet train to Hakata Station and transfer there for a train to Nagasaki; travel time is about 8½ hours, depending on connections and the fare is ¥23,420 ($195/£98) for an unreserved seat.

VISITOR INFORMATION Pick up the leaflet “Nagasaki, Unzen, Goto Islands, Iki and Tsushima” from the Tourist Information Center in Tokyo or Kansai or Narita international airports, or download it from JNTO’s website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under “Browse by Destinations.” In Nagasaki, the Nagasaki City Tourist Information Office (☎ 095/823-3631; daily 8am–8pm) is located just outside the main ticket gates of Nagasaki Station, to the right in the Seattle’s Best coffee shop. Information on all of Nagasaki Prefecture (including Huis Ten Bosch and Unzen, described later in this chapter), as well as souvenirs and goods from around the prefecture, is available across the street from the train station at the Nagasaki Prefectural Tourist Information Center (☎ 095/826-9407; daily 9am–5:30pm), on the second floor of the Ken-ei Bus Terminal.

Information on Nagasaki is available on the Internet at www1.city.nagasaki.nagasaki.jp. See www.nagasaki-tabinet.com for information on Nagasaki Prefecture, including Unzen.

INTERNET ACCESS Located in the Hamano-machi covered shopping arcade in the heart of downtown Nagasaki, Internet Café Cybac, 2–46 Aburaya-machi (☎ 0120-24-3189) is open 24 hours and charges ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for the first 30 minutes, then ¥100 (85¢/45p) for each additional 15 minutes. Although it also charges a one-time ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) membership fee, you can pick up a brochure at the tourist office with a coupon offering free membership.

ORIENTATION Along with Kobe and Sapporo, Nagasaki is one of Japan’s most navigable cities, with lots of English-language signs pointing the way to attractions. City layout follows natural boundaries set by the Urakami River, the long and narrow Nagasaki Bay, and the many steep-sloped hills. Nagasaki Station, along with AMU Plaza next door offering shopping and dining options, isn’t located in the downtown part of the city; rather, most nightspots, shops, and restaurants are located southeast of the station, clustered around an area that contains Shianbashi Dori and Kanko Dori streets, the Hamano-machi covered shopping arcade, and a newly developed waterfront area called Dejima Wharf that includes restaurants, the Nagasaki Prefectural Art Museum with Spanish art and art related to Nagasaki, and Seaside Park. Nearby is Chinatown, with Chinese restaurants and shops selling Chinese-made souvenirs and clothing. Farther south is Glover Garden, where many foreigners settled in the 19th century. Nearby is Hollanders Slope (Oranda-zaka, also referred to as Dutch Slope), undoubtedly Nagasaki’s prettiest street, a cobbled lane lined with wooden houses built by former European residents (a century ago, the people of Nagasaki referred to all Europeans as Hollanders). Peace Park and its atomic-bomb museum are located north of Nagasaki Station on the other end of town.

GETTING AROUND By Streetcar Streetcars have been hauling passengers in Nagasaki since 1915 and, from the looks of things, have changed little in the ensuing years; they’re still the easiest—and most charming—way to get around. Four lines run through the heart of the city, with most stops written in English. The streetcars are ancient one-wagon affairs, retired to Nagasaki from other cities that considered them too slow and old-fashioned—and yet, because streetcars have their own lanes of traffic here, during rush hour they’re usually the fastest on the road. It costs a mere ¥100

(85¢/45p) to ride one no matter how far you go; pay at the front when you get off. You are allowed to transfer to another line only at Tsukimachi Station (ask the driver for a transfer ticket, a noritsugi, when you disembark from the first streetcar); otherwise, you must buy a separate ticket each time you board. If you need change for, say, a ¥500 coin or ¥1,000 bill, you may ask the driver when he's waiting at a red light and isn't busy, an endearing anachronism in high-tech Japan. To avoid the hassle of individual tickets, you can also buy a ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) pass at both tourist offices mentioned above and at major hotels; the pass allows unlimited rides for 1 day. Streetcars run from about 6:15am to 11:30pm.

On Foot With the exception of Peace Park, you can also get around Nagasaki easily on foot, which is certainly the most intimate way to experience the city and its atmosphere. You can walk from the Hamano-machi downtown shopping district to Glover Garden, for example, in 20 minutes, passing Chinatown, Dejima, and the Dutch Slope on the way. Shianbashi Dori, located just off the streetcar stop of the same name and center of Nagasaki nightlife, is just a minute's walk from the Hamano-machi shopping arcade.

By Bus Nagasaki has buses, but destinations are in Japanese only—stick to the streetcars.

EXPLORING THE CITY

NISHIZAKA HILL

After Nagasaki opened its port to European vessels, missionaries came to the city to convert Japanese to Christianity. Gradually, however, the Japanese rulers began to fear that these Christian missionaries would try to exert political and financial influence through their converts. Who was to say that conversion to Christianity wasn't the first step toward colonization? So in 1587, the shogun Toyotomi Hideyoshi officially banned Christianity. In 1597, 26 male Christians (20 Japanese and six foreigners) were arrested in Kyoto and Osaka, marched through the snow to Nagasaki, and crucified on Nishizaka Hill as examples of what would happen to offenders. Through the ensuing decades, there were more than 600 documented cases of Japanese, Portuguese, and Spanish Christians being put to death in the Nishizaka area. In 1862, the 26 martyrs were sainted by the pope.

Today, on Nishizaka Hill, about a 4-minute walk north of Nagasaki Station up a steep slope, there's the Monument to the 26 Saints, with statues of the martyrs carved in stone relief. Immediately striking is that three of them look very young; indeed, the youngest was only 12. Behind the relief is the small Twenty-Six Martyrs Museum (☎ 095/822-6000; www.26martyrs.com; daily 9am–5pm) housing artifacts relating to the history of Christianity in Japan, including paintings and drawings of the 26 saints, reward notices for those turning in Christians to authorities, and religious objects, as well as remains of Japanese martyrs returned to Nagasaki in 1995 after more than 380 years of interment in Macau. Perhaps most amazing about the history of Christianity in Japan is that the religion was practiced secretly by the faithful throughout Japan's isolation policy, surviving more than 200 years underground without the benefits of a church or clergy. Admission to the museum, which can be toured in 15 minutes, is ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) for junior-high and high-school students, and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children.

PEACE PARK (HIRANO-MACHI) ★★

On August 9, 1945, at 11:02am, American forces dropped an atomic bomb over Nagasaki, 3 days after they had dropped one on Hiroshima. The bomb, which exploded 480m (1,600 ft.) aboveground, destroyed about a third of the city, killed an estimated 74,000 people, and injured 75,000 more. Today, Peace Park, located north of Nagasaki Station, serves as a reminder of that day of destruction with a museum, memorials, and statues. Nagasaki's citizens are among the most vigorous peace activists in the world; a peace demonstration is held in Peace Park every year on the anniversary of the bombing.

Near the Nagasaki Atomic Bomb Museum (see below), a black pillar marks the exact epicenter of the atomic blast; a black casket contains names of the bomb's victims. Ironically, the bomb exploded almost directly over the Urakami Catholic Church, built after centuries of persecution in Japan and of which only a fragmented wall remains. A few minutes' walk farther north, separated by several streets, is the largest part of Peace Park (the nearest streetcar station to this section is Matsuyama). It occupies the site of a former prison; all 134 inmates died in the blast. A fountain is dedicated to the wounded who begged for water; many of them died thirsty. Statues donated by countries from around the world line a pathway leading to Peace Statue, a 9m-high (30-ft.) statue of a male deity. One hand points to the sky from where the bomb came (meant as a warning?), and the other hand points to the horizon (representing hope? the future?).

Nagasaki Atomic Bomb Museum ★★★ Visiting this museum, with English-language displays, is by far the most important thing to do in Peace Park. Upon entering, guests circle an empty, glass-dome foyer via a spiraling ramp—bringing to mind, perhaps, the atomic mushroom cloud? This is followed by photographs of the city as it looked before the bomb, accompanied by the ominous, loud ticking of a clock. Displays illustrate events leading up to the bombing, the devastation afterward, Nagasaki's postwar restoration, the history of nuclear weapons, and the subsequent peace movement. Objects, photos, and artifacts graphically depict the bomb's devastation, including a clock stopped precisely at 11:02am, personal belongings ranging from mangled spectacles to a student's singed trousers, hand bones encased in a clump of melted glass, and photographs of victims, including a dead mother and her baby and a 14-year-old whose face has been hideously burned. On video, survivors describe their personal experiences on that fateful day. The adjoining Peace Memorial Hall for Atomic Bomb Victims contains a Remembrance Hall, with portraits of those who lost their lives. The museum is by no means pleasant, but something every concerned individual should see—plan on at least an hour here. (If, however, you've already seen the much larger and far more comprehensive Peace Memorial Museum in Hiroshima, this one will be largely repetitive.)

7–8 Hirano-machi. ☎ 095/844-1231. www1.city.nagasaki.nagasaki.jp/na-bomb/museum. Admission ¥200 ($1.65/85p) adults, ¥100 (85¢/45p) children. Daily 8:30am–5:30pm (until 6:30pm May–Aug). Streetcar: 1 or 3 to Hamaguchi-machi (5 min.).

DEJIMA

When the Tokugawa shogunate adopted a national policy of isolation in the 1630s, only Nagasaki was allowed to remain open as a port of trade with foreigners. Because the Portuguese and Spaniards were associated with the outlawed Christian religion, they were expelled in 1639; only the Dutch and the Chinese were allowed to remain and continue trading. In 1641, all the Dutch were confined to a tiny, fan-shaped artificial island called Dejima, where they remained for 218 years (at any given time, about 15 Dutchmen were in residence; no wives were allowed). This was Japan's only official contact with the outside world; the director of Dejima was required to travel to Edo every 1 to 4 years to report to the shogun. Otherwise, the only people allowed to cross the bridge into the Dutch community were Japanese prostitutes and traders.

Today, after having long become part of the mainland through land reclamation and after decades of languishing as little more than a streetcar stop, Dejima has been reborn through an ambitious project that is re-creating the island as it was in the early 19th century (a total of 25 buildings are planned by 2010). After you alight at the Dejima streetcar stop and pay the admission of ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for high-school students, or ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children, go to the Deputy Chief Factor's Quarters (6–3 Dejima-machi; © 095/821-7200; www1.city.nagasaki.nagasaki.jp/dejima), where you can pick up a map and information in English. From there you will be directed to a re-created kitchen, an excavated west-side embankment, the First Ship Captain's Quarters with furnishings of the period, the Chief Factor's Residence, the Head Clerk's Quarters with examples of equipment and knowledge brought to Japan from Europe, the No. 1 Warehouse documenting the painstaking restoration of Dejima's historic buildings, and the No. 2 Warehouse describing Dejima's role in the introduction of Western science and culture to Japan. At the Dejima Theatre, a 12-minute video recaptures daily life in a former Dejima Dutch factory. In your wanderings you will also see a large outdoor model showing how the island looked when the Dutch lived here. But the most important thing to see in Dejima is the Dejima Museum of History, which is housed in a blue, colonial-style wooden building constructed in 1877 as Japan's first Protestant seminary. It gives an excellent account of the historical development of the island, what life was like for the Dutch who lived here, and how the trading system worked. Nearby, in a replica of an old stone warehouse, is the museum's annex with folk objects from Holland and artifacts unearthed during excavations on Dejima. Dejima is open daily 8am to 6pm. On weekends and holidays, volunteers are on hand to conduct 1-hour free tours in English at 10 and 11am and 1:30 and 2:30pm. Otherwise, you'll probably spend about an hour here on your own.

GLOVER GARDEN

Glover Garden ★★ After Japan opened its doors to the rest of the world and established Nagasaki as one of a handful of international ports, Nagasaki emerged as one of the most progressive cities in the country, with many foreign residents. A number of Western-style houses were built during the Meiji Period (1868–1912), many of them on a hill overlooking Nagasaki and the harbor. Today, that hill has been developed into Glover Garden, which showcases nine Meiji-Era buildings and homes on lushly landscaped grounds. Some of the structures stand on their original site; others have been moved here and given new life. The stone-and-clapboard houses have sweeping verandas, Western parlors, the most modern conveniences of the time, and Japanese-style roofs. Most famous is Glover Mansion, Japan's oldest Western-style house, built in this location in 1863 and romanticized as the home of Madame Butterfly, the fictitious, tragic heroine of Puccini's opera. Married to a Japanese woman (and much more faithful than his Puccini counterpart), Thomas Glover was a remarkable Scotsman who, among other things, financially backed and managed ship-repair yards in Nagasaki, brought the first steam locomotive to Japan, sold guns and ships, and exported tea. The Ringer House, dating from the early Meiji Period, contains a display of photos, clothes, and artifacts of Kiba Teiko, a Japanese opera singer who played Madame Butterfly.

Among the other buildings, a former boys' academy houses photographs of old Nagasaki, including portraits of foreigners who used to live here. The Mitsubishi Dock House, built in 1896 to serve as a rest house for ship crews, offers great views of the harbor. One of Nagasaki's first Western restaurants is now a quaint cafe. And don't miss the Nagasaki Traditional Performing Arts Museum, which displays floats and dragons used in Nagasaki's most famous festival, the Okunchi Festival, held in October. The museum's highlight is an excellent film of the colorful parade, featuring massive ships deftly maneuvered on wheels and Chinese dragon dances. At any rate, views from Glover Garden are among the best in the city. Plan on spending about 1 hour here.

8-1 Minami Yamate-machi. ☎ 095/822-8223. Admission ¥600 ($5/£2.50) adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) high-school students, ¥180 ($1.50/75p) junior-high and elementary students. Daily 8am-6pm (to 9:30pm Golden Week and mid-July to mid-Oct). Streetcar: Oura Tenshudoshita (7 min.); cross the bridge, turn left after the ANA Hotel Nagasaki Glover Hill, and walk uphill, following the signs.

TEMPLES, SHRINES & BRIDGES

Confucius Temple (Koushi-byo) and Historical Museum of China ★ Chinese residents living in Nagasaki built this colorful, red-and-yellow temple in 1893, aided by the Ch'ing Dynasty in China. This is the only Confucian mausoleum outside China built by the Chinese. In fact, the land upon which it stands belongs to China and is administered by the Chinese embassy in Tokyo. The main hall contains a statue of Confucius, attended by courtyard statues representing his 72 disciples. More fascinating, however, is the small Historical Museum of China located behind the main hall with bronze jars, ceramics, jade carvings, painted enamel vases, and other treasures on loan from Beijing's National Museum of Chinese History and Beijing Palace's Museum of Historical Treasures. You can see everything in a half-hour.

10-36 Oura-machi. ☎ 095/824-4022. Admission ¥525 ($4.35/£2.20) adults, ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75) junior-high and high-school students, ¥315 ($2.60/£1.30) children. Daily 8:30am-5pm. Streetcar: Oura Tenshudoshita (3 min.). Walk inland (continuing in the same direction of your streetcar if you're coming from downtown), and turn left when you reach a small playground on your right. Near the Dutch Slope.

Sofukuji Temple ★ Sofukuji is Nagasaki's most famous temple. Distinctly Chinese with its Ming architecture, it dates back to 1629, when it was founded by Chinese residents. Its Buddha Hall, painted a brilliant red and decorated with Chinese lanterns, was designed and cut in China before transportation to Nagasaki. Erected in 1646, it's the oldest building in Nagasaki and is a National Treasure. Another National Treasure is the temple's beautiful gate, which employs a complex jointing system and features brightly painted detailing. But most fascinating, in my opinion, is the temple's gigantic cauldron, built by a priest during a terrible famine in the 1680s to cook enough porridge to feed more than 3,000 people a day.

7-8 Kayjiya-machi. ☎ 095/823-2645. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) junior-high and high-school students, ¥100 (85¢/45p) children. Daily 8am-5pm. A 7-min. walk from the Hamano-machi downtown shopping district. Streetcar: Shokakuji-shita (4 min.); head back toward the bay, turning right at Sofukuji St.

Spectacles Bridge (Megane-bashi) In addition to the temples described above, the Chinese also left their mark on Nagasaki with several bridges. Most famous is the so-called Spectacles Bridge, built in 1634 by a Chinese Zen priest. One of Nagasaki's most photographed objects, it's the oldest stone-arched bridge in Japan and is named after the reflection its two arches cast in the water; I wouldn't know, however, because I've never seen the Nakashima River larger than a trickle except once, when it rushed angrily after a heavy rain. There's a promenade along the river, complete with benches and children's playgrounds. It's just a 5-minute walk from the Hamano-machi shopping arcade.

Streetcar: Nigijwai-bashi or Kokaidomae.

Suwa Shrine Although Nagasaki's famous Okunchi Festival has Chinese roots, it's celebrated at this Shinto shrine, built to promote Shintoism at a time when the feudal government was trying to stamp out Christianity. Today, with a good location on top of a hill with views over the city, the shrine symbolizes better than anything else the spiritual heart of the Japanese community. When Japanese women turn 33 and men turn 40, they come here to pray for good health and a long life. Newborns are brought 30 days after their birth to receive special blessings and then again for their 3rd, 5th, and 7th birthdays. On New Year's, the grounds are packed with those seeking good fortune in the coming year. People also visit to ask the shrine's many deities for favors—good marriage, safe childbirth, good health, and more. You can even have your automobile blessed here. The shrine sells English-language fortunes. If you're satisfied with your fortune, keep it; if you're not, tie it to the branch of a tree and the fortune is conveniently negated.

18–15 Kami-Nishiyama-machi. © 095/824-0445. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. Streetcar: Suwa Jinja-mae (4 min.); take the underground passage and follow the signs up many stone stairs.

A SIDE TRIP TO HUIS TEN BOSCH ★★

If you're ready for some R & R from your travels in Japan but have only 1 day to spare, perhaps Huis Ten Bosch, in Sasebo (© 0956/27-0001; www.huistenbosch.co.jp), will do the trick. This replica of a 17th-century Dutch village boasts tree-lined canals, brick houses, city squares, brick-paved roads, churches, museums, shops, restaurants, hotels, and even stately private homes—proof at how adept Japanese are at imitation. Most of the buildings are faithful reproductions of originals back in the Netherlands; even the bricks were imported from Holland. Although I was a bit skeptical about visiting an imitation Dutch village in Japan, I must admit that the grounds and craftsmanship are beautifully done (Huis Ten Bosch is also environmentally correct, with its own desalination and sewage treatment plants; it also generates much of its own energy). Even Holland itself isn't this pristine. In fact, I consider this the country's premier theme park designed for adults. But although there are some rides and attractions, this is not an amusement park in disguise.

Highlights include Palace Huis Ten Bosch, a replica of the formal residence of Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands, which contains an art gallery and period rooms showing how upper-class Dutch lived; baroque and flower gardens; a mirror maze; children's indoor playground; museums with collections of porcelain, ornamental glass, teddy bears, carillons, and music boxes; and theaters that re-create a ship's voyage from Holland to Japan in the 17th century, the flooding of a Dutch town, and M. C. Escher's works with a 3-D film. There are also cruises of Omura Bay and the village's canals; parades, dances, concerts, and other events daily; more than 50 shops; and more than 40 restaurants (including open-air beer and wine gardens). The park is so vast that there are shuttle buses and other forms of transportation, but to really feel like you're in Holland, rent one of the park's bicycles.

A 1-day pass to Huis Ten Bosch costs ¥5,600 ($47/£23) for adults, ¥4,400 ($37/£18) for children 12 to 17, and ¥3,400 ($28/£14) for children 4 to 11 (under 3 go free). The best time to visit is spring, during—what else?—tulip season. Open March through Christmas, daily 9am to 9:30pm (last entrance 8pm); December 26 through February, 9am to 8:30pm (last entrance 7pm).

To reach Huis Ten Bosch, take the JR Sea Side Liner Express from Nagasaki Station to Huis Ten Bosch Station (1 hr. and 20 min.); the train departs approximately every hour and costs ¥1,430 ($12/£6) one-way.

WHERE TO STAY

Nagasaki has reasonably priced hotels, but keep in mind that some accommodations may raise their rates during peak times, which are Golden Week (Apr 29–May 5), Obon (mid-Aug), and the Okunchi Festival (Oct 7–9).

EXPENSIVE

Best Western Premier Hotel Nagasaki ★★☆☆ One of Nagasaki's finest hotels, the Best Western's marbled lobby, decorated with large Oriental vases, has a distinct Asian flair. Rooms, which combine colonial-style decor with Chinese accents, offer the usual comforts, with one floor reserved for ladies offering amenities geared toward female travelers. There are only three single rooms in the hotel, though discounts are given for single use of twins and doubles. Rooms on the 14th Sky Floor, with so-called Hollywood twins (two singles pushed together) or double beds, have the best views; otherwise, you'll need to visit the 15th-floor buffet restaurant or bar for panoramic vistas.

Its large, marbled lobby is light and airy, and its rooms are among the city's largest, with some even offering a view of Nagasaki's busy port. Add the hotel's wide range of facilities (including a fitness club), and you have what amounts to one of Nagasaki's best choices.

①97 Sakamoto-ya ★★☆☆ Finds This beautiful 114-year-old ryokan (Nagasaki's oldest) right in the heart of the city is a wonderful place, especially when you consider how rare traditional ryokan are nowadays in major Japanese cities. Most of the rooms, which are named after plants, flowers, and trees, have a Japanese-style bathtub made of wood, as well as traditional artwork on the walls. The best room is the Pine Room (Matsu No Ma), which even has its own miniature garden with a tiny shrine. Rates vary according to the room and the meals served; you may order a shippoku dinner, a Nagasaki specialty consisting of a variety of dishes showing European and Chinese influences, for ¥3,150 ($26/£13) more. Western breakfasts are also served on request.

MODERATE

Holiday Inn Nagasaki ★★ Value This hotel offers standard American convenience but with a rich mix of Asian and European design. Unlike most Holiday Inns, it keeps a low profile; it's hidden in the middle of a block and has a small, intimate lobby that resembles a rich merchant's home in old Nagasaki rather than a place to check in. As with all Holiday Inns, beds are at least double-size (some are even queen-size or king-size). Note, however, that the cheapest singles face a wall .3m (1 ft.) away; if you're claustrophobic, specify a room with an outside view. One of the best things about this hotel is its convenient location, in the heart of the city near Chinatown and just a stone's throw from the Hamano-machi shopping arcade. You can walk from the hotel to most sites, including Glover Mansion and Sofukuji and Kofukuji temples. We also like its buffet restaurant specializing in seasonal organic dishes.

6–24 Doza-machi, Nagasaki 850-0841. ☎ 888/HOLIDAY in the U.S., or 095/828-1234. Hotel Majestic ★★ The Majestic is a small, charming, quiet hotel. The beautifully appointed rooms are decorated in one of several themes; the country-living theme, for example, sports wooden floors, light-oak furnishings, and claw-foot bathtubs. All rooms have small balconies and larger-than-average bathrooms. There are no singles, the cheapest twins offer no views, and even more expensive rooms overlook a parking lot toward views of the harbor, glimpsed between buildings (best views are from the fourth floor). No matter. The best things about this getaway are its small size—which means no tour-bus groups in the lobby—and its great location near Glover Garden. Its tiny, cozy, European-style restaurant/bar will make you feel right at home.

JR Kyushu Hotel Nagasaki You can't get closer to Nagasaki Station than this new business hotel on the station's second floor; those traveling with a Japan Rail Pass will also profit from a discount. Otherwise, rooms are your basic boxes, with alcoves serving as closets, small bathrooms, and no views. Those wishing to avoid any quality time in their rooms might take advantage of adjoining Amu Plaza's many shops and restaurants (the hotel's Royal Host coffee shop is also a good bet for breakfast).

Nagasaki Hotel Monterey ★ Step into old Portugal in this whimsical place complete with whitewashed walls, imported tiles, a small chapel with decorations imported from Portugal, and hand-painted furnishings. There's even a kerosene lamp museum on hotel premises, free to hotel guests. Popular with young women, the hotel fits the historic past of Nagasaki and is conveniently located at the bottom of Hollander Slope. Rooms, too, give hints of Portugal with their terra-cotta-colored floor tiles, dark-wood or painted furniture, and shuttered windows.

Hotel Wingport Nagasaki This clean business hotel is closer to Nagasaki Station than Toyoko Inn but can't compete when it comes to services and amenities. Still, you might find room here if other places are full. It offers mostly singles that couldn't get much smaller. However, the fact that they're spotless, with white walls and cheerful bedspreads, helps alleviate claustrophobia, as do good bed lights and windows that can be opened. Panels close for complete darkness; note that some rooms face another building. The deluxe twins are actually quite roomy for a business hotel, with a sofa, a semi-double-size bed, and a single bed.

Nishikiso Bekkan This Japanese inn has a comfortable, lived-in atmosphere and friendly owners. WHERE TO DINE Nagasaki's most famous food, called shippoku, is actually an entire meal of various courses with Chinese, European, and Japanese influences. It's a feast generally shared by a group of four or more people and includes such dishes as fish soup, sashimi, and fried, boiled, and vinegared seasonal delicacies from land and sea. Another Nagasaki specialty is champon, a thick Chinese noodle usually served in soup with meat, seafood, and vegetables.

Nagasaki's nightlife district centers on a small area south of Hamano-machi known as Shianbashi, which begins just off the streetcar stop of the same name and is easily recognizable by the neon arch that stretches over the entrance of a street called Shianbashi Dori. Shianbashi shimmers with the lights of various drinking establishments and yakitori-ya, which are often the cheapest places to go for a light dinner. Another good hunting ground for restaurants is China Town.

198 Kagetsu ★★☆☆ Finds SHIPPOKU/KAISEKI If I were a woman of boundless means, this wonderful but expensive traditional restaurant is where I'd entertain all my friends. It's the ultimate Japanese dining experience, serving constantly changing exquisite dishes. First established in 1642, Kagetsu is one of Japan's longest-running restaurants; the oldest part of the present wooden building is about 360 years old. This is an oasis of dignified old Japan, where kimono-clad waitresses shuffle down wooden corridors and serve guests sublime food in tatami rooms. Formerly a geisha house, it has separate stairways for patrons and hostesses. It even has a stone-floored room designed for a table and chairs where foreign patrons could be entertained. Display cases exhibit treasures related to Kagetsu's history.

Behind the restaurant, which is set back from the road, is a beautiful 300-year-old garden. I'll never forget my evening stroll here as a half-moon rose above gnarled, stunted pines. The back of the restaurant, consisting mainly of glass, was lit up, so I could see into a multitude of private tatami rooms all on different levels. It was like a woodblock print suddenly sprung to life. Needless to say, this restaurant is very popular and is sometimes entirely booked a full month in advance. There must be at least two of you if you want to feast on shippoku or kaiseki.

2-1 Maruyama-machi. ☎ 095/822-0191. Reservations required at least a day (a week is better) in advance. Lunch obento (available only weekdays) ¥5,200 ($43/£22); shippoku set lunch ¥10,800 ($90/£45); shippoku or kaiseki set meals ¥13,860–¥18,900 ($116–$158/£58–£79). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily noon–2pm and 5:30–8pm (last order). Closed irregularly. Streetcar: Shianbashi (3 min.). Head under the neon arch of a bridge onto Shianbashi Dori, continue straight, and then take the road between the cute koban police box and the small park; it's straight ahead where the street ends, with the traditional gate.

MODERATE

199 Gohan ★★☆☆ ORIGINAL JAPANESE Gohan's English-speaking owner-chef, Tsunehiro Yoshimura, is also a musician, so you'll hear interesting music as you dine on creative, original meals here. The interior of this restaurant is authentically old; salvaged beams and pieces from five different houses were given new lives here. The handwritten menu changes daily, but the set dinner more than satisfies. Included may be sashimi, new potato with sesame seed, whole snapper, crayfish, tofu, soup, and rice. The dishes themselves are by Keisuke Iwata, a talented local potter of some renown, while hip waiters deliver food from an open kitchen. The entire experience is very highly recommended.

2–32 Aburayamachi. ☎ 095/825-3600. Lunch teishoku ¥840–¥1,575 ($7–$13/£3.50–£6.50); set dinners ¥4,200–¥6,300 ($35–$53/£18–£27). AE, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11:30am–2pm and 5–10pm (last order 9:30pm). Streetcar: Shokaku-jishita (1 min.). Walk 1 block down Sofukuji-dori toward the temple and take the 1st left; it's the 2nd building on your right with the name on the noren (short curtains hung outside a shop or restaurant signify it is open)—look carefully, it's easy to miss.

Harbin ★★ FRENCH/RUSSIAN Established in 1959, Harbin is a Nagasaki tradition, one of those places you don't want to miss. Its owner was born in Manchuria and named his restaurant after Harbin, a town close to his birthplace that was once an international city of Russian, Chinese, and Japanese residents. His family-run restaurant serves a unique blend of French and Russian cuisine; in recent years, his French-trained chef son has brought his own interpretations to the menu. A small, unpretentious-looking establishment, it offers a changing menu, written in Japanese, English, and Russian languages, which may include fried chicken Kiev style, Georgian spicy lamb pot, and roasted French duck in a red currant sauce, along with homemade sausages and bread. The coulbiac (traditional Russian salmon pie), when available, is perhaps the best thing on the menu. The ¥997 ($8.30/£4.15) set lunch consists of borsch (beet soup), three kinds of piroshki (stuffed, savory pastries), salad, and coffee or tea.

Kanko Dori covered shopping arcade (which bisects Hamano-machi). ☎ 095/824-6650. Main dishes ¥1,575–¥3,675 ($13–$31/£6.55–£15); set meals ¥3,675–¥5,250 ($31–$44/£15–£22); set lunches ¥997–¥2,940 ($8.30–$25/£4.15–£13). No credit cards. Daily 11:30am–2:30pm and 5–10pm (last order). Closed every other Wed. Streetcar: Kanko Dori. Walk straight through the covered shopping arcade to the 3rd block; it's on the left, above a Doutour coffee shop.

Hortensia INTERNATIONAL This buffet restaurant is located on the second floor of the Park Side Hotel in the leafy green area of Peace Park, next to the Atomic Bomb Museum, making it a good choice if you're in the area. Lunch (available until 2pm) features an all-you-can-eat buffet of Chinese, Western, and Japanese fare, as well as set meals. In the evenings, both set meals and a buffet are offered, except during the summer months (June–Aug) when the restaurant transforms itself into a beer garden (in spirit only, as it's indoors), with buffet spreads costing ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50), or all you can eat and drink for ¥3,500 ($29/£15) within a 2-hour time limit.

Park Side Hotel, 14–1 Heiwa-machi. ☎ 095/845-3191. Buffet lunch ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50); buffet dinner ¥3,500 ($29/£15); set meals ¥1,050–¥8,400 ($8.75–$70/£4.40–£35). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2pm and 5–9pm (last order). Streetcar: Hamaguchi-machi (3 min.).

Obinata ★★ Finds ITALIAN One of my favorite restaurants, Obinata is an oasis of old Europe in the heart of Kyushu. The place has a warm, earthy feel to it, due perhaps to its heavy wooden beams, large bouquets of flowers, oil wick lamps on each table, scattered antiques, and classical music playing softly in the background. The atmosphere is cozy and the service is a delight. The menu, in Italian, lists such dishes as beef filet grilled with crushed black pepper with cream sauce; veal and ham served with wine sauce; risotto; spaghetti; lasagna; and pizza, all served with fresh, homemade bread. Dishes are creative and fun, and there's a wide selection of Bordeaux, Moselle, and Rhine wines—the owner is a wine buff.

3–19 Funadaiku-machi. ☎ 095/826-1437. Main dishes ¥2,000–¥6,000 ($17–$50/£8.50–£25); pizza and pasta ¥1,200–¥2,200 ($10–$18/£5–£9). AE. Mon–Sat 6–11pm (last order). Streetcar: Shianbashi (3 min.). Walk under the neon-lit arch onto Shianbashi Dori and turn right at the Fukusaya castella cake shop (an old traditional building); it will be almost immediately on your left—look for the sign.

②00 Shikairo ★★ CHAMPON If you're interested in eating champon (a thick Chinese noodle usually served in soup with meat, seafood, and vegetables), this is the Chinese restaurant that claims to have invented them. First opened in 1899, it occupies a five-story modern building, with two red pillars and other hints of Chinese-influenced architecture, not far from Glover Garden. Unless you've made a reservation for a private room, take the elevator to the fifth floor, where you'll be treated to great harbor views and delicious food (be sure to dine at off-peak hours to snag a table with the best views). The English-language menu, complete with pictures, offers several champion set meals, including one for ¥1,470 ($12/£6) that also includes gyoza (dumplings), rice, and pickled vegetables, available all day. After eating, be sure to see the restaurant's free museum on the second floor, where displays depict the history of the restaurant and objects relating to champion.

4–5 Matsugae-machi. ☎ 095/822-1296. Main dishes ¥997–¥1,360 ($8.30–$11/£4.15–£5.50); set meals ¥1,470–¥3,150 ($12–$26/£6–£13). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–3pm and 5–8pm (last order). Streetcar: Oura Tenshudoshita (1 min.).

②01 Shippoku Hamakatsu SHIPPOKU This modern restaurant, just a minute's walk from the Hamano-machi covered shopping arcade (and behind Internet Café Cybac) is one of Nagasaki's best-known shippoku restaurants. The ground floor, with Western-style table seating, is made private with alcoves and bamboo screens; upstairs is a large tatami room with individual low tables and seat cushions. It offers shippoku set meals for lone diners for both lunch (¥2,900/$24/£12) and dinner (from ¥3,045/$25/£13), making it a good place to try this unique cuisine if you're alone. More extensive set meals are for parties of two or more.

6–50 Kajiya-machi. ☎ 095/826-8321. Set lunch ¥2,900 ($24/£12); dinner shippoku set meals ¥3,045–¥10,500 ($25–$88/£13–£44). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–8:30pm (last order). Streetcar: Shianbashi (4 min.). Walk under the arch with the clock and take the 2nd right (Lawson is on the corner); it's in the middle of the block on the left (look for a black facade and a lattice door).

Tokiwa SASHIMI/TEMPURA/KAISEKI Raw fish doesn't come any fresher than at this conveniently located restaurant between Hamano-machi and Glover Garden. Tokiwa features a wooden counter surrounding a large pool filled with live fish; when its number is up, the fish is scooped out of the water and then prepared right before your very eyes. Sometimes the fish is gutted and filleted with only the head, heart, and skeleton left intact, so that the sashimi can be arranged around the alive and still-quivering creature and be delivered to your table. Barring that, you might opt for one of the lunch teishoku (set meals), which range from sashimi to tempura.

Nagasaki View Hotel, 2–33 Oura-machi. ☎ 095/824-2211. Set lunches ¥980–¥2,500 ($8.15–$21/£4.10–£10); set dinners ¥2,625–¥8,400 ($22–$70/£11–£35). DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2pm and 5–9:30pm (last order). Streetcar: Ourakaigan Dori (1 min.); across the street from the stop.

Cancun INTERNATIONAL On a fine summer's evening, one of the most picturesque places for a meal is at an outside table at Dejima Wharf, a complex of restaurants, bars, and shops strung along a boardwalk near the Dejima historic district. Cancun, with thatched-roof accents and a dining room open to the elements, has a relaxed island atmosphere and serves a variety of Mexican, Spanish, and Italian fare, including paella, tacos, pasta, nachos, salads, and risotto. I've had better food, but there are few places in Japan with this kind of boardwalk atmosphere; and it's fun watching boats and ferries come and go in the harbor, not to mention the crowds of people who pass by. There's live music (mostly hits of the '70s and '80s) most nights from 7:30pm, with a ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) music charge.

Dejima Wharf, 1-1 Dejima. ☎ 095/832-6210. Main dishes ¥800–¥2,750 ($6.65–$23/£3.35–£12); set lunch ¥680 ($5.65/£2.85) weekdays, ¥780 ($6.50/£3.25) weekends. AE. Tues–Sun 11:30am–2:30pm and 5:30–midnight. Street-car: Dejima (2 min.).

②② Dai-ichi-no Taberu INTERNATIONAL Organic veggies, fish, stir fries, soups, noodles, and other healthy dishes are the focus of this all-you-can-eat buffet restaurant next to Nagasaki Station in Amu Plaza (which has many other restaurants; look for the sign THANKS GIVING! WE LOVE NATURE). Avoid the noontime rush, as hungry crowds make it a challenge to reach the food (from 3–5pm weekdays, buffet meals cost only ¥1,000/$8.35/£4.20). Fortunately, dishes are replenished quickly, and something new is added frequently, making a second perusal of offerings almost mandatory. For ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) extra, you can add all the beer you can drink in 90 minutes.

5th floor, Amu Plaza, 1-1 Onoue-machi. ☎ 095/8182388. Buffet lunch ¥1,200 ($10/£5) weekdays, ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) weekends; buffet dinner ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50). No credit cards. Daily 11am–10pm (last order). Beside Nagasaki Station, in Amu Plaza.

3 Unzen Spa & Its Hells ★★

66km (41 miles) SE of Nagasaki

Unzen Spa is a small hot-spring resort town located 700m (2,310 ft.) above sea level in the pine-covered hills of the Shimabara Peninsula. Thanks to its high altitude, cool mountain air, great scenery, and hot sulfur springs, Unzen became popular in the 1890s as a summer resort for American and European visitors, who came from as far away as Shanghai, Hong Kong, Harbin, and Singapore to escape the oppressively humid summers. They arrived in Unzen by bamboo palanquin from Obama, 11km (6¾ miles) away. In 1911, Unzen became the first prefectural park in Japan. In 1934, the area became Unzen-Amakusa National Park ★★, one of the nation's first national parks; it covers 282 sq. km (113 sq. miles).

I like Unzen Spa because it's small and navigable. It consists basically of just a few streets with hotels and ryokan spread along them, a welcome relief if you've been spending hectic weeks rushing through big cities and catching buses and trains. Hiking paths wind into the tree-covered hills, and dense clouds of steam arise from solfataras (vents) and fumaroles, evidence of volcanic activity. For visitors, the best result of all that thermal activity is the abundance of hot springs: Unzen's name derives from "Onsen," meaning "hot spring."

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE The only way to get to Unzen via public transportation is by bus. From Nagasaki, buses depart three times a day from the Ken-ei Bus Terminal (☎ 095/826-6221) across the street from Nagasaki Station (sit on the right side of the bus for the most panoramic views). The ride takes about 1 hour and 40 minutes and costs ¥1,900 ($16/£8) one-way. For bus and train schedules, drop by the Nagasaki Prefectural Information Center on the second floor of the Ken-ei Bus Terminal.

You can also reach Unzen from Kumamoto. From Kumamoto Port (which you can reach in 25 min. by bus from Kumamoto Station for ¥420/$3.50/£1.75), take the 1-hour ferry for ¥680 ($5.65/£2.85) or the faster 30-minute Ocean Arrow for ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) to Shimabara Port, where you can catch a bus bound for Unzen, which takes an additional 40 minutes and costs ¥730 ($6.10/£3.05) one-way.

VISITOR INFORMATION Before leaving Tokyo or Narita or Kansai international airports, be sure to stop by the Tourist Information Center to pick up the free leaflet “Nagasaki, Unzen, Goto Islands, Iki and Tsushima” from the Tourist Information Center in Tokyo or Kansai or Narita international airports, or download it from JNTO’s website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under “Browse by Destinations.” In Nagasaki, stop by the Nagasaki Prefectural Information Center, across from Nagasaki Station on the second floor of the Ken-ei Bus Terminal.

In Unzen, the Tourist Information Center (☎ 0957/73-3434; www.unzen.org; daily 9am–5pm), is located in the heart of Unzen Spa next to the Unzen Spa House and across from the police station (between the Nishi-Iriguchi and Oyama-no-Johokan bus stops). It has a good English-language map of Unzen and the surrounding area and a hiking map, but not much English is spoken. Nearby is the park’s Mount Unzen Visitor Center (☎ 0957/73-3636; daily 9am–6pm, to 5pm Nov–Mar), with displays and information on the entire national park.

GETTING AROUND Buses from Nagasaki make four stops in Unzen Spa, terminating at Unzen’s Ken-ei Bus Center. I’ve provided the bus-stop name for accommodations so you can alight at the nearest stop. Otherwise, Unzen is so small you can walk from one end to the other in about 20 minutes.

WHAT TO SEE & DO

When the area around Unzen Spa was designated a national park in 1934, it was named after what was thought to be an extinct volcanic chain, collectively called Mount Unzen. In 1990, however, a peak in Mount Unzen—Mount Fugen—erupted for the first time in almost 200 years, killing several dozen people on its eastern slope and leaving behind a huge lava dome. Unzen Spa, on the opposite side, was untouched and remains the area’s most popular resort town.

THE HELLS (JIGOKU) Unzen Spa literally bubbles with activity, as sulfurous hot springs erupt into surface cauldrons of scalding water in an area known as the Hells (Jigoku). Indeed, in the 1600s, these cauldrons were used for hellish punishment, as some 30 Christians were boiled alive here after Christianity was outlawed in Japan. Today, Unzen Spa has more than 30 solfataras and fumaroles, with the Hells providing the greatest show of geothermal activity, making this spot Unzen’s number-one attraction. It’s a favorite hangout of huge black ravens, and the barren land has been baked a chalky white through the centuries. Pathways lead through the hot-spring Hells, where sulfur vapors rise thickly to veil pine trees on surrounding hills. A simple cross erected on stones serves as a memorial to the Christians killed here.

PANORAMIC VIEWS ★ If you feel like taking an excursion, head for Mount Fugen, Unzen’s most popular destination outside Unzen Spa. Buses depart about six times a day for Nita Pass, about a 23-minute ride away (round-trip fare: ¥740/$6.15/£3.10). From Nita Pass, board the 3-minute ropeway for ¥1,220 ($10/£5.10) round-trip to go up higher to Mount Myoken, which at 1,333m (4,399 ft.) offers spectacular panoramic views. If you’re ready for some real climbing, however, continue for another hour or so along a marked path leading starkly uphill to the summit of Mount Fugen, once Unzen’s highest peak at 1,359m (4,485 ft.) above sea level—this is the peak that erupted in 1990. On a clear day, you’ll be rewarded with splendid views of other volcanic peaks as far away as Mount Aso in the middle of Kyushu, as well as Mount Heisei Shinzan (a lava dome), born during Mount Fugen’s last eruption

Moments Fertile Grounds

I was looking for an easy hike, somewhere quiet to write in my journal, and settled for Konohanasakuya-Hime Jinja, a hillside shrine established 300 years ago above the Gensei-Numa Marsh on the edge of Unzen Spa. Unknowingly, I had picked a shrine dedicated to the deity of flowers, where people come to pray for fertility, safe childbirth, and family harmony. So imagine my delight when I reached the shrine's small clearing to discover two unmistakable statues of—well, you'll just have to see for yourself. Benches provide views over Unzen to Mount Myoken and the ropeway.

and now Unzen's loftiest peak at 1,483m (4,894 ft.). Allow at least 2½ hours for the hike to Mount Fugen and back so you don't miss the last bus.

TAKING THE WATERS On the main street of Unzen are the Finger Spa and the Foot Spa, where you can soak the appropriate appendages in outdoor baths for free. If you'd like to get more than your feet wet (though all accommodations below offer hot-spring baths), the Unzen Spa House, across from the Unzen Kanko Hotel (☎ 0957/73-3131), is open Monday to Saturday 10am to 6pm; on Sundays and holidays (including summer school vacation from mid-July through Aug), it's open to 7pm. Indoor cypress baths and rotenburo (outdoor hot-spring baths) cost ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35). In the Spa House is also the Vidro Museum (daily 9am–6pm), with Edo-Era Nagasaki glass and Bohemian, Italian, French, and other glassware. Admission here is ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) extra.

WHERE TO STAY

Keep in mind that, as with most resort areas in Japan, Unzen tends to be crowded and sometimes even fully booked during Golden Week, during New Year's, and from mid-July to August. The best times of year are late April to June, when Unzen's famous azalea bushes are in glorious bloom, and late October and early November, when the maple leaves turn brilliant reds.

With the exception of one inexpensive accommodation at the end of this section, all the ryokan and hotels listed here are within an easy walk of bus stops along the route traversed by the bus from Nagasaki, so I've included the bus stops for each establishment below. You can also tell the bus driver where you're staying, and he'll drop you off at the nearest stop (if you're arriving from Kumamoto, buses go only to the bus terminal).

Kyushu Hotel ★★ ★ Despite its name, the Kyushu Hotel, built in 1917, is a lovely, old-style ryokan in an updated building with a view of a lovely traditional garden from its luxurious lobby. Yet it remains in step with the times, attracting young Japanese with a gracious and accommodating staff (the third-generation owners speak English), soft jazz playing in public places, and fusion cuisine in the dining hall that successfully blends Western and Japanese styles. If you prefer, you can opt for Japanese cuisine served in your room. But best of all, the Kyushu Hotel offers some of the most scenic views in town; many of its rooms boast great views of the hills as well as the Hells. Tatami rooms feature alcoves with Western-style chairs next to large windows, affording relaxing places to take in the view. There are also five Western-style rooms and five combination rooms with tatami areas and beds. The communal baths are spacious and inviting with both indoor and outdoor bathing, but if you don't care to bathe with everyone, reserve the private family bath, also with outdoor bath, for ¥2,100 ($18/£9; there's a 40-min. time limit).

Obamacho, Unzen-shi 320, Nagasaki-ken 854-0697. ☎ 0957/73-3234. Fax 0957/73-3733. qshuyyk@alpha.ocn.ne.jp. 85 units. ¥16,800–¥40,000 ($140–$333/£70–£167) per person. Rates include breakfast and dinner. AE, DC, MC, V. Bus: Oyama-no-Johokan (2 min.). Amenities: Restaurant; bar; lounge; indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; massage/treatment room; souvenir shop; in-room massage. In room: A/C, satellite TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

②03 Miyazaki Ryokan ★★ One of the largest Japanese inns in Unzen, this modern ryokan first opened 75 years ago and overlooks a beautiful, gracefully manicured garden with hills and sulfur vapors rising in the background—absolutely exquisite when the azaleas are in bloom. Upon arrival, you'll be served green tea and sweets by graceful women in kimono. Afterward, you'll want to ease into the large, marble hot-spring bath overlooking a rock-lined outdoor bath, separated for men and women. Or, if you're shy about bathing with others or want to make it a family affair, make a reservation, at no extra charge, for the private family bath. After bathing, relax in the peaceful tatami area with Go (a Japanese board game) tables, huge flower arrangements, and a dispenser of cool mugi cha (wheat tea). Next comes one of the best reasons to stay here: the kaiseki meal. Although breakfast (Western style, if desired) is served in a communal dining area, an excellent dinner is served in your guest room in true ryokan fashion. In addition to Japanese-style tatami rooms, there are combination rooms with twin beds and a separate tatami area. Because rates are the same regardless of which direction the rooms face, I advise securing one that looks out over the garden or, barring that, the Hells (views from here are not as good, however, as from the Kyushu Hotel above).

MODERATE

Unzen Kanko Hotel ★★ ★ Finds If you're the least bit romantic, you won't be able to resist staying at this old-fashioned mountain lodge, built in 1935 of stone and wood, covered in ivy, and resembling a Swiss chalet (even the female staff is donned in dirndl-like dresses). No wonder it's been designated an Important Tangible Cultural Heritage Site. The lobby, main dining hall, and public spaces have changed little over the decades, with whitewashed walls, dark-beamed ceilings, and inviting sofas and chairs. The rooms are rustic and old-fashioned, too, with heavy ceiling-to-floor curtains tied back to reveal a balcony (ask for a room facing the front), brass doorsills, a high ceiling, and wooden beams, along with modern additions such as duvet-covered beds.

②04 Kaseya Ryokan Located on the main street through town not far from the bus center (the last stop on buses into town from Nagasaki), this economically priced ryokan dates from 1909 but has been remodeled. The kind owners are fond of children; they have three of their own and remembered Janie's daughter many years later. All of the rooms are Japanese-style, simply decorated but with high ceilings and flower arrangements. Ask for a room in the back—they're quieter. A small shop in the lobby sells blue-and-white tie-dyed clothing, while a massage chair is available free of charge. Coffee is free in the mornings, and Western-style breakfasts are available.

Obamacho, Unzen-shi 315, Nagasaki-ken 854-0621. ☎ 0957/73-3321. Fax 0957/73-3322. info@kaseya.jp. 13 units, none with bathroom. ¥8,550 ($71/£36) per person. Rate higher during Golden Week and New Year's. Rates include breakfast and dinner. AE, MC, V. Bus: Jinja-mae (2 min.). Amenities: Hot-spring baths (including a private one for families); in-room massage; lobby computer w/free Internet access. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea, safe.

205 Seiunso Kokumin Shukusha Value Formerly a youth hostel, this public lodging underwent extensive remodeling and now offers as much comfort and as many facilities as a moderately priced resort hotel. Rooms are pleasant, Japanese style (you lay out your own futon here); most have a small balcony offering views of the surrounding woods, and all have sinks and toilets. There are also three combination rooms with both beds and tatami areas that are quite spacious, are accessible to travelers with disabilities, and have the best views; you can stay in these rooms for the same charge if they're not booked. In addition to public baths, there are two private family baths (¥1,050/$8.75/£4.40 for 50 min.). Needless to say, you should reserve early to stay here. The main disadvantage is that the location is outside Unzen, about a 30-minute walk from the Hells, and check-in isn't until 4pm.

Obamacho, Unzen-shi 500-1, Nagasaki-ken 854-0621. ☎ 0957/73-3273. Fax 0957/73-2698. 63 units, none with bathroom. ¥7,920 ($66/£33) per person with 2 meals. No credit cards. Bus: Nishi-Iriguchi (20 min.). Pickup service available from Ken-ei Bus Center. Amenities: Restaurant; indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths w/relaxation room; game center; in-room massage; coin-op washer/dryer; playground. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea, safe.

WHERE TO DINE

Even if you don't stay at the Unzen Kanko Hotel, you may want to come here for lunch. Its old-fashioned dining hall is large with a high ceiling, wainscoting, wooden floors, white tablecloths, and flowers on each table. It serves both Japanese and Western selections, with set lunches ranging from ¥2,100 to ¥5,000 ($18-$42/£9-£21) and set dinners starting at ¥6,000 ($50/£25), along with a la carte items such as steak and chicken. The dining hall is open for lunch from noon to 2pm and for dinner starting at 6pm, with last orders taken at 8pm.

Unzen Tabi no Beer Kan WESTERN This microbrewery, light and airy with large windows overlooking wooded hills and a lake, brews three different kinds of beer. A half liter costs ¥735 ($6.10/£3.05); a sampler of all three costs ¥787 ($6.55/£3.30). A limited English-language menu lists four kinds of pizza and three kinds of pasta, but the restaurant is most known for its beer curry for ¥945 ($7.85/£3.95), which includes a small salad.

Across from the Ken-ei Bus Center. ☎ 0957/73-3113. Main dishes ¥700-¥1,050 ($5.85-$8.75/£2.95-£4.40). AE, MC, V. Daily 11am-8pm. Bus: Ken-ei Bus Center (1 min.).

4 Kumamoto ★

1,293km (804 miles) W of Tokyo; 189km (118 miles) S of Fukuoka

Located roughly halfway down Kyushu's western side, Kumamoto boasts a fine castle and a landscaped garden, both with origins stretching from the first half of the 17th century. Once one of Japan's most important castle towns, Kumamoto today is the progressive capital of Kumamoto Prefecture, with a population of 670,000. Yet it retains a small-town atmosphere, which is precisely why I like it.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane JAL and ANA fly to Kumamoto Airport (☎ 096/232-2810; www.kmj-ab.co.jp) from Tokyo in 1 hour and 40 minutes, with one-way fares ranging from ¥21,550 ($180/£90) for a 21-day advance purchase to ¥33,700 ($280/£140) for a regular ticket. Local airline Skynet Asia Airways (☎ 0120/737-283 toll-free) offers a regular one-way ticket for ¥25,660 ($214/£107), but advance-purchase tickets can go as low as ¥13,100 ($109/£55). Airport shuttle buses operate from the airport to Kumamoto Station and the Kumamoto Kotsu (bus) Center downtown, taking about 54 minutes and costing ¥670 ($5.60/£2.80).

By Train It takes about 9 hours to reach Kumamoto from Tokyo, not including transfers, at a cost of ¥23,020 ($192/£96) for an unreserved seat. There's also a night train called the Hayabusa, which travels from Tokyo to Kumamoto in a little less than 18 hours and costs ¥24,150 ($201/£101) in the least expensive sleeper. From Fukuoka's Hakata Station (terminus of the bullet train from Tokyo), limited express trains depart three times an hour, reaching Kumamoto in about 1½ hours and costing ¥3,740 ($31/£16) for a reserved seat. (In 2011, a new bullet train will connect Kumamoto and Fukuoka in 35 min.) There are also four express trains daily from Beppu, reaching Kumamoto in 3 hours.

VISITOR INFORMATION The leaflet "Kumamoto and Mount Aso," distributed by the Tourist Information Centers in Tokyo and in Narita and Kansai international airports, contains information on how to get to Kumamoto and places of interest in the city (you can also download it from JNTO's website at www.jnto.go.jp by going to "Browse by Destinations"). In Kumamoto, there's a Kumamoto Tourist Office inside Kumamoto Station near the ticket gate (☎ 096/352-3743; daily 8:30am–7pm). It has a good English-language map and brochure and is staffed by helpful English speakers who can make lodging reservations. In the city center, there's another Kumamoto Tourist Information Center kiosk in the Ninomaru parking lot near Kumamoto Castle (☎ 096/322-5060; daily 9am–5:30pm, to 5pm Nov–Mar). If you're coming by plane, stop by the Kumamoto Airport Information Office (☎ 096/232-2810; daily 6:50am–9:30pm).

More information is available on the city's website at www.city.kumamoto.kumamoto.jp, but a more comprehensive overview is provided by Kumamoto Prefecture's website at <http://cyber.pref.kumamoto.jp>.

INTERNET ACCESS The Kumamoto City International Center, 4–8 Hanabatacho (☎ 096/359–2121; streetcar: Kumamotojo-mae), offers three computers with

Tips Bus & Ferry from Unzen Spa

From Unzen Spa, the fastest way to reach Kumamoto is to take a bus (there are nine daily departures) 40 minutes to Shimabara Port (fare: ¥730/$6.10/£3.05), where you can then board a 1-hour ferry (fare: ¥680/$5.65/£2.85) or a 30-minute Ocean Arrow (fare: ¥800/$6.65/£3.35) to Kumamoto Port. Buses connect Kumamoto Port with Kumamoto Station in 25 minutes for ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75).

free Internet access on the second floor Monday to Friday 9am to 8pm and weekends 9am to 7pm (closed the second and fourth Mon of every month). Otherwise, Media Café Popeye, located on the Kamitori covered shopping street (☎ 096/326-6767; streetcar: Toricho-suji), is open 24 hours and charges ¥420 ($3.50/£1.75) for an hour's use of its computers.

MAIL There's a convenient post office, with ATMs that accept international credit cards, beside Kumamoto Station to the north; it's open Monday to Friday 9am to 5:30pm and 9am to 5pm Saturday and Sunday. Kumamoto's main post office, located in front of the Senba-bashi streetcar stop, has longer hours: Monday to Friday 7am to 11pm, Saturday 9am to 9pm, and Sunday and holidays 9am to 7pm.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Kumamoto Station lies far south of the city's downtown area, but transportation between the two is easy via streetcar no. 2, which departs from in front of the station and reaches the downtown area in about 10 minutes. Downtown centers on three covered shopping streets called Shimotori, Kamitori, and Sunroad Shinshigai, with many department stores, shops, hotels, bars, pachinko parlors, and restaurants in the area. Here, too, is the city's bus station, the Kumamoto Kotsu Center, from which all buses in the city depart. Just north of downtown, within walking distance, rises Kumamoto Castle, which is surrounded by moats, turrets, and expansive greenery, on the edge of which are several museums and historic sites. Suizenji Garden lies far to the east.

Getting around Kumamoto via old-fashioned streetcar is easy because there are only two lines. Streetcar no. 2 is most convenient for tourists; the only one departing from Kumamoto Station, it passes through downtown and near Kumamoto Castle (stop: Kumamotojo-mae) before going onward to Suizenji Garden (stop: Suizenji-Koen-mae). Take a ticket when you board; fares increase the farther you go, from ¥130 to ¥200 ($1.10–$1.65/55p–85p) and you pay when you get off.

Because the grounds surrounding Kumamoto Castle encompass 97 hectares (242 acres), with a circumference of 9km (5½ miles), many visitors opt to see sights via the Shu-yu Shiomegurin excursion bus, which departs every 30 minutes from Kumamoto Station and stops at Kumoto Castle, Hosokawa Mansion, and other places of interest. This bus costs ¥130 ($1.10/55p) for a single journey, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for the entire day; as always, children pay half fare.

If you plan on taking public transportation at least four times in 1 day, you can save money by purchasing a 1-day pass, which allows unlimited travel on all city buses (including the above excursion bus) and streetcars for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10). It includes a 20% discount off admission to a few sights, including Kumamoto Castle.

THE TOP ATTRACTIONS

Kumamoto Castle ★★ Completed in 1607, Kumamoto Castle is massive—it took 7 years to build. It was constructed under the direction of Kato Kiyomasa, a great warrior who fought alongside Tokugawa Ieyasu in battle and was rewarded for his loyalty with land. The castle was built atop a hill and had two main towers, 49 turrets, 29 gates, and 18 two-story gatehouses; to make the walls impossible for enemies to scale, they were built with curves at the bottom and nearly vertical at the top and were crowned with an overhang. More than 100 wells ensured water even during a siege, while camphor and ginkgo trees were planted for firewood and edible nuts. The castle passed into the possession of the Hosokawa family in 1632 and remained an important stronghold for the Tokugawa shogunate throughout its 250 years of rule, particularly in campaigns against the powerful and independent-minded lords of southern Kyushu. During that time, 11 generations of the Hosokawa clan ruled over Kumamoto.

Much of the castle was destroyed in 1877 during the Seinan Rebellion led by Saigo Takamori, a samurai who was unhappy with the new policies of the Meiji government in which ancient samurai rights were rescinded. Saigo led a troop of samurai in an attack on the castle and its imperial troops, who remained under siege for 53 days before government reinforcements finally arrived and quelled the rebellion. When the smoke cleared, most of the castle lay in smoldering ruins.

The castle was reconstructed in 1960 of ferroconcrete, and although it's not nearly as massive as before, it's still quite impressive and remains Kumamoto's star attraction (famous Japanese director Kurosawa Akira used it for his epic drama Ran). The interior houses a museum with elaborately decorated palanquins, models of Kumamoto and the castle during the Edo Period, armor, swords, former possessions of both Kato Kiyomasa and the Hosokawa family, and rifles and other artifacts from the Seinan Rebellion. Behind the castle is one of 11 remaining turrets, which is three tiered and five stories. Because the castle grounds are large, you'll probably spend more than an hour here (in May 2008, a replica of the Honmaru Goten, a 17th-c. palace that was destroyed in the Seinan Rebellion, is slated to open beside the castle). If you intend to visit Hosokawa Mansion (see "More to See & Do," below), buy a joint ticket for entrance to both sights (¥640/$5.35/£2.65 for adults and ¥240/$2/£1 for children).

1-1 Honmaru. ☎ 096/352-5900. Admission ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) children. Apr–Oct daily 8:30am–5:30pm; Nov–Mar daily 8:30am–4:30pm. Streetcar: Kumamotojo-mae (10 min.) or Shiyakusho-mae (6 min.). Excursion bus: Kumamotojo stop (5 min.).

Suizenji Garden (Suizenji Jojuen) ★ Laid out in the 1630s by Hosokawa Tadatoshi as a retreat for the tea ceremony and as the grounds of a nearby temple, Suizenji Garden took about 80 years to complete. The garden wraps itself around a cold spring-fed lake (considered particularly good for making tea). But what makes the place especially interesting is that its design incorporates famous scenes in miniature from the 53 stages of the ancient Tokaido Highway, which connected Kyoto and Tokyo. (The 53 stages were also immortalized in Hiroshige's famous woodblock prints.) Most recognizable are cone-shaped Mount Fuji and Lake Biwa; near the garden's entrance is Nihon Bashi (Bridge of Japan), Edo's starting point on the Tokaido Road. The park is small—almost disappointingly so—and for the life of me, I can't figure out more than a handful of the 53 stages. Maybe you'll have better luck. Pastoral views are also marred by—my pet peeve—surrounding buildings. Take solace by sipping tea in a traditional thatched-roof teahouse with views of the pond (¥600/$5/£2.50). On garden grounds is also Izumi Shrine, built in 1878 and dedicated to the Hosokawa lords, as well as a Noh theater, where Noh is performed in spring and fall ceremonies. A stroll of the garden takes about 30 minutes.

8-1 Suizenji Koen. ☎ 096/383-0074. www.suizenji.or.jp. Admission ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) children. Mar–Nov daily 7:30am–6pm; Dec–Feb daily 8am–5pm. Streetcar: no. 2 from Kumamoto Station or the downtown area to Suizenji-Koen-mae (about a 20-min. ride), followed by a 3-min. walk.

MORE TO SEE & DO

Contemporary Art Museum, Kumamoto ★ (Finds) Because it's free (except during special exhibitions) and centrally located in downtown Kumamoto, consider taking a 30-minute jaunt through this forerunner in contemporary art, in which art is treated as an experience rather than something to be viewed passively by the viewer. Showcasing works by local talent Ide Nobumichi, as well as commissioned installations by Kusama Yayoi (look for her Infinity Mirrored Room) and Miyajima Tatsuo (with a pillar of flashing diodes) and special exhibits, it seems more like a community center than a museum, with a children's play corner and a Ping-Pong table designed by Ishii Hiroshi that responds digitally to the ball. My favorite is the library, with art, books, and comfortable sofas (a favorite place, apparently, for dozing off), where there's a free jam session the second and fourth Friday of every month at 6:30pm, as well as nightly piano music from 7 to 7:30pm, followed by 10 minutes of darkness in which a ceiling light installation, by James Turrell, slowly transforms from blue to red. 2-3 Kamitoro-cho. ☎ 096/278-7500. www.camk.or.jp. Free admission, except for some special exhibits. Wed-Mon 10am-8pm (you must enter by 7:30pm). Streetcar: Toricho-suji (1 min.).

Hosokawa Mansion (Kyu-Hosokawa Gyobutei) ★ A 10-minute walk north of Kumamoto Castle, this 300-year-old samurai mansion was built by a subsidiary member of the Hosokawa clan, Lord Gyobu, and was enlarged in the 1800s. Guided tours (often available in English-language) lasting 15 minutes take visitors through 24 rooms, including the lord's study and reception room, teahouse, kitchen, and servants' quarters. You'll see Edo-Era furnishings and personal items including an Edo clock, a suitcase, clothing, games, a woman's cosmetic case, lacquerware, a kimono chest, and more, giving you a good idea of how feudal lords lived during the Edo Period.

3-1 Furukyo-machi. ☎ 096/352-6522. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥100 (85¢/45p) children. Combination ticket for Hosokawa Mansion and Kumamoto Castle ¥640 ($5.35/£2.70) adults, ¥240 ($2/£1) children. Apr-Oct daily 8:30am-5:30pm; Nov-Mar daily 8:30am-4:30pm. Excursion bus: Hakubutsukan-mae (1 min.).

SHOOTING THE KUMAGAWA RAPIDS ★★

If you've had enough of shrines, castles, and gardens, consider shooting the Kumagawa Rapids. Compared to wild rivers in the United States, the Kumagawa seems pretty tame; people do the trip not so much for the thrill of the ride but for the scenery of a narrow river valley bordered by wooded hills and for the camaraderie afforded by sitting on tatami in a traditional wooden boat steered by boatmen fore and aft. You can also ride a modern raft guided by a staff of young professionals that goes through slightly rougher water. Reservations are a must for all rides.

The Kumagawa Kudari Kabushiki Company, Shimoshin-machi 333-1 (a 20-min. walk from Hitoyoshi Station; walk straight ahead to the third stoplight and turn left), Hitoyoshi City (☎ 0966/22-5555), offers two different 90-minute routes in its wooden boats. The Seiryu Course (Calm Course) covers 8km (5 miles) of a gentle stretch of the river beginning in Hitoyoshi and ending in Watari. It's offered year-round; December through February, the boats have heated blankets (kotatsu). The cost is ¥2,835 ($24/£12) for adults and ¥1,890 ($16/£8) for children; winter trips with kotatsu cost ¥3,675 ($31/£16) and ¥2,835 ($24/£12) respectively.

The Kyuryu Course (Rapids Course) covers 10km (6¼ miles), beginning downriver in Watari (a 5-min. walk from Watari Station; turn left out of the station and left again over the tracks) and ending in Kyusendo, and is more exciting and requires more skillful maneuvering, though the river is still only a grade 2. It's offered April through October and costs ¥3,675 ($31/£16) for adults and ¥2,100 ($18/£9) for children. During rainy season (mid-June to mid-July), this trip is sometimes canceled due to swollen rivers or high winds.

Kumagawa Kudari Kabushiki also offers rafting. The Fighting Course (90 min.) for ¥6,300 ($53/£27) begins at Watari Station; from there you'll be taken to Ishochi, where you will put in and raft to Kyusendo. The All Around rafting course (3 hr.) runs from Watari to Kyusendo and costs ¥7,875 ($66/£33). Both of these run April through October, include a post-trip soak in an onsen in Kunagawa, and conclude with a return trip via minibus to Watari. Note, however, that children under 11 and adults over 60 are not allowed on rafting trips.

You can reach Hitoyoshi by bus from Kumamoto Kotsu Center in about 1½ hours, with fares costing ¥2,300 ($19/£9.50) one-way. There are also six trains a day from Kumamoto Station to Hitoyoshi; the express train takes 1½ hours and costs ¥1,774 ($15/£7.50). Trains and buses connect Watari and Kyusendo with Kumamoto. If you're going onward to Kagoshima, you can return to Hitoyoshi by local train for a bus that will deliver you to Kagoshima Chuo Station in 2 hours for ¥2,070 ($17/£8.50). There is also a retro-fitted scenic sightseeing train, the Isaburo-Shinpei, which travels between Hitoyoshi and Yoshimatsu twice a day in a little over an hour, including switchbacks along the way and stops at scenic overlooks. The fare is ¥720 ($6/£3), with a surcharge of ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) added during peak season (free for holders of Japan Rail Pass). From Yoshimatsu, it then takes 100 minutes by train onward to Kagoshima Chuo Station (fare: ¥1,430/$12/£6). For timetables, contact the JR information office in Kumamoto Station.

SHOPPING

One of Kumamoto's most famous products is its Higo Inlay or damascene, in which gold, silver, and copper are inlaid on an iron plate to form patterns of flowers, bamboo, and other designs. Originally used to adorn sword guards and armor, damascene today is used on such accessories as paperweights, jewelry, and tie clasps. Another Kumamoto product is the Yamaga lantern, made of gold paper and used during the Yamaga Lantern Festival held in August. Other local products include Amakusa pearls, pottery, knives, toys, and bamboo items.

One place to shop for Higo Inlay, knives, pottery, Yamaga paper lanterns, Amakusa pearls, toys, shochu, sake, and confections is the (206) Display Hall of Kumamoto Products (Kumamoto-ken Bussankan), located on the third floor of the Sanbun Kaikan Building (which is part of the Sangyo Bunka Kaikan complex) at 7–10 Hanabata-cho (☎ 096/353-1168; daily 10am–6pm, closed second and fourth Mon each month). KKR Hotel Kumamoto Finds Located north of Kumamoto Castle across the street, this trendy hotel buzzes with activity as a popular wedding and banquet venue (weekdays are quieter and also cheaper). The best reason to stay here is its up-close view of the castle, with the absolute best views provided by twin rooms above the hotel's rooftop garden (visible also from the hotel's Japanese restaurant). Unfortunately, none of the hotel's 11 single rooms have castle views (though solo travelers can stay in a twin with castle views for ¥10,000/$83/£42), and there are no double rooms. As this hotel is a 10-minute trek from the nearest streetcar stop, stay here only if you can get that view.

Kumamoto Hotel Castle This tall brick hotel is just east of Kumamoto Castle, with good views of the castle from some of its more expensive twin rooms. A subdued, quiet, and conservative hotel that's been a city mainstay for more than 45 years, it's popular with middle-aged Japanese, including locals who come for receptions or to dine in one of its restaurants, and it sports the most elaborate Yamaga lantern (in the shape of a pagoda) I've ever seen in its lobby. Rooms are rather standard, with the cheapest singles no larger than those at the Toyoko Inn (see below), though deluxe doubles and twins face the castle in a more spacious setting with windows that open.

Kajita Two pug-nosed dogs (real) in a cage by the front door, and a mongoose, a cobra, and birds (stuffed) in the lobby greet you at this friendly, family-run establishment, a member of the Japanese Inn Group. It has a central location, just a 10-minute walk to the castle grounds and a 2-minute walk to the streetcar that will take you onward to Suizenji Garden. Tatami rooms, named after flowers, are simple but clean. If you call, you'll most likely be picked up at the station, though if no car is available, someone will wait for you at the bus stop. A cupboard in the hall has self-service coffee and tea free of charge. The dining room is so packed with stuff I don't think you could fit in another single item.

Toyoko Inn Kumamoto Shinshigai Value Right in the middle of downtown near department stores and shopping, this business chain offers the usual tiny rooms and free perks that make it the number-one choice for budget travelers, including free domestic calls from lobby phones and free Wi-Fi in the lobby. The modern building has four floors of dining with seating on tatami or at low tables with leg wells. There are photos outside the front door and in the menu showing dishes of basashi, eel, rice casseroles (kamameshi), and other local specialties. There's a vegetarian set dinner for ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) that includes dengaku and renkon and is very tasty, while the ¥5,250 ($44/£22) set dinner includes all the local favorites. Set lunches center on kamameshi and sushi, such as the Ladies Sushi Set for ¥1,600 ($13/£6.50).

②08 Senri ★★ LOCAL SPECIALTIES/VARIED JAPANESE You can try Kumamoto's local dishes at this restaurant right in Suizenji Garden, available from a Japanese menu featuring set meals. For lunch, you can choose main dishes such as eel, river fish, or tempura, served with side dishes of vegetable, soup, rice, and tea. Or order the Kyodo-ryori Course, which includes local specialties such as fried lotus, basashi, and dengaku. Dinners include the same items as lunch plus extra dishes. For a splurge, order kaiseki at least 1 day in advance. Dining is in small tatami rooms; choice rooms face the garden.

Fontana di Otani ITALIAN/CONTINENTAL Kumamoto Station is a culinary wasteland (which is sure to change once the Shinkansen rolls in), so this casual coffee shop in one of Kumamoto's most well-known hotels is your best bet here. Its menu features lighter fare such as spaghetti, curry, and sandwiches, available all day, as well as a very reasonably priced set lunch (served to 2pm) that includes a trip through a salad bar. The set dinner (available 5–9pm) gives a choice of main dish, such as sautéed salmon in a pine nut sauce or roasted beef filet and mushrooms in a red-wine sauce, along with side dishes.

Hotel New Otani Kumamoto, 1-13-1 Kasuga. ☎ 096/326-1111. Main dishes ¥1,100–¥2,100 ($9.15–$17/£4.60–£8.50); set lunch ¥1,500 ($12/£6); set dinner ¥2,500 ($21/£11). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–10pm. Station: Kumamoto (1 min., to the left).

Merry Wish ★ Finds ORGANIC JAPANESE Although its location is not convenient to either Kagoshima Station or downtown (it lies on the streetcar route between them), people who like healthy, organic meals go out of their way to dine at this restaurant, simply decorated with rough wooden floors, jazz background music, and tables overlooking a canal. It's located at the back of a complex of Edo-Era buildings, which also contain an organic health-food store and shops selling natural, environmentally friendly products. Although set lunches change daily, they always include a vegetarian choice. Other set meals offer a choice of fish or chicken, along with bread, rice, or genmai (unpolished brown rice).

Head west on the street beside the fire station (if you're coming from Kagoshima Station, it's ahead around the bend), and take the 1st left at the stoplight; it will be on your right.

209 Tateki ★ KUSHIAGE Located on a street filled with striptease clubs (be sure to match the kanji in appendix C with the sign outside the door—otherwise you'll get more than skewered food), Tateki serves kushiage, or skewered meats and vegetables. Although kushiage isn't unusual cuisine in Japan, this restaurant's method of cooking and serving it is: Instead of counter seating, behind which the cook prepares your food, here you sit on tatami while a waiter in a beret kneels at your personal hibachi and grills your meal right in front of you. The least-expensive set dinner comes with 10 sticks of meat and vegetables plus appetizer, salad, and soba; the other two set dinners add one or two sticks along with more side dishes. The set lunch consists of seven sticks, two sauces, rice, soup, appetizer, and salad.

Kaishika Building, 1–11–8 Shimotori. ☎ 096/325-4989. Set lunch ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40); set dinners ¥2,100–¥4,200 ($17–$35/£8.50–£17). No credit cards. Daily 11:30am–11pm. Streetcar: Kumamotojo-mae (5 min.). Walk east on Ginza Dori 3 blocks, turn right into the Shimotori shopping arcade, and after 1 block turn right onto an unmarked street called Korinjidori; Tateki will be on the left toward the back of the 2nd (brick) building with a statue of a dog outside.

5 Kagoshima ★

1,483km (927 miles) SW of Tokyo; 315km (197 miles) S of Fukuoka; 197km (123 miles) S of Kumamoto; 343km (214 miles) SW of Beppu

With a population of 600,000 residents and capital of Kagoshima Prefecture, Kagoshima is a city of palm trees, flowering trees and bushes, wide avenues, and people who are like the weather—warm, mild-tempered, and easygoing. The city spreads along Kinko Bay and boasts one of the most unusual bay vistas in the world: Sakurajima, an active volcano, rising from the waters. During summer vacation (July 21–Aug), there are nightly fireworks displays over the bay (with a huge one held the end of Aug). Kagoshima is also home to Sengan'en Garden, one of my favorite gardens in Japan.

Because of its relative isolation at the southern tip of Japan, far away from the capitals of Kyoto and Tokyo, Kagoshima has developed an independent spirit through the centuries that has fostered a number of great men and accomplishments. Foremost is the Shimadzu clan (also spelled Shimazu), a remarkable family that for 29 generations (almost 700 years) ruled over Kagoshima and its vicinity before the Meiji Restoration in 1868. Much of Japan's early contact with the outside world was via Kagoshima, first with China and then with the Western world. Japan's first contact with Christianity occurred in Kagoshima when St. Francis Xavier landed here in 1549; although he stayed only 10 months, he converted more than 600 Japanese to Christianity. Kagoshima is also where firearms were introduced to Japan.

By the mid-19th century, as the Tokugawa shogunate began losing strength and the confidence of the people, the Shimadzu family was already looking toward the future and the modernization of Japan. In the mid-1850s, the Shimadzus built the first Western-style factory in the country, employing 200 men to make cannons, glass, ceramics, land mines, ships, and farming tools. In 1865, while Japan's doors were still officially closed to the outside world and all contact with foreigners was forbidden, the Shimadzus smuggled 19 young men to Britain so they could learn foreign languages and technology. After these men returned to Japan, they became a driving force in the Meiji Restoration and Japan's modernization.

Another historical figure who played a major role during the Meiji Restoration was Saigo Takamori, who was born in Kagoshima Prefecture. A philosopher, scholar, educator, and poet, he helped restore Emperor Meiji to power, but because he was also a samurai, he subsequently became disillusioned when the ancient rights of the samurai class were rescinded and the wearing of swords was forbidden. He led a force of samurai against the government in what is called the Seinan Rebellion but was defeated. He then withdrew to Shiroyama in Kagoshima, where he committed suicide in 1877. Today, Saigo has many fans among Japanese, who still visit the cave on Shiroyama Hill where he committed suicide.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane You can reach Kagoshima from Tokyo (flight time: 1 hr. 45 min.), Osaka (1 hr. 10 min.), and Sapporo (2 hr. 35 min.) in addition to several other cities in Japan. The regular JAL and ANA fare from Tokyo is ¥35,700 ($298/£149), but Skynet Asia Airways (☎ 03/5733-5859 in Tokyo, or 0995/58-3555 in Kagoshima), based in Miyazaki, offers three flights daily from Tokyo's Haneda Airport for ¥28,500 ($238/£119). The airport is linked to Kagoshima Chuo Station in 1 hour by limousine bus, which departs every 10 to 15 minutes and costs ¥1,200 ($10/£5).

By JR Train Thanks to the new Kyushu Shinkansen Tsubame, which presently links Kagoshima with Shin-Yatsushiro but will eventually stretch the entire length between Kagoshima and Fukuoka, travel time is approximately 7½ hours from Tokyo (if you have a Rail Pass, travel time will be slower because you can't take the Nozomi), 5 hours from Osaka, 2 hours and 12 minutes from Fukuoka, 1 hour from Kumamoto, and 2 hours and 10 minutes from Miyazaki. Tickets from Tokyo cost ¥26,980 ($225/£112) for an unreserved seat, ¥8,920 ($74/£37) from Fukuoka, and ¥5,850 ($49/£24) from Kumamoto. All trains travel to Kagoshima Chuo (Central) Station. Trains from Miyazaki also stop at Kagoshima Station.

By Bus Buses connect Kyushu's cities more cheaply than the train. From Fukuoka's Tenjin Station, 24 buses depart daily and cost ¥5,300 ($44/£22) one-way for the 4-hour trip; from Miyazaki it takes about 2½ hours and costs ¥2,700 ($23/£12).

VISITOR INFORMATION Before departing Tokyo or Narita or Kansai international airports, stop by the Tourist Information Center to pick up the leaflet called "Kagoshima and Vicinity," which includes information on Ibusuki and Chiran, or download it from JNTO's website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under "Browse by Destinations."

In Kagoshima, there's a Tourist Information Center at Kagoshima Chuo Station (☎ 099/253-2500; daily 8:30am–7pm) near the East Exit, as well as at the airport (☎ 0995/58-2114; daily 7am–9pm). They have good English-language maps and a hefty guide that covers everything from public transportation to recommended sight-seeing itineraries.

The Kagoshima Prefectural Visitors Bureau is located on the first floor of the Sangyo Kaikan Building, 9–1 Meizan-cho (☎ 099/223-5771; Mon–Fri 8:30am–5:15pm), where you can obtain information on the city as well as the prefecture, including Ibusuki and Chiran. To find the office, take the streetcar to the Asahi-Dori stop and then walk southeast (toward the bay); the Sangyo Kaikan Building is on your left in the second block. More information is available at www.kagoshima-kankou.com/for.

INTERNET ACCESS Comic Buster, 3–1 Chuo-cho (☎ 099/250-6369), is about a 1-minute walk to the left after exiting from Kagoshima Chuo Station's east exit, on the fourth floor next to Sunkus convenience store. Open 24 hours, it charges ¥60 (50¢/25p) for 10 minutes.

MAIL Kagoshima's main post office (☎ 099/254-0288), where you can send letters and packages and obtain cash through ATMs, is located just north of Kagoshima Chuo Station, past the Amu Plaza. Its ATMs are open Monday to Friday 7am to 11pm, Saturday 9am to 9pm, and Sunday 9am to 7pm.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Downtown Kagoshima lies between Kagoshima Chuo Station and Kinko Bay, northeast of the station, with Tenmonkan-Dori (a covered shopping street) serving as the heart of the city.

You can walk from the station to downtown in about 20 minutes, but the city is also easy to get around by streetcar and bus. There are two streetcar lines (fare: ¥160/$1.35/70p), as well as two types of buses—City View buses and Kagoshima City buses. The Kagoshima City buses are regular buses used as commuter transportation by the people living here, while the City View buses are geared toward visiting tourists. Running every 30 minutes from 9am to 5pm daily (to 5:30pm daily mid-July through Aug), the City View buses look like old-time streetcars, have English-language announcements, and travel a 14km (9-mile) circuit through the city, beginning at Kagoshima Chuo Station (with departures on the hour and half-hour). They stop at all tourist sights, including Sengan'en, Sakurajima Ferry Terminal and Kagoshima Aquarium, and Tenmonkan covered shopping street. The fare is ¥180 ($1.50/75p), half fare for children, and you pay when you get off.

If you think you'll be doing a lot of traveling by streetcar and bus (including City View buses), invest in a 1-day pass for ¥600 ($5/£2.50), half fare for children, allowing unlimited travel on Kagoshima's two streetcar lines and on City View and Kagoshima City buses. Passes can be purchased at the Tourist Information Center in Kagoshima Chuo Station and aboard buses and streetcars.

WHAT TO SEE & DO

THE TOP ATTRACTIONS

MOUNT SAKURAJIMA ⚡ With ties to Naples, Italy, as its sister city, Kagoshima bills itself the “Naples of the Orient.” That's perhaps stretching things a bit, but Kagoshima is balmy most of the year and even has its own Mount Vesuvius: Mount Sakurajima, an active volcano across Kinko Bay that has erupted 30 times through recorded history and continues to puff steam into the sky and occasionally cover the city with fine soot and ash. In 1914, Sakurajima had a whopper of an eruption and belched up three billion tons of lava. When the eruption was over, the townspeople were surprised to discover that the flow was so great it now blocked the 500m-wide (1,666-ft.) channel separating the volcano from a neighboring peninsula; Sakurajima, which had once been an island, was now part of the mainland.

Moments Evening Cruises

One of the most popular ways to enjoy summer nights in Kagoshima is on a boat cruise of Kinko Bay, offered mid-July through August every evening from 7 to 9pm (except for a few days during Obon in mid-Aug), the highlight of which are fireworks over the water. Boats depart from the Kagoshima side of the Sakurajima Ferry Terminal and charge ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults, half fare for children. Call ☎ 099/293-2525 for more information.

Magnificent from far away and impressive if you're near the top, Sakurajima can be visited by ferry, which departs from the Sakurajima Ferry Terminal. The terminal is about an 8-minute walk from downtown Kagoshima or the Shiyakusho-mae streetcar stop, or a 2-minute walk from the Kagoshima Suizokukan-mae/Sakurajima-sanbashi City View bus stop. Ferries run 24 hours, departing every 10 to 15 minutes during the day and about once an hour through the night. The 15-minute trip to Sakurajima costs ¥150 ($1.25/65p) for adults, ¥80 (65¢/35p) for children. Upon reaching Sakurajima, stop off at the small tourist counter (☎ 099/293-4333; daily 8:30am–noon and 1–5pm) in the ferry terminal for a map of the island and information about buses to Furusato Onsen and beyond.

There are lava fields with walking paths near Sakurajima's ferry pier. The Nagisa Lava Trail is a 3km (1¾-mile) trail that starts near the pier and travels past huge lava boulders and pine trees (many, unfortunately, dying of disease). From the nearby Sakurajima Visitor Center (☎ 099/293-2443), with displays relating the history and natural history of Sakurajima, longer trails lead to the Karasujima Observation Point.

Another fun thing to do on Sakurajima is visit Furusato Onsen ♀♂, at the Furusato Kanko Hotel (☎ 099/221-3111), with open-air hot-spring baths set amid lava rocks right beside the sea. It also has an outdoor seawater swimming pool with a sunning terrace (presently closed due to damage from a typhoon; management isn't sure if it will reopen), an indoor 25m (82-ft.) lap pool heated with hot-spring water, and indoor hot-spring baths with windows overlooking the bay. You wear your swimsuit in the pools but should completely disrobe and wear only the provided white cotton kimono (yukata) when using the outdoor bath (an English-language handout provides guidelines). Furosato Onsen is open from 6am to 9:30pm. Note, however, that various parts of the onsen are closed for cleaning on different days of the week: The outdoor bath is closed Monday and Thursday until 3pm; the indoor hot-spring bath is closed Wednesday until 1:30pm; and the indoor hot-spring pool is closed the entire day Wednesday. Admission is ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.40) including yukata; bring your own towel or buy one for another ¥210 ($1.75/90p). You can reach Furusato Onsen by taking the free Furusato Kanko Hotel shuttle bus departing from the Sakurajima Ferry Terminal every 30 minutes from 8:45am to 5pm (no service 12:20–2:20pm). Otherwise, take the Kagoshima Kotsu Bus that departs once an hour from the ferry terminal, costing ¥290 ($2.40/£1.20) for the 15-minute trip. For more information on the Furusato Kanko Hotel, see "Where to Stay," below.

Fun Fact Mount Sakurajima's Produce

Mount Sakurajima's rich soil grows the world's largest radishes, averaging about 17 kilograms (37 lb.) but sometimes weighing in at as much as 36 kilograms (80 lb.), and the world's smallest oranges, only 3 centimeters (1¼ in.) in diameter.

Guided Tours of Sakurajima Because Sakurajima is sparsely populated with only limited public transportation, you might want to join one of several tours that visit lava fields, lookout points (including the Yunohira lookout point halfway up the volcano), a shrine half-buried in lava, and other sights. Tours, which depart daily from Kagoshima Chuo Station's bus stop no. 8 or 9 East, include a 6-hour tour that combines city sights and Sakurajima for ¥4,000 ($33/£17) and a 3½-hour Sakurajima Nature Sightseeing Tour for ¥2,200 ($18/£9). Children pay half fare. Call ☎ 099/247-2333 for more information.

SENGAN'EN GARDEN ★★ ★ Whereas Sakurajima, rising dramatically out of the bay, is Kagoshima's best-known landmark, Sengan'en, 9700-1 Yoshino-cho (☎ 099/247-1551), is its most widely visited attraction. The grounds of a countryside villa, it's a garden laid out more than 300 years ago by the Shimadzu clan, incorporating Sakurajima and Kinko Bay into its design scheme in a principle known as borrowed landscape. There's a lovely grove of bamboo, a waterfall located a 30-minute walk up a nature trail with good views over the bay, and the requisite pond, but my favorite is a particularly idyllic spot where the 21st lord of the Shimadzu family held famous poem-composing garden parties. Guests seated themselves on stones beside a gently meandering rivulet and were requested to have completed a poem by the time a cup filled with sake came drifting by on the tiny brook. Ah, those were the days! Today it remains Japan's only garden, with its original poem-composing garden (called Kyokusui) still intact.

The good life is also apparent in the Iso Residence, which was built as a villa by the Shimadzu clan about 350 years ago and became the family's main residence when the Meiji Restoration made feudal lords obsolete. Now only one-third its original size, the stately manor can be viewed by joining a tour conducted every 20 minutes and given in Japanese only (but with an English-language information sheet). You'll see 11 of the villa's 25 rooms, including a bedroom, a bathroom, a dressing room, living quarters, and reception rooms; throughout are furnishings and artifacts that once belonged to the Shimadzu clan. Ceremonial green tea and a sweet are included with the tour, served in a room with a view of an inner pond and garden. The 32nd generation of the Shimadzu family, incidentally, now resides in Kagoshima.

A must after visiting the garden, and included in the admission price to Sengan'en, is the Shoko Shuseikan Museum, located next to the garden. Built in the mid-1850s as Japan's first industrial factory, it houses items relating to the almost 700-year history of the Shimadzu clan, including family heirlooms ranging from lacquerware to tea-ceremony objects, palanquins used to carry Shimadzu lords back and forth to Edo (present-day Tokyo; the trip from Kagoshima took 40–60 days), everyday items used by the family, and photographs. A new exhibit explores southern Kyushu's role in maritime trade and the scope of the Shuseikan Project in its manufacture of cannons, textiles, and other products. In all, you'll probably spend at least 2 hours seeing everything, especially if you stop off at souvenir shops selling Satsuma glassware, pongee silk, and other Kagoshima products.

Sengan'en and the Shoko Shuseikan Museum are open daily from 8:30am to 5:30pm (to 5:20pm in winter); Iso Residence is open daily from 9am to 4:40pm (last tour). Admission to Sengan'en and Shoko Shuseikan Museum is ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults and ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for children. Tours of the residence are an extra ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults and ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for children. To reach Sengan'en, which is on the edge of town to the north, take the City View bus (32 min. from Kagoshima Chuo Station) to the Sengan'en-mae bus stop.

MORE TO SEE & DO

KAGOSHIMA CITY AQUARIUM (SUIZOKU-KAN IOWORLD) This aquarium, within walking distance of downtown and located beside the Sakurajima Ferry Terminal at 3-1 Honko-Shinmachi (☎ 099/226-2233; daily 9:30am-6pm; you must enter by 5pm; closed first Mon in Dec and the following 4 days), concentrates on sea life from waters surrounding Kagoshima Prefecture. The largest tank is home to stingrays, bluefin tuna, Japanese anchovy, a whale shark, and other creatures from the Kuroshio (Black Current), which flows from the East China Sea past Kagoshima to the Pacific Ocean. Another tank contains squid, octopuses, the Japanese giant crab (the world's largest crab), and fish that inhabit the Kagoshima seas. Other highlights include the world's only display of tube worms (which inhabit the deep sea by hydrothermal vents), a 3-D movie of the surrounding seas, the world's largest eel, and a children's touch pool. Dolphins, which have access to open waters, are used only for educational shows (conducted in Japanese only). Expect to spend at least an hour here, more if you have kids. Admission is ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) for adults, ¥750 ($6.25/£3.15) for junior-high and high-school students, and ¥350 ($2.90/£1.45) for children. It's an 8-minute walk from the Suizokukan-guchi streetcar stop, or take the City View bus to the Kagoshima Suizokukan-mae/Sakurajima-sanbashi bus stop.

MUSEUMS For an overview of Japanese history in general and Kagoshima Prefecture in particular, visit the (210) Kagoshima Prefectural Museum of Culture (Reimeikan), 7-2 Shiroyama-cho (☎ 099/222-5100; Tues-Sun 9am-5pm; closed 25th of each month unless it falls on Sat or Sun). It occupies the former site of Tsurumaru Castle, of which only the stone ramparts and moat remain. Upon entering the museum, you'll walk over a glass floor above a map of Kagoshima Prefecture (much of it is islands). The museum then traces the history of the people of Kagoshima over the last 30,000 years, including the rise of the Shimadzu clan in the 11th century and Kagoshima's preeminence as a pottery center after Korean potters were brought here in the late 1500s. There are models of an 18th-century samurai settlement, Tsurumaru Castle, and, best of all, Tenmonkan-Dori as it might have looked 70 years ago. The second floor is devoted to folklore and everyday life with bambooware, festival objects, and farming and fishing implements. The third floor shows Satsuma swords, pottery, scrolls, and paintings and has a hands-on learning room for children with old-fashioned toys and samurai outfits that can be tried on. You'll spend about an hour here. Admission is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults, ¥190 ($1.60/80p) for college and high-school students, and ¥120 ($1/50p) for children. To reach it, take the City View bus to the Satsuma Gishihi-mae stop in front of the museum. Or take the streetcar to Shiyakusho-mae stop; it's a 4-minute walk inland.

Only a few minutes' walk away from the Reimeikan is the Kagoshima City Museum of Art (Kagoshima Shiritsu Bijutsukan), 4-36 Shiroyama-cho (☎ 099/224-3400; Tues-Sun 9:30am-6pm), which has a collection of Western-style works by artists from Kagoshima Prefecture. Look for the portrait of Saigo Takamori, painted by Masayoshi Tokonomi, to the left upon entering the permanent gallery. A small selection of paintings by Western artists is also displayed (Pissarro, Monet, Renoir, Matisse, Kandinsky, Picasso, Warhol), as well as decorative art including the famous Satsuma pottery and cut glass. You can see everything in about 20 minutes. Admission is ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) for college and high-school students, and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children. To reach the museum, take the City View bus to Saigo Douzou-mae; the museum is a minute's walk away to the right of the statue of Saigo. Or take the streetcar to Asahi-dori and take the street beside the Minami-Nippon bank; it's a 5-minute walk ahead.

Although it's not as conveniently located, the Nagashima Museum (★★★, 3-42-18 Take (☎ 099/250-5400; daily 9am-5pm), is a very worthwhile private museum on a hill high atop the city with great views of Sakurajima and Kagoshima. While its focus is mostly works by such Kagoshima artists as Seiki Kuroda, it also contains some works by well-known Western artists such as Picasso, Braque, Kandinsky, Renoir, and Chagall, as well as pottery from South America. But most impressive, in my opinion, is an outstanding collection of mainly 19th-century white Satsuma pottery, including many pieces that were originally imported to London, Paris, and New York, and the more utilitarian 17th- to 20th-century black Satsuma pottery. An hour is enough time to see everything, but try to time your visit so you can eat lunch in the museum's French restaurant Camellia (11am-3pm with set meals for ¥2,300/$19/£9.50 and ¥2,800/$23/£12), which has great views over the city. Admission to the museum is ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults, ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) for college and high-school students, and ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for children. You'll have to take a taxi to get here; it's about a 7-minute ride from Kagoshima Chuo Station.

A SIDE TRIP TO THE GARDENS OF CHIRAN

If you have an extra morning or afternoon, I suggest taking an excursion to Chiran (★★), a small village 31km (19 miles) south of Kagoshima. Surrounded by wooded hills and rows of neatly cultivated tea plantations, it's one of 102 castle towns that once bordered the Shimadzu kingdom during the Edo Period. Although the castle is no longer standing, seven old gardens and samurai houses have been carefully preserved.

Apparently, the village headman of Chiran had the opportunity to travel with his lord Shimadzu in the mid-1700s to Kyoto and Edo, taking with him some of his local samurai as retainers. The headman and his retainers were so impressed with the sophisticated culture of Kyoto and Edo that they invited gardeners to Chiran to construct a series of modestly sized gardens on the samurai estates surrounding the castle.

Some of these gardens remain and are located on a delightful road nicknamed Samurai Lane, which is lined with moss-covered stone walls and hedges. As descendants of the samurai are still living in the houses, only the gardens are open to the public. There are two types of gardens represented: One, belonging to the Mori family, is of the miniature artificial-hill style, in which a central pond symbolizes the sea, and rocks represent the mountains; the others are "dry" gardens, in which the sea is symbolized not by water but by white sand that is raked to give it the effect of rippling water. The gardens are masterful demonstrations of the borrowed-landscape technique, in which surrounding mountains and scenery are incorporated into the general garden design. Although the gardens are small, they are exquisite and charming. Notice, for example, how the tops of hedges are cut to resemble rolling hills, blending with the shapes of mountains in the background.

The seven gardens open to the public are indicated by a white marker in front of each entry gate. All seven can be visited for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for children, and they're open daily from 9am to 5pm. Plan on about an hour to see them. For more information on the samurai gardens, call ☎ 0993/58-7878.

I also recommend a visit to Chiran's Peace Museum for Kamikaze Pilots (Heiwa Kaikan; 1788 kori; ☎ 0993/83-2525; daily 9am–5pm), dedicated to the mostly young pilots who trained in Chiran for World War II suicide missions, steering bomb-laden planes into Allied warships and other targets. In addition to kamikaze aircraft and uniforms, it displays photographs of 1,036 pilots just before their departures, along with farewell letters and personal memorabilia. A film shows actual footage of the kamikaze pilots in action. Although there isn't much in English, there's an English-language pamphlet, and volunteers are sometimes on hand to explain the museum (to be sure a guide is available, call for a reservation). You'll spend about an hour here. Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for children.

Chiran's samurai gardens can be reached in about 1 hour and 12 minutes by a bus that departs across the street from Kagoshima Chuo Station at stop no. 16 East (the tourist office in the station has a timetable and a map showing bus departures). There are eight buses a day, including departures at 9:07, 10:17, and 11:27am; the ride costs ¥850 ($7.10/£3.55) to the Bukeyashiki-Iriguchi bus stop. The same bus then travels onward to the Peace Museum (bus stop: Tokkokannon-Iriguchi) in 7 minutes. There are also three buses a day between the samurai gardens and Ibusuki (see section 6, later in this chapter), with the fare costing ¥940 ($7.85/£3.95).

SHOPPING

Local Kagoshima products include oshima tsumugi, beautiful silk made into such items as clothing, handbags, and wallets; shochu, an alcoholic drink made from such ingredients as sweet potatoes and drunk either on the rocks or mixed with boiling water; furniture, statues, and chests made from yaku cedar; and Satsuma pottery—probably Kagoshima's most famous product. It has been produced in the Kagoshima area for more than 380 years. Satsuma pottery comes in two styles: black and white. White Satsuma pottery is more elegant, thus it was used by former lords; the black pottery was used by the townspeople in everyday life.

A good place to shop for local items is the Kagoshima Brands Shop, downtown in the Sangyo Kaikan Building (the same building housing the Kagoshima Prefectural Visitors Bureau) at 9–1 Meizan-cho (☎ 099/225-6120; daily 9am–6pm, closed the first and third Sun of the month). This one-room shop offers tinware, handmade knives, Satsuma pottery, glassware, oshima tsumugi, yaku cedar, shochu, and other locally made items. To reach it, take the streetcar to the Asahi-Dori stop, from which the shop is a 1-minute walk away toward the bay.

The most famous cake of Kagoshima (the one all Japanese tourists must buy before returning home) is karukan, a delicious spongy white cake made from rice, with Chinese and Korean origins. The most famous maker of karukan today is (211) Akashiya, 4–16 Kinseicho (☎ 099/226-0431; daily 9am–7:30pm), which began selling the cakes 150 years ago. It has the solemnity of a first-rate jewelry store and is just as refined. It's located on the side street to the right of Yamakataya department store, a 1-minute walk from the Asahi-Dori streetcar stop. Although cakes are now available made from beans and other ingredients, old-timers insist that only the plain white ones are the real thing. A small round one, good for a snack, costs ¥147 ($1.20/60p).

EXPENSIVE

Castle Park Hotel (Shiroyama Kanko Hotel) ★★ Kagoshima's foremost hotel sits 106m (353 ft.) high atop the wood-covered Shiroyama Hill and commands a great view of the city below and Sakurajima across the bay. Opened more than 40 years ago but updated, it offers pleasant and comfortable rooms, the most recommended (and more expensive) of which face the volcano and city with the best views in town. Other pluses include hot-spring (including open-air) baths with views of Kinko Bay, a free English-language movie shown nightly on a screen off the lobby, and good restaurants that take advantage of the hotel's views and gardenlike setting (I especially like the buffet restaurant with its outdoor terrace and the microbrewery with its summer beer garden). In short, this is a great respite from city life, and to offset the hotel's main drawback—an isolated location away from the city center—it offers free shuttle buses to Tenmonkan-Dori in the heart of the city and Kagoshima Chuo Station every hour or more frequently (it's also served by City View bus).

41-1 Shinshoin-cho, Kagoshima 890-8586. ☎ 099/224-2211. Fax 099/224-2222. info@shiroyama-g.co.jp. 365 units. ¥10,000-¥12,000 ($83-$100/£42-£50) single; ¥20,000-¥32,000 ($167-$267/£83-£133) double or twin. AE, DC, MC, V. Taxi or free shuttle bus 12 min. from Kagoshima Chuo Station. City View Bus: Shiroyama (1 min.). Amenities: 4 restaurants; lounge; bar; outdoor/indoor hot-spring baths; sauna; souvenir shop selling locally made crafts; salon; room service (10pm-midnight); in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; nonsmoking rooms; bakery; movie theater. In room: A/C, TV w/pay movies, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea and coffee, hair dryer, trouser press.

②12 Furusato Kanko Hotel ★ Finds Although this ryokan on Sakurajima is inconvenient for sightseeing, it's great for relaxation. It boasts open-air hot-spring baths set amid rocks right beside the sea, an indoor 25m (82-ft.) lap pool heated with hot springs, and indoor hot-spring baths overlooking the sea (see "What to See & Do," earlier in this chapter; hotel guests are charged a one-time rental fee of ¥210/$1.75/90p for the bathing yukata). Afterward, retire to the shrinelike Meditation Room for spiritual cleansing as well. Rooms are all Japanese-style, most with balconies overlooking great sea views. Some even boast views from their bathrooms, while the very best (and most expensive) have private terraces with outdoor hot-spring baths. Breakfast features rice casseroles (kamameshi) made with hot-spring water; dinner consists mainly of seafood, tonkotsu (boiled pork), and other local specialties. Movies (sometimes English-language) are shown nightly in a small theater. This is a great getaway.

Tips A Note on Japanese Characters

Many establishments and attractions in Japan do not have signs in Roman (English-language) letters. Those that don't are indicated in this guide with an oval with a number that corresponds to a number in appendix C showing the Japanese equivalent. Thus, to find the Japanese characters for, say, Furusato Kanko Hotel (above), refer to no. 212 in appendix C.

1076 Furusato-cho, Kagoshima 891-1592. ☎ 099/221-3111. Fax 099/221-2345. info@furuukan.co.jp. 42 units. ¥13,800–¥21,150 ($115–$176/£58–£88) per person. ¥2,100 ($18/£9) extra per person weekends and holidays; ¥5,000 ($42/£21) extra per person Golden Week and New Year's. Rates include breakfast and dinner. AE, DC, MC, V. For directions to Furusato Kanko Hotel, see "Mount Sakurajima," earlier in this chapter. Amenities: Restaurant (serving lunch only); indoor pool; great indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; game room; in-room massage; meditation room. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

MODERATE

JR Kyushu Hotel Kagoshima Convenient to Kagoshima Chuo Station (you can enter it right from the station), this business hotel offers clean, mostly single rooms (there are only 12 twins), devoid of character but equipped with everything you might need, including larger than usual desks. The biggest plus besides convenience: Japan Rail Pass holders receive a 10% discount.

Kagoshima Tokyu Hotel Kids This first-rate medium-priced hotel is in a newer area of Kagoshima, smack-dab on the waterfront with a good view of the volcano, even from its lobby lounge. Its twins and doubles face the water with balconies—great for watching the sun rise over Sakurajima. Note that singles, however, all face inland. All feature tempurapedic pillows, focused bed lights, and LCD TVs. Outdoor pools, including a children's pool and an outdoor hot-spring pool and Jacuzzi open year-round (you wear your bathing suits here), are free to hotel guests, making this a good bet for families. In summer, take advantage of the outdoor, seaside beer terrace with its good view. The main disadvantage, however, is that it's a 15-minute bus ride from the station and downtown.

Richmond Hotel Kagoshima Kinseicho This business hotel, opened in 2004, is located in the heart of downtown, with easy access from Kagoshima Chuo Station via streetcar passing right outside the front door. Check-in and checkout is accomplished via automatic machines, though humans are on hand to help guide you through the process. Note that rates below are for Richmond Hotel members, which requires just a ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) one-time membership fee, thereby shaving at least ¥2,700 ($23/£12) off the price of a single room per night and ¥3,500 ($29/£15) off the price of a double. Otherwise, this is your standard business hotel, with small rooms, LCD TVs, large desks, and special single rooms for ladies (reservations required) featuring tempurapedic pillows, free bottled water, terry-cloth robes, and female-oriented toiletries. Note that the cheapest singles and doubles are actually the same room, fine for one person but cramped for two.

INEXPENSIVE

In addition to the choices here, there are two Toyoko Inns near the Tenmonkan Dori covered shopping street. Toyoko Inn Kagoshima Tenmonkan No. 2, 1–43 Higashi Sengoku-cho, Kagoshima 892-0842 (☎ 099/224-1045; www.toyoko-inn.com), offers 231 single, twin, and double rooms along with the usual lobby computers with free Internet access, free Wi-Fi in the lobby, free domestic calls from lobby phones, and free movie channels. It charges ¥5,460 ($46/£23) for a single and ¥8,190 ($68/£34) for a double or twin, including a Japanese breakfast. The nearby Toyoko Inn Kagoshima Tenmonkan No. 1, 3–6 Yamanokuchi-cho (☎ 099/219-1045), is smaller, with only 120 single and double rooms and similar prices.

Gasthof Hotel ☘ After traveling to Europe, the owner of this inexpensive, 40-year-old hotel decided to re-create the coziness of a German bed-and-breakfast with a cafe in the lobby, antiques in the hallway, and rooms that vary in decor, furniture, and bedspreads, including four-poster beds in some. Although it falls short, the Gasthof has a lot more character than a regular business hotel. The location near Kagoshima Chuo Station is convenient, and there's free coffee and a computer with free Internet access in the lobby. If you are lucky, the owner may even take you on a personal tour of his private Asian art museum, overflowing with priceless treasures from pottery to Buddha statues. Another plus are the six restaurants and Japanese izakaya (restaurant/bars) in the same building.

7–1 Chuo-cho, Kagoshima 890-0053. ☎ 099/252-1401. Fax 099/252-1405. info@gasthof.jp. 48 units. ¥5,250 ($44/£22) single; ¥8,925 ($74/£37) double or twin; ¥12,600 ($105/£52) triple. Breakfast ¥630 ($5.25/£2.65) extra. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Kagoshima Chuo (3 min.). Take the underground passageway to wide, tree-lined Napoli Dori (beside Daiiei department store), walk 3 blocks and turn left at the Mobil gas station; it's at the end of the street on the left. Amenities: 6 restaurants/bars; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; lobby computer w/free Internet access. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea.

Nakazono Ryokan A member of the Japanese Inn Group, this simple, laid-back ryokan with simple Japanese-style rooms is located near Kagoshima Station (not to be confused with Kagoshima Chuo Station; trains arriving from Miyazaki make stops at Kagoshima Station but trains from Kumamoto do not), about a 10-minute walk from the Tenmonkan-Dori covered shopping street and a 3-minute walk from the Sakurajima ferry pier. Its English-speaking owner is knowledgeable about area sightseeing; he has even prepared handouts on how to get to Ibusuki and Chiran. No meals are served, but there's a communal refrigerator, and the owner will direct you to nearby restaurants or, if you wish, help you order delivery pizza or sushi.

WHERE TO DINE

While in Kagoshima, be sure to try its local dishes, known as Satsuma cooking (Satsuma was the original name of the Kagoshima area). This style of cooking supposedly has its origins in food cooked on battlefields centuries ago; if that's the case, it certainly has improved greatly since then. Popular Satsuma specialties include Satsuma-age (ground fish mixed with tofu and sake and then deep-fried), tonkotsu (black pork that has been boiled for several hours in miso, shochu, and brown sugar—absolutely delicious), sakezushi (a rice dish flavored with sake and mixed with vegetables and seafood), and Satsuma-jiru (miso soup with chicken and locally grown vegetables including Sakurajima radishes). Kibinago is a small fish belonging to the herring family that can be caught in the waters around Kagoshima; a silver color with brown stripes, it's often eaten raw and arranged on a dish to resemble a chrysanthemum.

Kumasotei ★★ SATSUMA SPECIALTIES Located in the city center, this restaurant specializes in local Satsuma dishes but carries them one step further by featuring them as part of kaiseki set meals. It reminds me more of a private home or ryokan because dining is in individual tatami rooms. If there isn't a crowd, you'll probably have your own private room; otherwise, you'll share. The main menu is in Japanese, but there's a smaller English-language menu with photos of the various set meals, which may include such local dishes as Satsuma-age, tonkotsu, Satsuma-jiru, kibi-nago, or sakezushi, as well as shabu-shabu.

Streetcar: Tenmonkan-Dori (4 min.). Walk through the Tenmonkan-Dori covered shopping street (the one with The Tenmonkan on it) 4 blocks and turn left; it will be on your right.

②13 Ajimori ★ BLACK PORK This 30-year-old establishment specializes in pork from small black pigs, which the locals claim is more tender and succulent than regular pork. The restaurant is divided into two parts: the upper floors, with both table seating and private tatami rooms, serve Satsuma Kuroshabu, a Kagoshima specialty of black-pork shabu; the first floor is a casual dining room specializing in tonkatsu, breaded black-pork cutlet. If you order the Kuroshabu, you'll eat it just like the more common beef shabu-shabu, cooking it yourself at your table by dipping it into a boiling broth and then in raw egg or sauce. Portions are generous, but if you wish, you can also order tonkatsu as a side dish. Otherwise, go to the first floor for perhaps the lightest, best-tasting tonkatsu you'll ever have; the set lunches, available every day except Sundays and holidays, are a bargain.

13–21 Sennichi-cho. ☎ 099/224-7634. Shabu set dinners ¥4,200–¥8,400 ($35–$70/£18–£35), shabu set lunch ¥3,150 ($26/£13); tonkatsu set dinners ¥820–¥3,150 ($6.85–$26/£3.45–£13), tonkatsu set lunch ¥680 ($5.65/£2.85). DC, MC, V accepted only for meals costing more than ¥10,000 ($83/£42). Daily 11:30am–2:15pm (1:30pm last order for shabu) and 5:30–8:45pm (8pm last order for shabu). Streetcar: Tenmonkan-Dori (3 min.). Walk all the way through Tenmonkan-Dori (the one beside Takapla) and keep going past the koban police box onto Ginza St.; it's on the left just before the next arch with the eyeglasses motif.

Iso Kuwahara-kan CONTINENTAL If you are sightseeing at Sengan'en, have lunch in this pleasant, historic building constructed in a Western style and dating from 1904. Built for the Shimadzu clan to serve as an assay office, today it houses a Western restaurant specializing in set meals, with offerings that generally give a choice of a main dish—such as seafood risotto, steak, and beef stew—along with side dishes. 9688–1 Yoshinocho. ☎ 099/248-5883. Set dinners ¥3,500–¥5,000 ($29–$42/£15–£21); set lunches ¥1,600–¥3,000 ($13–$25/£6.50–£13). No credit cards. Wed–Mon 11am–2:30pm and 5:30–9pm (last order). (214) Aburi-Banya KOREAN BARBECUE Dolphin Port is a new shopping and dining complex just a few minutes' walk from the Sakurajima ferry pier and aquarium. More than a dozen restaurants on two levels here offer a wide variety of ethnic cuisine, including Japanese (conveyor-belt sushi, tempura, udon noodles), Chinese, Czech, and French. Aburi-Banya, on the second floor with exposed ceiling beams and bamboo shades separating tables, is a Korean barbecue restaurant, with individual charcoal grills at tables both inside and out (the latter with views of the harbor). Its set meals include various options of marinated meat, along with soup, spicy cabbage (kimchi), and rice.

5–4 Honko-Shinmachi. (C) 099/223-2915. Set dinners ¥1,800–¥2,660 ($15–$22/£7.50–£11); set lunches ¥1,280–¥2,180 ($11–$18/£5.35–£9.10). MC, V. Daily 11am–11:30pm (last order). Streetcar: Shiyakusho-mae (8 min.). City View Bus: Kagoshima Suizokukan-mae/Sakurajima-sanbashi (3 min.).

(215) Noboruya Finds RAMEN NOODLES This popular, inexpensive restaurant in the center of town is Kagoshima's best-known ramen (noodle) shop, in business for more than 60 years. It's a simple place, occupying one room of a small, wooden home with one counter and an open kitchen. As only one dish is served, there's no problem ordering. A big bowl of ramen comes with noodles (made fresh every day) and slices of pork, all seasoned with garlic (you can add extra garlic if you want). You also get as much pickled radish as you want (supposedly good for the stomach) and tea. As you eat your ramen at the counter, you can watch an army of women peeling garlic and cooking huge pots of noodles over gas flames—it's a great place to soak up local atmosphere.

2–15 Horie-cho. (C) 099/226-6697. Noodles ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20). No credit cards. Mon–Sat 11am–7pm. Streetcar: Izuro-Dori (1 min.). Walk down the wide street marked by stone lanterns on each side (Miami Dori) and take the 1st right; Noboruya is at the end of the 2nd block on the left, with its entrance around the corner.

(216) No-no-Budou Value JAPANESE BUFFET Of the dozen or so restaurants located on the fifth and sixth floors of Amu Plaza adjoining Kagoshima Chuo Station, this is one of the more interesting, featuring 70 dishes that change every few months, with various offerings of tempura, soups, salads, fish, noodles, vegetables, and much, much more. Evening buffets also include sashimi and sushi. There's a large nonsmoking section. Other choices in Amu Plaza run the gamut from pork shabu-shabu and tonkatsu to Italian and Chinese fare.

Amu Plaza, 5th floor; 1–1 Chuo-cho. (C) 099/206-7585. Dinner buffet ¥2,200 ($18/£9); lunch buffet ¥1,600 ($13/£6.50). AE, MC, V. Daily 11am–3pm and 5pm–9:30 (last order). Beside Kagoshima Chuo Station.

6 Southern Kyushu's Top Spa: Ibusuki ★

50km (31 miles) S of Kagoshima

At the southern tip of Satsuma Peninsula, Ibusuki is southern Kyushu's most famous hot-spring resort and is home to 47,000 residents. With a pleasant average temperature of 66°F (19°C) throughout the year due to warm ocean currents, it's a region of lush vegetation, flowers, and palm trees. It also boasts Japan's best natural hot-sand bath and a good public beach, making it a good choice for a low-key vacation.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE Ibusuki is approximately an hour from Kagoshima Chuo Station by JR train, with the fare costing ¥970 ($8.10/£4.05) one-way. Buses depart from Kagoshima's Yamagataya Bus Center in the heart of the city (near the Asahi Dori streetcar stop) seven times a day (some make stops at Kagoshima Chuo Station before traveling onward), reaching Ibusuki's train station 1½ hours later and costing ¥850 ($7.10/£3.55) one-way.

VISITOR INFORMATION Ibusuki Tourist Information (☎ 0993/22-4114; daily 9am–6pm) is located in Ibusuki Station. For online information, go to www.city.ibusuki.lg.jp.

GETTING AROUND The small town of Ibusuki is spread along the coast, and public buses run along the main streets. Taxis are also readily available. However, probably the easiest way to get around is by rental bike, available at Ibusuki Station for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for 2 hours or ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) all day. With a Japan Rail Pass, rates are ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) and ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) respectively. By bike it takes about 7 minutes to the Natural Sand Bath and about 25 minutes to public swimming beaches and Chiringashima.

WHAT TO SEE & DO

TAKING A HOT-SAND BATH The most popular thing to do in Ibusuki is to have yourself buried up to your neck in black sand at Yunohama Beach, heated naturally by hot springs that surface close to the ground before running into the sea. To take part, head to the Natural Sand Bath (Suna Mushi Onsen) (★★★ (☎ 0993/23-3900; daily 8:30am–noon and 1–9pm), a modern facility nicknamed Saraku by the locals (saraku has two meanings: to walk around and to enjoy the sand). Take the elevator up to the reception, pay ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for the baths and rental yukata (add another ¥100/85¢/45p if you didn't bring a towel), change into the yukata in the dressing room, and then head down to the beach. One of the women there will dig you a shallow grave. Lie down, arrange your yukata so no vulnerable areas are exposed, and then lie still while she piles sand on top of you. It's quite a funny sight, actually, to see nothing but heads sticking out of the ground. The water, a hot 185°F (85°C), contains sodium chloride and is considered beneficial in alleviating rheumatism, arthritis, gastrointestinal troubles, neuralgia, and female disorders. It is also valued as a beauty treatment for the skin. After your 15-minute sand bath, go indoors for a relaxing, hot-spring bath and the sauna. The Natural Sand Bath is a 20-minute walk or 7-minute bike ride from Ibusuki Station; from the main exit, head straight down Chuo Dori to the beach and turn right. You can also take a bus to the Suna Mushi-kaikan stop.

SWIMMING & HIKING Also on the beach, but on the opposite edge of town, is Ibusuki's popular public beach, Sun-Beach Ibusuki, as well as Chiringashima, a small, uninhabited island and national park. During low tide, you can walk to the island via sand-bridge in about 10 minutes. Be sure to inquire beforehand what time the tide comes in, however, so you don't get stranded.

②17 Hakusuikan Ryokan (★★★) A driveway lined with pine trees sets the mood for this modern, elegant, and resortlike ryokan right on the beach with landscaped lawns and one of the most impressive hot-spring baths I've ever seen. Established in 1960 and expanded over the years, the ryokan seems like a village, with several buildings connected by corridors. The public bath—a reproduction of an Edo-Era hot-spring spa—is classy and refined, also designed like a small village with a large bathing area made of cypress wood and stone with pools of varying temperatures, a huge rotenburo (outdoor hot-spring pool), a sand bath, a steam room, and a replica Edo-Era sauna with a round dome. Even the dressing rooms are faithfully styled after the Edo Period, though naturally with all the latest conveniences. Another plus: the ryokan's own museum, with changing displays of Satsuma and Chinese pottery and other antiques collected over the past 60 years.

Several room types are available. Least expensive are the 30 Western-style twins, all of which face inland and are rather ordinary looking. Better are the Japanese-style tatami rooms facing the sea, as well as the ryokan's 115 combination rooms, spacious with both beds and separate tatami areas and available in various price categories. Meals are served in a choice of restaurants. This place is the perfect getaway; you'll want to change into your yukata as soon as you arrive. No wonder Prime Minister Koizumi chose this ryokan for a summit meeting with Korea.

AE, DC, MC, V. Taxi: 5 min. from Ibusuki Station. (No public transportation.) Amenities: 5 restaurants; 1 coffee shop; 2 bars (including a shochu tasting bar); 2 lounges; 1 nightclub; fantastic indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; outdoor swimming pool; shopping arcade; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service. In room: A/C, TV w/pay movies, dataport, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

Ibusuki Iwasaki Hotel ★ This is Ibusuki's best-known spa hotel, a self-contained pink-colored resort on 50 hectares (125 acres) of lush tropical grounds with pleasant walking trails throughout. It's very popular with Japanese tour groups, both for its facilities that include huge public baths, outdoor swimming pools, a beach, and the Ibusuki Golf Club (hotel guests get discounts; or ask about golf packages), and for its evening entertainment. If you come during the off season, however, you have the hotel seemingly to yourself. Another plus is the resort's private, eclectic museum featuring Japanese artists painting in the Western style, some Western artists (Matisse, Gauguin), crafts from Papua New Guinea, and Satsuma pottery.

All rooms have either a full or partial view of the sea and a balcony; the best rooms also have views of the wonderful grounds, one of the resort's best features and well worth a stroll. The majority of rooms are twins (there are no singles) with rattan furniture. Not quite as nice are Japanese-style rooms, which are rather small and are located in an older building. In any case, nights here are nice, with the sound of waves and frogs croaking in the lotus pond.

②18 Kyuka-Mura Ibusuki Value This government-owned lodge is located right at the water's edge near the public beach (but a bit far from town) and offers reasonably priced, basic accommodations, making it a popular choice with Japanese families. During summer vacation months, on New Year's, in March during spring vacation, and in May during school trips, you should reserve 6 months in advance. At other times, it's relatively easy to get a room here. Rates are based on the type of room and meals you select. Cheapest are the eight Western-style rooms, which face inland and have toilets but no bathrooms, but I prefer the Japanese-style rooms for the same price (also with toilet only) that are the size of 7.5 tatami mats and have glass sliding doors opening seaside. Most expensive are roomy, 10-mat Japanese-style rooms facing the sea with bathroom (you can even see the water from the tub); some even have a balcony with chairs.

②19 Marutomi ★ Just a minute's walk from the Natural Sand Bath at Yunohama Beach, this inexpensive inn is a family-run affair. Following the ryokan tradition of naming rooms instead of assigning numbers, rooms are named after fish (the owner was a fisherman); you can stay in the Tuna Room! All the rooms are Japanese-style, clean and with more character than many in this price range. Meals, which include fresh seafood, are served communally at low tables on tatami. Several blocks north is an annex, Marutomi2, with hot-springs baths, a communal kitchen, and three additional rooms. Guests can use facilities at both inns. If you call from the station, the owner may be able to pick you up.

Seating is under a pavilion beside a man-made waterfall, so you eat to the accompaniment of running water with Japanese traditional music playing in the background. In the middle of your table will be a large round container with water swirling in a circle; when you get your basket of noodles, dump them into the cold water, fish them out with your chopsticks, dip them in soy sauce, and enjoy. Probably best is to order one of five set meals, which in addition to noodles come with such main dishes as grilled trout or carp sashimi, along with vegetables and soup. Hot noodles are available in winter, when you can also dine indoors.

7 Sunny Resort Destination: Miyazaki

1,448km (900 miles) SW of Tokyo; 407km (254 miles) SE of Fukuoka; 126km (79 miles) W of Kagoshima

The capital of Miyazaki Prefecture, Miyazaki City is one of the largest (pop. 368,000) and most important cities in southern Kyushu. As all Japanese schoolchildren know, it boasts several famous sites relating to Japan's first emperor, Jimmu. Yet it seems isolated, even somewhat neglected, by the rest of Japan. Tokyo is far away, and Japanese honeymooners, who only a few decades ago favored Miyazaki over most other domestic destinations, are now flocking to Hawaii and Australia.

To counter its downward spiral into touristic oblivion, in the 1990s Miyazaki developed a large resort called Seagaia on its wooded outskirts, complete with hotels, golf courses, a zoo, and other attractions. But beyond that, Miyazaki is a perfect place to relax, get in some rounds of golf, and savor local delicacies. Temperatures here are the third warmest in Japan after Okinawa's and Kagoshima's (it shares the same approximate latitude with Jerusalem and San Diego), and flowers bloom throughout the year. The natives are warm and kind, maybe because they still don't see many foreigners here, particularly Westerners.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane There are daily flights to Miyazaki from several Japanese cities. Flight time is 1½ hours from Tokyo (with a regular one-way ticket costing ¥33,700/$281/£140 on JAL or ANA and ¥25,500/$212/£106 on Skynet Asia Airways), 1 hour from Osaka, and 40 minutes from Fukuoka. From the airport, a bus travels to Miyazaki Station in 25 minutes and costs ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70). Buses also travel from the airport to Seagaia for ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35). There's also JR train service from the airport to Miyazaki Station; if you don't have a Japan Rail Pass, it costs ¥340 ($2.85/£1.45) for the 10-minute trip.

By Train From Tokyo, take the Shinkansen bullet train to Kokura and transfer there to the Nichirin limited express; the entire trip takes approximately 11 hours (not including transfers) and costs ¥24,780 ($207/£103) for an unreserved seat. There are also direct trains from Fukuoka's Hakata Station (6 hr.), Beppu (3½ hr.), and Kagoshima (2 hr.).

By Bus Buses depart daily from Hakata Station in Fukuoka 25 times a day for Miyazaki (trip time: 3 hr., 40 min.), costing ¥6,000 ($50/£25) one-way. Buses also depart from Kagoshima Chuo Station; the fare is ¥2,700 ($23/£11) for the 2¼-hour trip. Long-distance buses arrive at the bus station in front of Miyazaki Station.

VISITOR INFORMATION Before departing Tokyo or Narita or Kansai airports, pick up the leaflet "Miyazaki and Vicinity" at the Tourist Information Center or download it from JNTO's website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under "Browse by Destinations."

In Miyazaki, stop off at the tourist information center at Miyazaki Airport (☎ 0985/51-5114; daily 7am to the last flight arrival) or the east exit of JR Miyazaki Station (☎ 0985/22-6469; open daily 9am–7pm Mar–Nov, to 6:30pm Dec–Feb) to pick up Discovering Miyazaki (which covers the entire prefecture and has good bus information) and Miyazaki City Tourist Guidebook (with a city map). Information on Miyazaki Prefecture is available online at www.kanko-miyazaki.jp.

MAIL The Miyazaki Central Post Office, 1–1–34 Takachiho-dori (☎ 0985/24-3425), is located on the right side of Takachiho-dori Avenue if you're walking from Miyazaki Station, about an 8-minute walk away. It's open daily 24 hours a day for mail. Its ATMs for foreign credit cards are open Monday to Friday 7am to 11pm, Saturday 9am to 9pm, and Sunday 9am to 7pm.

INTERNET Internet Café e-PLANET, 3–1–5 Tachibana-dori Higashi (☎ 0985/83-3115), is open 24 hours and charges ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for the first 30 minutes of Internet use, plus a ¥100 (85¢/45p) membership fee. It's a 2-minute walk from Miyazaki Station, across the street to the left in the Ekimae shopping street, on the right side.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Downtown lies west of Miyazaki Station, about a 10-minute walk away. From Miyazaki Station, take Takachiho-dori Avenue west to Tachibana-dori, the main street in town, which is lined with shops, department stores, and restaurants. Almost all city buses serving other parts of town, as well as buses traveling to other cities in Miyazaki Prefecture, make stops along this main thoroughfare—at Depaato-mae bus stop at the intersection of Takachiho- and Tachibana-dori; and at Tachibana-dori 3-chome bus stop, which is farther south. Otherwise, there are two major bus terminals: The Miyazaki Ekimae Bus Center is just outside the west exit of Miyazaki Station, and the Miyako-City Bus Center is a few minutes' walk from the JR Minami Miyazaki Station.

Miyazaki Shrine, Miyazaki prefectural museums, and Heiwadai Park are located northwest of Miyazaki Station, while the Seagaia resort area is located on the coast northeast of Miyazaki Station. All these attractions are easily reached by bus from Miyazaki Station or Tachibana-dori. Fares start at ¥140 ($1.15/60p) and increase according to the distance. There is also local train service from Miyazaki Station to Miyazaki Jingu Eki Station near Miyazaki Shrine. For traveling farther afield, there's a 1-day bus pass for ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) that covers all of Miyazaki Prefecture and is sold at both bus centers above.

WHAT TO SEE & DO

MIYAZAKI SHRINE & ENVIRONS

The most important shrine in town is Miyazaki Shrine (Miyazaki Jingu) (★, 2–4–1 Jingu (☎ 0985/27-4004), located about a 10-minute walk west of JR Miyazaki Jingu Station. It's dedicated to the first emperor of Japan, Emperor Jimmu, a somewhat mythical figure who established the Yamato Court in 660 B.C. and is believed to be the ancestor of every reigning emperor since. Although the shrine is thought to have originated around the time of Emperor Jimmu's reign some 2,600 years ago, either on a mountaintop or near present-day Heiwadai Park, its ancient history remains shrouded in mystery, much like the emperor himself. Peacefully surrounded by natural woods and majestic cedar, the shrine is built from cedar and is austere plain. The grounds of the shrine are always open and there's no charge for admission. If you don't want to walk to the shrine, you can take a bus bound for Miyazaki Jingu (the name of the stop for Miyazaki Shrine) from Tachibana-dori Avenue (in the center of town).

From the shrine, head back south and take a left after passing the first torii gate (there's a map of the area here) and walk around the shrine to the east. Four 150- to 200-year-old, thatched-roof Japanese homes have been moved to the park for preservation. You can walk around them and enter some. Admission is free. North of Miyazaki Shrine on shrine grounds is the Miyazaki Prefectural Museum of Nature and History (Miyazaki-ken Sogo Hakubutsukan), 2-4-4 Jingu (☎ 0985/24-2071; Wed–Mon 9am–5pm; Tues mid-July to Aug; closed the day following a national holiday). It does an excellent job of presenting the prefecture's animal and plant life, its history, and its folklore with well-designed displays and a wealth of information—what a shame explanations are in Japanese only. Those of you who studied Latin can put it to practice here, as plant and animal specimens are identified in Latin, but for the rest of us there's an English-language pamphlet. In any case, it's worth spending an hour here because there's plenty to look at, from dinosaur bones to replica burial tombs. Very enlightening is a replica of a home with a wood-burning stove and a bathtub heated with wood—the home dates from the 1950s. Admission is free. The closest bus stop is Hakubutsukan-mae in front of the museum; to reach it, board any bus bound for Aya, Kunitomi, or Heiwagaoka from Tachibana-dori.

West of Miyazaki Shrine, about a 10-minute walk away, is the Miyazaki Prefectural Art Museum (Miyazaki-kenritsu Bijutsukan) ★, 3-210 Funatsuka (☎ 0985/20-3792; Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; closed the day following a national holiday). This very modern building presents works of Miyazaki artists from the Edo Period onward, those who illustrate recent artistic trends in Japan, and artists from around the world. Most famous of the local artists is probably Ei-Kyu (1911–60), an avant-garde pioneer whose last works consisted of dots. Ai-O, a contemporary of Ei-Kyu, is known for his Rainbow series. Admission to the permanent exhibit (which nonetheless changes) is free. The closest bus stop is Bunka Koen Mae; board a bus bound for Aya, Heiwagaoka, Ikeuchi, Kunitomi, or Bunka Koen.

HEIWADAI PARK About a 15-minute walk northwest of Miyazaki Shrine is Heiwadai Park, where you'll find the Peace Tower, built in 1940 in celebration of the 2,600th anniversary of the mythological foundation of Japan; it purportedly contains

Finds Haniwa Garden

My favorite thing to see in Heiwadai Park (and a good photo op) is Haniwa Garden ★. Archaeological digs in Miyazaki Prefecture have unearthed a multitude of ancient burial mounds and clay figures known as haniwa; replicas of these ancient mounds and haniwa clay figures can be seen in Haniwa Garden, where approximately 400 of the figures have been placed between trees on mounds covered with moss. There are warriors, horses, pigs, boats, and houses. I especially like the haniwa with the simple face and body and the O-shaped mouth; it's said to represent a dancing woman.

If you wish to take a bus here, board a bus from Depaato-mae bus stop on Tachibana-dori bound for Heiwadai; get off 12 minutes later at the last stop in front of the park.

artifacts that once belonged to the first emperor. Its pedestal is made with stones donated by Japanese ex-patriates from all over the world, while its copper door was created with coins donated by Japanese children. It may seem ironic that a peace tower was erected at a time when Japan was busy colonizing much of Asia; the intention was to show that the world could live peaceably, albeit with Japan as leader. Figures on the tower depict the guardians of fishery, agriculture, self-defense, and commerce.

THE MANY AMUSEMENTS OF SEAGAIA ♠♠

Seagaia (www.seagaia.co.jp) is a convention and resort complex set in a vast national reserve of beautiful pine forest stretching 12km (7½ miles) along the coastline. In addition to hotels, it has amusements too numerous to list. Miyazaki City Phoenix Zoo (☎ 0985/39-1306; Thurs–Tues 9am–5pm; Wed in peak seasons) has more than 1,400 animals of 115 species from Asia and Africa; admission is ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) for adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for junior-high students, and ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for children. Golfers can try out their swings at the private refurbished Phoenix Country Club (☎ 0985/39-1301), a 27-hole course with visitor greens fees of ¥31,465 to ¥39,340 ($262–$328/£131–£164); or at the more proletarian public 18-hole Tom Watson Golf Course (☎ 0985/39-1301), with greens fees of ¥17,271 ($144/£72) on weekdays and ¥20,946 ($175/£87) weekends and holidays. If golf isn't your game, there's also tennis, bowling at a 36-lane alley, scuba diving, jet-skiing, fishing, horse-back riding, and paragliding, as well as jogging, cycling, in-line skating along an 8km (5-mile) path, exercise classes, and art and craft lessons. For information about these, contact the Activity Center on the third floor of the Sheraton Grande Ocean Resort (p. 543), open daily 8am to 8pm (☎ 0985/21-1324).

Access to all the Seagaia attractions and hotels (see “Where to Stay,” below) is by city bus no. 18 from platform no. 3 at the west exit of JR Miyazaki Station (¥470/$3.90/£1.95 for the 30-min. trip). Seagaia is so large that a free shuttle bus loops to all its facilities, including hotels, every hour from 7am to 9:26pm.

FARTHER AFIELD

AYA This is my kind of theme park! Called Shusen no Mori (Spirits Forest), 1800–19 Oaza Minamimata (☎ 0985/77-2222), and located in the town of Aya, it bills itself as a “Fine Spirits Theme Park” and lives up to its promise with a variety of facilities open free to the public, including a shochu distillery (with free tours Mon–Fri 9:30am–noon and 1–4pm; advance reservations required); a refined sake plant and a tasting table; a winery where visitors can observe the winemaking process (90% of the grapes are grown in Miyazaki Prefecture; the rest come from elsewhere in Kyushu) and sample the results in a tasting room. There is also a glass-blowing factory, ateliers where woodworkers and potters practice their trade, shops selling locally made crafts, and the delightful Kotto-no-Yakata Antique Pavilion (admission: ¥300/$2.50/£1.25), crammed full with local folk art and antiques, including hair pins, mirrors, store signboards, tobacco pouches, glassware, lacquerware, tea pots, and much more; don't miss the nice garden out back. Top off your day at hot-spring indoor/outdoor baths, open daily 10:30am to 9pm (fee: ¥1,050/$8.75/£4.40). Otherwise, most facilities are free and open daily 9am to 5pm, except for four restaurants—offering everything from Miyazaki beef and freshwater fish to organic vegetables—which remain open to 6pm.

To reach Shusen no Mori, take a bus from Tachibana 3-chome in downtown Miyazaki (Discovering Miyazaki has a map with bus stops) once an hour (at last check,

Kids A Beach & an Amusement Park

Near Aoshima you'll find Aoshima Beach, Miyazaki Prefecture's most popular swimming and windsurfing beach, open July and August (jellyfish make it impractical other months of the year); and Kodomo-no-Kuni (☎ 0985/65-1111), a small amusement park known also for its year-round flowers and nightly fireworks during summer vacation. The park's kiddie rides and paddle boats are good for younger children. It's open Wednesday to Monday 9am to 5pm (but closed irregularly for cleaning) with varying extended hours on holidays (to 9pm during summer vacation). Admission is free (except during Flower Festival, mid-Mar to May, when admission is ¥800/$6.65/£3.35 for adults and ¥400/$3.35/£1.70 for children). Rides cost extra.

29 min. past each hour), with the trip to the Shusen no Mori stop taking about 50 minutes and costing ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20).

NICHINAN COAST South of Miyazaki city is the Nichinan Coast, famous for its beautiful scenery, beaches, and a coastline of exposed and eroded rock sea floor, which is weirdly shaped like rippling waves. Known to Japanese as Oni-no-Sentaku Iwa, or The Ogre's Washboard, it resembles just that.

Here, too, is one of the most famous sights associated with Miyazaki—Aoshima, a tiny island less than a mile in circumference and connected to the mainland via a long walkway. Surrounded by rippled rock in low tide, it is covered with Betel palms and subtropical plants. It takes only 15 minutes to walk around the island. In its center is a small vermilion shrine, Aoshima Jinja, dedicated to first Emperor Jimmu's grandparents. According to legend, the grandfather, a hunter, was a young man when he and his brother, a fisherman, decided to trade chores. The grandfather, while fishing here on Aoshima, lost his brother's hook and dove into the depths to retrieve it, only to end up on a turtle that delivered him to an undersea Dragon's Palace, where he met a fair princess. When he finally found the hook and returned to land, the princess came with him, later bearing him a son. Because of the legend, Aoshima Shrine is considered fortuitous in matchmaking; those wishing for marriage come here to be blessed. The shrine is open daily from dawn until dusk.

You can reach Aoshima in about 30 minutes from Miyazaki Station on the JR Nichinan Line; the fare is ¥360 ($3/£1.50) and trains depart about every hour. Aoshima island is about a 5-minute walk from Aoshima Station. More frequent are buses departing from Miyazaki Station every 15 to 30 minutes, taking 45 minutes to reach Kodomo-no-Kuni/Aoshima and costing ¥620 ($5.15/£2.60).

Farther south on the Nichinan Coast, about 24km (15 miles) south of Aoshima and 40km (25 miles) south of Miyazaki, is Udo Shrine (★★ (☎ 0987/29-1001)). Dedicated to the father of Emperor Jimmu, this vermilion-colored shrine is actually located in a cave beside the ocean—an unusual setting for a shrine, but one boasting an exhilarating view. According to legend, it was here that Emperor Jimmu's grandparents came for the birth of their son. As delivery drew near, the soon-to-be mother asked her husband not to watch. Naturally, he couldn't resist, and to his surprise, his wife turned into a dragon. Ashamed, she fled back to sea, leaving breasts on the cave ceiling to feed her newborn son.

Throughout the ages, Udo Shrine has been famous among newlyweds, who come to pray for harmony in marriage and successful childbirth. In the cave behind the shrine are formations thought to resemble breasts; the water dripping from them is lucky “milk,” considered beneficial for pregnancy, childbirth, and nursing mothers (milk candy is a specialty here). If you want to make a wish, purchase some clay pottery pieces at the shrine and try to toss them inside a rope circle that adorns a turtle-shaped rock; if you manage to land one inside the circle, you’ve got your wish. Women are supposed to throw right-handed, men left-handed.

You can reach Udo Shrine, open daily 7am to 5:45pm by bus from Aoshima or Miyazaki (it takes 70 min. from Miyazaki Station). Get off at Udo Jingu Iriguchi, from which it’s a 1-minute walk to the first torii gate, followed by a 20-minute walk along a narrow road to the shrine itself. Note: It takes a lot of time and effort to get to Udo Shrine; go only if you have time to spare.

WHERE TO STAY EXPENSIVE

Sheraton Grande Ocean Resort ★★☆☆ The most relaxing and luxurious place to stay in Miyazaki is Seagaia’s crowning jewel, the Sheraton Grande Ocean Resort, Kyushu’s tallest hotel with 43 floors. Its marbled, elegant lobby stretches 11 stories high, emitting lots of light; in its center is the tropical-themed Pacifica Bar with palm trees, a circular aquarium, and live evening music. Rooms, all of which face the sea with magnificent views, are palatial by Japanese standards and are equipped with lots of extras, including vanity/sink areas separate from the bathroom (many also have separate shower stalls and tubs), and both soft and firm pillows (more deluxe rooms, starting from the 33rd floor, also boast Sheraton’s trademark Sweet Sleeper Bed). Because you’re a bit far from town, it’s good to know there are plenty of dining options immediately on hand, including the highly recommendable Queen Alice Agape Italian restaurant on the 42nd floor with good views. Banyan Tree Spa, on the 39th floor, boasts 10 treatment rooms (three for couples) and 27 types of treatment, while Shosenkyu is a deluxe hot-spring spa, nestled in the pine forest with both indoor and outdoor baths. And in true resort fashion, daily activities run the gamut from horseback riding to art classes. If you’re looking for a pampered getaway, this is the place.

MODERATE

Aoshima Palm Beach Hotel ★★☆☆ Kids Located right on Aoshima Beach (July–Aug) and surrounded by lovely grounds and palm trees, this attractive Palm Beach–style hotel is a great place for a vacation, especially for families. Kodomo-no-Kuni, an amusement park for young children, is located right beside the hotel (which has nightly fireworks displays during summer vacation, observable from some rooms). TVs offer pay video movies, including English-language films the entire family can watch. Most of the rooms, which include Western-Japanese-style accommodations (which can sleep up to five persons), have huge windows facing the sea and views of Aoshima island. During summer vacation (mid-July and Aug), reserve at least 2 months in advance.

Miyazaki Kanko Hotel The Miyazaki Kanko Hotel is the best of a string of hotels along the Oyodo River, which has been developed into a small waterfront promenade and park not far from Miyazaki Station. It consists of a newer east wing with higher-priced rooms, which are larger and have more amenities than those in the 40-year-old west wing, though bedside reading lamps are annoyingly dim. Japanese-style rooms, as well as combination rooms with beds and tatami areas, are also available. Rooms face either the river or town (favored for its night view) for the same price. A plus are hot-spring baths, fed by water excavated from deep below the ground after much effort.

While Hotel Kensington (below) has more character and a more interesting location, Toyoko Inn Miyazaki Ekimae, 2-2-31 Oimatsu (☎ 0985/32-1045; www.toyoko-inn.com), can't be beat when it comes to convenience (next to Miyazaki Station) and amenities, including lobby computers with free Internet access, free Wi-Fi in the lobby, free domestic calls from lobby phones, and free movie channels

Hotel Kensington The main reason most people come to Miyazaki is to relax at accommodations at Seagaia or Aoshima, but if you can't afford those prices (or didn't book soon enough), this is a good budget choice in the city center. Located on Tachibana-dori Avenue in the heart of the city near department stores and shopping, this inexpensive establishment resembles a business hotel in its simplicity but is also popular with young Japanese women because of its location and rates. Despite its name, the only hints of England are a knight of armor guarding the drawing-room-style lobby and the afternoon tea served in the Café London. The mostly single rooms are tiny, with windows that open and sliding panels for complete darkness; ask for a room that doesn't face another building. The cheapest doubles are actually single rooms with semi-double-size beds, which are comfortable for one but cramped for two. Otherwise, there are only three rooms with double beds and two twins.

Station: Miyazaki (10 min. from west exit). Walk straight ahead down Takachiho-dori to Tachibana-dori and turn left; the hotel will be on your left. Amenities: Restaurant; coin-op lobby computer with Internet access; coin-op washer/dryer; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, free dataport, fridge (twins and doubles have minibar), hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

WHERE TO DINE

Miyazaki's subtropical climate is conducive to the growth of a number of vegetables and fruits, including sweet pumpkins, oranges, mangoes, cucumbers, shiitake mushrooms, and chestnuts. In summer, a popular dish is Hiyajiru, a rice dish topped with soup made from fish, miso soybean paste, tofu, cucumbers, and other ingredients, while year-round dishes include chicken namban (deep-fried chicken breast served with a sweet-and-sour tartar sauce) and sushi rolls made with lettuce, shrimp, and mayonnaise. Miyazaki is also known for its beef and shochu, an alcoholic drink made from sweet potatoes, buckwheat, or corn.

In addition to the choices below, a great restaurant for a splurge in Seagaia is Queen Alice Agape, located on the 42nd floor of the Sheraton Grande Ocean Resort (☎ 0985/21-1133) with sweeping ocean views. Utilizing fresh Miyazaki ingredients, its Italian cuisine is a collaboration of resident Chef Manaka and Ishinabe Hiroshi (nicknamed the Iron Chef), with past dishes ranging from pepperoncini with tiger crab from Aoshima Port to grilled Miyazaki beef filet served with organic Aya vegetables. Set lunches, served daily 11:30am to 2pm, cost ¥3,000 and ¥5,000 ($25 and $42/£13 and £21); set dinners, available 6 to 9pm, are ¥8,500 and ¥10,000 ($71 and $83/£35 and £42).

②②① Koutatsu LOCAL SPECIALTIES Located on Miyazaki's main downtown street, this restaurant offers four floors of dining, mostly in private tatami rooms with leg wells, and traditional Japanese dishes and regional specialties made with fresh, locally grown ingredients. Set meals make ordering from the Japanese-language menu easy, with obento and mini-kaiseki available for lunch and more elaborate choices for dinner, including the Omakase (chef's choice) for ¥3,000 ($25/£13) and the ¥5,000 ($42/£21) Himukazen, comprised of local specialties, such as black pork shabu-shabu, that change according to what's in season.

3–3 Tachibana-dori-nishi. ☎ 0985/27-6717. Reservations strongly recommended. Set lunches ¥1,050–¥2,100 ($8.75–$18/£4.40–£9); set dinners ¥3,000–¥5,000 ($25–$42/£13–£21). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2pm and 5–11pm. Station: Miyazaki (12 min.). From the station's west exit, walk straight ahead down Takachiho-dori and turn left after crossing Tachibana-dori; it's on Tachibana-dori, on the right just past a parking lot.

Organic Restaurant Sizen JAPANESE/WESTERN BUFFET This pleasant, glass-enclosed buffet restaurant, surrounded by greenery and with outdoor terrace dining, is a good choice for lunch if you're visiting adjoining Heiwadai Park. It offers a changing buffet of Japanese and Western organic dishes in a casual, relaxed setting.

6146 Koshigasako, Shimokitakata-cho. ☎ 0985/31-3693. Buffet lunch ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50). No credit cards. Wed–Mon 11am–2pm. Bus: Heiwadai (1 min.).

Restaurant Paris 5 ★ FRENCH Located to the right of the main entrance to Miyazaki Shrine and convenient if you've been visiting the many sights in the area, this delightful restaurant looks imported directly from sunny southern France. It beckons with a balcony overflowing with flowers and plants and a tall and airy dining room. Only set meals—most featuring seafood and Miyazaki beef—are available. (This is the only French restaurant in Miyazaki authorized to serve Miyazaki beef, but don't ask me why authorization is necessary.) Its cheerful balcony is open year-round (weather permitting). Call beforehand, however, because its proximity to Miyazaki Shrine makes it a popular venue for private wedding receptions.

1–8–8 Jingu-Higashi. ☎ 0985/29-8039. Set lunches ¥2,000–¥4,800 ($17–$40/£8.50–£20); set dinners ¥4,000–¥6,800 ($33–$57/£17–£28). AE, DC, MC, V (accepted only at dinner). Wed–Mon 11:30am–2:30pm and 6–9pm. Bus: From Tachibana-dori Ave. or Miyako Kotsu Bus Center to Miyazaki Jingu (1 min.).

8 Beppu, King of the Hot-Spring Spas ★★

1,228km (763 miles) SW of Tokyo; 186km (116 miles) SE of Fukuoka

Beppu gushes forth more hot-spring water than anywhere else in Japan. With approximately 2,848 hot springs spewing forth 130,000 kiloliters (34 million gal.) of water daily (enough to fill 3,600 25m/82-ft. pools), it has long been one of the country's best-known spa resorts. Some 11 million people come to Beppu every year to relax and rejuvenate themselves in one of the city's 83 public bathhouses, and they do so in a number of unique ways: They sit in mud baths up to their necks, they bury themselves in hot black sand, they soak in hot springs, and on New Year's they bathe in water filled with floating orange peels. They even drink hot-spring water and eat food cooked by its steam.

Bathing reigns supreme here—and I suggest you join in the fun. After all, visiting Beppu without enjoying the baths would be like going to a world-class restaurant with your own TV dinner.

Not a very large town, with a population of 122,500, Beppu is situated on Kyushu's eastern coast in a curve of Beppu Bay, bounded on one side by the sea and on the other by steep hills and mountains. On cold days, steam rises everywhere throughout the city, escaping from springs and pipes and giving the town an otherworldly appearance. Indeed, nine of the hot springs look so much like hell that that's what they're called—Jigoku, the Hells. But, rather than a place most people try to avoid, the Hells are a major tourist attraction. In fact, everything in Beppu is geared toward tourism, and if you're interested in rubbing elbows with Japanese on vacation—particularly the older generation—this is one of the best places to do so.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane The nearest airport is in Oita, a 45-minute bus ride away (bus fare: ¥1,450/$12/£6); flights from Tokyo's Haneda airport (ANA, JAL) take about 1½ hours and cost ¥32,700 ($273/£136).

By Train From Tokyo, take the Shinkansen to Kokura and transfer there to a limited express bound for Beppu; the trip takes about 7 hours (not including transfers) and costs ¥23,180 ($193/£97) for an unreserved seat. There are also direct trains daily from Hakata Station in Fukuoka (trip time: 2½ hr.), Kumamoto (3 hr.), and Miyazaki (3½ hr.).

By Ferry Ferries make nightly runs to Beppu from Osaka, with fares beginning at ¥8,800 ($73/£37); at last check, ferries departed Osaka's South Pier at 6:50pm and 9pm, arriving the next morning at 6:30am and 10:35am respectively. Contact tourist offices in Osaka (see chapter 9) or the Ferry Sunflower in Osaka (☎ 06/6574-8500) for more information.

From Shikoku, the most practical ferry is from Yahatahama, running six times daily and costing ¥2,620 ($22/£11) one-way for the 2½-hour trip; contact the Uwajima Unyu Co. for information (☎ 0894/23-2536). The ferry from Matsuyama, also on Shikoku, departs daily and costs ¥3,200 ($27/£13) for the 23-hour trip; it's run by Ferry Sunflower (see above).

VISITOR INFORMATION Before leaving Tokyo or the Narita or Kansai airports, pick up a copy of the leaflet "Beppu and Vicinity" at the Tourist Information Center, or download it at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under "Browse by Destinations." In Beppu, the Beppu Tourist Information Office (☎ 0977/23-1119; daily 9am–5pm) is located in Beppu Station at the east (main) exit. There's a computer with free Internet access, but you're limited to 10 minutes and you have to stand up. (Note: There is discussion of moving the tourist office to Sol Paseo, an international shopping arcade a 5-min. walk due east of the main exit.) More information is available on the Web at www.beppu-navi.jp and www.we-love-oita.or.jp.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Beppu Station is located near the center of the city. Its main exit is to the east and the sea, while to the west lie the Hells and the majority of hot-spring baths. Because most destinations are not within walking distance, the easiest ways to get around Beppu are by bus and by taxi. Of the two bus companies serving Beppu, the Kameno Bus Company (☎ 0977/23-0141) is the largest and serves most of the city. Bus fares begin at ¥140 ($1.15/60p) and increase according to the distance, but if you plan on doing a lot of sightseeing, there's a 1-day pass called My Beppu Free—which nonetheless costs ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for adults, half-price for children under 12. It allows unlimited travel on Kameno Company buses (which are blue) in the city as well as slight discounts on a few attractions. You can purchase the passes at the Tourist Information Office.

TAKING THE WATERS

Beppu is divided into eight hot-spring areas, each with its own mineral content and natural characteristics. Although any hot-spring bath can help stimulate metabolism and blood circulation and create a general feeling of well-being, there are specific springs with various mineral contents that Japanese believe help relieve ailments ranging from rheumatism and diabetes to skin disease. The tourist office has a pamphlet so you can select the baths that will benefit you the most. And whatever you do, don't rinse off with plain water after taking your bath because this will wash away all those helpful minerals. You should bring your own towel and, for some places, a cotton kimono (yukata), though the latter is also available for sale or for rent.

HOT-SPRING BATHS

SUGINOI PALACE A 15-minute bus ride from Beppu Station via bus no. 10, Suginoi Palace (★) (☎ 0977/24-1141) is an amusement center with one of the best-known baths in all of Japan. Called Tanayu and built of natural woods and glass, it's refined and spacious, with different kinds of baths both inside and out that take advantage of its hillside perch with great views out over the town toward the sea. In addition to an indoor bath, Jacuzzi, and sauna with panoramic views, there are outdoor cypress tubs, waterfall massages (great for shoulders and backs), and even shallow pools with headrests so you can recline to gaze upon the view.

As if that weren't enough, Suginoi Palace itself also has bowling lanes, the attached Uzone complex with arcade games, and stage shows that range from music to dance.

Admission to Tanayu, open daily from 9am to 11pm, costs ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) for adults, ¥1,200 ($10/£5) for junior-high and high-school students, and ¥700 ($5.85/£2.95) for children. If, however, you're staying at the Suginoi Hotel (p. 551), you can use the baths for free.

If you're shy about disrobing in front of strangers or have kids in tow, you might want to visit Suginoi's Aqua-Beat (☎ 0977/26-7600). It's a water park with water slides (great fun!), children's pools, a simulated wave pool, an artificial beach, outdoor hot springs, and a Jacuzzi. A bar-coded locker key on a wristband allows you to lock up your valuables, wear your bathing suit (rental suits available), and dine without having to worry about carrying money; upon exiting, you'll simply feed it into a machine to get your bill. Admission is ¥2,800 ($23/£12) for adults, ¥1,600 ($13/£6.50) for junior-high and high-school students, and 1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for children 4 to 12. In the off season (Sept–June), it costs only ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50), ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20), and ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) respectively. Guests staying at the Suginoi Hotel can go for free. It's open Monday to Friday 10am to 7pm and Saturday, Sunday, and holidays from 10am to 8pm, with extended hours during major holidays (closed for maintenance Dec 5–9).

TERMAS SPA A hot-spring public spa beside the sea, Termas Spa (Kitahama Onsen), Kyomachi 11–1 (☎ 0977/24-4126; Fri–Wed 10am–10pm), offers indoor baths and a sauna, as well as a large outdoor hot-spring pool and Jacuzzi for both sexes overlooking the sea (you wear your swimsuit here). Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, half-price for children. It's a 20-minute walk from Beppu Station (take the east exit and turn left when you reach the sea; it will be on the right); or take bus no. 20, 21, 23, 25, or 26 to Matogahama Koen stop.

HOT-SAND BATHS

One of the unique things you can do in Beppu is take a bath in hot sand, considered useful for treating muscle pain, arthritis, and indigestion. Although several public baths offer hot-sand baths, one of the most atmospheric places is the Takegawara Bathhouse (★★★, 16–23 Motomachi, Beppu 874 (☎ 0977/23-1585; daily 8am–9:30pm, closed third Wed of each month), a 10-minute walk from Beppu Station. Built in 1879 in traditional, Meiji-Era architecture, this beautiful wooden structure is one of the oldest public baths in the city and has an interior that resembles an ancient gymnasium, dominated by a pit filled with black sand. The attendants are used to foreigners here; they'll instruct you to change into the provided yukata and lie down in a hollow they've dug in the sand. An attendant will then shovel sand on top of you and pack you in until only your head and feet are sticking out. I personally didn't find the sand all that hot, but it is relaxing as the heat soaks into your body. You stay buried for 10 minutes, contemplating the wooden ceiling high above and hoping you don't get an itch somewhere. When the time is up, the attendant will tell you to stand up, shower off the sand, and then jump into a bath of hot water. The cost is ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20). To reach the bathhouse, take the main (east) exit from Beppu Station and walk toward the sea, turning right at the street just before the big intersection (across from Tokiwa). The bathhouse is a couple blocks down this street on the right, with its entrance around the corner.

MORE TO SEE & DO

THE HELLS (JIGOKU) You might as well join everyone else and go to the Hells, boiling ponds created by volcanic activity. Their Japanese name, Jigoku, refers to the burning hell of Buddhist sutras. Seven of the nine Hells are clustered close together in the Kannawa hot-spring area, within walking distance of each other, and they can be toured in about 90 minutes or so. Each hell has its own attraction, but because a few are kind of hokey, you might just want to visit a couple. Umi Jigoku, or Sea Hell, has a nice garden setting (spectacular in spring when azaleas are in bloom), a cobalt-blue pond, a greenhouse with giant lotus plants, and a foot bath where you can soak your feet in hot springs. Oniishibozu Jigoku features bubbling mud, a foot bath, and its own hot-spring baths (extra admission charged); Kamado Jigoku, the Oven Hell, was used for cooking and has a statue of a red devil (read: photo op); Chinoike Jigoku, the Blood-Pond Hell, is blood red in color because of the red clay dissolved in the hot water; Tatsumaki Jigoku, or Waterspout Hell, has one of the largest geysers in Japan. Skip Yama Jigoku, featuring animals living in deplorable conditions, and Oniyama Jigoku, featuring much of the same for crocodiles. To reach Kannawa, take bus no. 2 from Beppu Station's west exit 25 minutes to Umijigoku-mae bus stop. After walking to the seven Hells, you can then take bus no. 16 from the Kannawa bus stop onward to the other two Hells.

The Hells are open daily 8am to 5pm. A combination ticket, costing ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) for adults, ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50) for high-school students, ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for junior-high students, and ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for children, allows entrance to eight Hells. Separate entrance fee to each one is ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70). A ninth Hell, the Kinryu Golden Dragon Jigoku costs ¥200 ($1.65/85p); I like its sign, which announces matter-of-factly, IF YOU FALL IN THE POND, YOU WILL BE BOILED. For more information, contact the Beppu Tourist Information Office (see above).

②② JAPAN BAMBOO MUSEUM Beppu is famous for its bamboo crafts, and the best place to shop for bambooware and to learn more about this amazingly durable material is this museum, called Nihon Take-no-Hakubutsukan (6–8–19 Ishigaki-higashi; ☎ 0977/25-7776; daily 8:30am–5pm). Exhibits explain how bamboo grows, the different varieties of bamboo (630 kinds are found in Japan), and the role bamboo has played in Japanese life. Bamboo products from all over Japan are on display, including palanquins, fish traps, lunch boxes, rakes, fans, hats, bows, and arrows. Even Edison's electric light bulb used a bamboo filament. You can see it in 15 minutes, but with your new appreciation for bamboo, you'll easily spend an additional 15 minutes in its shop. Admission is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults, ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for junior-high and high-school students, and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children. To reach it, take Kamenoi bus no. 25 from Beppu Station's east exit to Takezaeku Dentou Sangyo Kaikan stop, in front of the museum's brick building.

Finds On the Road to Hell

Smack dab in the midst of the Hells, across from Oniyama Jigoku, is the Beppu Utamaro Gallery (Minzoku Shiryokan), Kannawa Shibuya 338-3 (☎ 0977/66-8790; daily 9am–10pm), a museum devoted to sex. Fertility gods, erotic statues, pictures of zebras and lions in the act, replicas of penises from the animal kingdom ranging from tiny to humongous, Edo-Era erotic woodblock prints by Utamaro, kinky dioramas (including an adult version of Snow White and her seven little men), and a small theater with porn films are just some of the things on display here. Think of those unsuspecting visitors hoping to see a gallery devoted to famed ukiyo-e artist Utamaro's work! Admission is ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20).

MONKEYS & AN AQUARIUM On Beppu's southern border rises Mount Takasaki, home to some 1,200 wild monkeys and one of Japan's largest monkey habitats (☎ 097/532-5010; daily 8:30am–5pm). At the base of the mountain where they're fed, however (to keep them from raiding farmers' fields), it's nothing but concrete and they don't seem particularly wild or concerned about the humans walking among them. Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults and ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) for children. Come here only if you have children, combining it with a trip to Umitamago, Kaigan, Takasakiyama-shita (☎ 097/534-1010; daily 9am–6pm), across the highway via pedestrian bridge. This aquarium, opened in 2004, features an 8m-high (26-ft.) circular tank with 3,000 fish and sea creatures, as well as seals, sea lions, dolphins, sea otters, sea turtles, a touch pool with harmless sharks and rays, a discovery room for small children, and shows. Admission is ¥1,890 ($16/£8) for adults, ¥950 ($7.90/£3.95) for junior-high and elementary students, and ¥630 ($5.25/£2.65) for children (free for children 3 and younger). To reach Mount Takasaki and the aquarium, take an Oita Kotsu bus that departs from Beppu Station four times an hour (there is no bus number) for 10 minutes to Takasakiyama stop; unfortunately, your My Beppu Free pass isn't accepted on this bus, so you'll have to pay ¥230 ($1.90/95p).

WHERE TO STAY

As with most hot-spring spas, Beppu levies a hot-springs tax: ¥150 ($1.25/65p) per person, per night. In addition, some places raise their rates for New Year's, Golden Week (Apr 29–May 5), Obon (mid-Aug), Saturdays, and evenings before holidays.

EXPENSIVE

②③ Kannawaen ★★ ★ If it's peace and quiet you're searching for, here's the place for you: a wonderful, 65-year-old ryokan hidden away on a lushly landscaped hill just a stone's throw from the Hells. It actually consists of a main building (built as a private summer villa) and five separate houses spread around its grounds, and its tatami rooms with shoji screens look out onto carefully tended gardens, hot springs, bamboo, streams, bonsai, stone lanterns, flowers, and different kinds of cherry trees. This is the perfect place to escape the crowds and to relax in a meandering, open-air bath set among rocks and trees; its water is said to change color seven times a day depending on the intensity of the sunlight. Meals are served in a traditional communal room with leg wells. Even members of the imperial family and prime ministers have stayed here.

Kannawa, Beppu 874-0045. ☎ 0977/66-2111. Fax 0977/66-2113. 12 units, 10 with bathroom. ¥20,000–¥39,000 ($167–$325/£83–£163) per person. ¥5,000 ($42/£21) extra on weekends. Rates include 2 meals. AE, MC, V. Bus: No. 2 from Beppu Station's west exit to Umijigoku-mae (3 min.); look for its entrance between Umi Jigoku and Kamado Jigoku. Amenities: Indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; in-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, safe.

Suginoi Hotel ★ Kids Probably the best-known hotel in Beppu, Suginoi is famous for its adjoining Suginoi Palace, a huge bathing complex with hot-spring baths and a water park (both free to hotel guests). Situated on a wooded hill with a sweeping view of the city and sea below, it's a lively and noisy hotel, filled with good-natured vacationers. If you like being in the middle of the action, this is the place for you. The hotel is divided into two wings, each with its own check-in counter. The older main building (Honkan) is larger, catering primarily to families and groups with Japanese-style rooms and combination rooms with both beds and separate tatami areas. The newer Hana wing is more European in atmosphere with mostly Western-style rooms. Rates are based on the type of room; those facing inland are slightly cheaper than those with fantastic sea views. Both include two buffet-style meals of either Japanese or Western food in their price. With all the kiddie diversions—the water park, game room, cheap eats in Suginoi Palace (even a McDonald's), and a so-called Good Time Floor with a hot-spring tub big enough for the entire family (meals are served in-room here)—this is a perfect choice for families.

Kankaiji, Beppu 874-0822. ☎ 0977/24-1141. Fax 0977/21-0010. www.suginoi-hotel.com. 562 units. ¥15,900–¥23,250 ($133–$194/£66–£97) per person. Rates include 2 meals. Rates higher in peak season. AE, DC, MC, V. Bus: 10 from Beppu Station to Suginoi Palace. Taxi: 8 min. Amenities: 6 restaurants; bar; lounge; Suginoi Palace with hot-spring baths and Aqua-Beat (see “Taking the Waters,” above); 2 24-hr. hot-spring baths for hotel guests only; spa; game room; shopping arcade; salon; room service (2pm–midnight); in-room massage; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

MODERATE

Hotel Arthur I like the location of this hotel, just a 3-minute walk from Beppu Station but tucked away in a side street near restaurants and bars. A warmly decorated lobby sporting a medieval suit of armor leads to the usual small rooms, which have shades in addition to curtains for extra darkness. Some single rooms from the seventh floor have views of the sea at no extra charge. Other extras include a 10th-floor restaurant with good views from three sides and decent Western food, plus two small hot-spring baths, one with a sauna (and the first I've ever seen with a TV in it), with alternating open hours for men and women. The hotel does a good job explaining all its services in English.

1–2–5 Kitahama, Beppu 874-920. ☎ 0977/25-2611. Fax 0977/24-0073. www.hotel-arthur.co.jp. 123 units. ¥6,300–¥8,400 ($53–$70/£26–£35) single; ¥10,500–¥15,700 ($88–$131/£44–£65) twin; ¥9,240–¥13,650 ($77–$114/£39–£57) double. Rates higher on Sat and holidays for twin and double rooms only. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Beppu (3 min. from east exit); turn right just past the Ekimae Onsen. Amenities: Restaurant; indoor hot-spring bath; sauna; lobby computers w/free Internet access; in-room massage; coin-op washer/dryer; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, dataport, minibar, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

②24 Sakaeya ★★ Finds The oldest family-run inn (minshuku) in the city, this is one of the best places to stay near the Hells. There are several interesting features here that have utilized the hot springs for decades. Old radiators, for example, are heated naturally from hot springs. Another relic is the stone oven (jigokugama) in the courtyard, which uses steam from hot springs for cooking (many older homes in Beppu still use such ovens). Use of the oven is free in case you want to cook your own meals, but there's also a modern kitchen you can use. I recommend, however, that you opt for rates that include meals. Most of your dinner will be steamed using the hot springs and then served in a Japanese dining room with whitewashed walls and a heavy timbered ceiling. In winter, the kotatsu (a table with a heating element and covered with a blanket to keep legs warm) in the dining room is steam heated. All rooms are Japanese-style, the oldest of which don't have bathrooms but are very nice and date from the Meiji Period (1868–1912), while those with private bathroom are in a newer addition that nonetheless maintains a traditional atmosphere with sitting alcoves.

Ida, Kannawa, Beppu 874-0043. ☎ 0977/66-6234. Fax 0977/66-6235. 12 units, 7 with bathroom. Bus: Jigokubara (2 min.); take the 1st left. Amenities: Indoor hot-spring baths. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea.

INEXPENSIVE

Kokage This 40-year-old minshuku is a member of the Japanese Inn Group. There are both Japanese and twin rooms, simply furnished. Those with bathrooms have hot-spring water, while one room for three people has only a sink and toilet. There's also a public, rock-lined, hot-spring bath, and meals are served in a homey dining room with a cluttered but interesting collection of antique lamps, clocks, and other items. If you like, the owners will fit you out in a wedding kimono and take your picture with your camera. Note, however, that there's a midnight curfew and the inn is lax about answering faxes. If you don't get an answer by e-mail, try reserving by phone.

8–9 Ekimaecho, Beppu 874-0935. ☎ 0977/23-1753. Fax 0977/23-3895. kokage@mx6.tiki.ne.jp. 11 units, 10 with bathroom, 1 with toilet only. ¥4,350 ($36/£18) single with bathroom; ¥7,650 ($64/£32) twin with bathroom; ¥9,900 ($83/£41) triple with toilet only, ¥11,475 ($96/£48) triple with bathroom. Breakfast ¥840 ($7/£3.50) extra; Japanese dinner ¥1,890 ($16/£8) extra. AE, MC, V. Station: Beppu (2 min.). From the station's main east exit, walk straight ahead for 2 blocks to a stoplight just past Ekimae Onsen, turn right, and then turn immediately right again into a small alley (it's easy to miss). Amenities: Free washer/dryer; coin-op computer in lobby. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea.

②25 Yokoso Housed in a beige-colored, two-story building on Ideyuzaka, the main road between the group of Hells, Yokoso offers what are probably the cheapest rooms in all of Beppu. Run by English-speaking, third-generation innkeepers, it has clean Japanese-style rooms equipped with only the basics. Air-conditioning in summer is coin operated, but steam heating is free. No meals are served, but a communal open-air kitchen is available for do-it-yourselfers, complete with a hot-springs-powered oven and suggestions for how long to cook food in bamboo steamers (20 min. for potatoes; there's a grocery store across the street). Four public baths boast water from hot springs. In an annex are 25 more rooms, a rotenburo (outdoor bath; you wear your swimming suit here), and a carp pond in a garden. It also has one of the most interesting saunas I've ever seen, so tiny you have to crawl inside; heated naturally with hot springs, it even has a grass floor, as in the days of yore. Note that there's an 11pm curfew here.

WHERE TO DINE

②26 Biliken VARIED JAPANESE It is easy to spot this casual restaurant on the main street halfway between the station and the sea because of the gold statue to the left of the doorway of Biliken—a curious-looking, bald-headed, round-tummied god who is said to bring good luck. Popular with shoppers, businessmen, and families, the place is managed by English-speaking Hideko-san and her husband. A display case outside and a picture menu make ordering easy for Japanese set meals that include tempura, broiled eel, sashimi, tonkatsu, and more, with seating on tatami or at dark lacquered tables.

2-1-18 Kitahama. ☎ 0977/21-2088. Set meals ¥750–¥2,500 ($6.25–$21/£3.10–£11); set lunch ¥650 ($5.40/£2.70). No credit cards. Fri–Wed 11:30am–9:30pm. Station: Beppu (4 min.), on the left side of the main road leading to the sea.

227 Mitsu Boshi ★★ FRENCH KAISEKI This small, cozy restaurant on the main road leading south of the seven cluster of Hells serves French cuisine with a Japanese twist, presented in a kaiseki style with set meals consisting of many small dishes expertly executed by the owner-chef. Seasonal seafood, steaks with one of four sauces, and original creations round out the menu.

284 Kannawa. ☎ 0977/67-3536. Main dishes ¥1,575–¥2,800 ($13–$23/£6.50–£12); set dinners ¥4,000–¥7,000 ($33–$58/£17–£29); set lunches ¥1,400–¥5,250 ($12–$44/£6–£22). No credit cards. Wed–Mon 11am–2:30pm and 5–9pm (last order). Bus: Kamenoi Bus no. 5, 41, or 43 from Beppu Station's west exit 16 min. to Kannawa (1 min.). In front of the bus stop, on Miyuki Zaka.

Northeastern Honshu: Tohoku

Because so many of Japan's historic events took place in Kyoto, Tokyo, and other cities in southern Honshu, most visitors to Japan never venture farther north than Tokyo. True, northeastern Honshu (called the Tohoku District) does not have the famous temples, shrines, gardens, and castles of southern Japan, but it does have spectacular mountain scenery, national parks, hot springs in abundance, excellent ski resorts, and many hiking trails. Its rugged, mountainous terrain, coupled with cold, snowy winters, has also helped preserve the region's traditions. You won't find any of Tokyo's edgy flashiness here, but rather a down-to-earth practicality, warm hospitality, and a way of life that harks back generations.

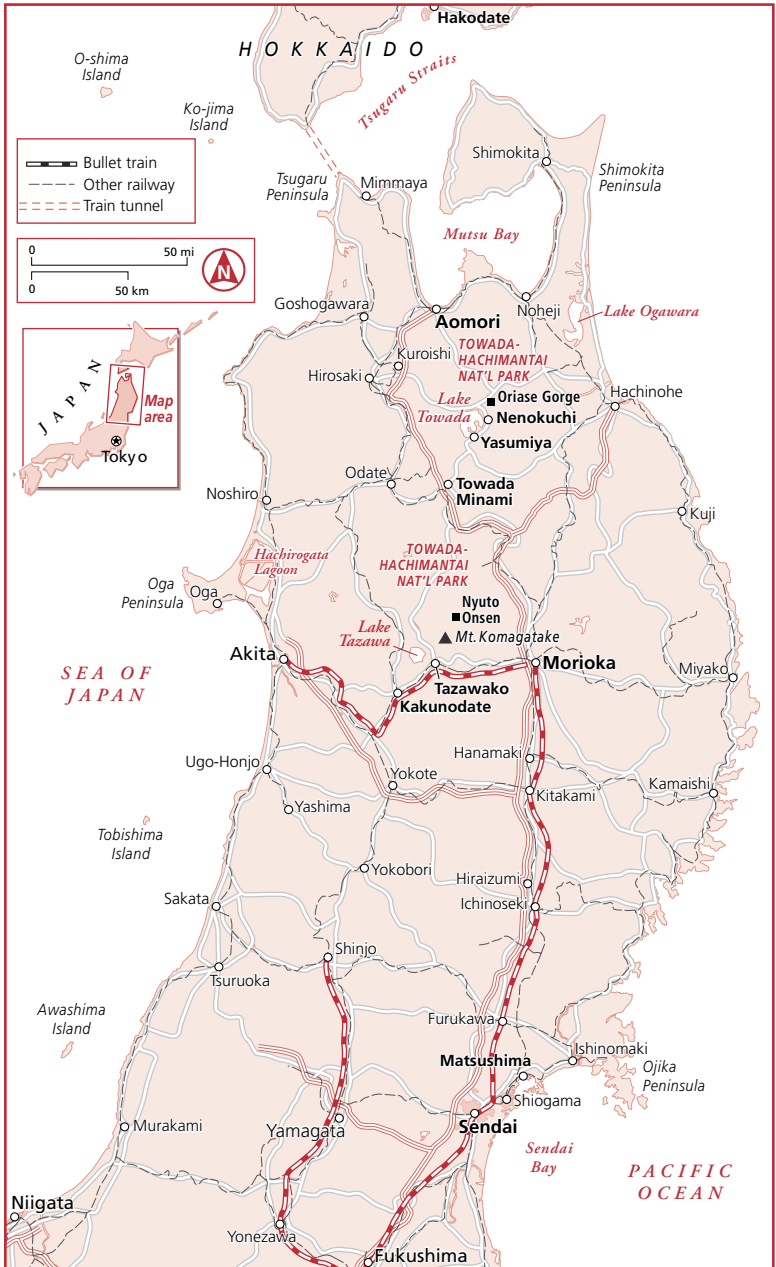

Matsushima, about 3 hours north of Tokyo, is considered one of Japan's most scenic spots, with pine-covered islets dotting its bay. Farther north, near the middle of Tohoku, is the pleasant village of Kakunodate, once a thriving castle town and famous for its remaining samurai houses and cherry trees. Occupying 862 sq. km (333 sq. miles) of northern Tohoku is the resplendent Towada-Hachimantai National Park, best visited for its scenic lakes, rustic hot-spring spas that seem little changed over the decades, skiing, and hiking, including a trail that flanks the picture-perfect Oirase Stream. And after a day of trekking or skiing, what could be better than a soothing hot-spring soak?

TOHOKU ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE & AROUND Northern Tohoku's major airports are in Aomori and Akita. JAL flies from Tokyo's Haneda Airport to Aomori (¥27,600/$230/£115 one-way) as well as to Akita (¥22,600/$188/£94 one-way). You can also travel to Tohoku via Shinkansen bullet train from Ueno or Tokyo Station in Tokyo as far as Akita (¥16,300/$136/£68 for an unreserved seat), with stops at Kakunodate and Tazawako, a convenient springboard for travel onward to Towada-Hachimantai National Park.

Although there is bus service in the national park, buses to some of the more remote areas are infrequent or nonexistent. For that reason, Tohoku is one of the few regions in Japan where rental cars are a great convenience, if not a necessity. In addition to car-rental agencies at both Aomori and Akita airports, there are JR Eki Rent-A-Car offices at train stations throughout Japan, including Aomori, Morioka, Kakunodate, and Tazawako stations, which offer 20% discounts for train fares booked in conjunction with car rentals. You'll also find Toyota Rent-A-Car offices virtually everywhere. If you want to keep your driving to a minimum, I suggest taking a Shinkansen as far as Tazawako or Kakunodate and then, after seeing the sights there, drive to Nyuto Onsen for the night before continuing northward to Lake Towada. A 2-day rental of a subcompact car costs about ¥14,695 ($122/£61), including mileage and insurance.

Northeastern Honshu: Tohoku

Tips Touring Northern Japan

Depending on your destinations, it might make sense to visit cities in Tohoku and Hokkaido in reverse from what I've laid down here due to more convenient bus connections. See chapter 3 for a recommended itinerary.

Drop-off fees can add ¥4,000 to ¥9,000 ($33–$75/£17–£38), depending on the distance. Keep in mind that Tohoku's winter season, from November to March, can bring below-freezing temperatures and up to a foot of snowfall virtually overnight. Some mountain passes are occasionally closed due to snowfall, though access to major ski resorts is generally open. See “Getting Around Japan,” in chapter 2, for information on renting a car. Contact information for rental agencies in Tohoku is provided under destination listings below.

1 The Pine-Clad Islands of Matsushima

375km (234 miles) NE of Tokyo

Because the trip to northern Tohoku or onward to Hokkaido is such a long one, the most pleasant way to travel is to break up the journey with an overnight stay in Matsushima . Matsushima means “Pine-Clad Islands”—and that's exactly what this region is. More than 260 pine-covered islets and islands dot Matsushima Bay, giving it the appearance of a giant pond in a Japanese landscape garden where twisted and gnarled pines sweep upward from volcanic tuff and white sandstone, creating bizarre and beautiful shapes.

Matsushima is so dear to Japanese hearts that it's considered one of the three most scenic spots in Japan (the other two are Miyajima in Hiroshima Bay and Amanohashidate on the north coast of Honshu)—and was so designated about 270 years ago in a book written by a Confucian philosopher of the Edo government. Basho (1644–94), the famous Japanese haiku poet, was so struck by Matsushima's beauty that it's almost as though he were at a loss for words when he wrote: “Matsushima, Ah! Matsushima! Matsushima!”

Unfortunately, motorboats have been invented since Basho's time, detracting from the beauty that evoked such ecstasy in him long ago.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE From Tokyo, take the Tohoku Shinkansen train from Ueno or Tokyo Station to Sendai, which costs ¥10,080 ($84/£43) for an unreserved seat and will take from 1½ to 2¼ hours, depending on the number of stops. In Sendai (there's a tourist office in Sendai Station, open daily 8:30–8pm, where you can pick up a map of Matsushima and boat and train schedules), change to the JR Senseki Line—it's well marked in English and trains depart approximately every half-hour. From Sendai, the trip to Matsushima Kaigan Station takes about 25 minutes by express train and costs ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70).

A more picturesque way to get to Matsushima, however, is to take the Senseki Line from Sendai only as far as Hon-Shiogama (about 18 min. by express), where you can catch a sightseeing boat operated by the Matsushima Backroads Co. (☎ 022/366-5111) for a 50-minute trip to Matsushima Kaigan Pier; tickets cost ¥1,420 ($12/£6) for adults, half-price for children. You'll pass the unsightly Tohoku power station, which, it is said, was built in such a way "as not to distract from Matsushima Bay's beauty, but rather harmonize with it." I don't even have to tell you my thoughts on this. Otherwise, it's a pleasant trip, despite the nonstop commentary in Japanese. Boats depart from both Hon-Shiogama and Matsushima Kaigan piers in both directions about every half-hour between 9:30am and 3:30pm, but only once an hour between 10am and 3pm November through mid-April. From Hon-Shiogama Station, it's a 10-minute walk to the boat pier; take a right out of the station, cross the street, turn right at the first red light (crossing under the tracks), and continue straight on.

VISITOR INFORMATION Upon your arrival in Matsushima, stop off at one of the two Matsushima Tourist Association offices, where you can pick up an English-language map with information on major sites and get directions to your hotel. One is located to the right after you exit Matsushima Kaigan Station (☎ 022/354-2263; weekdays 9:30am–4:30pm, weekends and holidays 9am–5pm). Adjoining the tourist office is a hotel-reservation counter where you can book rooms for free; you can also leave your luggage here (¥200–¥300/$1.70–$2.50/85p–$1.25 per bag), useful if you're making a quick stopover (there are also lockers in Sendai Station).

If you're arriving in Matsushima by boat, you'll find another information office in the modern building to the left of Matsushima Kaigan Pier (☎ 022/354-2618; daily 8:30am–5pm, to 4:30pm in winter).

Limited information is also available on the Web at www.pref.miyagi.jp.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Matsushima Kaigan Station lies to the west of the boat pier and Matsushima's main attractions; the train station and pier are about a 6-minute walk apart. All of Matsushima's major attractions are within walking distance of both the station and the pier (though the pier is more centrally located); you can cover the entire area on foot in a half-day of sightseeing. Otherwise, a Loop Line Bus that passes many sights and most hotels runs daily twice an hour (7:44am–6:14pm from Matsushima Kaigan Station) and costs ¥100 (85¢/45p).

SEEING THE SIGHTS

CRUISING THE BAY Arriving in Matsushima by sightseeing boat is a good introduction to the bay because you'll pass pine-covered islands and oyster rafts along the way. Board the boat in Hon-Shiogama for the 50-minute trip to Matsushima Kaigan Pier (see "Getting There," above).

If you come by train or even if you arrive by boat, you might want to take a boat trip in the bay. Regular sightseeing boats depart from the pier once an hour between 9am and 4pm, making 50-minute trips around the bay; they charge ¥1,400 ($12/£6) for adults, half-price for children.

TEMPLES & HISTORIC BUILDINGS

②28 Zuiganji Temple ★★ ★ Matsushima's best-known structure is the most famous Zen temple in northern Japan. Located just a couple minutes' walk from Matsushima Kaigan Pier and 10 minutes from the train station, its entrance is shaded by tall cedar trees. On the right side of the pathway leading to the temple are caves and grottoes dug out by priests long ago; adorned with Buddhist statues and memorial tablets, they were used for practicing Zazen (sitting meditation) and are an impressive sight. Here, too, you'll find what is probably Japan's only monument to . . . eels!

Now a National Treasure and the highlight of a stay in Matsushima, Zuiganji Temple was originally founded in the Heian Period (828) as a Tendai temple but became

Tips A Note on Japanese Characters

Many hotels, restaurants, attractions, and other establishments in Japan do not have signs giving their names in Roman (English-language) letters. Appendix C lists the Japanese equivalents for all such places described in this guide. Each set of characters representing an establishment name has a number in the appendix that corresponds to the number that appears inside the oval before the establishment's name in the text. Thus, to find the Japanese for, say, Zuiganji Temple (below), refer to no. 228 in appendix C.

a Zen temple in the 13th century. After a period of decline, it was remodeled in 1604 by order of Date Masamune, the most powerful and important lord of northern Honshu (more on him below). Unifying the region known as Tohoku, Date built his castle in nearby Sendai, and today almost all sites in and around Sendai and Matsushima are tied to the Date family. It took hundreds of workers 5 years to build the impressive main hall, a large wooden structure that was constructed in the shoin-zukuri style typical of the Momoyama Period and served as the Date family temple. But it's the temple's interior that impresses, especially the wood-carved transoms and brilliantly painted, gold-plated sliding doors (fusuma). A room at the back is dedicated to the samurai who were laid to rest here, having followed their Date lord into death by committing ritualistic suicide. On temple grounds is the Zuiganji Art Museum (Seiryuden), which houses temple and Date family treasures displayed on a rotating basis, including painted sliding doors, portraits and statues of the Date clan, teacups, scrolls, calligraphy, and woodblock prints, many of Matsushima as it looked in former times. In all, you'll probably spend an hour at Zuiganji Temple.

Under the supervision of Zuiganji Temple is Godaido, a small wooden worship hall on a tiny island not far from the pier. Connected to the mainland by a short bridge, its grounds are open night and day and are free, but there's not much to see other than the bay. Nevertheless, Godaido is often featured in brochures of Matsushima, making this delicate wooden temple one of the town's best-known landmarks.

91 Aza-chonai.  022/354-2023. Admission for both Seiryuden and Zuiganji Temple ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) adults, ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) children. Daily 8am to between 3:30 and 5pm, depending on the month.

(229) Entsuin   Finds This lesser-known temple was also built in the early Edo Period, more than 360 years ago by the Date clan. It features a small rock garden (with seven rocks representing the Seven Deities of Good Fortune), a moss garden with six different types of moss, a lovely rose garden, an Edo-Period garden with a pond and “borrowed landscaping,” and a small temple housing an elaborate statue of Lord Date Mitsumune, grandson of Lord Date Masamune, who founded the Sendai fief. Depicted here on a white steed, Mitsumune was reportedly poisoned by the Tokugawa shogunate and died at the tender age of 19 in Edo Castle. The seven statues surrounding him represent retainers, who committed ritual suicide to follow their master into death. The interior walls are all covered with an overlay of gold. The painting of an occidental rose on the right-hand door is thought to be the first in Japan (hence the rose garden); other Western flowers include narcissus and corona. Be on the lookout for “hidden” joined crosses above the door that are slanted; because Christianity was banned in Edo Japan, the Date clan used crosses as a symbol for silent revolt. Expect to spend about 45 minutes here, enjoying the serenity (this temple doesn't get near the crowds of Zuiganji) and views of the wonderful gardens.

67 Aza-chonai. ☎ 022/354-3206. Admission ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) high-school students, ¥100 (85¢/45p) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm (to 3pm in winter). Next to Zuiganji Temple (to the left as you face it).

Kanrantei Another famous structure is Kanrantei, the “Water-Viewing Pavilion,” just a 1-minute walk from the pier. A simple wooden teahouse, it was used by generations of the Date family for such aesthetic pursuits as viewing the moon and watching the ripples on the tide. Originally it belonged to warlord Toyotomi Hideyoshi as part of his estate at Fushimi Castle near Kyoto, but he presented it to the Date family at the end of the 16th century; it was moved here in 1645, where it remains one of the largest teahouses in Japan. For an additional ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) or more (depending on the accompanying sweet), you can drink ceremonial green tea while sitting on tatami and contemplating the bay, its islands, and the boats carving ribbons through the water. After tea, wander through the small museum containing samurai armor, ceramics, lacquerware, and tea-ceremony utensils belonging to the Date family.

56–1 Aza-chonai. ☎ 022/353-3355. Admission ¥200 ($1.65/85p) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) university and high-school students, ¥100 (85¢/45p) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm (to 4:30pm in winter).

MUSEUMS

②30 Michinoku Date Masamune Historical Museum (Michinoku Date Masamune Rekishikan) ★ This wax museum details the life and times of Masamune (1567–1636) through 25 life-size, audiovisual diorama displays. Showing everything from how Masamune lost sight in one of his eyes at age 5 to his marriage at age 13 to his victories in battle (he fought his first battle at age 15), the dioramas bring to life what might otherwise be dull history. At the very least, you get to see how people dressed back then and learn why Masamune was nicknamed the One-Eyed Dragon. Of less interest are wax figures of early-19th- and 20th-century personalities of northern Japan; be sure to ask for the English-language pamphlet, since—with the exception, perhaps, of former prime minister Koizumi and Yankee star Matsue—you otherwise won't know who the heck they are. Plan on spending 30 minutes here.

Matsushima Kaigan. ☎ 022/354-4131. www.date-masamune.jp. Admission ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) adults, ¥600 ($5/£2.50) junior-high and high-school students, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) children. Daily 8:30am–5pm (9am–4:30pm in winter). Across from Godaido Temple, set back from the main street.

Matsushima Orgel Museum ★★ This is a museum within a museum: It displays the entire Belgium National Music Box Museum, which was bought and shipped lock, stock, and barrel from Bruges, Belgium. The 100 or so music boxes, dating from 1860 to 1950, are priceless. Some were owned by kings, while others were designed for theaters, exhibitions, dance halls, cafes, or train stations; they are quite huge and elaborate. The largest in the collection (and one of the largest in the world) boasts 619 wooden pipes, drums, trumpets, and xylophones. There are also phonographs, player pianos, harmoniums, and other early inventions (including a 1900 Ediphone). Best of all, some of the music boxes (including the largest one) are played on request. You can easily spend 45 pleasurable minutes here.

33–3 Funendo. ☎ 022/353-3600. Admission ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) adults, ¥700 ($5.85/£2.90) junior-high and high-school students, ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) children. Daily 9am–5:30pm (to 5pm in winter). Station: Matsushima Kaigan (15 min.). On the main road, an 8-min. walk from the pier.

ISLANDS

On the southern edge of Matsushima, about an 8-minute walk from Matsushima Kaigan Station, is Oshima, a small island once used as a retreat by priests. Long ago there were more than 100 hand-dug caves carved with scriptures, Buddhist images, and sutras, but today the island and its remaining 50 caves and stone images are rather neglected. There's no fee, there's no gate, and the island never closes. Connected to the mainland by bridge, it's a nice quiet spot in which to sit and view the harbor; you can walk around the entire island in about 20 minutes. Because it was a Buddhist retreat, women were forbidden on the island until after the Meiji Restoration in 1868.

At the other end of Matsushima, about a 10-minute walk from the boat pier, is Fukuurajima, another island connected to the mainland, this time by a long red concrete bridge with orange-colored railings. It's a botanical garden of sorts, with several hundred labeled plants and trees, but mostly it's unkempt and overgrown—which comes as a surprise in cultivated Japan. It will take you less than an hour to circle the island, and there are many resting spots along the way, including a snack shop selling ice cream and drinks. The island gate is open 8am to 5pm (4:30pm in winter) and admission is ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for adults, half-price for children.

WHERE TO STAY

Because this is a popular tourist destination, accommodations in Matsushima are not cheap, especially during the peak months of May through November. For the Tanabata Festival (Aug 6–8 in Sendai) and the Toronagashi Festival (Aug 15–16 in Matsushima), rooms may be fully booked 6 months in advance and rates are at their highest. Rates are generally lower during the off-season months (Dec–Apr).

Directions are given from the boat pier or train station, whichever is closer. The pier and station are about a 6-minute walk apart.

EXPENSIVE

②31 Hotel Ichinobo ★★ Despite its large size, modern facilities, and the word “hotel” in its name, this property has the atmosphere of a traditional ryokan (albeit a rather large, modern one) and offers mostly Japanese-style rooms. It's surrounded by pine trees and boasts lovely landscaped grounds and ponds, with views of the sea and islands from all its rooms and the wonderful public baths. It also offers 26 esthetically furnished Matsushima Club twin rooms that include DVD players (and free DVD rentals) and use of a private lounge; some of these boast glassed-in, private whirlpool baths off private balconies. Dinners are served in one of two restaurants, one featuring a pond where hapless fish await their fate and the other offering Italian cuisine. Glass buffs should not miss the hotel's Kyohei Fujita Museum of Glass, dedicated to Kyohei Fujita (who had the distinction of being the only glass artist designated a National Living Treasure until his death). Although Ichinobo's location on the northern edge of Matsushima—about a 20-minute walk from the pier—is inconvenient, staff will fetch you upon arrival, and the Loop Line Bus also stops here.

MODERATE

Matsushima Century Hotel ★ This 20-year-old white hotel, near Fukuurajima island, is popular with families. I recommend taking a Japanese-style room or a combination room with both tatami area and beds, as these all face the bay with a balcony and chairs. Otherwise, if you're on a budget, the cheapest Western-style rooms, though sunny and cheerful, face inland, are small with unit baths, and have no balconies. Meals are served in a restaurant; breakfast is an all-you-can-eat buffet.

8 Aza Senzui, Matsushima-cho, Miyagi-gun 981-0213. ☎ 022/354-4111. Fax 022/354-4191. yoyaku@centuryhotel.co.jp. 135 units. ¥13,650–¥16,800 ($114–$140/£57–£70) per person in summer; ¥11,500–¥14,700 ($96–$123/£48–£61) per person in winter. ¥3,000 ($25/£13) extra Sat and nights before a holiday. Rates include 2 meals. AE, DC, MC, V. A 5-min. walk east of the pier. Call for a pickup from the station. Loop Line: Century Hotel. Amenities: Restaurant; coffee shop; outdoor pool w/children's pool (free for hotel guests); public baths (w/sauna) overlooking the bay; in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service; lobby computer w/free Internet access. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe (Japanese-style units only).

②32 Taikanso ★★ Value Able to accommodate 1,100 guests, Matsushima's largest hotel sprawls atop a plateau surrounded by pine-covered hills and offers the best views in town. Although it's a bit of a hike from attractions, it is served by the Loop Line Bus. Both Western- and Japanese-style rooms are available, though the cheapest rooms (singles and twins) face inland. All the Japanese-style rooms face the sea (though views are marred for some by a bus parking lot), including wonderful combination rooms (the most expensive) which offer the best of both worlds with tatami areas and beds. A plus here is that you can choose from six restaurants to dine in (including a crab dinner), with rates dependent on the meal and restaurant. One of the least expensive is one of my favorites: Shiosai (p. 562), which has the best view in town of both Matsushima Bay and the surrounding hills. The front desk is very helpful with English-language sightseeing information.

AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Matsushima Kaigan (15 min.). Loop Line Bus: Taikanso. Amenities: 6 restaurants; coffee shop; 3 bars; outdoor pool (free for hotel guests); indoor and outdoor public baths overlooking the island-studded bay; game room; souvenir and amenities shop; room service (8pm–11:30pm); in-room massage; same-day laundry/dry-cleaning service. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

INEXPENSIVE

Folkloro Matsushima Value This modern, simple budget hotel with Western-style rooms is located on a steep hill above the train station and has a nice outdoor terrace where you can have breakfast (dinner is not available). Catering mostly to couples and families, it offers only twins (though solo travelers can stay in a twin room) and larger family rooms with two twin beds and two sofa beds, most with views of the sea. Rail pass holders get a 10% discount. Higher rates below are for peak season.

Rates include breakfast. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Matsushima Kaigan (10 min.). Take a right out of the station, then another right under the tracks, and continue straight up the hill; the hotel will be on your left. Free shuttle from the station 3–5pm. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Hotel Daimatsuso An older, worn hotel, with a lobby crowded by a souvenir shop and vending machines (and with free coffee in the morning), it's homey nonetheless and close to the train station. The cheapest rooms (both Japanese and Western style) have no bathrooms and look unceremoniously onto another building; this is where you'll probably end up if you opt for a room without meals. Otherwise, best are Japanese-style rooms on the fifth floor facing the sea with balconies, some of which are combination rooms with beds and tatami areas. Rooms come with the basics, though some of the bathrooms are so small you have to wonder how some people fit into them. Dinner is served in your room, while breakfast is in the dining room.

25 Azachonai, Matsushima-cho, Miyagi-gun 981-0213. ☎ 022/354-3601. Fax 022/354-6154. 41 units, 3 with toilet only, 29 with bathroom. ¥6,300–¥7,350 ($53–$61/£26–£31) per person without meals; ¥10,500–¥12,600 ($88–$105/£44–£53) per person with 2 meals. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Matsushima Kaigan (1 min.). Walk straight out of the station; the hotel will be on your left. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, safe.

WHERE TO DINE

In summer, stalls up and down the main street of Matsushima sell grilled octopus, corn on the cob, and crab.

②33 Donjiki Chaya NOODLES/ODANGO This rustic noodle shop with an English-language menu is a convenient place for an inexpensive lunch if you're visiting Zuiganji and Entsuin temples. Built about 400 years ago, it's easy to spot because of its thatched roof, with sliding doors pushed wide open in summer and tatami seating. In addition to buckwheat noodles, it also serves odango, pounded rice balls covered with sesame, red-bean, or soy sauce (¥480/$4/£2 for 5 pieces). Or, stop by for a refreshing plum vinegar drink—it's much better than it sounds.

Entsuin-mae, Matsushima. ☎ 022/354-5855. Noodles ¥380–¥580 ($3.15–$4.85/£1.60–£2.45). No credit cards. Apr–Nov daily 9am–5pm; Dec–Mar Sat–Sun and holidays 9am–4pm. In front of Entsuin Temple, a 5-min. walk from Matsushima Kaigan Station or the pier.

Shiosai ★★ Value FRENCH Located atop a hill, this restaurant has the best view in town. Book a table at sunset close to the floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking Matsushima, where you can watch the day fade and lights in the town below begin to glimmer. Only set meals are available, but they're very good and surprisingly inexpensive. My ¥2,940 ($25/£12) dinner consisted of pumpkin soup, seafood cocktail and steak, salad, bread, dessert, and coffee or tea. It's a good place for a romantic meal. Or, from 3 to 5pm, come for teatime and enjoy the view.

Taikanso Hotel, 7th floor, 10–76 Aza Inuta. ☎ 022/354-2161. Set lunches ¥1,260–¥2,835 ($11–$24/£5.25–£12); set dinners ¥2,415–¥4,095 ($20–$34/£10–£17). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–3pm and 5:30–8:30pm (last order). For directions, see "Where to Stay," above.

Ungai ★ Finds BUDDHIST VEGETARIAN Located on the grounds of Entsuin Temple (dining here gets you free admission to the temple), this is a great place for a peaceful meal, as you dine in a modern tatami room and look out over a garden. It serves three set meals typical of Buddhist vegetarian cuisine (which features many small dishes with vegetables and tofu that change with the seasons); let your budget be your guide. Although reservations should be made 1 day in advance, your hotel may be able to reserve on the same day.

Entsuin Temple, 67 Aza-chonai. ☎ 022/353-2626. Reservations required. Set meals ¥4,042 ($34/£17), ¥5,775 ($48/£24), and ¥8,085 ($67/£34). No credit cards. Daily 11am–2pm. Next to Zuiganji Temple (Entsuin Temple is to the left when facing Zuiganji Temple; the restaurant entrance is just past Entsuin's entrance).

2 Kakunodate, Town of Samurai Homes ★

Kakunodate was founded in 1620 by feudal lord Ashina Yoshikatsu, who chose the site for its river and easily defended mountain. His samurai retainers settled just south of his hilltop castle, in modest thatched-roof homes behind wooden fences along wide, fine streets, which they lined with weeping cherry trees imported from Kyoto. To help support themselves, the samurai engaged in cottage industry, crafting beautiful products made from cherry bark. Meanwhile, merchants settled in their own district, in narrow, cramped quarters. Many of the town's 13,000 residents are direct descendants of the town's original samurai and merchants.

Although the castle is long gone, Kakunodate's castle-town architectural layout remains remarkably intact, with one of the country's best-preserved (though regretably small) samurai districts in Japan. It's also famous for its cherry trees, not only in the samurai district but also along the banks of the Hinokinai River, and for its crafts produced from local cherry bark. Yet Kakunodate is an unpretentious village, with only a few of the souvenir and tourist shops that plague other picturesque towns.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE From Tokyo, take the Tohoku Shinkansen train from Ueno or Tokyo Station to Morioka and then the Akita Shinkansen to Kakunodate. (You can travel via most Shinkansen the entire distance without having to transfer.) The trip takes about 3½ hours and costs ¥15,850 ($132/£66) for a reserved seat (some trains require reservations). Kakunodate is just one stop after Tazawako. (See “Towada-Hachimantai National Park: For the Active Traveler,” below.)

VISITOR INFORMATION After you exit Kakunodate Station, look for the Kakunodate Tourist Information Center to the right, housed in a replica of a traditional warehouse (☎ 0187/52-1170; daily 9am–6pm), where you can pick up an English-language map from the helpful, English-speaking staff and reserve a hotel room.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND You can walk to all the sights and lodging and dining recommendations below (though you might opt for a short taxi ride to your accommodations if you're weighed down by luggage). To reach the samurai district, about a 15- to 20-minute walk from the station, walk straight out of the station and continue until it ends at a T-intersection (you'll see a post office across the street; this is the former merchant district and the heart of the city). Here, you turn right. Or, you might wish to tour by rental bike, available in a shop on the plaza in front of the train station next to the police koban for ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for 1 hour or ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) for 5 hours.

CAR RENTALS If you've rented a car through JR Eki Rent-A-Car (☎ 0187/53-2070), you can pick it up at Folkloro Kakunodate, a JR-owned hotel beside the train station to the left. For Toyota Rent-A-Car in Kakunodate, call ☎ 0187/55-2100.

SEEING THE SIGHTS

Kakunodate is at its most glorious (and crowded) in late April, when its hundreds of cherry trees are in full bloom. The most popular viewing spot is along the Hinokinai River, where two rows of some 400 cherry trees form a shimmering tunnel of blossoms for 2km (1¼ miles). They were planted in 1933 to commemorate the birth of the present emperor, Akihito.

THE SAMURAI DISTRICT (BUKEYASHIKI) ★★ Of Kakunodate's 80-some samurai mansions built during the Edo Period, only seven remain. Still, the district retains its feudal atmosphere to an amazing degree, thanks to its wide streets flanked by weeping cherry trees and dark wooden fences. These fences and traditional entry gates are employed even today to conceal more modern homes, giving a clean, crisp line of vision throughout the district. It's a strong contrast to the jumble of most Japanese cities, and even to the merchant district that's just a short walk away.

If you're walking from the station, you'll pass several samurai houses on Bukeyashiki Street that are open free to the public (though admittance inside is restricted), including the Odano Samurai House to the right, the Kawarada Samurai House next door, the Matsumoto Samurai House across the street (where you can usually see craftsmen at work), and the city-owned Iwahashi Samurai House on the right, which has appeared in movies.

But the first major place of interest will be the (234) Aoyagi Samurai Manor (Kakunodate Rekishi-mura Aoyagi) ㊦㊦㊦, Higashi Katuraku-cho 26 (㊦ 0187/54-3257), to the right through an impressive entry gate that serves as testimony to the Aoyagi family's high samurai status. This is more than a mere manor, however, as it's actually a compound of several traditional buildings spread throughout an unkempt garden, each filled with a wealth of eclectic treasures from the 17th to 20th centuries, collected through the ages by the Aoyagi family and well documented in English. As you wander through the buildings, you'll see samurai armor, rifles, swords, dolls, kimono, sake cups, Ukiyo-e (woodblock prints), scrolls and screens, Meiji-Era uniforms and medals, farm tools, antique phonographs, and cameras. Other buildings hold shops, a teahouse, and a restaurant. You'll want to spend at least an hour exploring here. Open daily 9am to 5pm (to 4pm in winter). Admission is ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) for adults, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for junior-high and high-school students, and ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for children.

Next door is the Ishiguro Samurai House ㊦㊦, Omotemachi (㊦ 0187/55-1496). In contrast to the Aoyagi Samurai Manor, this thatched-roof home remains almost exactly as it might have looked when it was constructed 200 years ago by the Ishiguro samurai family. After the Meiji Restoration, the family became landlords and collected rice as rent. Today, English-speaking, 12th-generation Ishiguro Naotsugi continues to live here; he has opened five simple but elegant rooms to the public in the main house. Family heirlooms, including samurai gear, winter geta (fur-lined and with spikes), scales for weighing rice, and old maps of Kakunodate are on display in a former warehouse. The medical illustrations (copies), by the way, are from Japan's first book on anatomy, copied from a Dutch book in 1774 by Kakunodate samurai Odano Naotake. You can see everything in less than 30 minutes, though if Ishiguro-san is on hand to answer questions, you might linger longer. Open daily 9am to 5pm. Admission is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults and ¥150 ($1.25/65p) for children.

SHOPPING

Kakunodate has been famous for its cherry-bark crafts since the Edo Period. You can observe this painstaking craft by watching artisans at work at the (235) Kakunodate-machi Denshokan, Omotemachi Shimocho 10-1 (㊦ 0187/54-1700), just a couple minutes' walk from the samurai houses, above, on Bukeyashiki Street on the left. In addition to seeing how strips of cherry bark are applied to tea canisters, boxes, vases, and other goods by live demonstrations by local craftsmen, you can tour a museum devoted to the craft along with displays of samurai outfits and items that once belonged to the Kakunodate feudal lord, as well as everyday items used by common people such as straw raingear and geta ice skates and wonderful photos of days long past. And of course, you can also browse for cherry-bark products in its large shop.

Admission to the denshokan is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults and ¥150 ($1.25/65p) for children. It's open daily 9am to 5pm (to 4:30pm in winter).

WHERE TO STAY

Although you can easily tour Kakunodate's sights in a day, I've included a few accommodations in case you're arriving from Tokyo or seeking respite in a small town. Keep in mind that you should book well ahead if you hope to stay here during peak seasons: cherry-blossom season (roughly end of Apr through beginning of May) and summer holidays (mid-July through Aug).

Folkloro Kakunodate No English is spoken at this JR-affiliated hotel, but its location next to Kakunodate Station and its simple but clean, modern, and inexpensive Western-style rooms make it a logical choice for a 1-night stopover, especially if you have a Japan Rail Pass, which gives a 10% discount. Only two types of rooms are available: 11 twins and 15 deluxe twin family rooms that sleep up to four. Note, however, that the family rooms, with twin beds and two sleeper sofas, seem cramped for four but are roomy for two. Higher rates below are for peak season.

Iwase Nakasuga-sawa 14, Kakunodate, Senboku-shi, Akita. ☎ 0187/53-2070. Fax 0187/53-2118. 26 units. ¥7,350–¥9,030 ($61–$75/£31–£37) single; ¥12,600–¥18,900 ($105–$158/£53–£79) twin; ¥17,850–¥22,050 ($149–$184/£74–£92) triple; ¥21,000–¥25,200 ($175–$210/£88–£105) quad. Rates include breakfast buffet. AE, DC, MC, V. To the left after you exit the train station. Amenities: Restaurant; car-rental agency; coin-op washer/dryer; non-smoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

Iwasemachi 32, Kakunodate, Senboku-shi, Akita. ☎ 0187/54-2030. Fax 0187/54-2031. 11 units, 2 with bathroom, 1 with toilet only. ¥5,500 ($46/£23) per person without meals; ¥10,500 ($88/£44) per person with 2 meals. No credit cards. Station: Kakunodate (12 min.). Walk straight out of the train station and turn left when you reach the covered benches (1 block before the T intersection); the ryokan will be on your right. In room: A/C, TV, hot-water pot w/tea.

②37 Tamachi Bukeyashiki Hotel ★★ Finds This delightful hotel is deceiving—it looks as though it has been here since the Edo Period, with its whitewashed walls, open wooden beams, and rustic ambience, but it was built in 1999. It combines tradition with modern comfort, with gleaming wood floors, contemporary Japanese art, and Japanese- and Western-style rooms that exude class, from sensuously curving paper lampshades to ceramic tissue holders. Breakfast (Western breakfast is available) is served in a dark-wood-tabled restaurant overlooking a garden. In short, this small, intimate establishment is a perfect choice for experiencing Kakunodate's relaxed, small-town charm.

Tamachi Shimocho 23, Kakunodate, Akita. ☎ 0187/52-1700. Fax 0187/52-1701. 12 units. ¥15,750–¥18,900 ($131–$158/£66–£79) per person with 2 meals; ¥11,025–¥14,175 ($92–$118/£46–£59) per person with breakfast only. AE, DC, MC, V. Station: Kakunodate (12 min.). Walk straight out of the train station and turn left at the 3rd street; the hotel will be 2 blocks down, on your right. Amenities: Restaurant. In room: A/C, free dataport, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

WHERE TO DINE

In addition to the choices here, a simple dining room at the Aoyagi Samurai Manor, called Inaniwa Korai Udon (☎ 0187/52-8015), offers noodle dishes, including tempura soba (¥1,260/$11/£5.25) and inaniwa udon (noodles with mountain vegetables, ¥900/$7.50/£3.75). Open daily 10am to 4pm (but only on weekends in winter), it has an English-language menu. Likewise, the Folkdoro Kakunodate next to the train station (see above) has a simple restaurant open daily from 11am to 9pm offering set meals for ¥790 ($6.60/£3.30) to ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) from its English-language menu, including those with inaniwa udon, oyakodon (rice topped with chicken and egg), and gyudon (rice topped with beef).

(238) Nishinomiya ★ VARIED JAPANESE This pleasant and inexpensive restaurant is located in the family compound of the Nishinomiya clan, a samurai family that later became merchants and built the main house and five warehouses that are on display today. The restaurant is in a warehouse dating from 1919 and offers a limited menu of fried seafood, noodles, beef hash with rice, hamburger steak, ebi (shrimp) fry, and other dishes. Best, perhaps, is to order one of the obento lunch boxes. After your meal, be sure to wander through the other warehouses, including a small museum housing family treasures and a crafts shop.

Tamachi Kami-cho 11-1. ☎ 0187/52-2438. Obento ¥1,500–¥2,000 ($13–$17/£6.50–£8.35). No credit cards. Daily 10am–5pm (last order; 4pm in winter). Station: Kakunodate (8 min.). Walk straight out of the train station and turn left at the 3rd street; the restaurant will be almost immediately on your right.

(239) Shichibe ★ LOCAL SPECIALTIES Take your shoes off at the entrance and then head for one of the tables with chairs or tatami seating with leg wells towards the back, where you'll have a view of a small garden. Traditionally decorated with white walls, wood crossbeams, and shoji, it serves most of Kakunodate's local specialties, including inaniwa udon, oyakodon, and kiritampo nabe (a one-pot stew consisting of newly harvested rice pounded into a paste and then charcoal grilled before simmering in chicken broth with vegetables), along with tonkatsu, a tofu set meal, and a steak lunch for ¥1,200 ($10/£5). The menu is only in Japanese, but there are pictures.

Yokomachi 15. ☎ 0187/54-3295. Main dishes ¥1,000–¥1,500 ($8.35–$13/£4.20–£6.50); set lunches ¥900–¥1,200 ($7.50–$10/£3.75–£5); set meals ¥1,600–¥3,000 ($13–$25/£6.65–£13). No credit cards. Sun–Mon 5:30–8pm (last order); Wed–Sat 11am–8pm. Station: Kakunodate (9 min.). Just before the Samurai District to the right, catty-corner from the City Office marked on the map; look for the bamboo gate.

3 Towada-Hachimantai National Park: For the Active Traveler

Towada-Hachimantai National Park, spreading 862 sq. km (333 sq. miles) through north-central Tohoku and shared by three prefectures, is blessed with mountain ranges, lakes, streams, and hot-spring spas. It's perfect for the outdoor enthusiast, offering hiking in summer and skiing in winter. Most easily accessible from Tokyo is Lake Tazawa at the southern end of the park, with its nearby ski lifts, hot-springs, and biking and hiking opportunities. Far to the north, and a good choice if you're heading onward to Hokkaido, are the pristine Lake Towada and delightful Oirase Stream with its riverbank hiking trail.

Unfortunately, bus service through the national park is either infrequent or nonexistent. There's a bus, for example, that travels from Lake Towada south to Tazawako Station, but not vice versa. The easiest way to get around is by rental car.

LAKE TAZAWA, NYUTO ONSEN & MOUNT KOMAGATAKE

Lake Tazawa (Tazawako) has the distinction of being the deepest lake in Japan, 423m (1,387 ft.) deep. Crystal clear, the caldera offers swimming as well as cycling along its rim. Nearby are several ski resorts, as well as the Nyuto Onsen rustic hot-spring spas at the base of Mount Nyuto, which make good bases for exploring the area. Mount Komagatake is a popular destination for trekkers.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE From Tokyo, take the Tohoku Shinkansen train from Ueno or Tokyo Station to Morioka and then the Akita Shinkansen to Tazawako Station. (You can travel via some Shinkansen the entire distance without having to transfer.) The trip takes about 3 hours and costs ¥15,240 ($127/£64) for an unreserved seat. Tazawako is one stop before Kakunodate (see the “Kakunodate, Town of Samurai Homes” section above). You can also reach Tazawako Station by Towada Taxi sightseeing bus (☎ 0186/35-2111) from Yasumiya on Lake Towada (information on Lake Towada below) from mid-April to October for ¥6,000 ($50/£25). Buses depart Yasumiya at 9am and reach Tazawako Station at 4pm, with stops at scenic spots along the way; reservations are required. From Tazawako Station you must then board a bus to all the recommendations below, including Nyuto Onsen.

VISITOR INFORMATION For information on Lake Tazawa and vicinity, including skiing and bus schedules throughout the region, or for hotel reservations, stop by the Tazawako Tourist Information Center inside Tazawako Station (☎ 0187/43-2111; daily 8:30am–6:30pm). They also offer one computer with free Internet access and a topographical model of the area. For information on Nyuto Onsen, see its website at www.nyuto-onsenkyo.com.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND The town of Tazawako, in Akita Prefecture, is the transportation launching pad for visiting the southern region of Towada-Hachimantai National Park. Buses depart from the Tazawako Bus Terminal across from Tazawako Station for Lake Tazawa, area ski resorts, Mount Komagatake, and Nyuto Onsen hot-spring spas. Ask for bus schedules at the Tazawako Tourist Information Center.

Lake Tazawa is just a 15-minute bus ride from Tazawako Station; note that some buses stopping here go onward to Tazawako Skijo ski resort, Kogen Onsen, and Nyuto Onsen, all of which lie northeast of the lake. Otherwise, a bus departs Tazawako Station approximately every hour for Tazawako Skijo (a 30-min. ride), Kogen Onsen (37 min.), and Nyuto Onsen (45 min.).

CAR RENTALS Tazawako is a good starting point for driving excursions through Towado-Hachimantai National Park. JR Eki Rent-A-Car (☎ 0187/43-1081) is located beside Tazawako Station. For Toyota Rent-A-Car in Tazawako, call ☎ 0187/43-2100.

WHAT TO SEE & DO

SWIMMING & CYCLING AT LAKE TAZAWA Just 20km (13 miles) in circumference, Lake Tazawa is popular for its small swimming beach a couple minutes' walk from Tazawakokohan bus stop. Outside the swimming season—mid-July through August—you'll find nary a soul there. You can rent bicycles here for ¥400 ($3.35/£1.65) for the first hour and ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for every additional hour; mountain bikes run ¥600 ($5/£2.50) per hour. It takes about 2 hours to ride around the lake; unfortunately, you have to share the road with vehicular traffic, but because this is a popular cycling route, motorists know to keep a lookout. (Still, it may be prudent to avoid weekends and the mid-July-through-Aug vacation crunch.) Except for one small stretch, the road is mostly flat (circle the lake counterclockwise in the left lane, which puts you on the inside track closer to the lake); it is pleasantly wooded and relatively unspoiled. Along the way you'll pass a nice restaurant (see "Where to Dine," below) and a golden statue of the legendary Princess Tatsuko, a nymphlike beauty just off the shoreline. According to myth, the princess drank from Lake Tazawa hoping for eternal beauty; instead, she was turned into a dragonlike serpent as punishment for her vanity.

Sightseeing boats, some of which make stops to explore the surrounding woods, operate on Lake Tazawa from late April to early November; a 40-minute trip costs ¥1,170 ($9.75/£4.90).

Laka Tazawa is a 15-minute bus ride from Tazawako Station. All buses going to Nyuto Onsen stop here—the name of the bus stop at the Lake is called Tazawakohan—and the fare is ¥350 ($2.90/£1.45).

SKIING Of several area ski resorts, largest is Tazawako Skijo (☎ 0187/46-2011), with nine lifts. A 1-day lift ticket costs ¥3,900 ($33/£16) on weekends, ¥3,400 ($28/£14) weekdays. Ski-equipment rental costs ¥6,000 ($50/£25) for everything; snowboarding is also available. Buses from Tazawako Station (traveling in the direction of Nyuto Onsen) reach Tazawako Skijo in about 30 minutes and cost ¥510 ($4.25/£2.15).

CLIMBING MOUNT KOMAGATAKE Visible from Lake Tazawa, Akita Prefecture's tallest mountain is actually a 1,637m-high (5,402-ft.) dormant volcano. It's a popular destination for hikers, though a bus that deposits hikers at the 8th Station makes it a fairly quick hike—you can reach the top in about 1½ hours. At the peak, you're rewarded with grand vistas of the surrounding mountains, as well as more hiking trails. Because the path is steep at times, wear nonslip soles. (All Japanese will be outfitted in regulation hiking regalia.) From Tazawako Station, six buses a day make the 1-hour trip directly to Mount Komagatake's 8th Station (¥810/$6.75/£3.40). Or, take a more frequent bus 37 minutes to Kogen Onsen (¥580/$4.85/£2.45) and transfer there for a 25-minute ride to the 8th station (¥410/$3.40/£1.70). Buses run daily July and August but only on weekends June, September, and October.

WHERE TO STAY

②40 Qkamura National Park Resort Village (Kyukamura Tazawako-Kogen) Value This government-owned public lodging offers the convenience of being on Nyuto Onsen's main road (buses from Tazawako Station stop right outside). While it lacks the wonderful ambience of the other rustic inns in the area and has about as much charm as a dormitory, it offers both indoor and outdoor hot-spring baths (daily 24 hr.) and nearby hiking paths. In addition, it's the only place to stay if you prefer Western-style rooms, though Japanese tatami rooms are also available (you'll lay out the futon yourself). Rooms are simple but clean and pleasant, with sinks and toilets (three Western-style rooms have bathrooms), and buffet-style meals are served in the dining room. If you stay here, you can still sample the other ryokans' hot-spring baths for a modest fee.

Komagatake 2-1, Tazawako-machi, Senboku-shi, Akita 014-1201. ☎ 0187/46-2244. Fax 0187/46-2700. www.qkamura.or.jp. 38 units, all with toilet, 3 with bathroom. ¥11,340 ($95/£47) single with toilet only, ¥11,865 ($99/£49) single with bathroom; ¥10,290 ($86/£43) per person double with toilet only, ¥10,815 ($90/£45) per person double with bathroom. Rates include 2 meals. AE, MC, V. Bus: From Tazawako Station, 50 min. to Qkamura-mae stop (look for the sign that reads NATIONAL PARK RESORT VILLAGE. Amenities: Indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; coin-op washer/dryer; nonsmoking rooms. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

④21 Taenoyu ★★ A relative newcomer in Nyuto Onsen (it opened in 1952), this inn merges old-fashioned comfort (updated tatami rooms, polished wood floors, antiques) with classy elegance, making it a good choice for those who find the Qkamura too pedestrian and the Tsuru-no-yu too rustic. Located on the main road, across from a river, it offers both indoor and outdoor baths, including a private family outdoor bath available 1 hour for free and a mixed-sex bath (shy females can wrap a towel around them, but men are supposed to bathe in the buff). Meals are served communally in a tatami room with a view of the river or in a cozy lounge with tables, antiques, and a fireplace. Best are rooms with a view also of the river.

Komagatake 2-1, Tazawako-machi, Senboku-shi, Akita 014-1201. ☎ 0187/46-2740. Fax 0187/46-2207. <http://taenoyu.com/web-english.html>. 17 units, 10 with toilet, none with bathroom. ¥12,855–¥22,940 ($107–$191/£54–£96) per person including 2 meals. AE, DC, MC, V. Bus: From Tazawako Station, 53 min. to Taeno-onsen stop. Amenities: Indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths. In room: A/C, safe, no phone.

④22 Tsuru-no-yu Onsen ★★ ★ (Finds) By far, this is the best place to stay in Nyuto Onsen, if not in all of Tohoku. Contrary to what you might think, however, it's not refined or elegant; it's not even expensive. Rather, nestled in a wooded valley more than 2.5km (1½ miles) off the already isolated main Nyuto Onsen road, this is about as remote as you can get in Japan. And with its thatched-roof row house of tiny tatami rooms lit by oil lamps, complemented by the sound of rushing water and steam rising from the outdoor baths, it seems positively ancient. I've never seen anything like it.

Tsuru-no-yu opened as an onsen (hot-spring spa) 350 years ago; its oldest building—the row house of connected rooms with blackened walls—is 100 years old. Your dinner will be cooked on your open-hearth fireplace (irori); breakfast is served in a tatami dining hall, with all the guests dressed in cotton kimonos (yukata). Additions that ramble along the hillside were constructed over the years, along a rushing stream that serenades you to sleep. If you're on a budget, however, you can stay in the self-cooking wing, which offers simple tatami rooms and allows you to cook your own meals in a communal kitchen. Outdoor sulfurous baths are separated for men and women, but there is one mixed bath (baths are open to the public from 10am to 3pm for ¥500/$4.15/£2.10). Unfortunately, day-trippers spoil some of the fun of staying here. Evenings, however, are magical. Caveat: Avoid the modern annex Yama no Yado about 10 minutes down the road. Its indoor baths are unspectacular (and its outdoor bath is for both sexes); if you've come this far, stay in the real thing.

Kokuyurin 50, Tazawako-machi, Senboku-shi, Akita 014-1204. ☎ 0187/46-2139. Fax 0187/46-2761. 35 units, 14 with toilet, none with bathroom. ¥9,600–¥15,900 ($80–$133/£40–£66) per person including 2 meals. ¥2,780 ($23/£12) per person in the self-cooking wing, plus ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for kitchen use and ¥735 ($6.10/£3.05) futon charge. Winter heating charge ¥840–¥1,050 ($7–$8.75/£3.50–£4.40) extra. MC, V. Pickup available from Kogen Onsen bus station. Amenities: Indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths. In room: Hot-water pot w/tea, no phone in most rooms.

WHERE TO DINE

Orae ★ WESTERN/VARIED JAPANESE Located beside Lake Tazawa, a 15-minute walk counterclockwise from the bus stop or a short bike ride, this casual restaurant is my top pick for lunch, due in no small part to its on-site Tazawako microbrewery (the dunkel beer is very good) and views of the lake from both its airy, glass-enclosed dining room and outdoor terrace. The menu, only in Japanese, offers a limited selection of Western dishes, including pizza, pasta, salads, hamburger steak, and baked chicken, along with Japanese dishes. Croques are a specialty, changing with the season, from those filled with soybean (edamame) in summer to taro in autumn.

37-5 Haruyama, Tazawako. ☎ 0187/58-0608. Main dishes ¥800–¥1,050 ($6.65–$8.75/£3.35–£4.40); set meals ¥1,210–¥1,360 ($10–$11/£5.05–£5.65). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–9pm (last order). Bus: Tawazakohan (15 min.). Walk around the lake to the right.

LAKE TOWADA & OIRASE STREAM ★★

Located at the northern end of Towada-Hachimantai National Park on the border between Aomori and Akita prefectures, Lake Towada (Towadako in Japanese) is considered one of the park's top scenic gems. It's certainly one of Japan's least spoiled lakes, with only two small villages on its perimeter and encircled by wooded cliffs and mountains. Best, however, is Oirase Stream, the only river flowing out of Lake Towada. A shaded mountain stream that courses over boulders and down waterfalls, it is flanked by a hiking trail offering one of the prettiest walks in Tohoku. In autumn, leaves of gold and red render the scenery truly spectacular.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE As Lake Towada does not lie close to a train station, your final journey to the lake must be by bus to Yasumiya, a small village on Lake Towada with a tourist office and a few accommodations. The bus rides are through scenic, mountainous terrain (you might want to pack some Dramamine). The name of the bus stop in Yasumiya is Towadako.

From Tokyo, take the 3-hour Shinkansen train to Hachinohe (fare: ¥14,840/$124/£62), then board a JR bus to Yasumiya, which takes about 2¼ hours and costs ¥2,600 ($22/£11). If you're arriving from Hokkaido, take the train to Aomori. Outside Aomori Station, to the left, you can board a JR bus from platform no. 8 bound for Lake Towada, with the last stop at Yasumiya 3 hours later and costing ¥3,000 ($25/£13). If you have a JR Rail Pass, you can ride both these buses for free (but not with a JR East Pass). Note also that both these buses travel on the road beside the hiking trail along Oirase Stream (see below) and make several stops there, with about five or six runs daily. Also be aware that bus service to Lake Towada is available only from April to November; for a JR bus, you can make reservations in advance at a major JR train station or travel agency. For more information, contact the JR Bus company in Aomori at ☎ 017/723-1621.

CAR RENTALS JR Eki Rent-A-Car has offices at Aomori Station (☎ 017/722-3930) and Morioka Station (☎ 019/624-5212). Toyota Rent-A-Car also has offices in Aomori Station (☎ 017/739-0115) and near Morioka Station (☎ 019/622-0100).

VISITOR INFORMATION Before leaving Tokyo or the Narita or Kansai airports, pick up the "Towada-Hachimantai National Park" leaflet at the Tourist Information Center, or download it JNTO's website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under "Browse by Destinations."

In Yasumiya, the Lake Towada Information Center (☎ 0176/75-2425; daily 8am–5pm) is located next to the JR Bus Center (to the right after you exit the bus terminal's main door).

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Yasumiya, a village on the southwestern shore of Lake Towada, has a bus terminal, a tourist office, and a handful of accommodations and restaurants. On the eastern side of the lake is Nenokuchi, trail head for hikes along Oirase Stream. The JR buses that run between Yasumiya and Aomori or Hachinohe also stop at Nenokuchi and several locations along the Oirase hiking trail (including Oirase Keiryu Grand Hotel), making approximately a dozen runs a day from April to early November. Otherwise, your best bet for travel between Yasumiya and Nenokuchi is via sightseeing boat (see below).

SEEING THE SIGHTS

In Yasumiya, the major point of interest is Towada Jinja Shrine, surrounded by giant cedars and boasting marvelous woodcarvings of animals. A curious custom here is to buy a fortune, put money or rice inside, twist it into the shape of a missile, and then hike up the steep flight of wooden steps beside the shrine 20 minutes to a scenic spot (the last part of the hike is down metal ladders—only for the adventurous on a rainy day) where you then throw your missile into the lake. If it sinks, your wish will come true. Near Towada Jinja Shrine, look for the sculpture of two young women. Unlike the golden nymph at Lake Tazawa, these broad-shouldered, wide-hipped young ladies were sculpted just after the war, when such proportions were thought necessary to rebuild the nation. My Japanese friends, however, think they're very unflattering.

SIGHTSEEING BOATS ON LAKE TOWADA The best way to enjoy the pristine beauty of crystal-clear Lake Towada (Towadako), a double caldera formed some 20,000 years ago by a volcanic eruption, is aboard excursion boats that cruise the waters. About 44km (27 miles) of undulating coastline marked by capes, inlets, cliffs, and trees that put on a spectacular autumn show make this one of Towada-Hachimantai National Park's major draws. Two cruises are available: a 50-minute cruise that travels between Yasumiya and Nenokuchi (available only Apr through early Nov), and a 45-minute cruise that begins and ends at Yasumiya (available year-round). Many visitors take the boat to Nenokuchi (Oirase Stream trail head), send their luggage onward (see below), and begin hiking. The cost of either cruise is ¥1,300 ($11/£5.50). A surcharge of ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10) is levied if you wish to sit in the top lounge. Children pay half fares.

HIKING OIRASE STREAM   To my mind, hiking along the Oirase Stream is the major draw for a trip to Lake Towada. A clear-running, gurgling stream that runs 67km (42 miles) on its way from the lake to the Pacific Ocean, it's at its picture-perfect best in Oirase Gorge, where hikers are treated to a myriad of waterfalls, rapids coursing over moss-covered boulders, and a dense wood of ferns, Japanese beech, oaks, and other broad-leaved trees, particularly stunning in autumn. A trail runs beside the stream from Nenokuchi on the lakeshore 14km (8¾ miles) to Yakeyama. Most hikers, however, go only as far as Ishigedo, hiking the 9km (5½ miles) in about 2 hours (there are kilometer markers along the path in English). Disappointingly, a road runs through the gorge beside the stream, but the pathway often diverges from the road, and the roar of the swift-running river and the 13 waterfalls masks the sound of vehicles. The hike upstream (toward Nenokuchi) is considered the most picturesque, as it affords a full view of the cascading rapids.

There are nine bus stops on the road beside Oirase Stream, including Nenokuchi, Ishigedo, and Yakeyama. Because buses run only once an hour or so, you might consider taking a bus first and then hiking back. For hikers traveling onward, there's luggage transfer service between the JR bus stop in Nenokuchi and the Keiryu Tourist Center (just west of Oirase Keiryu Grand Hotel in Yakeyama). You could, for example, drop off your luggage at the JR bus station at Nenokuchi, hike, and then pick it up at the Keiryu Tourist Center (or vice versa) and then catch the bus back to Hachi-nohe or Aomori. There are transfers in both directions three to four times a day from Golden Week (end of Apr) to early November; the cost is ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) per bag. For more information, contact the Keiryu Tourist Center at ☎ 0176/74-1121.

WHERE TO STAY

Peak season is August and October; book far in advance for these months.

②43 Himemasu Sanso Value Completely remodeled in 2005, this simple minshuku in Yasumiya offers clean tatami rooms, with views of the surrounding wooded hills. Meals are served communally and usually feature trout from Lake Towada and local wild mountain vegetables; Western-style breakfasts are available on request. The owners will pick you up when you arrive by bus, but because they don't speak much English, you should go to the Lake Towada Information Center (see above) and have someone from there place the call.

Bus: Towadako in Yasumiya (15 min., inland from the JR bus station). Amenities: Hot-spring bath. In room: TV, hot-water pot w/tea, no phone.

Oirase Keiryu Grand Hotel The main reason for staying in this large, rather ordinary hotel is its location on Oirase Stream, making it an easy base for hiking the Oirase Gorge trail. Buses that traverse the Oirase Stream stop here, including those that travel to or from Aomori and Hachinohe stations, but the hotel also offers its own free bus shuttle approximately three times a day from Hachinohe Station (inquire about departure times when making reservations). The hotel is divided into two sections: the older, rustic Daiichi (first) Wing with 105 rooms, and the newer Daini (second) Wing with 85 (more expensive) rooms. I prefer the Daini with its lobby overlooking the stream and maple trees and its hard-to-overlook giant fireplace sculpture by eccentric Okamoto Taro. It offers both Japanese tatami and twin rooms, about half with views of Oirase Stream. Public hot-spring baths also take advantage of river views. Meals are served communally in a dining room. Rates vary according to the season, whether it's a tatami or twin room (twins are less expensive), and whether it's a weekday, Friday, or night before a holidays. The rates below reflect the full price range.

Bus: Yakeyama (1 min.). Amenities: 6 restaurants; 5 bars and lounges; indoor and outdoor hot-spring baths; souvenir shops; in-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

Towada Hotel ★★ This imposing, elegant hotel is my top choice for a splurge on Lake Towada. Secluded on a wooded hill overlooking the lake (and practical only if you have your own car), it was built in 1938 using huge cedar logs in a mix of Western-lodge-meets-Japanese-temple style, with a modern addition built years later. Former U.S. ambassador Edwin Reischauer and Emperor Showa have stayed here; nowadays most American guests are high-ranking officers from a nearby U.S. military base. Although all rooms face the lake, best are the Japanese rooms, all in the older part of the hotel and elegant with great views. Western-style rooms, though spacious and beautifully designed, do not have as good a view; be sure to ask for a room on the top floor and be sure, too, to wander over to the older wing for a look at its beautiful wood details in the old lobby (crafted by shrine and temple carpenters). Unfortunately, the public baths do not have hot-spring waters (instead, it's heated water from a mountain stream), but they do have lakeside views and outdoor tubs. Meals, served in a communal dining room with a mix of Japanese and Western dishes, are substantial. Western-style breakfasts are available.

Kosaka-machi, Towadako Nishi-kohan, Akita 018-5511. ☎ 0176/75-1122. Fax 0176/75-1313. 50 units, 8 with toilet, 42 with bathroom. Peak season ¥18,900–¥24,150 ($158–$201/£79–£101) per person; regular season ¥15,750–¥18,900 ($131–$158/£66–£79) per person. Off-season discounts available. Rates include 2 meals. AE, DC, MC, V. Pickup service available from JR bus terminal in Yasumiya. Amenities: Restaurant and lounge; indoor/outdoor public baths; sauna; in-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

Tsuta Onsen ♨ This classic, north-country inn dates to 1909 and is one of Tohoku's most famous traditional ryokan. Tsuta means "ivy" in Japanese, a theme carried out not only in pillars, transoms, and other architectural details but also in the dense, surrounding beech forest. Rooms in the oldest wooden structure (built in 1918) and an annex (built in 1960), both up a long flight of stairs, have beautiful wood-carved details and good views but are without bathrooms (they're also cheaper), while the west wing 1988 addition, with gleaming wood floors salvaged from an old ryokan, has an elevator and the convenience of toilets (a few have bathrooms), but its rooms lack the character of the older rooms. For the best views, be sure to request a room facing away from the street. For those who don't like sleeping on futons, three combination units offer tatami areas, beds, and bathrooms. The hot-spring baths are new but preserve traditional bathhouse architecture, with high ceilings and cypress walls; they're considered beneficial for healing scars and other skin problems. Breakfast is served in a dining room, while dinner is served your room. Although not on the Oirase Stream and not as conveniently located as, say, the Oirase Keiryu Grand Hotel (see above), the Tsuta is one of a kind and is served by the same JR bus that travels between Aomori and Lake Towada (it's about a 15-min. bus ride to Yakeyama). It also has its own 1-hour hiking trail to a nearby lake.

Weekday discounts available (except in peak season). AE, DC, MC, V. Bus: From Aomori Station, a 2-hr. JR bus ride to Tsuta Onsen stop (1 min.). Amenities: Hot-spring indoor bath; in-room massage. In room: TV, hot-water pot w/tea.

WHERE TO DINE

Most accommodations serve breakfast and dinner. For an inexpensive meal on the Oirase Gorge trail, a small snack bar at Ishigedo sells ramen noodles, tempura soba, ice cream, and drinks.

Shinshuya LOCAL SPECIALTIES There's nothing special about this restaurant, but it does have an English-language menu, views of Lake Towada, and a convenient location near the path to Towada Jinja Shrine. Inaniwa udon (noodles with mountain vegetables), kiritampo nabe (a one-pot stew consisting of newly harvested rice pounded into a paste and then charcoal grilled before simmering in chicken broth with vegetables), Towada beef steaks, and fish are just some of the local specialties. Once you've decided on your meal, purchase tickets at the counter.

Hokkaido

Hokkaido, the northernmost of Japan's four main islands, has a landscape strikingly different from that of any other place in Japan. With more than 77,700 sq. km (30,000 sq. miles) and accounting for 22% of Japan's total landmass, it has only 5% of its population. In other words, Hokkaido has what the rest of Japan doesn't: space. The least developed of Japan's four islands, it's your best bet for avoiding the crowds that plague Japan's more well-known playgrounds during peak travel season.

Considered the country's last frontier, Hokkaido didn't open up to development until after the Meiji Restoration in 1868, when the government began encouraging Japanese to migrate to the island (at the expense of Hokkaido's indigenous people, the Ainu). Even today, Hokkaido has a frontier feel to it, and many young Japanese come here to backpack, ski, camp, and tour the countryside on motorcycles or bicycles. There are dairy farms, silos, and broad, flat fields of wheat, corn, and potatoes. Where the fields end the land puckers up, becoming craggy with bare volcanoes, deep gorges, and hills densely covered with virgin forests and dotted with clear spring lakes, mountains, rugged wilderness, wild animals, bubbling hot springs, and rare plants. The people of Hokkaido are as open and hearty as the wide expanses of land around them.

Much of Hokkaido's wilderness has been set aside as national and prefectural parkland. Of these areas, Shikotsu-Toya, Daisetsuzan, and Akan national parks are the best known, offering a wide range of activities from hiking and skiing to bathing at onsen, or hot-spring spas.

Hokkaido's main tourist season is in August, when days are cool and pleasant with an average temperature of 70°F (21°C). While the rest of the nation is afflicted by the rainy season, Hokkaido's summers are usually bright and clear. Winters are long and severe; still, ski enthusiasts flock to slopes near Sapporo and to resorts such as Daisetsuzan National Park. February marks the annual Sapporo Snow Festival, featuring huge ice and snow sculptures.

With its New Chitose Airport, the city of Sapporo—Japan's largest city north of Tokyo—serves as a springboard to Hokkaido's national parks and lakes. Yet despite all the island has to offer, and despite its size and importance, I've seen few foreigners in Sapporo, even in August. For most visitors to Japan, Hokkaido remains virtually undiscovered.

1 Essentials

INFORMATION Information on Hokkaido is available online at www.visit-hokkaido.jp.

GETTING THERE & GETTING AROUND The fastest way to reach Hokkaido is to fly. Flights from Tokyo's Haneda Airport to Sapporo's New Chitose Airport take about 1½ hours. Although traditional airfare to Sapporo from Tokyo costs ¥30,700

($256/£128), renegade airline Air Do (☎ 0120-057-333) offers tickets from Tokyo for ¥24,700 ($206/£103) or less. For other destinations, JAL flies from Tokyo to Hakodate for ¥28,800 ($240/£120) on the western side of the island and from Tokyo to Kushiro for ¥35,700 ($296/£148) on the eastern side of the island. JAL also flies from Osaka to Sapporo for ¥37,900 ($316/£158). All airfares go up by about ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) in peak season, but there are discounts for advance purchase and the off season. Better yet, buy domestic tickets from JAL or ANA in conjunction with international flights to Japan, which must be purchased outside Japan and range from ¥10,000 ($83/£42) to ¥13,650 ($114/£57) per flight (see chapter 2 for details).

Travel to Hokkaido by land is generally via the Tohoku Shinkansen bullet train from Ueno or Tokyo Station in Tokyo to Hachinohe in Tohoku, followed by the limited express Hakucho train from Hachinohe all the way to Hakodate on Hokkaido. For centuries, the only way to travel between Honshu and Hokkaido was via a 4-hour ferry ride, but the opening of the Seikan Tunnel in 1988 allowed the entire trip between the islands to be made by train in little more than 2 hours—more than a fourth of which is in the 55km (34-mile) tunnel. The entire trip from Tokyo to Hakodate (on Hokkaido) via train should take about 6 hours and costs ¥18,750 ($156/£78) for a reserved seat one-way. The trip from Tokyo to Sapporo takes about 9 hours (not including transfers) and costs ¥25,060 ($209/£104) for reserved seating. Your JR Rail Pass is good for all trains.

Public transportation around Hokkaido is by train and bus. In addition to regular bus lines, sightseeing buses link the national parks and major attractions. Although they're more expensive than trains and regular buses, and although commentaries are in Japanese only, they offer unparalleled views of the countryside and usually stop at scenic wonders, albeit sometimes only long enough for the obligatory photo. Keep in mind that bus schedules fluctuate with the seasons and can be infrequent; some lines don't run during snowy winter months. Try to get bus and train schedules before setting out on each leg of your journey. In small towns, everyone knows the local bus schedules, even clerks at front desks. Otherwise, you might find yourself waiting to make a transfer.

JR Hokkaido Passes If you plan to travel a lot in Hokkaido and don't have a Japan Rail Pass (see chapter 2 for information on rail passes), consider purchasing one of several special passes issued by Japan Railways that allows unlimited travel on JR trains and buses in Hokkaido. The Hokkaido Rail Pass, for example, works just like the Japan Rail Pass (you must be a foreign tourist visiting Japan) and is valid for travel throughout Hokkaido. The ordinary pass, which can be purchased abroad (at JTB and other authorized travel agencies) or at train stations in Hakodate, Sapporo, and a few other cities in Hokkaido, costs ¥14,000 ($137/£58) for 3 days and ¥18,000 ($150/£75) for 5 days. Alternatively, the JR Hokkaido Free Kippu can be used by anyone (including Japanese and foreigners living in Japan) and can be purchased at any JR rail station. Allowing unlimited travel in Hokkaido, the 7-day pass costs ¥23,400 ($195/£98), but note that it's not valid April 27 to May 6, August 11 to August 15, or December 28 to January 6.

Renting a Car Because distances are long and traffic is rather light, Hokkaido is one of the few places in Japan where driving your own car is actually recommended. Because it's expensive, however, it's economical only if there are several of you. Rates for a 1-day rental of a compact car in July or August with unlimited mileage and insurance begin at ¥8,920 ($74/£37) per day, with each additional day costing ¥7,770 ($65/£32); rates run about ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) cheaper the rest of the year. Car-rental agencies are found throughout Hokkaido, often near train stations as well as at Chitose Airport outside Sapporo and at Kushiro Airport in Kushiro. In Sapporo, Toyota Rent-A-Car (☎ 011/281-0100) is located east of Sapporo Station. JR Eki Rent-A-Car Hokkaido (☎ 011/241-0931), near the east exit of Sapporo Station (their offices are always near a JR station), offers 20% discounts for train fares booked in conjunction with car rentals. For routes and road conditions, go to www.northern-road.jp/navi/eng/index.htm.

A GOOD STRATEGY FOR SEEING HOKKAIDO If you're traveling from Tokyo, your first destination in Hokkaido should be Hakodate, an interesting and convenient 1-night stopover. From there you can board a local train bound for Sapporo, stopping off at Shikotsu-Toya National Park along the way. From Sapporo, two worthwhile destinations include Sounkyo Onsen in Daisetsuzan National Park and Akan National Park. To follow this plan, you'll need at least a week. You can also do this tour in reverse by flying into eastern Hokkaido and taking the train back to Tokyo; see chapter 3 for a sample itinerary.

2 Hakodate, Southern Gateway to Hokkaido

888km (549 miles) NE of Tokyo; 283km (177 miles) SW of Sapporo

Hakodate, the southern gateway to Hokkaido (and Hokkaido's third-largest city with a population of 292,000), is about as far as you may care to get in a day if you arrive in Hokkaido from Tokyo by train. Hakodate makes a good 1-night stopover because it has a famous nighttime attraction and one early morning attraction, which means you can easily see a little of the city before setting out for your next destination. For those who want to linger longer, it also boasts quaint historic districts of renovated warehouses (now housing restaurants and shops) and century-old Western-style homes, churches, and administrative buildings. Founded during the Feudal Era, Hakodate was one of Japan's first ports opened to international trade following the Meiji Restoration. With its quaint streetcars, sloping streets lined with old buildings, and port, it retains the atmosphere of a provincial outpost even today.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By JR Train From Tokyo, take the Shinkansen bullet train to Hachinohe (3 hr.), then transfer to a direct train for Hakodate (about 3 hr.). The total fare for a reserved seat is ¥18,750 ($156/£78). There are also night trains (the Hokutosei) that depart Ueno Station in Tokyo at 4:20 and 7:03pm, arriving in Hakodate the next morning at 4:33 and 6:34am respectively and costing ¥23,180 ($193/£97); if you have a JR Rail Pass, you pay only the ¥12,150 ($101/£50) sleeping-car surcharge. Hakodate is about 3½ hours from Sapporo, Hokkaido's largest city.

By Plane JAL flies from Tokyo's Haneda Airport to Hakodate in 1¼ hours for ¥28,800 ($240/£120). Limousine buses travel to JR Hakodate Station in 20 minutes for (¥400/$3.35/£1.70).

GETTING AROUND With the exception of Mount Hakodate, the most pleasant way to see Hakodate is on foot. The city is easy to navigate, and there are many English-language signs. Otherwise, streetcars are the major form of transportation (stops are announced in English), with fares starting at ¥200 ($1.65/85p); take a ticket upon entering the back door and pay when you get off. There's also a 1-day streetcar pass for ¥600 ($5/£2.50).

VISITOR INFORMATION The Tourist Information Centers located in Tokyo and at Tokyo and Osaka international airports have a leaflet called "Hakodate and Vicinity." (You can also download it from JNTO's website at www.jnto.go.jp by looking under "Browse by Destinations.") Otherwise, the Hakodate Tourist Office (☎ 0138/23-5440; daily 9am–7pm, to 5pm Nov–Mar) is inside the station to your left as you exit the wicket. It has an excellent English-language map and brochure of Hakodate and can help with accommodations. Online, check www.hakodate-kankou.com for more information.

INTERNET ACCESS Check e-mail at HotWeb Café, 18–1 Wakamatsucho (☎ 0138/26-3591; Wed–Mon 10am–8pm), a 3-minute walk from Hakodate Station (on the left side of the road that runs between stores Wako and Boni Moriya). It charges ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for 1 hour with the purchase of a drink.

WHAT TO SEE & DO

In addition to the sights here, you might wish to soak away the aches of travel in one of Hakodate's hot-spring spas. Yunokawa Spa is Hokkaido's oldest, but it's 25 minutes away by streetcar (ask the tourist office for a map and list of baths). More accessible is Yachigashira Public Hot-Springs Bath, located at the foot of Mount Hakodate (☎ 0138/22-8371; daily 6am–9:30pm; closed second and fourth Tues of every month; streetcar: Yachigashira). It's famous for its rust-colored waters, but what strikes me most is its size, capable of accommodating—I shudder at the thought—more than 500 bathers.

HISTORIC HAKODATE You can take the streetcar to the Jujigai or Suehiro-cho stops to explore Hakodate's historic districts, but more fun is to walk 12 minutes from the station (past the morning market and continuing along the seaside promenade) to the renovated waterfront warehouse district with its shops and restaurants and the nearby Meijikan (☎ 0138/27-7070), a former 1911 brick post office now housing glassware boutiques. A few minutes' walk inland is historic Motomachi, a picturesque neighborhood of steep slopes and turn-of-the-20th-century Western-style clapboard homes, consulates, churches, and other buildings; most impressive is the Old Branch Office of the Hokkaido Government in Motomachi Park, which contains a Tourist Information Center (☎ 0138/27-333; daily 9am–7pm, to 5pm in winter).

MOUNT HAKODATE AFTER DARK Hakodate is probably most famous for its night view from atop Mount Hakodate, which rises 330m (1,100 ft.) just 2.8km (1¾ miles) southwest of Hakodate Station, so you should time your visit just at sunset (though note that it can be chilly up here, even in Aug). Few vacationing Japanese spend the night in Hakodate without taking the cable car to the top of this lava cone, which was formed by the eruption of an undersea volcano. From the peak, the lights of Hakodate shimmer and glitter like jewels on black velvet. I wouldn't miss it, not only for the view, but for the camaraderie shared by everyone making the pilgrimage. There's an informal restaurant here (where you can indulge in a drink or a snack while admiring the spectacular view) as well as the usual souvenir shops.

You can reach the foot of Mount Hakodate via a 5-minute streetcar ride from Hakodate Station to the Jujigai stop. From there, walk about 6 minutes to the ropeway that will take you to the top. The round-trip costs ¥1,160 ($9.65/£4.85) for adults and ¥590 ($4.90/£2.45) for children. Ropeway hours are daily 10am to 10pm April 26 through October (from 9am during Golden Week and mid-July to Aug), and 10am to 9pm November through April 25. From April 20 to November you can also reach the top of Mount Hakodate directly by bus from Hakodate Station; the 30-minute trip costs ¥360 ($3/£1.50) for adults and half-price for children.

THE MORNING MARKET Another must-do is a visit to Hakodate's morning market, which is spread out just south of the train station daily from about 5am to noon. Walk around and look at the variety of foods for sale, especially the hairy crabs for which Hokkaido is famous. You can make an unusual breakfast of fruit, raw sea urchin, or grilled crab from the stalls here.

WHERE TO STAY

Hakodate's peak tourist season is in July and August. Accordingly, some hotels raise their rates during this time.

Tips A Note on Japanese Characters

Many establishments and attractions in Japan do not have signs in Roman (English-language) letters. Those that don't are indicated in this guide with an oval with a number that corresponds to a number in the appendix showing the Japanese equivalent. Thus, to find the Japanese for, say, Hotel Route Inn Grantia Hakodate Ekimae (below), refer to no. 244 in appendix C.

Standard rooms would qualify as suites elsewhere, with one or two bedrooms (sleeping up to four persons) that can be closed off from the living area by shoji-like doors, as well as a fully stocked kitchen, a balcony facing Mount Hakodate, and spacious bathrooms complete with generous tubs and windows also providing views.

Hotel Sea Borne ★★ If you're searching for a small boutique hotel with class, this is a top pick. Its elegant lobby, with reproduction antique furniture and sit-down registration, imparts a cozy European atmosphere. Each of its rooms is decorated in a different theme, from modern to frilly European to rustic American. Apparently, some Japanese guests are so enamored of the different styles, they request a change of rooms the second night, just for the experience. Jaded travelers, however, may find it a bit over-the-top. Excellent service from a friendly staff, welcome drinks (tea, coffee, or juice), good in-room amenities (including four different kinds of shampoo and free drinks in the fridge), and a great location near the waterfront warehouse district make Sea Borne infinitely better than your standard cookie-cutter hotel.

MODERATE

B&B Hakodatemura This immaculate, mostly Western-style Japanese Inn Group member, decorated with whitewashed walls, wood furniture, and fresh and dried flowers, is built around a courtyard where you can choose to eat breakfast. In addition to spotless Western-style rooms with wood floors (including a triple and a quad with a loft bed), there are three tatami rooms; only one double has a bathroom. Rules are similar to a youth hostel's (check-in at 3pm, checkout at 10am, and the door locks at 11pm), but what I like most about this place is its location near the waterfront warehouse district and Motomachi, only a 15-minute walk from Hakodate Station.

244 Hotel Route Inn Grantia Hakodate Ekimae ★ Value Despite a no-flair atmosphere and small rooms, this hotel rises above the ordinary with a convenient location near the station, reasonable prices, good views (they reserve a room above the fourth floor for the best harbor views; the top floor is nonsmoking), and large hot-spring baths on the 13th floor (the women's bath looks out on the station; I can't vouch for the view from the men's bath). Family rooms have one king-size bed (and not much else) that you are welcome to put the entire family in. In-room pluses include Washlet toilets with English instructions, good bedside reading lamps, and cards sold in vending machines for ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) that allow you to watch movies (including Hollywood releases in English) all night long.

INEXPENSIVE

In addition to the choice here, there's a 260-room Toyoko Inn Hakodate Ekimae Asa-ichi just a couple minutes' walk from Hakodate Station at 22–7 Otemachi (☎ 0138/23-1045; www.toyoko-inn.com) with the usual freebies for which this chain is famous, including lobby computers with free Internet access, free domestic calls from lobby phones, free Wi-Fi in the lobby, and free use of room dataports. Singles start at ¥5,600 ($47/£23) and twins and doubles at ¥7,800 ($65/£33), including Japanese breakfast. Winter discounts (Oct–May) are available.

Niceday Inn Value Mrs. Saito, a kind and generous woman, gives a warm welcome, making you feel right at home; staying here is like living in a Japanese home. Although Mrs. Saito's English is limited, she offers tourist information and a map, and tries to help with whatever you need. The inn is very simple but offers clean Japanese- and Western-style rooms. No meals are served, but free instant coffee, a refrigerator, a TV, and a public phone are available in the small communal entry room.

9–11 Otemachi, Hakodate 040-0064. ☎ 0138/22-5919. 5 units, none with bathroom. ¥3,000 ($25/£13) per person. No credit cards. Station: Hakodate (8 min.). Take the west exit out of the station and walk straight on past the morning market; after crossing the wide, tree-lined avenue, take the 3rd left (across from the Kokusai Hotel entrance). The inn is a white, 2-story building on your right. In room: A/C or fan, no phone.

WHERE TO DINE

Several of Hakodate's harborfront warehouses have been renovated into smart-looking shopping and dining complexes. They're about a 12-minute walk from Hakodate Station; you can reach the complexes by walking past the morning market and continuing along the seaside promenade.

Hakodate Beer ★ BAR FOOD In a brick building about halfway between the waterfront warehouse district and the station, this beer hall has four kinds of beer brewed in the large copper vats you can see as you dine on such fare as boiled shrimp, squid (Hakodate is famous for squid), fish and chips, sirloin steak, sausages by Carl Raymon (a famous Hakodate sausage maker), the day's pasta, Japanese-style fried chicken, or a "steamboat"—seafood, sliced meat, vegetables, and dumplings cooked in boiling broth at your table and dipped in chili sauce (¥3,130/$26/£13 for three or four people), all listed on an English menu with photos. There's live piano music in the evenings, and in summer there are tables outside. A local institution.

5–22 Ohtemachi. ☎ 0138/23-8000. Main dishes ¥720–¥1,580 ($6–$13/£3–£6.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Station: Hakodate (6 min.).

Hakodate Kaisen Club SEAFOOD Located in the waterfront warehouse district, this casual, lively seafood restaurant, on the second floor of a wooden building above an enormous supermarket selling seafood and other Hakodate food products, has a high, airy ceiling, wood tables set up on wood floors, and sweeping harbor views. Managed by local fishmongers, it offers a range of fresh seafood, including king crab, fried fish, squid, and kaisen-don, a bowl of rice topped with seafood, as well as Hakodate Beer. The menu is in Japanese, but there are pictures. There's an outdoor terrace only for drinks.

Hakodate Nishi Hatoba 2F, 22–6 Suehirocho. ☎ 0138/24-8107. Main dishes ¥950–¥2,000 ($7.90–$17/£3.95–£8.50). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Streetcar: Jujigai (5 min.). Walk toward the harbor and turn left at the waterfront. Look for the sign that says SEA FRESH MARKET.

②45 Shimura SUSHI Two things make this conveyor-belt sushi bar in the morning market unusual: The sushi chefs are all women (women's hands are said to be too hot to make sushi), and you can choose your fish or seafood from tanks out front and have it diced into sashimi right before your eyes. Otherwise, prices are determined by the color of the plate on the belt.

22–2 Otemachi. ☎ 0138/27-7885. 2 pieces of sushi ¥126–¥525 ($1.05–$4.35/65p–£2.20). No credit cards. Daily 9:30am–9:30pm. Hakodate Station (2 min.). From the west exit, walk past the morning market; Shimura is past the 1st small intersection on the right-hand side (look for the tanks out front).

Tao Tao ASIAN CROSSOVER This eclectic cafe in a bright yellow building in the Motomachi District offers interesting Asian food, including obachahan (Manila-style pork fried rice), tacos with rice, and pad Thai (rice noodles Thai-style). The tofu salad is very good, with lots of greens and a spicy dressing. There's an outdoor patio out back, open in summer.

15–19 Motomachi. ☎ 0138/22-0002. Main dishes ¥800–¥1,000 ($6.65–$8.35/£3.35–£4.20). No credit cards. Tues–Sat 6–11pm; Sun noon–4 and 6–11pm. Streetcar: Suehiro-cho (3 min); walk 2 blocks up Hachimanzaka and turn left. It's just below the Roman Catholic church (the one with a rooster on top).

3 Sapporo

1,200km (746 miles) NE of Tokyo; 283km (177 miles) NE of Hakodate

Sapporo is one of Japan's newest cities. About 137 years ago, it was nothing more than a scattering of huts belonging to Ainu and Japanese families. With the dawning of the Meiji Period, however, the government decided to colonize the island, and in 1869 it established the Colonization Commission. The area of Sapporo (the name comes from the Ainu word meaning “big, dry river”) was chosen as the new capital site, and in 1871, construction of the city began.

During the Meiji Period, Japan looked eagerly toward the West for technology, ideas, and education, and Hokkaido was no exception. Between 1871 and 1884, 76 foreign technicians and experts (including 46 Americans) who had colonization experience were brought to this Japanese wilderness to aid in the island's development. Sapporo was laid out in a grid pattern of uniform blocks similar to that of an American city. In 1875, the Sapporo Agricultural College was founded to train youth in skills useful to Hokkaido's colonization and development.

The Sapporo of today, capital of Hokkaido Prefecture, has grown to 1.8 million residents, making it the largest city north of Tokyo (and the fifth largest in Japan). In 1972, it was introduced to the world when the Winter Olympics were held here, and its many fine ski slopes continue to attract winter vacationers, as does the Sapporo Snow Festival, held every February (see the “Japan Calendar of Events” in chapter 2). In August, when the rest of Japan is sweltering under uncomfortably high temperatures and humidity, Sapporo stays pleasantly cool.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By Plane Flights take 1½ hours from Tokyo’s Haneda Airport, 2 hours from Hiroshima, and 2¼ hours from Fukuoka. See “Getting There & Getting Around,” under “Essentials,” earlier in this chapter, for flight details from Tokyo. Sapporo’s New Chitose Airport (☎ 0123/23-0111; www.new-chitose-airport.jp), located about 43km (27 miles) southeast of the capital, is connected to downtown by either Airport Limousine Bus, which delivers passengers to a few major hotels in about 70 minutes for ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20); or by JR trains that operate every 15 minutes between Chitose Airport Station and Sapporo Station, with the 36-minute trip costing ¥1,040 ($8.65/£4.35).

By JR Train Trains from Tohoku and other regions on Honshu arrive in Hakodate, where you’ll transfer to a train departing every hour or so for Sapporo. The fare from Tokyo to Sapporo costs ¥25,060 ($209/£105), with trips averaging 10 hours including transfers. Trains from Hakodate take about 3½ hours and cost ¥8,080 ($67/£34) for an unreserved seat. Otherwise, two overnight trains also depart from Ueno Station in Tokyo and arrive in Sapporo the next morning, taking about 16 hours and costing ¥25,270 ($211/£105). In addition, an overnight train from Osaka departs around noon and arrives in Sapporo the next day at 9:07am, costing ¥25,620 ($214/£107).

VISITOR INFORMATION Be sure to pick up the useful leaflet “Sapporo and Shikotsu-Toya National Park” at a Tourist Information Center in Tokyo or international airports in Tokyo or Osaka (or download it at www.jnto.go.jp). In JR Sapporo Station, the excellent Hokkaido-Sapporo Tourist Information Center (☎ 011/213-5088; daily 8:30am–8pm), located opposite the west ticket gate, offers a wealth of information not only on Sapporo but all of Hokkaido, making it a must stop for travelers to other destinations on the island. Here, too, is a JR information counter (daily 8:30am–7pm), where you can pick up JR train and bus schedules or get rail passes validated. Additionally, the Sapporo International Communications Plaza, on the third floor of the MN Building across from the Clock Tower (see “A Stroll Around Sapporo,” below) at N1 W3, Chuo-ku (☎ 011/211-3678; Tues–Sat 9am–5:30pm), provides maps and information on tourist attractions, daily life, and transportation. Online, you can check www.welcome.city.sapporo.jp or www.sta.or.jp.

INTERNET ACCESS Inside the Hokkaido-Sapporo Tourist Information Center (see above) is Café Norte, open daily 8:30am to 8pm with five coin-operated computers (¥100/85¢/45p per 10 min.). Also, on the first floor of the Century Royal Hotel (1 min. west of Sapporo station’s south exit), i-café (☎ 011/221-3440) charges ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for 30 minutes.

POST OFFICE Sapporo Central Post Office, N6 E1 (☎ 011/748-2345), 2 blocks east of Sapporo Station, has a 24-hour window for stamps and mail and ATMs for international credit cards (weekdays 7am–11pm; Sat 9am–9pm; Sun and holidays 9am–7pm). Otherwise, there’s a smaller post office in the east end of Sapporo Station’s Paseo shopping mall, also with ATMs.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND After the jumble of most Japanese cities with their incomprehensible address systems, Sapporo will come as a welcome surprise. Its streets are laid out in a grid pattern, making the city easy to navigate. Addresses in Sapporo refer to blocks that follow one another in logical, numerical order.

Sapporo Station lies at the north end of the city, with downtown and many of its attractions, hotels, and restaurants spreading to the south. The center of Sapporo is Odori (Main St.), a tree-lined avenue south of Sapporo Station that runs east and west and bisects the city into north and south sections. North 1st Street, therefore, refers to the street 1 block north of Odori. The other determinant landmark is the Soseigawa River, which marks addresses east and west. West 1st Street runs along the west bank of the Soseigawa River, while East 1st Street runs along the east bank.

Addresses in Sapporo are generally given by block. N1 W4, for example, the address for the Sapporo Grand Hotel, means it's located in the first block north of Odori and 4 blocks west of West 1st Street. If you want to be more technical about it, the entire, formal address of the hotel would read N1-jo W4-chome. "Jo" refers to blocks north and south of Odori, while "chome" refers to blocks east and west of the river. Better yet, street signs in Sapporo are in English.

Central Sapporo is easy to cover on foot. You can walk south from Sapporo Station to Odori Park in less than 10 minutes (an underground passage between the two will open in 2011) and on to Susukino, Sapporo's nightlife district, in another 7 or 8 minutes. For longer distances, transportation in Sapporo is via bus, three subway lines (which interchange at Odori Station), and one streetcar line. Fares begin at ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for buses and subways and ¥170 ($1.40/70p) for streetcars, but easier are prepaid cards available in denominations beginning at ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) and valid for all conveyances. One-day cards, allowing unlimited rides on all modes of transport in 1 day, are also available for ¥1,000. A 1-day card for subways only costs ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35), except on weekends and holidays when they're discounted to ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10). Children pay half fare. Cards can be purchased at subway stations and on buses and streetcars.

Finally, the red-colored Sapporo Stroll Bus (operating late Apr through Oct) and the blue-colored Sapporo Walk Bus (operating year-round) are tourist buses that travel in a loop to tourist sites around the city (unfortunately, neither goes to Noporo Forest Park). Single fares are ¥200 ($1.65/85p) for adults, half-price for children. A 1-day pass (available only when the Sapporo Stroll Bus is in operation), ¥750 ($6.25/£3.15) for adults and ¥380 ($3.15/£1.60) for children, allows you to get on and off as many times as you want between 9am and 7pm. Stops are announced in English and bus stops are clearly marked. Pick up a map showing stops and routes at the Tourist Information Center.

A STROLL AROUND SAPPORO

One of the first things you should do in Sapporo is walk around. Starting from Sapporo Station (which contains a chic shopping and restaurant complex) take the road leading directly south called Eki-mae Dori (which is also West 4th). This is one of Sapporo's main thoroughfares, taking you south through the heart of the city.

YOUR FIRST STOP Four blocks south of the station, turn left on N1; after a block, you'll find Sapporo's most famous landmark, Clock Tower (Tokeidai), N1 W2, Chuo-ku (☎ 011/231-0838). This Western-style wooden building was built in 1878 as a drill hall for the Sapporo Agricultural College (now Hokkaido University).

The large clock at the top was made in Boston and was installed in 1881. In summer, it attracts tourists even at night; they hang around the outside gates just to listen to the clock strike the hour. Inside the tower is a local-history museum, not worth the price of admission. By the way, across the street is Sapporo International Communications Plaza, where you can obtain information on Sapporo (see “Visitor Information”).

ON TO ODORI PARK If you continue walking 1 block south of the Clock Tower, you’ll reach Odori Koen Promenade, a 103m-wide (344-ft.) boulevard stretching almost a mile from east to west. In the middle of the boulevard is a wide median strip that has been turned into a park with trees, flowerbeds, and fountains. This is where much of the Sapporo Snow Festival is held in early February, when ice and packed snow are carved to form statues, palaces, and fantasies. Begun in 1950 to add a bit of spice and life to the cold winter days, the Snow Festival now features about 220 snow statues and 120 ice sculptures and draws about 2.2 million visitors a year. One snow structure may require as much as 300 6-ton truckloads of snow, brought in from the surrounding mountains. The snow and ice carvings are done with so much attention to detail that it seems a crime they’re doomed to melt (see “Japan Calendar of Events” in chapter 2).

Odori Park is also the scene of the Sapporo Summer Festival, celebrated with beer gardens set up the length of the park from late July to mid-August and open every day from noon. Various Japanese beer companies set up their own booths and tables under the trees, while vendors put up stalls selling fried noodles, corn on the cob, and other goodies. Live bands serenade the beer drinkers under the stars. It all resembles the cheerful confusion of a German beer garden, which isn’t surprising considering Munich is one of Sapporo’s sister cities (Portland, Oregon, is another one). Some of the other festivals held in Odori Park are the Lilac Festival in late May heralding the arrival of summer, and Bon-Odori in mid-August with traditional dances to appease the souls of the dead.

THE UNDERGROUND SHOPPING ARCADES From Odori Park, you can continue your walk either above or below ground. Appreciated especially during inclement weather and during Hokkaido’s long, cold winters are two underground shopping arcades, known collectively as Sapporo Chikagai with about 140 shops open daily 10am to 8pm. Underneath Odori Park, from the Odori Station all the way to the TV tower in the east, is Aurora Town, with boutiques and restaurants. Even longer is the 390m (1,300-ft.) Pole Town, which extends from the Odori Station south all the way to Susukino, Sapporo’s nightlife amusement center, where you’ll find many restaurants and pubs (see “Where to Dine,” later in this chapter). Before reaching Susukino, however, you may want to emerge at Sanhome (you’ll see escalators going up), where you’ll find more shopping at the kilometer-long Tanuki-koji covered shopping arcade’s 200 boutiques, traditional specialty shops, and restaurants.

THE BOTANIC GARDEN ★ Backtracking now toward the station, you should stop at the 13-hectare (32-acre) Shokubutsu-en; its entrance is at N3 W8 (☎ 011/221-0066). It contains some virgin forest and more than 4,000 varieties of plants gathered from all over Hokkaido, arranged in marshland, herb, alpine, and other gardens. Of greater interest, perhaps, is the section devoted to plants used by the Ainu, whose extensive knowledge of plants covered not only edible ones but also those with medicinal use and other properties, including organic poison used for arrows to kill bears and other game. Unfortunately, there’s no English-language explanation of plant usage. Still, with lots of trees and grassy lawns, it’s a good place for a summer picnic.

Worth visiting on garden grounds is Japan's oldest natural science museum, founded in 1882 to document the wildlife of Hokkaido and housed in a turn-of-the-20th-century, Western-style building. Be sure, too, to visit the small, one-room Ainu Museum, which displays some fine examples of Ainu artifacts, including traditional clothing, jewelry, farming tools, hunting traps, harpoons, a canoe, and bamboo mouth harps (played by women and children). A 13-minute video, filmed in 1935, shows the ritualistic killing of a brown bear, a ceremony to give thanks and send the bear's soul to the afterlife, and the skinning. In any case, you'll probably want to spend an hour touring the garden and its museums.

The Botanic Garden and its museums are open April 29 to September 30, Tuesday through Sunday 9am to 4:30pm (Oct–Nov 3, 9am–4pm). Admission, including museums, is ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for adults, ¥280 ($2.35/£1.15) for children. From November 4 to April 28, only the garden and greenhouse are open (Mon–Fri 10am–3:30pm; Sat 10am–12:30pm); admission then is ¥110 (90¢/45p) for everyone.

NOPORO FOREST PARK (NOPORO SHINRIN KOEN)

If you have an extra half-day or more, I heartily recommend this park on the outskirts for its two very worthwhile attractions. To reach the park, fastest is to take a JR train 10 minutes to Shin-Sapporo Station (¥260/$2.15/£1.10), then transfer to JR bus No. 22 for a 15-minute ride to the last stop, Kaitaku-no Mura (¥200/$1.65/85¢). You can also take the Tozai subway line 20 minutes to Shin-Sapporo Station, and then get on the same bus. Or, there are three JR buses a day from Sapporo Station (departing between 9 and 10am) directly to the park in 68 minutes (¥230/$1.90/95p; free with the Japan Rail Pass), but quicker is to take a local JR train to Shinrin Koen Station and then transfer to a JR bus to Kaitaku-no Mura, which cuts travel time to about 30 minutes. Before setting out, get bus and train schedules at the tourist office in Sapporo Station. All buses stop first at the Historical Museum of Hokkaido (Kinenkan Iriguchi) before stopping at the Kaitaku-no Mura. It's about a 10-minute walk between the two attractions.

Historical Museum of Hokkaido (Kaitaku Kinenkan) ★ This museum does a great job detailing Hokkaido's development from prehistoric to modern times, with lots of information in English, including an audio guide (¥120/$1/50p extra). The section on the indigenous Ainu is especially good, with displays of clothing, a house, items used for trade with the Japanese and other artifacts, along with descriptions of their forced assimilation into Japanese culture (after the Meiji Restoration, Ainu were restricted from hunting and fishing on land they had used for generations and tattoos and earrings were prohibited). You'll also learn about Hokkaido's early contacts with Russia, the lives of 19th-century Japanese pioneers (including former samurai who had lost their land and stipends with the Meiji Restoration), the opening of Hakodate Port, the establishment of Sapporo Agricultural College, and more. The Living Experience Room provides hands-on experience with tools, including a handloom, and interactive displays. If history's your thing, you can easily spend 2 hours here.

Konopporo, Atsubetsu-cho. ☎ 011/898-0456. www.hmh.pref.hokkaido.jp. Admission ¥450 ($3.75/£1.90) adults, ¥150 ($1.25/65p) university and high-school students, free for seniors and children. Tues–Sun 9:30am–4:30pm. Closed some national holidays.

Historical Village of Hokkaido (Kaitaku-no Mura) ★★ Kids This open-air museum of more than 50 historical Japanese- and Western-style buildings, dating mostly from the Meiji and Taisho eras and brought here from around Hokkaido, includes homes, farmhouses, a shrine, a church, a newspaper office, a post office, a police box (manned by a sword-wielding police officer), and many small businesses, including a blacksmith, brewery, barbershop, grocery, inn, and sleigh factory—all how they would have looked in the past. Highlights include the Matsushashi Family Residence, Hokkaido Middle School, the Aoyama fisherman's family complex, and the Hokuseikan Silkworm house. In summer, staff members dressed in Meiji-Era clothing are on hand to answer questions. Kids like being able to run and explore; there's an old-fashioned playground with a seesaw, and other traditional play equipment; nearby is the Traditional Activities Room, where children can make crafts and play games at no extra charge. There are horse-drawn carriage rides in summer and horse-drawn sleighs in winter (extra fee charged). You can easily spend 2 hours here, wandering through buildings of the fishing village, farm village, mountain village, and town. Tip: Wear slip-on shoes, as they must be removed to enter many of the structures.

Konopporo 50-1, Atsubetsu-cho. © 011/898-2692. www.kaitaku.or.jp. Admission Apr–Nov ¥830 ($6.90/£3.45) adults, ¥610 ($5.10/£2.55) university and high-school students; Dec–Mar ¥680 ($5.65/£2.85) adults, ¥550 ($4.60/£2.30) university and high-school students. Free for children and seniors; free also for high-school students on Sat. May–Sept daily 9am–5pm; Oct–Apr Tues–Sun 9am–4:30pm. Bus: Kaitaku-no-Mura (1 min.).

HITTING THE SLOPES

Skiing is big in Sapporo, site of the 1972 Winter Olympics and easily accessible by plane from many cities in Japan—there are slopes within city limits and more than a dozen skiing areas less than 2 hours away, most open from early December to late April. On the west edge of town are Okurayama Jump Hill and Miyanomori Jump Hill, both sites of the 1972 Winter Olympics. Here, too, is the Sapporo Bankei Ski Area (© 011/641-0071), just 20 minutes from downtown Sapporo and popular for after-work skiing. You can reach them by subway to Maruyama Koen Station, followed by a 15-minute bus ride. Just 2.5km (1½ miles) south of Sapporo Station is Nakajima Park (Station: Nakajima Koen), with free use of cross-country skis in winter.

Farther afield to the west, the Teine Highland and Olympic Zone ski areas (© 011/681-3191) were the site of the alpine, bobsled, and toboggan events for the Olympics. A new lift joins the two areas, creating Hokkaido's longest run (6km/3¾ miles). A 4-hour, 6-hour, or 8-hour lift pass costs ¥3,650 ($30/£15), ¥4,100 ($34/£17), or ¥4,550 ($38/£19) respectively; ski-rental equipment is available from ¥4,950 ($41/£21) in the day and ¥2,940 ($25/£13) at night. Snowboarding gear costs ¥3,800 ($32/£16) per day. Keep in mind that gear sizes are generally smaller than in the West (ski boots up to 30cm, size 12 in U.S., and snowboard boots up to 28.5cm, size 10½ in U.S.). Take a JR train from Sapporo Station 20 minutes to Teine Station and then take bus no. 70 to Teine Olympia-mae.

Niseko (www.niseko.ne.jp), a 3½-hour bus ride west of Sapporo, is considered by our skiing friends as the best ski resort in Hokkaido, both for its fine powder and extensive night skiing. Three skiing regions, joined by lifts and shuttle buses that provide easy exploration of the different areas, offer variety for skiers of all levels. An 8-hour lift ticket costs ¥4,800 ($40/£20), with rental prices comparable to those at Teine. To get there, reserve a seat with Chuo (© 011/231-0500) or Donan (© 0123/46-5701) bus company; both go to Niseko from either Chitose Airport or Sapporo Station and cost ¥3,850 ($32/£16) round-trip. Alternatively, you can also go by JR Niseko Express train from Sapporo Station to Niseko in about 2 hours, followed by a shuttle bus. JR offers a great Niseko package for ¥4,900 ($41/£20) that includes the round-trip train and shuttle bus from Sapporo, an 8-hour lift ticket, and ski or snowboard rental with boots. For more information on skiing around Sapporo, stop by the Hokkaido-Sapporo Tourist Information Center in Sapporo Station or go to www.snowjapan.com.

WHERE TO STAY

Sapporo has a large selection of fine hotels in various price categories. The busiest tourist seasons are summer and early February during the annual Snow Festival. If you plan to attend the Snow Festival, book your room at least 6 months in advance. At other times you should have no problem finding a room, but it's always wise to make a reservation in advance. In winter (excluding festival time), some upper- and medium-priced hotels lower their room rates, sometimes by as much as 40%; be sure to ask for a discount.

Hotel Monterey Edelhof ★★ Although opened in 2000, this elegant hotel embraces the architectural exuberance of early 1900s Vienna, with lots of marble, stained-glass windows, Art Deco embellishments, and Otto Wagner-inspired designs. Even the elevators have old-fashioned floor dials, classical music plays in public spaces, and function rooms carry such names as Belvedere. Forgive me a sudden craving for Sacher torte. Located in downtown Sapporo, on the upper floors of an office building, the hotel offers small but smartly decorated rooms with a slight Art Deco motif. The hotel spa, which uses hot springs tapped deep below ground and has the good Austro-Hungarian Empire name Karlovy Vary, is a huge (though pricey) plus.

JR Tower Hotel Nikko Sapporo ★★ Elegance and convenience—not to mention top-class restaurants, a deluxe spa (offering everything from reflexology to indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths), and spectacular views from all rooms—make this the best place to stay in Sapporo. Located above Sapporo Station and presided over by a walkie-talkie-toting staff who makes sure everything runs smoothly, it offers rooms (23rd–34th floors) with all the latest in hotel design, including desks with flip tops so they can double as mirrored vanities, LCD swivel TVs, separate tub/shower areas, and towels embroidered with different-colored insignia to take out the guessing game of which towel belongs to whom. A caveat: Train passengers are forced to undergo a roundabout hike to reach hotel elevators, though strategically placed signs help assure them they're on the right track.

Sapporo Grand Hotel ★ This dignified hotel, open since 1934 and one of Sapporo's old-timers, has a good downtown location near the Botanic Garden and Odori Park. An appealing choice of dining and drinking outlets (including those serving Hokkaido specialties) and a helpful English-speaking staff help make your stay enjoyable. The hotel occupies three buildings constructed at various times: Business travelers take advantage of the mostly singles in the annex, company executives generally stay in the main building, and everyone from families to the well-heeled head to the east building for its family rooms (with four beds) and so-called Comfort Rooms on top floors which offer the extra advantages of humidifiers, duvet-covered beds, and big-screen TVs. Most rooms are fairly large and nicely furnished but—a sign of the hotel's age—have small windows and small bathrooms. Note, too, that some of the cheapest rooms face another building. 246 Nakamura Ryokan ★ If you want to stay in a ryokan, this modern and comfortable Japanese inn, just a stone's throw from the Botanic Garden, is a good choice. First opened more than 110 years ago but now occupying a nondescript 50-year-old building, it offers pleasant Japanese-style tatami rooms, some with a sitting area near the window. The hallways with eaves and slatted wooden doors to each room are a nice touch. Although rooms have their own tub, you might want to take advantage of the public baths here. If you order dinner, it will be served ryokan-style in your room by kimono-clad women. To receive the low rates listed below, you must book in advance and mention the Japanese Inn Group.

Sapporo Aspen Hotel Kids Built in 1996, this hotel has an English-speaking staff and a convenient location just north of Sapporo Station (its brochure says 100 steps, but I didn't count them). Otherwise, rooms are rather small for the price but are comfortable enough, with windows that open, heavy curtains to block light, sitting areas and desks, and plenty of counter space in bathrooms. Families take note: 14 so-called "quartet" rooms have four twin beds and roomy bathrooms with two sinks and separate rooms for the toilet and tub. The best views are from the west side overlooking Hokkaido University and a distant forest.

Sapporo Washington Hotel ★ With a great location across from Sapporo Station's south side, this 2006 property is a manifestation of the Washington chain's plan to establish reasonably priced hotels in convenient urban centers. Its seventh-floor lobby, with massage chairs and free coffee, overlooks the station, with guest rooms rising above to the 16th floor. A no-contact key card allows you to enter your room with a simple wave, check out on departure day at lobby kiosks, and even buy beer. Rooms are small but stylish, especially the executive singles with TVs that double as computers at no extra charge or the Ladies Rooms with special amenities such as humidifiers, window panels that close for complete darkness, and a feminine decor. Add the 150 movies-on-demand, and this hotel succeeds as an urban getaway at an affordable price. The range of rates reflects the seasons.

(247) Toyoko Inn Sapporo Nishi-Guchi Hokudai-mae (Finds) The motto of this inexpensive business-hotel chain translates roughly as “Eliminate unnecessary luxury but attend to guests’ needs.” It does so by offering free TV movies, free use of lobby computers (plus free high-speed connections in rooms and free Wi-Fi in the lobby), free domestic calls from lobby phones, and little extras such as semi-double- or double-size beds in the mostly single rooms (rooms are so small, a sign suggests stowing luggage under the bed). The twins are great for friends traveling together (or couples who wish they weren't)—the bathroom splits the room in halves, each containing its own bed, TV, mirror, hair dryer, and more. And true to its motto, the staff is friendly. Because the hotel is located across from Hokkaido University, rooms are hard to come by during February entrance exams, but there are two other properties within walking distance of Sapporo Station: Toyoko Inn Sapporo-eki Kita-Guchi, a 2-minute walk northeast at N6 W1 (☎ 011/728-1045), and Toyoko Inn Sapporo-eki Minami-Guchi, a 5-minute walk southeast at N3 W1 (☎ 011/222-1045).

WHERE TO DINE

Hokkaido's specialties include crab, corn on the cob, potatoes, Genghis Khan (a dish of mutton and vegetables that you grill yourself, also spelled “Jingisukan”), salmon, and Ishikari Nabe (a stew of salmon and other Hokkaido vegetables, also cooked at your table).

Sapporo is also famous for its Chinese noodles (ramen), and the most popular place to eat them is on a tiny, narrow street in Susukino popularly known as Ramen Yokocho. Located just 1 short block east of the Susukino Station, it's an alleyway of noodle shop after noodle shop. It doesn't matter which one you choose—just look for an empty seat. Each very small shop consists of a counter and some chairs, with photos of various dishes outside the front door. Most are open daily from 11:30am to 3am. Noodles generally begin at ¥800 ($6.65/£3.35) for a steaming bowlful.

Mikuni Sapporo ★★ FRENCH Kiyomi Mikuni has a reputation as the Japanese authority on French food. Hokkaido-born and the proprietor/chef of several Mikuni restaurants in Tokyo and elsewhere, Mikuni has brought his expertise home to triumphant reviews. Located on the ninth floor of Stellar Place in Sapporo Station in a setting that is less than stellar (and accessed by an elevator that is hard to find), the restaurant overcomes its disappointing decor with great cuisine, available only as set meals. A seasonal, autumn lunch, for example, may include cappuccino-style autumn mushrooms and chestnuts, either pan-fried codfish with potatoes and lentils or braised pork garnished with French beans and sweet-potato purée, plus dessert and coffee. There is an extensive wine list and knowledgeable sommeliers to advise you.

Hyoetsu-no-Mon KING CRAB This well-known restaurant, in business more than 40 years in Sapporo's Susukino nightlife district, specializes in giant king crab caught in the Japan Sea north of Hokkaido. Its menu (in Japanese but with photos) is easy enough—it consists almost entirely of king crab dishes. Set courses include a cooked crab, sashimi, crab soup, crab tempura, and vegetables. Although set dinners are expensive, there are usually seasonal specials, such as a recent summer set meal for ¥3,500 ($29/£15) available all day.

Sky J ★★ INTERNATIONAL Breathtaking views, reasonable prices, and a wide array of tempting dishes make this sleek restaurant a popular place to dine. The lunch buffet gets top ratings, with a wide range of Western and Asian dishes, all identified in English and utilizing lots of organic veggies, along with nine kinds of bread and a huge dessert table. For dinner, served until 9pm, both set meals and an a-la-carte menu are available, with an example of the former including Hokkaido specialties such as salmon and seasonal ravioli with caviar as a starter, followed by steak with a cumin flavor and eggplant fondue. From 8pm, the Sky J morphs into a classy cocktail lounge, with live music (and a ¥750/$6.25/£3.15 cover charge unless you dine before 8pm). But it's the views that sets this place apart.

(248) Kita-no-fuji (Finds) CHANKO NABE Located in the heart of the Susukino nightlife district, this restaurant, decorated with sumo memorabilia, specializes in the famous hearty stews favored by sumo wrestlers, chanko nabe, which you'll cook at your table. There's a picture menu only in Japanese, with more expensive nabe featuring crab, but you can also tell them how much you want to spend per person. Unfortunately, the staff in this busy hotspot has no time for cordiality, but this is definitely a unique place to dine.

S7 W4. ☎ 011/512-5484, or 011/512-1339 for reservations. Reservations recommended. Chanko nabe ¥2,300–¥3,200 ($19–$27/£9.50–£13). AE, DC, MC, V. Tues–Sun 4–11pm. Subway: Susukino (7 min.). To the left of a building with a Maya-like facade; look for flags and pictures of sumo wrestlers.

(249) Palace Toriyoshi (★★ Finds) YAKITORI/VARIED In a building filled with restaurants and bars in the Susukino nightlife district, this tiny restaurant serves yakitori with a twist, including many original creations by owner/chef Mr. Okuyama, who opened for business in 1980. How about cherry tomatoes covered in cheese; lotus root; a small onion filled with minced chicken; tofu salad; savory custard topped with a rose you can eat; or eggplant with minced meat? Because the menu is in Japanese, the best strategy is to tell the waiter what you like to eat and how much you want to spend; Mr. Okuyama will fix a meal to suit your budget. For ¥2,625 ($22/£11), I had an appetizer, sashimi, seven yakitori and original skewers (from chicken rolled in mint leaf with a plum sauce to French bread roasted on a skewer), salad, one of the best savory custards I've ever eaten, and soba.

Komugi-no-ie La Pausa (Value) ITALIAN Right across the street from the Clock Tower, this light and airy restaurant serves Neapolitan pizza baked in a stone kiln, as well as homemade pasta and cakes. Set lunches, with a choice of pasta or pizza and more side dishes added the more expensive they get, are a great deal. Pizzas come with a variety of toppings; my sausage pizza came with lots of cheese, eggplant, tomatoes, and capers. Komugi-no-ie, by the way, means “Wheat House.”

Sapporo Bier Garten (★) GENGHIS KHAN If you think of beer when you hear the word “Sapporo,” then a trip here is a must. Famous throughout the world, Sapporo beer was brewed in the handsome, ivy-covered brick buildings here from 1890 to 2003. Today they hold restaurants, shops, and the Sapporo Beer Museum (☎ 011/731-4368; daily 9am–5pm, to 4pm Nov–Apr), with displays unfortunately only in Japanese, but admission is free and samples cost only ¥200 ($1.65/85p). There used to be a beer garden as well, but now it exists in name only. Still, this is a good destination for beer and a meal, especially in the historic, cavernous Kessel Hall, where you dine underneath a huge 1912 mash tub. The specialty here is Genghis Khan, which you cook yourself on a hot skillet at your table. The best deal in the house is the appropriately named King Viking, which for ¥3,255 ($27/£14) gives you as much Genghis Khan and draft beer as you can consume in 100 minutes. Otherwise, for all you timid drinkers, draft beer starts at ¥515 ($4.30/£2.15) and all-you-can-eat Genghis Khan without drinks starts at ¥2,520 ($21/£11). By the way, a 12-minute walk away (or a short ride on the Sapporo Walk Bus) is Sapporo Factory, N2 E4, Chuo-ku (☎ 011/207-5000), a complex centered on another old Sapporo Beer brick building housing more restaurants and 160 shops (daily 11am–8pm).

Taj Mahal Value INDIAN This second-floor Indian restaurant tries too hard with its Indian mirrored fabrics, brass lamps, and Indian music, as the food alone is reason enough to come here. The service is friendly and the choices are varied—in addition to tandoori and kabobs, they serve chicken, lamb, seafood, and vegetable curries (but no pork or beef). You choose how spicy you want it, from very mild to very, very hot. Tasty lunch specials are served until 3pm, but not on Sundays or holidays.

4 Noboribetsu Spa & Shikotsu-Toya National Park

If you have only a couple days to spare to visit one of Hokkaido's national parks, head to Shikotsu-Toya National Park Star, the closest to Sapporo and the first national park you'll reach if you enter Hokkaido via train to Hakodate. This 987-sq.-km (381-sq.-mile) national park encompasses lakes, volcanoes, and the famous hot-spring resort of Noboribetsu Onsen Star, home to 800 people.

Famous for the variety of its hot-water springs ever since the first public bathhouse opened here in 1858, Noboribetsu Spa is one of Japan's best-known spa resorts and is the most popular of Hokkaido's many spa towns. It boasts 11 different types of hot water (each with a different mineral content) and gushes 10,000 tons a day. With temperatures ranging between 113°F (45°C) and 197°F (92°C), the waters contain all kinds of minerals, including sulfur, salt, iron, and gypsum, and are thought to help relieve such disorders as high blood pressure, poor blood circulation, rheumatism, arthritis, eczema, and even constipation.

Also known for its seasonal beauty, Noboribetsu is an impressive sight in spring, when 2,000 cherry trees lining the road into the onsen are in full bloom. In autumn, thousands of Japanese maples burst into flame. In the nearby village of Shiraoi on Lake Poroto, a museum and village commemorate the native Ainu and their culture.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE Noboribetsu Onsen is accessible only by bus. The nearest train station is Noboribetsu Station in the town of Noboribetsu, which lies on the main JR train line that runs between Hakodate and Sapporo, a little more than 2 hours from Hakodate and 1 hour and 10 minutes from Sapporo. Fares for an unreserved seat are ¥3,850 ($32/£16) from Sapporo, ¥6,190 ($52/£26) from Hakodate. From Noboribetsu Station it's only a 10- to 15-minute ride to the last stop of Noboribetsu Onsen (¥330/$2.75/£1.35; departures two or more times an hour).

Tips Un-Bearable Park

As you wander around Noboribetsu Onsen, you'll see advertisements for a bear park and an Ainu village attraction. The best thing about this place is the trip via ropeway—the bear park occupies one of the tallest hills around. The 135 or so bears, however, are crowded together in concrete pens in one of the saddest sights I've ever seen, and the Ainu "village" is just a few huts. Although the bears, many of them rescued from extermination or brought here as orphaned cubs, are luckier than some of their peers (government policy advocated the extermination of Hokkaido brown bears in the 1950s and still allows some of the remaining wild bears to be hunted and culled annually), the admission (including ropeway) of ¥2,520 ($21/£11) is too high a price for this joyless place. Skip it—you're better off spending your money elsewhere. Or donate money for a cause: Dedicated employees bent on saving brown bears here have begun a nonprofit organization in hopes of moving the bears off the mountain to a place where there's more room.

There is also one direct bus from Sapporo Station to Noboribetsu Onsen costing ¥1,900 ($16/£8) for the 1¼-hour trip. Contact Donan Bus (☎ 011/865-5511) for more information.

VISITOR INFORMATION & GETTING AROUND The Noboribetsu Tourist Association (☎ 0143/84-3311; daily 9am–6pm) is on Noboribetsu Onsen's main street, just a minute's walk north of the bus depot (continue up the hill; it will be on your left side with a clock above the door). In addition to a map, ask for the useful pamphlet "A Guide to Walking Trails in Noboribetsu Onsen." You may not encounter anyone who speaks English, but luckily the town is so small you shouldn't have any problem getting around.

WHAT TO SEE & DO

ENJOYING NOBORIBETSU'S NATURAL WONDERS

TAKING THE LOCAL WATERS Although all the spa hotels and ryokan have their own taps into the spring water, almost everyone who comes to Noboribetsu Onsen makes a point of going to the most famous hotel bath in town, Dai-ichi Takimotokan (★ ★ (☎ 0143/84-2111), one of the first bathhouses to open at the hot springs. Now a huge, modern bathing hall with some 30 pools containing different mineral contents at various temperatures, it's an elaborate affair with hot-spring baths and Jacuzzis both indoors and out, saunas, steam rooms, and waterfall massage (this is one of my favorites—you sit under the shooting water and let it pummel your neck and shoulders). Although the baths are separate for men and women, there's an indoor swimming pool for families with a slide and play area for children, so be sure to bring your swimsuit. If you're staying at the Dai-ichi Takimotokan or Takimoto Inn (see "Where to Stay," below), you can use the baths for free at any time—in the evenings, don't miss bathing in the outdoor baths, where you can order beer, soft drinks, or sake and enjoy the nice mountain scenery. Otherwise, Dai-ichi Takimotokan is open to the public daily from 9am to 6pm (you must enter by 5pm); the charge is ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) for adults, half-price for children 3 to 12.

HELL VALLEY (JIGOKUDANI) 🌸 To get an idea of what all this hot water looks like, visit Hell Valley at the north edge of town past the Dai-ichi Takimotokan hotel (see “Where to Stay,” below). This volcanic crater 446m (1,485 ft.) in diameter has a huge depression full of bubbling, boiling water and rock formations of orange and brown. As you walk the concrete path that winds along the left side of the crater (called Hell Valley Promenade), keep an eye down below to the right for a tiny shrine dedicated to the deity that protects eyes (those most in need are apt to miss it); local lore says that if you rub some of the protective water over ailing eyes, they’ll be cured. Farther along, you’ll soon reach a sign for OYUNUMA and a path leading uphill to the left through lush woods; if you follow it for about 10 minutes, you’ll come to a lookout point over a large pond of hot bubbling water called Oyunuma (the lookout is across the road; it’s another 5-min. walk to the pond). Return to the road and turn right (west) and then right again on the road leading downhill, where you will soon see a hiking path on the left that runs alongside the steaming Oyunuma River; halfway down is a natural footbath. If you want to take a different route back, return to the road to the Oyunuma path but look for the Funamiyama (or Mount Funami) Promenade to the right. It traces the backbone of several ridges, passing a number of small stone guardians before ending up back at—Hell Valley.

ESPECIALLY FOR KIDS

Noboribetsu Date Jidai Mura 🌸🌸 Kids A visit to this reproduction of a Feudal-Era village is the closest you can get to taking a time machine back to the last days of the Edo Period. Shops, restaurants, theaters, the downtown, and a samurai district are built as they were of yore, staffed by people dressed in period clothing. See ninja warriors fighting in a trick mansion or outdoor theater, local merchants hawking their wares, Edo-Era tenements with life-size models (I especially like the one of the boy in the outhouse), a ninja museum showing tricks of the trade, and courtesans performing in this Disney-esque re-creation of how Japan might have looked when the shogun reigned. Although shows are in Japanese (the ninja shows are probably the only ones that would interest children), the various attractions are fun for the entire family, and if you haven’t seen another historical theme village elsewhere in Japan, this rather small one is worth a 2-hour visit (an English pamphlet gives show times). To commemorate the day forever, you can don a kimono, samurai, or ninja outfit and have your photo taken in front of a traditional backdrop for ¥2,100 ($18/£9).

53-1 Naka-Noboribetsu-cho, Noboribetsu-shi. ☎ 0143/83-3311. www.edo-trip.jp. Admission ¥2,900 ($24/£12) adults, ¥2,100 ($18/£9) seniors, ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) children. Apr–Oct daily 9am–5pm; Nov–Mar Thurs–Tues 9am–4pm. You must enter 1 hr. before closing. Bus: From Noboribetsu Onsen or JR Noboribetsu Station to Jidai Mura. Located halfway between Noboribetsu Onsen and Noboribetsu city.

Noboribetsu Marine Park Nixe 🌸 Kids Small children love this combination Danish theme park and aquarium, located near Noboribetsu Station. (If you’re traveling with luggage, lockers are available both here and at the station.) The aquarium, one of the largest in northern Japan, is in Castle Nixe, modeled after a Danish castle (and visible from the station), where you’ll see sharks (from an underwater tunnel), morays, salmon, sturgeon, king crab, giant octopus, and other sea creatures. More attractions include a touch pool with small sharks, rays, and horseshoe crabs; a reptile house with snakes, turtles and lizards; dolphin and sea lion shows; a king penguin parade; a game arcade; the ubiquitous souvenir shops (selling Danish and aquarium-related gifts); and a handful of kiddie rides (which cost ¥200–¥300/$1.65–$2.50/85p–£1.25 extra). You can see everything in about 2 hours.

1–22 Noboribetsu Higashi-machi, Noboribetsu-shi. ☎ 0143/83-3800. Admission ¥2,300 ($19/£9.50) adults, ¥1,150 ($9.60/£4.80) children. Daily 9am–5pm. Station: Noboribetsu (7 min.). Walk straight out the exit and turn right after 1 block.

LEARNING ABOUT THE AINU IN NEARBY SHIRAOI

Poroto Kotan and the Ainu Museum ★★ Shiraoi (an Ainu word meaning “Place of Many Horseflies”) was settled by the Ainu long before Japanese arrived; today, it’s a small town of some 22,000 inhabitants, including Ainu. Poroto Kotan (“Big Lake Village” in Ainu), nestled on the shores of Lake Poroto, is a mock village of native houses made entirely from wood and reeds, a native plant garden, a dance area, probably the most important Ainu museum anywhere, and a research center dedicated to preserving Ainu culture. If you’re lucky, your visit will coincide with two annual festivals: one, in the spring, to pray for life’s necessities; the other in the fall to give thanks for the harvests (call for festival dates).

After passing, regrettably, through a huge souvenir hall, you’ll find yourself surrounded by traditionally built houses, where there are demonstrations of Ainu weaving techniques, woodworking, and other crafts, and where native dances and performances of the mukkur (Ainu mouth harp) are performed by Ainu in traditional costume. Unfortunately, bears (and dogs) are kept in captivity here in filthy metal cages, but even this is an Ainu tradition—in spring, when the mother bear left her cave in search of food, Ainu fetched the cubs to keep in a wooden cage in the village until they were old enough for slaughter. Bears were revered as gifts from the gods. The most important thing to see, however, is the excellent museum, with English-language descriptions of Ainu history, culture, society, and traditions, a video (Japanese-language only) and displays of utensils, clothing (such as salmon-skin boots), fish hooks (the Ainu excelled at fishing), jewelry, and other everyday artifacts.

If you wish, you can lunch on dried salmon, potato cakes, obau (a stew of mountain vegetables, meat, and fish), and herb tea bought from one of the stalls. Although the village is small and can be toured in about an hour, it’s an important stop for those wishing to learn about Ainu culture and the indigenous people who have little left of what was once a rich heritage.

2–3–4 Wakakusa-cho, Shiraoi-cho, Hokkaido 059-0902. ☎ 0144/82-3914. www.ainu-museum.or.jp. Admission ¥750 ($6.25/£3.15) adults, ¥550 ($4.60/£2.30) high-school students, ¥450 ($3.75/£1.90) junior-high students, ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) children. Daily 8:45am–5pm. Closed 1 week for New Year’s. Train: 13 min. by JR express train or 25 min. by local train from JR Noboribetsu Station to JR Shiraoi Station, then a 10-min. walk. Turn left out of the station, take the stairs over the track, turn right and then right again at Koen Dori; keep walking straight and look for the sign AINU MUSEUM. Note: Only 5 express trains running between Hakodate and Sapporo daily (with stops at Noboribetsu Station) stop at Shiraoi, so make sure you does; otherwise, local trains are more frequent.

WHERE TO STAY

The busiest tourist seasons are July through September and during New Year’s, which are when hotel rates are at their highest, particularly on weekends (avoid Golden Week, Obon in mid-Aug, and New Year’s). October, when the leaves are changing, is also popular. All places below charge a daily ¥150 ($1.25/65p) hot-springs tax.

②50 Oyado Kiyomizu-ya ★★ You’ll be royally welcome at this elegantly modern ryokan with traditional touches, one of our favorites in Hokkaido. After entering the front gate, you’ll be ushered down a long corridor decorated with plants, stones, and paper lanterns to the elevator that will whisk you up to your room. Least expensive are average-looking Western-style rooms, making the simple but pleasant Japanese tatami rooms a better choice. For a splurge, combination rooms are actually two-room suites with a tatami room where you'll dine and a separate bedroom.

The ryokan is beside a roaring river, the sounds of which will sing you to sleep as you snuggle against fur-lined futons (which cost an astounding $1,000 each!) and down covers. But it's the delicious and abundant seasonal kaiseki meals served in your room that assure the ryokan many repeat guests; the parade of beautifully prepared dishes includes local specialties. Service, as can be expected, is impeccable, and the second-generation owner, Mr. Iwai, speaks excellent English; he can answer your questions regarding Noboribetsu and the surrounding area. (A sake connoisseur, he can also recommend which of the 14 different kinds of sake he keeps on hand might go best with your meal.) Wi-Fi is available in the lobby. If you're looking for a place far from tour groups, souvenir shops, and impersonal service, you'll be happy here.

173 Noboribetsu Onsen-machi, Noboribetsu-shi, Hokkaido 059-0551. ☎ 0143/84-2145. Fax 0143/84-2146. 43 units. ¥10,000 ($83/£42) single; ¥16,000 ($133/£67) double; ¥24,000 ($200/£100) triple. Breakfast ¥2,000 ($17/£8.50) extra; dinner ¥5,000–¥10,000 ($42–$83/£21–£42) extra. AE, DC, MC, V. The staff will pick you up at the station if you tell them your arrival time in advance; otherwise, it's above Noboribetsu Onsen's main street, a 10-min. walk from the bus terminal. Amenities: Coffee shop; karaoke bar; indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths (the outdoor bath alternates days for men and women); in-room massage. In room: TV, hot-water pot w/tea.

MODERATE

Dai-ichi Takimotokan ★ Thanks to its long history—opened in 1858 as the area's first inn and now in its fifth generation of innkeepers—as well as its gigantic public baths with various pools, this is Noboribetsu Onsen's best-known ryokan. Today, however, it's a large, modern facility with little personality and lots of noisy tour groups. Still, the most compelling reasons to stay here are its location near Hell Valley and its famous hot-spring baths, which hotel guests are entitled to use free anytime, night or day. Another plus: free shuttle bus service November through March from Chitose Airport in Sapporo and throughout the year from downtown Sapporo (call the hotel for reservations). As for rooms, most are simple tatami (only eight are Western-style), spread throughout four buildings. Oldest and cheapest are those in the East Building, without tubs or air-conditioning (but some with views of an enclosed garden), while rooms in the West Wing are a step up with private bathroom. The South Building has the Western-style rooms and Japanese-style rooms, but it's a hike to the hot-spring baths. Most luxurious are rooms in the Main Building, with top floors offering the best views. Guests staying in the East and West buildings or Western-style rooms dine in a buffet restaurant offering Japanese, Chinese, and Western food, while those staying in tatami rooms in the South and Main building are served Japanese dinner in their rooms.

Sat and holidays ¥2,100 ($18/£9) extra per person. Rates include 2 meals. AE, DC, MC, V. A 5-min. walk uphill from the bus station, beside Hell Valley. Amenities: Coffee shop; bar; indoor pool (free for hotel guests); 24-hr. indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; shopping arcade; in-room massage; laundry/dry-cleaning service; coin-op lobby computers. In room: TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, safe.

②51 Kashotei Hanaya ★ This is one of the most refined members of the Japanese Inn Group ryokan, modern but with such traditional touches as a small Japanese garden off the lobby, flower arrangements, bamboo, decorative floors, and Japanese music playing softly in public areas. Most rooms are Japanese style, with or without bathroom, while the three Western-style rooms are without bathroom (all rooms, however, have toilet and sink). Meals are served in your room. The owner speaks English. The ryokan is on the edge of town, about a 5-minute walk from the bus terminal.

Japanese or Western breakfast ¥1,050 ($8.75/£4.35) extra; dinner ¥2,625–¥7,875 ($22–$66/£11–£33) extra. AE, MC, V. Bus: From Noboribetsu Station to Byoin-mae/Kashotei Hanaya-mae (if you're arriving by bus, you'll get off before reaching the terminal—ask the bus driver to let you know where—the ryokan will be close behind you, across the road). Pickup service also available from Noboribetsu Onsen bus terminal. Amenities: Coffee shop; indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths (open round-the-clock); in-room massage. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea.

Takimoto Inn If you prefer a hotel with beds to a ryokan with futons, this quiet and moderately priced hotel has the additional advantage of allowing guests to use Dai-ichi Takimotokan's airport shuttle and famous baths across the street 24 hours for free. All rooms are twins (but can be used as singles or triples) and spartan, with metal doors that clang shut with the finality of a prison and miniscule bathrooms. There's no view, but windows do open. Buffet meals offer a mix of Japanese and Western food.

76 Noboribetsu Onsen-machi, Noboribetsu-shi 059-0551. ☎ 0143/84-2205. Fax 0143/84-2645. www.takimoto.inn.co.jp. 47 units. ¥8,025–¥11,700 ($67–$98/£33–£49) per person, including 2 meals. Sat ¥2,100 ($18/£9) extra; New Year's/Golden Week/Obon ¥3,000–¥4,000 ($25–$33/£13–£17) extra. Winter discounts available. AE, DC, V. A 5-min. walk uphill from the bus station, across the street from Dai-ichi Takimotokan. Amenities: Restaurant; hot-spring bath (guests can also use Dai-ichi Takimotokan's baths free); in-room massage. In room: TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea.

WHERE TO DINE

252 Fukuan SOBA This small, traditional soba shop (take your shoes off at the entrance) serves its own buckwheat noodles. Because the menu is in Japanese only, I recommend ordering the Tenseiro, a tempura soba with shrimp and vegetables; or the Ebi-tenoroshi soba, a summertime meal of cold soba, shrimp tempura, seaweed, dried fish flakes, and Japanese daikon radish. Or look around at what others are eating. The leg wells are saviors for those errant legs that just won't fit under low Japanese tables.

30 Noboribetsu Onsen-machi. ☎ 0143/84/2758. Soba ¥680–¥1,400 ($5.65–$12/£2.85–£6). No credit cards. Daily 11:30am–2pm and 6–10:30pm (closed irregularly 1 day a month). A 1-min. walk from the bus terminal, on the main street across from the tourist information office.

Poplar Restaurant WESTERN If you find yourself looking for a place for lunch, a draft beer, or coffee, try this restaurant, which serves inexpensive Western dishes from a limited English-language menu with pictures. While they may not win any culinary awards, items include beefsteak, hamburger steak, fried shrimp, grilled salmon, and pork cutlet. There's a monthly special set for ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20).

Takimoto Inn. ☎ 0143/84-2205. Main dishes ¥700–¥1,200 ($5.85–$10/£2.90–£5). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11am–2pm (last order). A 5-min. walk from the bus terminal, near Hell Valley and across from Dai-ichi Takimotokan.

253 Tokumitsu ★ SUSHI This is a friendly, local hangout where you'll be served good, reasonably priced dishes while sitting at the long sushi counter or on tatami. A plastic-food display will help you order such dishes as Chiraishi sushi (raw fish served over a bed of seasoned rice), eel (unagi), or kani-nabe (a crab stew you cook yourself). Tokumitsu stays open late as a nightcap spot for locals and tourists alike.

29 Chuo-dori. ☎ 0143/84-2079. Sushi and sashimi platters ¥1,000–¥2,500 ($8.35–$21/£4.20–£10); set meal ¥1,200 ($10/£5). No credit cards. Daily 11am–2:30pm and 4:30pm–midnight. A 1-min. walk from the bus terminal, on the main street across from the tourist office.

5 Sounkyo Spa & Daisetsuzan National Park

Although I find it difficult to rank nature in terms of beauty, there are some who maintain that Daisetsuzan National Park (★★★) is the most spectacular of Hokkaido's parks. With its tall mountains covered with fir and birch trees and sprinkled with wildflowers, its river gorge laced with waterfalls, and hiking trails, Daisetsuzan National Park is the perfect place to come if you've been itching to get some exercise in relatively unspoiled countryside. Lying in the center of Hokkaido (east of Sapporo), this national park—Japan's largest—contains three volcanic mountain groups, including the highest mountain in Hokkaido, Mount Asahi, 2,254m (7,513 ft.) high. Hiking in summer and skiing in winter are the primary pursuits of the park's visitors.

Nestled at the very edge of Sounkyo Gorge, Daisetsuzan's most famous natural attraction, is Sounkyo Onsen (★) (onsen means "spa" in Japanese), the perfect base for exploring the national park. Once rather unattractive with a hodgepodge of ugly cement buildings, Sounkyo has reinvented itself with attractive and compatible alpine-style buildings and stone and wood paths that do justice to the magnificent scenic backdrop and its soothing hot springs. Yet it remains a mountain village, home to 600 residents and only a dozen or so accommodations, most of them small affairs. More important, Sounkyo Spa serves as the starting point for the cable-car trip to the top of a neighboring peak with its hiking trails and easy ski slope. From late January to mid-March, the spa is the scene of the Ice Falls Festival, a winter fantasyland with giant ice castles, frozen waterfalls lit with colored lights, and weekend fireworks.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE The only way to reach Sounkyo Onsen by public transportation is by bus. If you're coming from Sapporo, take the JR train 2½ hours to Kamikawa (¥6,180/$52/£26 one-way), transferring there for the 30-minute bus ride (¥770/$6.40/£3.20 one-way) directly to Sounkyo Onsen. Buses depart about 11 times a day and generally connect with train arrivals, but it's always wise to check ahead with the JR counter in Sapporo Station's Hokkaido-Sapporo Tourist Information Center (or, have a Japanese call the Kamikawa bus terminal at ☎ 01658/2-1316).

There are two buses a day—called the Sunrise Asahikawa-Kushiro-go—connecting Sounkyo Onsen with Akanko Onsen in Akan National Park (see the next section for more on Akan), with the one-way fare costing ¥3,260 ($27/£14) for the 3½-hour trip. (Reservations are required; call ☎ 01658/5-3321 in Sounkyo, or 0154/67-2205 in Akan; or drop by the bus terminal in either town.) All bus fares are half-price for children.

VISITOR INFORMATION & ORIENTATION The tourist information office (☎ 01658/5-3350; daily 10:30am–5pm) is located in front of the bus stop, next to the post office. The staff's English is limited but they have maps and can point you in the direction of your lodging or even make reservations for you. In any case, the village is so tiny that you won't have any difficulty getting around; it's basically two streets leading up to the ropeway, and a pedestrian lane, called Canyon Mall Street, that wanders through the center of town.

EXPLORING SOUNKYO ONSEN

Before exploring the environs, you might want to pop into Sounkyo's Daisetsuzan National Park Visitor Center, located across from the ropeway (☎ 01658/9-4400; June–Oct daily 8am–5:30pm, Nov–May Tues–Sun 9am–5pm), with displays on the park's animals, plants, and geological wonders. Unfortunately, displays are in Japanese, though an English-language handout offers rudimentary explanations, a topographical map shows the layout of Daisetsuzan National Park, and a TV shows the park's changes through the seasons. If you plan on hiking, you might ask the staff for recommended trails, as well as a rundown on places where brown bears are often spotted. Entrance to the center is free.

SOUNKYO GORGE The Sounkyo Gorge is a river valley hemmed in on both sides by rock walls rising almost 150m (500 ft.) and extending some 19km (12 miles). Unfortunately, a major rock slide has closed most of the gorge to sightseers (you used to be able to cycle much of the gorge), but you can still see a small portion by walking 3.2 km (2 miles) from Sounkyo Spa (walk down to the highway and turn right) and keeping to the right when the highway disappears into a tunnel. This will bring you to a parking lot beside the roaring river and a view of two famous waterfalls side by side: the Ginga no Taki (Silver River Falls) and the Ryuusei no Taki (Shooting Star Falls). At the far end of the parking lot is a fence, beyond which you can see the gorge. Bring some drinks or a picnic lunch. There are also buses that travel here from Sounkyo Spa, but they're infrequent (ask the tourist office for a schedule).

GOING TO THE TOP OF MOUNT KURODAKE ⚡ If you're interested in hiking, or even if you're not, take the cable car directly from Sounkyo Onsen to Mount Kurodake, where you'll be rewarded with sweeping views. The tops of the mountains are really beautiful here, covered with wildflowers and alpine plant life. It would be a shame to come to Sounkyo and not spend a few hours amid its lofty peaks. The trip by cable car takes 7 minutes, with round-trip tickets costing ¥1,750 ($15/£7.50) for adults and ¥900 ($7.50/£3.75) for children. From the cable-car station, walk a few minutes farther up the mountain, where you'll come to a chairlift. The chairlift ride (my favorite part) takes 15 minutes, swinging you past lush forests of fir and birch. Round-trip fare is ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for adults and ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for children. Ropeway and lift operating hours vary; in summer it's 6am to 7pm, in winter it's 9am to 4pm (call ☎ 01658/5-3031 for more information).

DAY HIKES You can forgo the cable car and chairlift up Mount Kurodake and hike instead; plan on the entire day up and back. Or, for a short hike, forgo the chairlift on Mount Kurodake and hike about 1 hour from the 5th stage (where the chair lift begins) to the 7th stage (where the chairlift ends). If you're prepared to exert yourself climbing over boulders, however, the most rewarding journey is the 1½-hour hike from the 7th stage onward to the peak of Kurodake, 1,950m (6,500 ft.) high. There, if the weather is clear, you'll be greeted with views of the surrounding mountain ranges. If you feel like taking a day hike, there's a circular path along the top of mountain ridges that you can hike in about 8 hours. Be sure to note lift operating hours before setting out. Note, also, that if you plan on hiking past the 7th stage, you must first check in at the hut to the left of where the chairlift ends, where you sign your name and give your route so that tabs can be kept on people who are on the mountain (hiking from here is recommended only in July and Aug, as snow can cover the ground other months of the year). Hiking boots are recommended, but you can also rent rubber boots here for ¥500 ($4.15/£2.10), a must if you don't have hiking boots because trails are slippery and wet (small streams from winter snows cascade down the trail even in July). Note, however, that rental sizes only go up to 28 centimeters (12 in.).

As for other hiking possibilities, across the highway and river from Sounkyo Spa is the Panoramadai hiking course, where you can hike to a panoramic outlook in about an hour. Past the Taisetsu Hotel above Sounkyo Spa is the Momidijani Course, which takes about 1 hour round-trip and follows a mountain stream to a waterfall.

For more information on these and other hiking trips, stop by the Daisetsuzan National Park Visitor Center.

SKIING From November to March, Mount Kurodake becomes a skier's haven, with beginner to intermediate slopes. Although you can rent skis up on the mountain at the cable-car station, keep in mind that your feet may be too big (at last check, boots went up to 28cm/12 in.). Skis and boots rent for ¥3,000 ($25/£13), while a 1-day cable-car and chairlift ticket goes for ¥3,600 ($30/£15).

TAKING THE WATERS In the village Community Center, you'll find Kurodake-no-yu (☎ 01658/5-3333), a public hot-spring bath with large, spotless, and attractive indoor and outdoor baths plus a sauna. The spa charges ¥600 ($5/£2.50) for adults (half-price for children) and is open daily 10am to 9pm (closed Wed Nov–Apr, except during Ice Festival). Buy your tickets at the entrance's vending machine.

WHERE TO STAY

There are plenty of inexpensive pensions and hotels in Sounkyo. The army of college-age Japanese you see working in the area comes from other parts of Japan to work for the summer. They may not know a lot about the area, but most of them speak some English. If you want to stay here in July, August, or September, be sure to make advance reservations. Rates below include the ¥150 ($1.25/65p) onsen tax.

MODERATE

Taisetsu Hotel (★★ Value) Although it's the farthest walk from the bus terminal and attracts groups, this hotel's ridge-top location above town gives it good views of the surrounding gorge and mountains from some rooms. What makes this a top pick, however, are its three gorgeous baths, two of which are open 24 hours; best are the seventh-floor indoor and outdoor baths with great views and the newer outdoor baths overlooking expansive greenery. As for rooms, most are Japanese-style, spread in a west wing with the best views (ask for a room on a top floor facing the front toward the gorge) and an east wing (request a room facing the back toward the hills, as those facing the front overlook a big, characterless ryokan). Best of all (and most expensive) are the 10 Yukihana two-room suites on the sixth floor, complete with a tatami room, bedroom, and huge bathroom with a hot-spring bath affording panoramic views. Guests staying here dine in private rooms in an exclusive Japanese restaurant. Otherwise, rates are based on meals, with the cheapest served buffet-style in a characterless dining hall and the more expensive in Top of the Canyon, which serves a mix of Japanese and Western dishes for set dinners and buffet breakfasts. You can also choose to dine in your room for ¥2,000 ($17/$8.50) more. A big plus to staying here October 29 to the end of April is the free daily bus service between the hotel (departure at 10am) and Ashikawa Station (departure at 2pm for the hotel).

An 8-min. walk from the bus terminal. Amenities: 4 restaurants; Japanese-style pub; indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; sauna; whirlpool baths; in-room massage. In room: TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer, safe.

Onsen Pension Ginga ★ Value Opened in 2001, this cute lodge is bright and airy, with a glass-enclosed communal dining room decorated in European drawing-room style and both Japanese- and Western-style rooms, most with large windows providing great panoramic views (best are the corner rooms, and room no. 208). Rooms without bathrooms do have sinks. Japanese meals, served in the dining room, feature local fish and seasonal homegrown vegetables. Unfortunately, the hot-spring bath here is small.

Sounkyo Onsen, Kamikawacho, Kamikawa-gun 078-1701. ☎ 01658/5-3775. 17 units, 5 with bathroom. ¥7,500 ($63/£32) per person without bathroom, ¥8,865 ($74/£37) per person with bathroom. Rates include 2 meals. No credit cards. A 2-min. walk from the bus terminal. Amenities: Small indoor hot-spring bath; coin-op washer/dryer. In room: TV, hot-water pot w/tea, no phone.

254 Resort Pension Yama-no-ue This pension offers simple tatami rooms with just the basics. There are communal toilets, sinks, and showers; but for a real hot-spring bath, guests staying here are entitled to use the Spa Kurodake in the adjoining building for free. In summer, the small dining room serves ample meals of Hokkaido cuisine. If you stay more than 1 night or in winter, you'll dine at Beergrill Canyon (see "Where to Dine," below). Breakfast is Western style. Because the owner, who was born and raised in Sounkyo, is an avid photographer and butterfly collector, you'll see gorgeous shots of the area and captured butterflies on the walls. In autumn, you can even make arrangements to go salmon fishing with him.

WHERE TO DINE

Beergrill Canyon ITALIAN Located in the same building as Spa Kurodake (identified as "Community Center" on some English maps), this casual restaurant serves various pizzas, pastas, and other fare from its English-language menu (in winter it also served Japanese food). Choices include pizza with mushrooms and bacon, spaghetti with rainbow trout and mushrooms, spicy curry chicken, grilled venison, and Hokkaido sirloin steak. For a complete meal, add a minisalad, bread, or rice to your entree by paying ¥250 ($2.10/£1.05) extra. Wash it all down with beer. There are two computers you can use for free if you order something.

Sounkyo. ☎ 01658/5-3361. Main dishes ¥650–¥2,500 ($5.40–$21/£2.70–£11); set meals ¥9.15–¥3,000 ($4.60–$25/£2.30–£13). No credit cards. Daily 11:30am–3:30pm and 5:30–9pm (last order). Longer hours on weekends in summer (9:30am–9pm). Closed Wed in winter.

Its English-language menu with pictures lists nine different kinds of ramen, such as the deep-fried chicken ramen or Asahikawa ramen (with handmade miso soup, vegetables, and roast pork), as well as rice bowls and gyoza. In nice weather you can sit at the outdoor tables.

6 Akanko Spa & Akan National Park

Spreading through the eastern end of Hokkaido, Akan National Park (☆☆) features volcanic mountains, dense forests of subarctic primeval trees, and three caldera lakes, including Lake Akan. The best place to stay in the park is Akanko Onsen, a small hot-spring resort on the edge of Lake Akan and home to 2,000 residents. It makes a good base for active vacations ranging from fishing to hiking and from which to explore both Akan National Park and nearby Kushiro Marshland National Park, famous for its red-crested cranes. It also has a re-created Ainu village, with one of the best music and dance performances I've seen.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE By JR Train & Bus Because there's no train station at Akanko Onsen itself, transportation to the resort town is by train to Kushiro or Kitami and then by bus to Akanko. Kushiro is about 4 hours from Sapporo by JR train; Kitami is 4½ hours away. From JR Kushiro Station, buses depart four or five times a day for Akanko; the 2-hour trip costs ¥2,650 ($22/£11) one-way. From Kitami, buses depart twice a day (at last check at 9:30am and 3pm), and the 70-minute trip costs ¥1,800 ($15/£7.50). You must make a reservation for this bus by calling ☎ 0157/23-2181 in Kitami or ☎ 0154/67-2205 in Akanko.

If you're coming from Sounkyo Onsen, two buses a day connect Sounkyo Onsen with Akanko Onsen, with the one-way fare costing ¥3,260 ($27/£14) for the 3½-hour trip. (Reservations required; call ☎ 01658/5-3321 in Sounkyo, or 0154/67-2205 in Akan, or drop by the bus terminal in either town.)

All bus fares are half-price for children.

In addition to regular buses, there are also sightseeing buses that take in the most important sights in both Akan and Kushiro Marshland national parks along the way. This is the best way to see the national park if you don't have your own car; for details, read "Seeing the Sights," below.

By Plane Because Akan National Park lies at the eastern extremity of Hokkaido, you may wish to fly at least one-way between here and Tokyo. The closest airport to Akanko Onsen is Kushiro Airport, with the flight from Tokyo taking about 1½ hours. A one-way ticket costs ¥35,700 ($298/£149). From Kushiro Airport, buses travel to Akanko in about 1 hour and 20 minutes for ¥2,090 ($17/£8.50).

VISITOR INFORMATION Akanko Onsen's Tourist Association (☎ 0154/67-2254; daily 9am–6pm) is located just a minute's walk from the Akanko Onsen bus terminal in the direction of the lake. (Turn right out of the bus terminal and take the first left; it will soon be on your right, just past the police box.) Occasionally there's an English-speaker here, and in any case you can pick up an English-language pamphlet about Akan National Park with a map of the town and two foldouts on hiking. The staff will also make reservations for hotels and ryokan. Note: In 2009 the tourist office will move to the main street, next to the post office and across from the New Akan Hotel Shangri-La. More information is available at www.lake-akan.com.

For information on the park and its natural wonders, drop by the Akankohan Eco Museum Center (☎ 0154/67-2785; Wed–Mon 9am–5pm), located beside the lake about a 7-minute walk from the bus terminal. Displays, in Japanese only, show off native flora and fauna, including the Hokkaido brown bear and sika deer (both stuffed), marimo (duckweed), and live freshwater fish such as white-spotted char and kokanee salmon. Admission is free.

ORIENTATION & GETTING AROUND Akanko Onsen is small, and walking is the best way to get around. It consists primarily of one main street that snakes along the lake, with ryokan and souvenir shops lining both sides.

WHAT TO SEE & DO

SEEING THE SIGHTS

SIGHTSEEING BUS TOURS OF AKAN NATIONAL PARK If you're not renting a car, the best way to see Akan National Park's most important natural wonders is aboard a sightseeing bus. The Shiretoko Utoro-go bus departs Lake Akan daily June to early October, making stops at several scenic stops along the way, including Mashu and Kussharo lakes. Mashu, a crater lake that is considered one of Japan's most beautiful lakes, was called "lake of the devil" by the Ainu because no water flows either into it or out of it. Surely Mashu is one of Japan's least-spoiled lakes: Because of the steep, 198m-high (660-ft.) rock walls ringing it, the lake has remained inaccessible to humans (the bus stops at an observation platform high above the water). Kussharo is one of Japan's largest mountain lakes, but what makes it particularly interesting is its hot-spring waters right on the beach; in summer, you can see people digging holes to sit in the hot springs. The bus also stops at the foot of Mount Iou with its sulfurous caldrons and at Bihoro Pass (a scenic overlook) before reaching Bihoro Station north of the park (where you can catch the train to Sapporo) and continuing onward to Shiretoko National Park. Beware: Frequent fog often eliminates scenic views, there are tacky souvenir shops at every stop, and tours are in Japanese.

Sightseeing buses, costing ¥3,760 ($31/£16), depart Akan at 7:50am and arrive at Bihoro Station at 12:25pm (be sure to check departure times ahead of time, as bus schedules change). You can also do this tour in reverse; called the Kuroyuri-go tour, buses depart Bihoro Station at 10:20am and arrive in Akan at 2:55pm (incidentally, this same bus returns to Bihoro after a 2-hr. stay in Akan). Finally, you can also tour Akan National Park from Kushiro May through October by boarding the NewPirika-go bus outside Kushiro Station at 8am, arriving at Akan around 4pm (cost of this tour is ¥4,500/$38/£19). Children pay half fare for all tours.

For more information, call Akan Bus Co at ☎ 0154/37-2221.

RED-CRESTED CRANES & BUS TOURS OF KUSHIRO MARSHLAND NATIONAL PARK

Red-crested cranes, the official birds of Hokkaido, are traditionally regarded as both a good omen and a national symbol of Japan. Because they mate for life, they're also considered a symbol for love. Once threatened with extinction, these graceful and beautiful creatures now lead protected lives in and around Kushiro Marshland National Park (Kushiro Shitsugen), Japan's largest marshland and designated a national park in 1987. If you don't have a car, the best way to see the marshlands and catch a glimpse of the cranes in their natural habitat is via sightseeing bus. Tours are conducted in Japanese only but traverse the marshland and make stops at observatories and Tancho-Tsuru Koen (see below). The Akan Bus Company (☎ 0154/37-2221) offers tours of the marshland that begin and end at Kushiro Station once or twice a day (8:25am and/or 2pm) from May to October; the 4¾-hour tours cost ¥2,870 ($24/£12) for adults and ¥1,330 ($11/£5.50) for children. From July to September 20, there's a daily 4¾-hour bus and train tour (aboard the Norokko-go steam locomotive), departing Kushiro Station at 8:25am and costing ¥3,500 ($26/£13) for adults and ¥1,440 ($12/£6). For more information, contact the Kushiro Tourism Association (☎ 0154/31-1993; www.kushiro-kankou.or.jp/english).

If you prefer sightseeing on your own, the best place to learn about cranes is at the excellent Akan Kokusai Tsuru Center (Akan International Crane Center) ㊦, 23–40 Akan (☎ 0154/66-4011; daily 9am–5pm, closed Mon Apr–Oct). In addition to a film showing their beautiful courtship dance and nesting habits, it has fun, interactive displays with lots of English-language explanations. You'll learn just about everything you'd ever want to know about red-crested cranes here, from why they fly to how much an egg weighs. Best of all, however, is adjacent Tancho-no-Sato, an excellent observatory on private land where 200 red-crested cranes live, court, and mate November through March. This is a great place to photograph the birds in action, and you'll be surprised at how large they actually are. Admission to both the International Crane Center and Tancho-no-Sato is ¥400 ($3.35/£1.70) for adults, half-price for children. Plan on staying at least an hour in winter, less in summer when the birds have returned to their native marshlands. The International Crane Center is some 40 minutes from Akanko Onsen by bus; get off at the Tancho-no-sato stop (fare: ¥1,570/$13/£6.50). Incidentally, the bus that stops here is the same one that goes from Akanko Onsen to Kushiro Airport and Kushiro Station, so it's possible to stop here, visit, and then catch the next bus (buses are infrequent, however, so get the schedule beforehand).

In summer, your best bet for observing cranes outside the marshland is Tancho-Tsuru Koen (Japanese Crane Reserve), Kushiro-cho (☎ 0154/56-2219; daily 9am–6pm, to 4pm in winter), a marshy area set aside in 1958 for breeding and raising cranes. It now has some 20 cranes—some of them second and third generation—living in natural habitats behind high meshed fences. Admission is ¥310 ($2.60/£1.30) for adults and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children. Also on the way to Kushiro airport and station, it's located 1 hour by bus from the Akanko Onsen bus terminal; get off at the Tsuru-koen stop. If all you want is a quick look, note that one bus a day en route to the airport makes a 15-minute stop at this park, which is enough time to see some of the birds before you continue on.

ATTRACTIONS IN AKANKO ONSEN Although the Ainu originally lived near Kushiro, not Akan, they have built the Ainu Kotan Village in Akanko Onsen (☎ 0154/67-2727). Although the Ainu Kotan Village itself is just one street lined with souvenir shops (selling mostly woodcarvings), it leads to a thatched-roof lodge, where you can see Ainu performing traditional dances and playing bamboo mouth harps. This is the most professional Ainu production I've seen, and because the dances aren't the same as those performed at Poroto Kotan in Shiraoi (see "Noboribetsu Spa & Shikotsu-Toya National Park," earlier in this chapter), these are highly recommended even if you've already been to Poroto Kotan. Thirty-minute shows are performed five times a day in summer (including evenings), less frequently in winter. Admission is ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for adults, half-price for children. Alongside the performance lodge is the Seikatsu Kinen Kan (May–Oct, daily 10am–10pm), an Ainu home and outbuildings that display various Ainu utensils and crafts. Admission here is ¥300 ($2.50/£1.25) for adults and ¥100 (85¢/45p) for children (skip it if you've been to Poroto Kotan).

ENJOYING THE OUTDOORS

BOATING For Japanese visitors, one of the most popular activities in Akanko Onsen is a boat cruise of Lake Akan, which provides a close-up view of the mountains, islands, and shoreline, all stunningly beautiful. Lake Akan is famous for its very rare spherical green algae, a spongelike ball of duckweed called marimo that's been designated a Special Natural Monument. Found in only a few places in the world, marimo is formed when many separate and stringy pieces of algae at the bottom of the 43m-deep (144-ft.) lake roll around and eventually come together to form a ball, gradually growing larger and larger. It takes 150 to 200 years for marimo to grow to the size of a baseball; some in Lake Akan are as much as 29 centimeters (12 in.) in diameter—meaning they are very old indeed. Supposedly, when the sun shines, the marimo rise to the surface of the water, giving Lake Akan a wonderful green shimmer. On the Marimo Discovery Cruise you'll make a 15-minute stop at Churui Islet to see the Marimo Exhibition Center with a few tanks of marimo. One-hour cruises, with English-language explanations, operate from May to mid-November and cost ¥1,750 ($15/£7.50) for adults and ¥920 ($7.65/£3.85) for children, including the exhibition center. Boats depart every hour or so, with the last boat departing at 5:30pm in summer. Less frequent is the 45-minute Akan's Scenic Cruise, which departs three times a day and travels through more scenic narrow passages between islands and into islets (but not to the Marimo Exhibition Center). This costs ¥1,350 ($11/£5.50) for adults and ¥680 ($5.65/£2.85) for children. If you want to see both the Marimo Exhibition Center and the narrow passages, there's the 50-minute High Speed Cruise, which costs ¥2,200 ($18/£9).

I hope you'll boycott the motorboats, which disturb the peace and quiet of this nature's wonderland—but maybe the price alone will deter you: ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20) for 5 minutes.

CANOEING To get a real feel for Akan Lake at duck and goose level, take a canoe trip in a two-person Canadian canoe, available May to October. For beginners, a 45-minute trip costs ¥2,100 ($18/£9) for adults and ¥1,100 ($9.15/£4.60) for children. There's also a 90-minute Adventure Course for ¥5,300 ($44/£22) for adults and ¥3,700 ($31/£15) for children that goes farther afield, while the 2½-hour Yaitai island course includes a trip to uninhabited Yaitai island in the lake. You may see carp spawning, deer, or—if you are really lucky—bear. Make canoe reservations at the Akan Nature Center (☎ 0154/67-2801), shown on the English-language map.

FISHING ★★ Lake Akan is one of Japan's most famous fishing lakes. In addition to kokanee salmon, said to have originated in the lake, sport fish include rainbow trout, steelhead trout, and white spotted char, a native fish. If you want to fish, contact Fishing Land (☎ 0154/67-2057), located beside the New Akan Hotel Shangri-La. A fishing permit costs ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50) per day and includes fishing in Akan River and Hiotan Pond, as well as the lake. A rental rod and lures cost ¥1,000 ($8.35/£4.20). Add ¥3,000 ($25/£13) if you want to be dropped off at a fishing spot by boat. Fly-fishing season is from May to the end of November, except from mid-July to mid-August when it's too hot. From January to March, you can ice-fish; fishing gear for the day plus having a hole cut in the ice for you costs ¥1,500 ($13/£6.50).

HIKING Akanko Onsen's easiest walk begins and ends right in town. Start at the Akankohan Eco Museum Center at the east end of town, where to the left you'll find an easy, 30-minute footpath leading through a primeval forest of pines and ferns, past bokke (volcanic, bubbling mud), and along the lakeshore. It ends at the boat dock with cruises of Lake Akan (see above). If you want to make this an hour's hike, take the steps to the right of the Eco Museum Center leading uphill at the orange torii gate to Inari Shinto Shrine and follow the path through woodlands along a ridge before descending to the lake and joining the path described above. Both paths are shown on the English pamphlet describing the Akankohan Eco Museum Center.

For more serious hiking, while out on your boat trip you'll see two cone-shaped volcanoes: Oakandake (Mount Oakan) to the east and Meakandake (Mount Meakan) to the south. Both are surrounded by virgin forests and are popular daylong destinations for hikers. Mount Oakan (called "male mountain" by the Ainu for its supposed manly features) is dormant, with a summit about a 4½-hour hike from Akanko Onsen. You can reach the trail entrance, Takiguchi, in 5 minutes by one of five buses going in the direction of Kushiro (get off at the Takiguchi stop). Plan about 6 hours for the ascent and descent. Mount Meakan (which the Ainu called "female mountain") is an active volcano, so check before you go. It's the highest mountain in the Akan area at 1,500m (4,950 ft.) above sea level and is covered with primeval forests of spruce and fir. There are three hiking trails up Mount Meakan. If you're hiking the entire distance, the trail access closest to Akanko is located at the west end of town, where you can follow the Furebetsu Woodland Road, a former transport road, to an old sulfur mine for 3 hours to get to the trail entrance, from which it's another 3 hours to the peak where you'll be rewarded with panoramic views of the surrounding area. Otherwise, there is bus service from Akanko Onsen to beautiful Lake Onneto July through September, from which it's about 2½ hours to the summit. Pick up English-language alpine guides with maps to Mount Oakan and Mount Meakan at the tourist association.

A shorter hike follows a trail to Mount Hakuto-zan, from which you also have a good view of the town and lake. It takes about 20 minutes to reach Akan's skiing area and another 50 minutes to reach Mount Hakuto-zan observatory, a grassy and moss-covered knobby hill that remains slightly warm throughout the year because of thermal activity just below the surface. The woods of birch and pine here are beautiful, and what's more, you'll probably find yourself all alone. Stop at the local tourist office for directions to the trail head and a map in Japanese.

WINTER ACTIVITIES In winter, Lake Akan freezes over and becomes a playland for winter sports. International marathon ice-skating races—200km (124 miles)—have brought attention to the area's natural riches. Cross-country skiing (rental equipment ¥1,000/$8.35/£4.20 for 2 hr.), ice skating (¥1,000/$8.35/£4.20 for 1 hr.), and ice fishing (¥1,500/$13/£6.50 a day) are popular sports. For downhill skiers, the Kokusetsu Akan-kohan ski ground (☎ 0154/67-2881) is blessed with a magnificent view of Mount Oakan rising behind Lake Akan. The F.I.S.-certified slalom course attracts ski teams and individuals in training, while the intermediate and beginner slopes are popular with less demanding skiers. A day pass for lifts costs ¥2,500 ($21/£10); ski-rental equipment costs ¥3,000 ($25/£13) per day.

In February, illuminated ice sculptures, traditional dance, nightly fireworks over the frozen lake, and stalls selling food make for a fun midwinter festival. Contact the tourist office for more details.

WHERE TO STAY

②56 Yuku-no-Sato Tsuruga ★★☆☆ Finds Extravagance is the word that comes to mind when describing Yuku-no-Sato Tsuruga, which translates loosely as "Village of eternally playing graceful cranes." Unsurprisingly, cranes are the main motif throughout, but what makes this hotel a standout are its hot-spring baths, among the most beautiful and fantasy provoking I've ever seen. One is designed as a village, spread on several levels and including a cavelike room and an outdoor bath beautifully landscaped with stones and pines overlooking the lake. The other, on the eighth floor, has the usual whirlpool, hot and dry saunas, and baths, as well as a rooftop hot-spring bath with 360-degree panoramic views. The baths, separated for men and women, are switched alternative days so guests may enjoy both (even if you don't stay here, you can visit the baths from noon to 5pm for ¥1,470/$12/£6). The hotel also arranges guided tours of the area, including hikes and canoe trips (fees charged).

The rest of the hotel, with natural woods throughout, well-designed restaurants (the hotel's massive main dining hall is divided into buffet stations serving Italian, Japanese, and Chinese food, but you can choose to dine in-room by paying more) and well-appointed guest rooms, do not disappoint. Most rooms are Japanese style, the best (and most expensive) of which have lakeside views, large bathrooms (some with open-air tubs), bar areas for entertaining, and seating around an indoor hearth. There are also more than 50 combination rooms with tatami area and beds. Most exclusive are the Rera no Yakata rooms with their soothing dark wood accents and Ainu designs (rera means wind in the Ainu language), some with great views of the lake from their own verandas boasting hot-spring baths.

4-6-10 Akanko Onsen, Akancho, Akan-gun 085-0467. ☎ 0154/67-2531. Fax 0154/67-2754. www.tsuruga-g.com. 233 units. Golden Week/summer vacation ¥21,000-¥37,800 ($175-$315/£88-£158); June/autumn ¥17,325-¥35,700 ($144-$298/£72-£149); off season ¥14,700-¥29,400 ($123-$245/£61-£123). Rates are per person and include 2 meals. AE, DC, MC, V.A 10-min. walk from the bus terminal; turn left out of the terminal, take the 1st right to the main street, and turn left. There are also free shuttle buses operating from Kushiro and Kitami stations (reservations required). Amenities: 2 restaurants; coffee shop; 2 bars; lounge; beautiful indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; game room; shopping arcade. In room: A/C, TV, minibar, hot-water pot w/tea, hair dryer.

MODERATE

Akan View Hotel (Kids) Despite its name, this 30-year-old hotel is one of the few around without lake views (except from some rooms on its top floor). Most of its rooms are Western-style twins, narrow and with tiny bathrooms but with everything else you need; 32 Japanese-style rooms are also available. One of the best things about this hotel are the large indoor thermal pools (you wear your bathing suit here), one for swimming laps and another with slides for children, as well as the usual hot-spring indoor/outdoor baths (daily 24 hr. except during cleaning). I also like the glass-enclosed barbecue restaurant, open in summer, where you can order Genghis Khan (lamb and vegetables), seafood, or beef meals you grill yourself (make reservations to dine here 3 days in advance; ¥1,500/$13/£6.50 for lunch, from ¥2,500/$21/£10 for dinner). Otherwise, you dine buffet style in the communal dining room.

4-1-7 Akanko Onsen, Akancho, Akan-gun 085-0467. ☎ 0154/67-3131. Fax 0154/67-3139. 215 units. Summer ¥7,500-¥12,000 ($63-$100/£31-£50) per person; winter ¥6,450-¥10,000 ($54-$85/£27-£42) per person. Rates include 2 meals. AE, DC, MC, V.A 7-min. walk from the bus terminal. Turn left out of the bus terminal, cross the bridge, and turn right at the stoplight. Amenities: 2 restaurants; bar; lobby lounge; indoor pool (free for hotel guests); indoor/outdoor hot-spring baths; tennis courts; rental bikes (¥500/$4.15/£2.10 per hr.); game room; in-room massage; coin-op washers and dryers. In room: TV, fridge, hot-water pot w/tea, safe.

Lake Spa Takada (★) (Finds) SINCE 2004 reads the sign on this small, welcoming, lakefront inn. The date is a bit of an insider's joke, however, as owner Dameon Takada is a third-generation Akan innkeeper, who (together with his wife and parents) gave up the stress of managing a large hotel and opened this home away from home. The location, family ambience, food, and service make this a great value, even more so because Frommer's readers enjoy a 10% discount. Meals, created by a chef who goes to the coast daily to shop for the freshest seafood and vegetables, are served in the restaurant, complete with a cozy fireplace in winter and a lakeside wooden deck in summer. If you've gone fishing, Dameon will grill your catch on the deck barbecue. The rooftop outdoor bath, made of cypress, has a splendid view of the lake. Rooms, each of which is slightly different in style, are mostly Japanese style, though there are also three rooms with beds. Because some of the rooms do not face the lake, specify a lakeside room when making your reservation. Dameon (who, in addition to his wife Delia, speaks flawless English), can also offer insider advice on fishing, hunting, canoeing, hiking, skiing, and (time permitting) will even take you fishing. No wonder 85% of his business is from repeat clients. Highly recommended.

The menu lists rataskepu, a cold vegetable dish with beans, corn, and pumpkin; pochimo, a fried potato cake (a bit hard); Ainu curry with venison and local vegetables; pumpkin cakes; and drinks such as bark tea (shikerebe). Japan in Depth

With a population of about 127 million, a history stretching back thousands of years, the world's longest-reigning monarchy, and unique forms of culture, art, food, etiquette, and religion, Japan merits more than this short chapter can deliver. Be sure to check “Recommended Books” in chapter 2 for other sources of information.

1 History 101

ANCIENT HISTORY (ca. 30,000 B.C.–A.D. 710) According to mythology, Japan's history began when the sun goddess, Amaterasu, sent one of her descendants down to the island of Kyushu to unify the people of Japan. Unification, however, was not realized until a few generations later when Jimmu, the great-grandson of the goddess's emissary, succeeded in bringing all of the country under his rule. Because of his divine descent, Jimmu became emperor in 660 B.C. (the date is mythical), thus establishing the line from which all of Japan's emperors are said to derive. However mysterious the origin of this imperial dynasty, it is acknowledged as the longest reigning such family in the world.

Legend begins to give way to fact only in the 4th century A.D., when a family by the name of Yamato succeeded in expanding its kingdom throughout much of the country. At the core of the unification achieved by the Yamato family was the Shinto religion. Indigenous to Japan, Shintoism is marked by the worship of natural things—mountains, trees, the moon, stars, rivers, seas, fire, animals, rocks, even vegetables—as the embodiment of gods (called kami) and of the spirits of ancestors. It is also marked by belief in the emperor's divinity. Along with Buddhism (see below), Shintoism is still a driving belief in Japanese life.

Although the exact origin of Japanese people is unknown, we know Japan was once connected to the Asian mainland by a land bridge, and the territory of Japan was occupied as early as 30,000 B.C. From about 10,000 B.C. to 400 B.C., hunter-gatherers, called Jomon, thrived in small communities primarily in central Honshu; they're best known for their hand-formed pottery decorated with cord patterns. The Jomon Period was followed by the Yayoi Period, which was marked by metalworking, the pottery wheel, and the mastering of irrigated rice cultivation. The Yayoi Period lasted until about A.D. 300, after which the Yamato family unified the state for the first time and set up their court in what is now Nara Prefecture. Yamato (present-day Japan) began turning cultural feelers toward its great neighbor to the west, China.

In the 6th century, Buddhism, which originated in India, was brought to Japan via China and Korea, and the large-scale Chinese cultural and scholarly influence—including art, architecture, and the use of Chinese written characters—began. In 604, the prince regent Shotoku, greatly influenced by the teachings of Buddhism and Confucianism and still a beloved figure today, drafted a document calling for political reforms and a constitutional government. By 607, he was sending multitudes of Japanese scholars to China to study Buddhism, and he started building Buddhist temples. The most famous is Horyuji Temple near Nara, said to be the oldest existing wooden structure in the world. He also built Shitennoji Temple in what is now Osaka.

THE NARA PERIOD (710–784)

Before the 700s, the site of Japan's capital changed every time a new emperor came to the throne. In 710, however, a permanent capital was established at Nara. Although it remained the capital for only 74 years, seven successive emperors ruled from Nara. The period was graced with the expansion of Buddhism and flourishing temple construction throughout the country. Buddhism also inspired the arts, including Buddhist sculpture, metal casting, painting, and lacquerware. It was during this time that Emperor Shomu, the most devout Buddhist among the Nara emperors, ordered the casting of a huge bronze statue of Buddha to be erected in Nara. Known as the Daibutsu, it remains Nara's biggest attraction.

THE HEIAN PERIOD (794–1192)

In 794, the capital was moved to Heiankyo (present-day Kyoto), and following the example of cities in China, Kyoto was laid out in a grid pattern with broad roads and canals. Heiankyo means “capital of peace and tranquillity,” and the Heian Period was a glorious time for aristocratic families, a time of luxury and prosperity during which court life reached new artistic heights. Moon viewing became popular. Chinese characters were blended with a new Japanese writing system, allowing for the first time the flowering of Japanese literature and poetry. The life of the times was captured in the works of two women: Sei Shonagon, who wrote a collection of impressions of her life at court known as the Pillow Book; and Murasaki Shikibu, who wrote the world's first major novel, The Tale of Genji.

Because the nobles were completely engrossed in their luxurious lifestyles, however, they failed to notice the growth of military clans in the provinces. The two most powerful warrior clans were the Taira (also called Heike) and the Minamoto (also called Genji), whose fierce civil wars tore the nation apart until a young warrior, Minamoto Yoritomo, established supremacy. (In Japan, a person's family name—here, Minamoto—comes first, followed by the given name; I have followed this order throughout this book.)

THE KAMAKURA PERIOD (1192–1333)

Wishing to set up rule far away from Kyoto, Minamoto Yoritomo established his capital in a remote and easily defended fishing village called Kamakura, not far from today's Tokyo. In becoming the nation's first shogun, or military dictator, Yoritomo laid the groundwork for 700 years of military governments—in which the power of the country passed from the aristocratic court into the hands of the warrior class—until the imperial court was restored in 1868.

The Kamakura Period is perhaps best known for the unrivaled ascendancy of the warrior caste, or samurai. Ruled by a rigid honor code, samurai were bound in loyalty to their feudal lord, and they became the only caste allowed to carry two swords. They were supposed to give up their lives for their lord without hesitation, and if they failed in their duty, they could regain their honor only by committing ritualistic suicide, or seppuku. Spurning the sort of life led by court nobles, samurai embraced a spartan lifestyle. When Zen Buddhism, with its tenets of mental and physical discipline, was introduced into Japan from China in the 1190s, it appealed greatly to the samurai. Weapons and armor achieved new heights in artistry, while Bushido, the way of the warrior, contributed to the spirit of national unity.

Here & Zazen: Buddhism in Japan

Founded in India in the 6th to 5th centuries B.C., Buddhism came to Japan in the 6th century A.D. via China and Korea. By the end of the 6th century, Buddhism had gained such popularity that the prince regent Shotoku, one of Japan's most remarkable historical figures, declared Buddhism the state religion and based many of his governmental policies on its tenets. Another important Buddhist leader to emerge was a priest called Kukai, known posthumously as Kobo Daishi. After studying Buddhism in China in the early 800s, he returned and built temples throughout Japan, including the famous 88 temples on Shikoku island and those on Mount Koya, which continue to attract millions of pilgrims today.

Probably the Buddhist sect best known to the West is Zen Buddhism. Considered the most Japanese form of Buddhism, Zen is the practice of meditation and a strictly disciplined lifestyle to achieve enlightenment. There are no rites in Zen Buddhism, no dogmas, no theological conceptions of divinity; you do not analyze rationally but learn through introspection. The strict and simple lifestyle of Zen appealed greatly to Japan's samurai warrior class, and many of Japan's arts, including the tea ceremony, arose from the practice of Zen.

Zazen, or meditation, is practiced as a form of mental or spiritual training; laypeople meditate to relieve stress and clear their minds. You achieve Zazen in a cross-legged lotus position with your neck and back straight and your eyes slightly open. Usually done in a group—in a semidark room with cushions, facing the wall—meditation is helped along by a monk, who stalks noiselessly behind the meditators. If someone squirms or moves, the offender is whacked on the shoulders with a stick to help him or her get back to meditating. There are several Zen temples where foreigners can join in Zazen (see chapter 5); if you'd like to try it, contact the Tourist Information Center in Tokyo or Kyoto, or check the Japan Times to see whether a session of Zazen is being organized with English-language instruction.

In 1274, Mongolian forces under Kublai Khan made an unsuccessful attempt to invade Japan. They returned in 1281 with a larger fleet, but a typhoon destroyed it. Regarding the cyclone as a gift from the gods, Japanese called it kamikaze, meaning “divine wind,” which took on a different significance at the end of World War II when Japanese pilots flew suicide missions in an attempt to turn the tide of war.

THE MUROMACHI & AZUCHI-MOMOYAMA PERIODS (1336–1603)

After the fall of the Kamakura shogunate, a new feudal government was set up at Muromachi in Kyoto. The next 200 years, however, were marred by bloody civil wars as feudal lords (daimyo) staked out their fiefdoms. Similar to the barons of Europe, the daimyo owned tracts of land and had complete rule over the people who lived on them. Each lord had his retainers, the samurai, who fought his enemies. This period of civil wars is called Sengoku-Jidai, or Age of the Warring States.

Yet these centuries of strife also saw a blossoming of art and culture. Kyoto witnessed the construction of the extravagant

Golden and Silver pavilions as well as the artistic arrangement of Ryoanji Temple's famous rock garden. Noh drama, the tea ceremony, flower arranging, and landscape gardening became the passions of the upper class. At the end of the 16th century, a number of castles were built on mountaintops to demonstrate the daimyos' strength, guard their fiefdoms, and defend themselves against the firearms introduced by the Portuguese.

In the second half of the 16th century, a brilliant military strategist by the name of Oda Nobunaga almost succeeded in ending the civil wars. Upon Nobunaga's assassination (by one of his own retainers), one of his best generals, Toyotomi Hideyoshi, took up the campaign, built magnificent Osaka Castle, and crushed rebellion to unify Japan. Nobunaga and Hideyoshi's successive rules are known as the Azuchi-Momoyama Period, after the names of their castles.

THE EDO PERIOD (1603–1867)

Upon Hideyoshi's death (1598), power was seized by Tokugawa Ieyasu, a statesman so shrewd and skillful in eliminating enemies that his heirs would continue to rule Japan for the next 250 years. After defeating his greatest rival in the famous battle of Sekigahara, Tokugawa set up a shogunate government in 1603 in Edo (present-day Tokyo), leaving the emperor intact but virtually powerless in Kyoto. In 1615, he assured his supremacy by getting rid of Hideyoshi's descendants in a fierce battle at Osaka Castle that destroyed the castle and annihilated the Toyotomi clan.

Meanwhile, European influence in Japan was spreading. The first contact with the Western world had occurred in 1543, when Portuguese merchants (with firearms) arrived, followed by Christian missionaries. St. Francis Xavier landed in Kyushu in 1549, remaining for 2 years and converting thousands of Japanese; by 1580, there were perhaps as many as 150,000 Japanese Christians. Although Japan's rulers at first welcomed foreigners and trade (three Kyushu daimyo even went so far as to send emissaries to Rome, where they were received by the pope), they gradually became alarmed by the Christian missionary influence. Hearing of the Catholic Church's power in Rome and fearing the expansionist policies of European nations, Hideyoshi banned Christianity in the late 1500s. In 1597, 26 Japanese and European Christians were crucified in Nagasaki.

The Tokugawa shogunate intensified the campaign against Christians in 1639 when it closed all ports to foreign trade. Adopting a policy of total isolation, the shogunate forbade foreigners from landing in Japan and Japanese from leaving; even those Japanese who had been living abroad in overseas trading posts were never allowed to return. The only exception was in Nagasaki, with a colony of tightly controlled Chinese merchants and a handful of Dutch confined to a trading post on a tiny island.

Thus began an amazing 215-year period in Japanese history during which Japan was closed to the rest of the world. It was a time of political stability at the expense of personal freedom, as all aspects of life were strictly controlled by the Tokugawa government. Japanese society was divided into four distinct classes: samurai, farmers, craftspeople, and merchants. Class determined everything in daily life, from where a person lived to what he was allowed to wear or eat. Samurai led the most exalted social position, and it was probably during the Tokugawa Period that the samurai class reached the zenith of its glory. At the bottom of the social ladder were the merchants, but peace and prosperity led to the development of new entertainment forms to occupy their time: Kabuki drama and woodblock prints became the rage, while stoneware and porcelain, silk brocade for kimono, and lacquerware improved in quality. In fact, it was probably the shogunate's rigid policies that actually fostered the arts, as anything new was considered dangerous and quickly suppressed. Japanese were forced to retreat inward, and they focused their energies in the arts, perfecting handicrafts down to the minutest detail whether it was swords, inro (small containers for medicine), kimono, or lacquered boxes. Only Japan's many festivals and pilgrimages to designated religious sites offered relief from harsh and restrictive social mores.

To ensure that no daimyo in the distant provinces would overrun the shogun's power, the Tokugawa government ordered each daimyo to leave his family in Edo as permanent residents (effectively as hostages) and required the lord to spend a prescribed number of months in Edo every year or two. In expending so much time and money traveling back and forth and maintaining elaborate residences both in the provinces and in Edo, the daimyo had no resources left with which to wage a rebellion. This is also when inns and townships sprang up along Japan's major highways to accommodate the elaborate processions of palanquins, samurai, and footmen traveling back and forth between Edo and the provinces.

Even though the Tokugawa government took such measures to ensure its supremacy, by the mid-19th century it was clear that the feudal system was outdated and economic power was in the hands of the merchants. Many samurai families were impoverished, and discontent with the shogunate became widespread.

In 1853, American Commodore Matthew C. Perry sailed to Japan, seeking to gain trading rights. But Japanese were unwilling, so Perry departed, his mission unaccomplished. Returning a year later, he forced the shogun to sign an agreement despite the disapproval of the emperor, thus ending Japan's 2 centuries of isolation. In 1867, powerful families toppled the Tokugawa regime and restored the emperor as ruler, thus bringing the Feudal Era to a close.

MEIJI PERIOD THROUGH WORLD WAR II (1868–1945) In 1868, Emperor Meiji moved his imperial government from Kyoto to Edo, renamed it Tokyo (Eastern Capital), and designated it the official national capital. During the next few decades, known as the Meiji Restoration, Japan rapidly progressed from a feudal agricultural society of samurai and peasants to an industrial nation. The samurai were stripped of their power and no longer allowed to carry swords, thus ending a privileged way of life begun almost 700 years earlier in Kamakura. A prime minister and a cabinet were appointed, a constitution was drafted, and a parliament (called the Diet) was elected. With the enthusiastic support of Emperor Meiji, the latest in Western technological know-how was imported, including railway and postal systems, along with specialists and advisers: Between 1881 and 1898, about 10,000 Westerners were retained by the Japanese government to help modernize the country.

Meanwhile, Japan made incursions into neighboring lands. In 1894 to 1895, it fought and won a war against China; in 1904 to 1905, it attacked and defeated Russia; and in 1910, it annexed Korea. After militarists gained control of the government in the 1930s, these expansionist policies continued; Manchuria was annexed, and Japan went to war with China again in 1937. On the other side of the world, as World War II flared in Europe, Japan formed a military (Axis) alliance with Germany and Italy and attacked French Indochina.

On December 7, 1941, Japan attacked Pearl Harbor, entering World War II against the United States. Although Japan went on to conquer Hong Kong, Singapore, Burma, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Dutch East Indies, and Guam, the tide eventually turned, and American bombers reduced every major Japanese city to rubble with the exception of historic Kyoto. On August 6, 1945, the United States dropped the world's first atomic bomb over Hiroshima, followed on August 9 by a second over Nagasaki. Japan submitted to unconditional surrender on August 14, with Emperor Hirohito's radio broadcast telling his people the time had come for "enduring the unendurable and suffering what is insufferable." American and other Allied occupation forces arrived and remained until 1952. For the first time in history, Japan had suffered defeat by a foreign power; the country had never before been invaded or occupied by a foreign nation.

MODERN JAPAN (1946–PRESENT)

The experience of World War II had a profound effect on the Japanese, yet they emerged from their defeat and began to rebuild. In 1946, under the guidance of the Allied military authority headed by U.S. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, they adopted a democratic constitution renouncing war and the use of force to settle international disputes and divesting the emperor of divinity, giving power to the people instead. A parliamentary system of government was set up, and 1947 witnessed the first general elections for the National Diet, the government's legislative body. After its founding in 1955, the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) remained the undisputed majority party for decades, giving Japan the kind of political stability it needed to grow economically and compete in world markets.

To the younger generation, the occupation was less a painful burden to be suffered than an opportunity to remake their country, with American encouragement, into a modern, peace-loving, and democratic state. A special relationship developed between Japanese and their American occupiers. In the early 1950s, as the Cold War between the United States and the Communist world erupted in hostilities in Korea, that relationship grew into a firm alliance, strengthened by a security treaty. In 1952, the occupation ended, and Japan joined the United Nations as an independent country.

Avoiding involvement in foreign conflicts, Japanese concentrated on economic recovery. Through a series of policies favoring domestic industries and shielding Japan from foreign competition, they achieved rapid economic growth. In 1964, Tokyo hosted the Summer Olympic Games, showing the world that the nation had transformed itself into a formidable industrialized power. Incomes doubled during the 1960s, and a 1967 government study found that 90% of Japanese considered themselves middle class. By the 1980s, Japan was by far the richest industrialized nation in Asia and the envy of its neighbors, who strove to emulate Japan's success. Sony was a household word around the globe; books flooded the international market touting the economic secrets of Japan, Inc. After all, Japan seemed to have it all: a good economy, political stability, safe streets, and great schools. As the yen soared, Japanese traveled abroad as never before, and Japanese companies gained national attention as they gobbled up real estate in foreign lands and purchased works of art at unheard-of prices.

Meanwhile, a snowballing trade surplus had created friction between Japan and the United States, its chief trading partner. In the 1980s, as Japanese auto sales in the United States soared and foreign sales in Japan continued to be restricted, disagreements between Tokyo and Washington heated up. In 1989, Emperor Hirohito died of cancer at age 87, bringing the 63-year Showa Era to an end and ushering in the Heisei Period under Akihito, the 125th emperor, who proclaimed the new “Era of Peace” (Heisei).

In the early 1990s, shadows of financial doubt began to spread over the land of the rising sun, with alarming reports of bad bank loans, inflated stock prices, and overextended corporate investment abroad. In 1992, recession hit Japan, bursting the economic bubble and plunging the country into its worst recession since World War II. The Nikkei (the Japanese version of the American Dow) fell a gut-churning 63% from its 1989 peak, and, over the next decade, bankruptcies reached an all-time high and unemployment climbed to its highest level since World War II. Meanwhile, the LDP, which had held power uninterrupted for nearly 4 decades, suffered a huge loss of public confidence after its top officials were accused of participating in a series of political and financial scandals. But a revolving door of prime ministers (many of whom also became implicated in scandals) throughout the 1990s failed to revive the economy or alleviate voters’ growing fears of financial doom.

Public confidence was further eroded in 1995, first by a major earthquake in Kobe that killed more than 6,000 people and proved that Japan’s cities were not as safe as the government had maintained, and then by an attack by an obscure religious sect that released the deadly nerve gas sarin on Tokyo’s subway system during rush hour, killing 12 people and sickening thousands. But the worst blow was in 2001, when a knife-wielding man stormed into an elementary school in Osaka Prefecture, fatally stabbing eight children and wounding 15 others. For many Japanese, it seemed that the very core of their society had begun to crumble.

In April 2001, after yet another prime minister resigned due to scandal, Koizumi Junichiro took the political helm. Although a member of the LPD, the longhaired, 59-year-old Koizumi, who enjoyed popularity usually reserved for rock stars, had long been considered something of a maverick, battling against the long-established power brokers of the LPD. Following the September 2001 terrorist attacks in the U.S., Koizumi quickly showed allegiance by pushing through an antiterrorism bill that enabled Japan’s military to ship supplies and provide medical and other noncombat support in Afghanistan, followed in 2003 by pledging $1.5 billion in foreign aid to American reconstruction efforts in Iraq. But Koizumi’s greatest domestic achievements were policies that nudged Japan’s slow climb out of recession, including those that helped cut the amount of bad bank loans in half and laid groundwork for the privatization of Japan’s post office, which does far more than sell stamps and deliver mail. Tokyo real estate prices, which had fallen as much as 70% from their 1991 peak, rose for the first time in 2004, spurring investors to return. By 2008, a slew of international luxury hotels had moved into the Tokyo market, including top-brand names such as Mandarin Oriental, Ritz Carlton, and Peninsula, and new shopping complexes, office buildings, and large urban renewal projects had reshaped the Tokyo skyline.

On the international front, Japan’s most immediate worry continued to be its neighbor, North Korea, which lobbed its first missile over Japan in 1998, declared in 2002 that it had never halted its nuclear-weapons program despite a 1994 nuclear accord, and claimed in 2006 that it had conducted a nuclear test. Furthermore, in 2002 North Korea admitted for the first time that it had abducted 13 young Japanese in the ’70s and ’80s to teach Japanese language and customs to North Korean spies. Five of the abductees were subsequently repatriated back to Japan; North Korea maintains the others died of natural causes.

In 1999, Japan adopted a World War II hymn, Kimigayo, as its national anthem and declared the traditional Japanese sun flag, a red disk in a field of white, its official flag (until then, the country did not have a legally recognized national flag or anthem). But any overt displays of Japanese nationalism have always spurred criticism from Asian neighbors, who maintain that Japan has never truly apologized or shown remorse for invading and occupying its neighbors. Koizumi repeatedly outraged fellow Asians with visits to Tokyo's Yasukuni Shrine, vilified by critics for honoring Japanese war dead, including those executed for wartime atrocities in Asia. Relations became further strained in 2005, when Japan's Education Ministry approved revised history textbooks that glossed over Japan's war crimes, sparking outrage in China and South Korea that erupted into anti-Japanese street riots. In 2007, an international furor arose when Abe Shinzo, who had replaced Koizumi as prime minister in 2006, claimed that no evidence existed of women being forced to work in Asian brothels established by Japanese military during World War II.

But Abe, who at 52 was Japan's youngest postwar premier, lasted only a year. In 2007, the government admitted that it had lost more than 50 million pension records due to shoddy bookkeeping. Although origins for the blunder originated before Abe took office, this scandal—together with a string of scandals by members of his cabinet—cost Abe his job, played a role in the ruling LPD's humiliating electoral defeat and loss of control in parliament's upper house, and severely undermined public confidence in their government. Abe was followed by Fukuda Yasuo, who pledged to push for an extension of Japan's naval mission support of U.S.-led forces in Afghanistan and improve relations with Japan's Asian neighbors.

2 Japan Today

Today, Japan's economy is unquestionably on the mend, though whether Japan will be able to reverse more than 15 years of deflation any time soon remains to be seen, especially in light of recent economic deceleration in the United States. Many financial and political challenges remain. Bankruptcies and corporate mergers have forever altered the relationship between Japanese workers and their employers, with life-long employment with the same company no longer a given. Homelessness is now so common that it no longer draws stares, even in the swank Ginza District. Crime, once almost unheard of, is on the rise, especially theft. My former Tokyo landlady fears burglary so much that she refuses to open her doors to strangers. Lurid murders, though rare, garner media attention, including the murder of Nagasaki's mayor in 2007, who was gunned down in front of Nagasaki Station.

Certainly one of Japan's biggest concerns is its declining birth rate coupled with one of the most rapidly aging populations in the world. About 20% of its population is 65 and older; by 2055, that number is expected to double. Meanwhile, Japan's ratio of children aged 14 and younger is believed to be the lowest in the world, accounting for only 13.6% of the population, and the birth rate in Japan is at an all-time low of 1.26 per woman (the birth control pill was legalized in 1999). This will undoubtedly lead to a shortage of labor, severely straining the country's resources for tax revenues, pensions, and health care.

For the short-term visitor to Japan, however, life in Japan appears much as it always has: humming with energy,

Fun Fact The Magical World of Vending Machines

One of the things that usually surprises visitors to Japan is the number of vending machines in the country, estimated to be more than 5.5 million—one for every 20 people. They're virtually everywhere—in train stations, in front of shops, on the back streets of residential neighborhoods. Most will take bills and give back change. Many have almost nonsensical English-language promotional lines on them, such as ENJOY REFRESHING TIME. Some will even talk to you.

And what can you buy in these vending machines? First, there are the obvious items—drinks and snacks, including hot or cold coffee in a can. But if you're on your way to someone's house, you might be able to pick up a bouquet of flowers from a machine. Your CD player is out of batteries? You may be able to find those, too, along with CDs, film, disposable cameras, sandwiches, and even eggs. Vending machines outside post offices sell stamps and postcards, while those in business hotels sell razors, Cup Noodles, beer, and even underwear.

In the not-too-distant past, things were also sold from sidewalk vending machines that would have met with instant protest in other countries around the world. Cigarettes and beer were available on almost every corner, where even children could buy them if they wanted to; nowadays, however, shoppers must first insert a computer-readable card certifying they're at least 20 years old. I remember a vending machine in my Tokyo neighborhood: By day, it was blank, with no sign as to what was inside; at night, however, the thing would light up, and on display were pornographic comics. Nowadays, pornographic vending machines are very rare, not for moral reasons, but because of the Internet.

Still, if it's available in Japan, it's probably in a vending machine somewhere.

crowded beyond belief in its major cities, and filled with acts of human kindness. Crime, though undeniably on the increase, is still negligible when compared to levels in the United States, and Japan remains one of the safest countries in the world. Although it's true I am more careful than I was 15 years ago—I guard my purse in crowded subways, I avoid parks after dark—for Americans such precautions seem merely self-evident. But while I'm vigilant about theft and purse snatching, I never worry about personal safety when I'm in Japan. Violent crime—especially against strangers—remains virtually unheard of in Japan.

Certainly one unintended benefit of the recession is that Japan now offers something that would have been unthinkable during the spending-happy 1980s: bargains. The recession has spawned tony French restaurants serving value-conscious fixed-price lunches, secondhand clothing stores selling last year's designer wear, and 100-Yen discount shops conducting a brisk business. Whereas in the 1980s Japan was best known as an economic powerhouse, today it's known not only for Sony and Toyota but also as an exporter of cool pop culture, from anime and Hello Kitty to fashion and food.

3 Minding Your Ps & Qs

As an island nation with few natural resources, Japan's 127 million people are its greatest asset. Hardworking, honest, and proud about performing every task well no matter how insignificant it may seem, Japanese are well known for their politeness and helpfulness to strangers. Indeed, hardly anyone returns from a trip to Japan without stories of extraordinary kindnesses extended by Japanese.

With almost 99% of its population consisting of ethnic Japanese, Japan is one of the most homogeneous nations in the world. That—coupled with Japan's actual physical isolation as an island nation—has more than anything else led to a feeling among Japanese that they belong to a single huge tribe different from any other people on earth, and that all people can basically be divided into two categories: Japanese and non-Japanese. You'll often hear a Japanese preface a statement or opinion with the words "We Japanese," implying that all Japanese think alike.

Indeed, one characteristic of the Japanese that has received much publicity—and is seen (at least by some) as a reason Japan became so economically powerful so quickly—is this group mentality. Whereas in the West the attainment of "happiness" is the elusive goal for a full and rewarding life, in Japan, it's satisfactory performance of duty. From the time they are born, Japanese are instilled with a sense of duty that extends toward parents, spouses, bosses, coworkers, neighbors, and society as a whole. In a nation as crowded as Japan, consideration of others is essential, and consideration of the group always wins out over the desire of the individual. In fact, I have had Japanese tell me they consider individuality synonymous with selfishness and a complete disregard for the feelings of others.

MEETING THE JAPANESE PEOPLE

On a personal level, Japanese are among the most likable people in the world. They are kind, thoughtful, and adept in perceiving another person's needs. Japanese have an unerring eye for pure beauty, whether it be food, architecture, or landscaped gardens; it's impossible to visit Japan and not have some of the Japanese appreciation of beauty rub off.

If you're invited to Japan by an organization or business, you'll receive the royal treatment and will most likely be wined and dined so wonderfully and thoroughly that you'll never want to leave. If you go to Japan on your own as an ordinary tourist, however, chances are that your experiences will be much different. Except for those who have lived or traveled abroad, few Japanese have had much contact with foreigners. In fact, even in Tokyo, there are some Japanese who have never spoken to a foreigner and would be quite embarrassed and uncomfortable if confronted with the possibility. And even though most of them have studied English, few Japanese have had the opportunity to use the language and cannot (or are too shy to) communicate in it. So don't be surprised if you find the empty seat beside you on the subway the last one to be occupied—most Japanese are deathly afraid you'll ask them a question they won't understand.

In many respects, therefore, it's much harder to meet the locals in Japan than in many other countries. Japanese are simply much shyer than Americans. Although they will sometimes approach you to ask whether they might practice English with you, for the most part you're left pretty much on your own unless you make the first move.

Probably the easiest way to meet Japanese is to go where they play—namely, the

The Home-Visit System

Recognizing the difficulty foreigners may face in meeting Japanese people, a dozen or so cities offer a Home Visit, allowing overseas visitors the chance to visit an English-speaking Japanese family in their home for a few hours. Not only does such an encounter bring you in direct contact with Japanese, it also offers a glimpse into their lifestyle. You can even request that a family member share your occupation, though such requests are, of course, sometimes impossible to fulfill. The program doesn't cost anything, but it does take some advance preparation. You must make arrangements in advance, which differs from city to city and can range from 1 day in advance to 2 weeks in advance, by calling or applying in person at the local administrative authority or private organization (which is sometimes the local tourist office) that handles the city's home-visit program. After contacting a local family, the office will inform you of the family and the time to visit. Most visits take place for a few hours in the evening (dinner is not served). It's a good idea to bring a small gift such as flowers, fruit, or a souvenir of some kind from your hometown. Before your visit, you may be asked to appear in person at the application office to obtain detailed directions; or the office may call with the directions. Note that application offices may be closed on weekends and holidays. Here are a few contact numbers for cities participating in the Home-Visit System: Narita (☎ 0476/34-6251 or 0476/24-3198; you can also apply in person at the Tourist Information Center in Terminal 2 at Narita airport), Nagoya (☎ 052/581-5689), Kyoto (☎ 075/752-3511), Osaka (☎ 06/6345-2189), Kobe (☎ 078/303-1010), Kurashiki (☎ 086/475-0543), Hiroshima (☎ 082/247-9715), Fukuoka (☎ 092/733-2220), and Kumamoto (☎ 096/359-2121). For more information, contact local tourist information offices.

country's countless bars, including those that serve yakitori (skewered chicken). Usually small affairs, each with perhaps just a counter and some tables, they're often filled with both younger and older Japanese, many of whom are regulars. As the evening wears on, you'll encounter Japanese who do want to speak to you if they understand English, and other slightly inebriated Japanese who will speak to you even if they don't. If you're open to them, such chance encounters may prove to be the highlight of your trip or, at the very least, an evening of just plain fun.

My co-worker Janie, who traveled around Japan with her then-3-year-old daughter, found that traveling with children opened up opportunities like a magic key. Other children talked freely to her child (they never seemed to have a language barrier), while Janie was able to talk to parents about their children. Complete strangers she met on a train even invited her and her daughter home; in contrast, some Japanese people she has known for years have never invited her home, preferring instead to meet at coffee shops or restaurants.

Another good way to meet Japanese people is to stay in a minsbuku, an inexpensive lodging in a private home (see "Tips on Accommodations" in chapter 2). Also, national newspapers and local English-language newsletters list international club activities; you may be able to hook up with, say, a hiking or skiing group composed of both Japanese and international members.

Finally, you can meet locals and learn about destinations at the same time through Goodwill Guides, a national organization of volunteers (mostly retirees, housewives, and students) who donate their time to guide you around their city free of charge (you pay their travel expenses, admission fees to sights, and meals). There are Goodwill Guides in cities throughout Japan, including Fukuoka, Kumamoto, Beppu, Miyazaki, Kagoshima, Takamatsu, Matsuyama, Hiroshima, Himeji, Kurashiki, Matsue, Kobe, Osaka, Kyoto, Nara, Kanzawa, Matsumoto, Nagoya, Tokyo, Narita, Yokohama, Kamakura, Hakone, Atami, Ito, Nikko, and Matsushima. Reservations for a guide must be made in advance—usually a week or more. For more information, including contact information, ask for the pamphlet “Goodwill Guide Groups of Japan Welcome You,” at Tourist Information Centers in Tokyo or Narita and Kansai international airports; or go to the English-language version of JNTO’s website at www.jnto.go.jp, and click “Essential Info” (under “Arrange Your Travel”), and then “Guide Services.”

ETIQUETTE

Much of Japan’s system of etiquette and manners stems from its feudal days, when the social hierarchy dictated how a person spoke, sat, bowed, ate, walked, and lived. Failure to comply with the rules would bring severe punishment, even death. More than one Japanese have literally lost their heads for committing social blunders.

Of course, nowadays it’s quite different, although Japanese still attach much importance to proper behavior. As a foreigner, however, you can get away with a lot. After all, you’re just a “barbarian” and, as such, can be forgiven for not knowing the rules. There are two cardinal sins, however, you should never commit: One is you should never wear your shoes into a Japanese home, traditional inn, temple, or any room with tatami; the other is that you should never wash with soap inside a communal Japanese bathtub. Except for these two horrors, you will probably be forgiven any other social blunders (such as standing with your arms folded or your hands in your pockets).

As a sensitive traveler, however, you should try to familiarize yourself with the basics of Japanese social etiquette. Japanese are very appreciative of foreigners who take the time to learn about their country and are quite patient in helping you. Remember, if you do commit a faux pas, apologize profusely and smile.

Most forms of behavior and etiquette in Japan developed to allow relationships to be as frictionless as possible—a pretty good idea in a country as crowded as Japan. Japanese don’t like confrontations, and fights are extremely rare. Japanese are very good at covering almost all unpleasantness with a smile. Foreigners find the smile hard to read; a smiling Japanese face can mean happiness, sadness, embarrassment, or even anger. My first lesson in such physiognomic inscrutability happened on a subway in Tokyo, where I saw a middle-aged Japanese woman who was about to board the subway brutally knocked out of the way by a Japanese man rushing off the train. She almost lost her balance, but she gave a little laugh, smiled, and got on the train. A few minutes later, as the train was speeding through a tunnel, I stole a look at her and was able to read her true feelings on her face. Lost in her thoughts, she knitted her brow in consternation and looked most upset and unhappy. The smile had been a put-on.

Another aspect of Japanese behavior that sometimes causes difficulty for foreigners, especially in business negotiations, is the reluctance of Japanese to say no when they mean no. Many consider such directness poor manners. As a result, they're much more apt to say your request is very difficult, or they'll simply beat around the bush without giving a definite answer. At this point, you're expected to let the subject drop. Showing impatience, anger, or aggressiveness rarely gets you anywhere; apologizing sometimes does. And if someone does give in to your request, you can't thank them enough.

If you're invited to a Japanese home, you should know that it's both a rarity and an honor. Most Japanese consider their homes too small and humble for entertaining guests, which is why there are so many restaurants, coffee shops, and bars. If you're invited to a home, don't show up empty-handed. Bring a small gift such as candy, fruit, flowers, or perhaps a souvenir from your hometown. Alcohol is also appreciated. And if someone does extend you a favor, be sure to thank him again the next time you see him—even if it's a year later.

Don't blow your nose in public if you can help it, and never at the dinner table. It's considered most disgusting. On the other hand, even though Japanese are very hygienic, they're not at all averse to spitting on the sidewalk. And, even more peculiar, the men urinate when and where they want, usually against a tree or a wall and most often after a night of carousing in the bars.

This being a man's society, men will walk in and out of doors and elevators before women, and in subways, they will sit down while women stand. Some Japanese men who have had contact with the Western world (particularly hotel staff) will make a gallant show of allowing a Western woman to step out of the elevator first. For the sake of women living in Japan, thank them warmly.

BOWING The main form of greeting in Japan is the bow rather than the handshake. Although at first glance it may seem simple enough, the bow—together with its implications—is actually quite complicated. The depth of the bow and the number of seconds devoted to performing it, as well as the total number of bows, depend on who you are, to whom you're bowing, and how they're bowing back. In addition to bowing in greeting, Japanese also bow upon departing and to express gratitude. The proper form for a bow is to bend from the waist with a straight back and to keep your arms at your sides if you're a man or clasped in front of you if you're a woman, but if you're a foreigner, a simple nod of the head is enough. Knowing foreigners shake hands, a Japanese may extend his hand, although he probably won't be able to stop himself from giving a little bow as well. (I've even seen Japanese bow when talking on the telephone.) Although I've occasionally witnessed Japanese businessmen shaking hands among themselves, the practice is still quite rare. Kimono-clad hostesses of a high-end traditional Japanese inn will often kneel on tatami and bow to the ground as they send you off on your journey.

VISITING CARDS You're a nonentity in Japan if you don't have a visiting card, called a meishi. Everyone—from housewives to bank presidents—carries meishi to give out during introductions. If you're trying to conduct business in Japan, you'll be regarded suspiciously—even as a phony—if you don't have business cards. Meishi are very useful business tools for Japanese. Likewise, a meishi can be used as an introduction to a third party—a Japanese may give you his meishi, scribble something on it, and tell you to present it to his cousin who owns a restaurant in Fukuoka. Voilà—the cousin will treat you like a royal guest.

As a tourist, you don't have to have business cards, but it certainly doesn't hurt, and Japanese people will be greatly impressed by your preparedness. The card should have your address and occupation on it; you might even consider having your meishi made in Japan, with the Japanese syllabic script (katakana) written on the reverse side.

Needless to say, there's a proper way to present a meishi. Turn it so that the other person can read it (that is, upside-down to you) and present it with both hands and a slight bow. If you can, try to deliver your card underneath the card you are receiving, to show deference. Afterward, it's customary for both of you to study the meishi for a moment and, if possible, to comment on it (such as, "You're from Kyoto? My brother lived in Kyoto!" or "Sony! What a famous company!"). If you're at a business meeting, place the card in front of you on the table; it's considered impolite to put the card away.

DINING Several dining customs in Japan differ from those in the West, many of them involving chopsticks or drinking. For information on dining etiquette and customs, refer to "Tips on Dining, Japanese Style" in chapter 2.

SHOES Nothing is so distasteful to Japanese as the soles of shoes. Therefore, you should take off your shoes before entering a home, a Japanese-style inn, a temple, and even some museums and restaurants. Usually, there will be plastic slippers at the entryway for you to slip on, but whenever you encounter tatami, you should take off even these slippers—only bare feet or socks are allowed to tread upon tatami.

Restrooms present another set of slippers. If you're in a home or a Japanese inn, you'll notice another pair of slippers—again plastic or rubber—sitting right inside the restroom door. Step out of the hallway plastic shoes and into the bathroom slippers, and wear these the entire time you're in the restroom. When you're finished, change back into the hallway slippers. If you forget this last changeover, you'll regret it—nothing is as embarrassing as walking into a room wearing toilet slippers and not realizing what you've done until you see the mixed looks of horror and mirth on the faces of Japanese people.

BATHING On my very first trip to Japan, I was certain I would never enter a Japanese bath. I was under the misconception that men and women bathed together, and I couldn't imagine getting into a tub with a group of smiling and bowing Japanese men. I needn't have worried—in almost all circumstances, bathing is gender segregated. There are some exceptions, primarily at outdoor hot-spring spas in the countryside, but the women who go to these are usually grandmothers who couldn't care less. Young Japanese women wouldn't dream of jumping into a tub with a group of male strangers.

Japanese baths are delightful. You find them at Japanese-style inns (ryokan and minshuku), at hot-spring spas (onsen), and at neighborhood baths (sento); not everyone has his or her own bath in Japan. Sometimes they're elaborate affairs with indoor and outdoor tubs, whirlpools, plants, and statues; sometimes they're nothing more than a tiny tub. Public baths have long been regarded as social centers for Japanese—friends and coworkers will visit hot-spring resorts together; neighbors exchange gossip at the neighborhood bath. Sadly, however, the neighborhood bath has been in great decline over the past decades, as more and more Japanese acquire private baths. Hot-spring spas, however, remain hugely popular.

In any case, whether large or small, the procedure at all Japanese baths is the same. After completely disrobing in the changing room and putting your clothes in either a locker or a basket, hold a washcloth (usually provided by the bathhouse) in front of you so that it covers your vital parts and walk into the bathing area. There, you'll find basins, stools (they used to be wood but are now mostly plastic), and faucets along the wall. Sit on the stool in front of a faucet and repeatedly fill your basin with water (or use the hand-held faucet if available), splashing water all over you. If there's no hot water from the faucet, it's acceptable to dip your basin into the hot bath, but your washcloth should never touch the tub water. Rinsing yourself thoroughly is not only proper onsen manners; it also acclimatizes your body to the bath's hot temperature so you don't suffer a heart attack. While some Japanese just throw a bit of water over themselves, others soap down completely—and I mean completely—and then rinse away all traces of soap before getting into the tub. At any rate, only when you feel squeaky-clean should you enter the tub. Your first attempt at a Japanese bath may be painful—simply too scalding for comfort. It helps if you ease in gently and then sit perfectly still. You'll notice all tension and stiffness ebbing away.

When you've finished bathing, do not pull the plug, even if you're staying in a private home, because the same bath water is used by everyone. At an onsen, where the hot-spring waters are considered curative, Japanese will often make several trips between the faucet and the baths, being careful not to rinse off the curative waters when they're done. At any rate, I have never seen a group of people wash themselves so thoroughly as Japanese, from their ears to their toes. Japanese are so fond of baths that many take them nightly, especially in winter, when a hot bath keeps them warm for hours afterward. If they're staying at a hot-spring spa, they'll use the baths both at night and again in the morning. Note that some public baths have signs forbidding entrance to anyone with tattoos—tattoos are associated with the Japanese mafia.

4 Dealing with the Language Barrier

Without a doubt, the hardest part of traveling in Japan is the language barrier. Suddenly you find yourself transported to a crowded land of 127 million people where you can neither speak nor read the language. To make matters worse, few Japanese speak English. And outside big cities and the major tourist sites, the menus, signs at train stations, and shop names are often in Japanese only.

However, millions of foreign visitors before you who didn't speak a word of Japanese have traveled throughout Japan on their own with great success. Much of the anxiety travelers experience elsewhere is eliminated in Japan because the country is safe and the people are kind and helpful to foreigners. In addition, the Japan National Tourist Organization (JNTO) does a super job of publishing helpful brochures, leaflets, and maps; and there are local tourist offices in almost all cities and towns, usually at train stations. The country has done a mammoth job during the past decade updating street signs, subway directions, and addresses in Roman letters, especially in Tokyo, Osaka, Kyoto, and other destinations popular with foreigners.

If you need to ask directions of strangers in Japan, your best bet is to ask younger people. They have all studied English in school and are most likely to be able to help you. Japanese businessmen often know some English also. And as strange as it sounds, if you're having problems communicating with someone, write it down so he or she can read it. The emphasis in schools is on written rather than oral English (many English teachers can't speak English themselves), so Japanese who can't understand a word you say may know all the subtleties of syntax and English grammar. If you still have problems communicating, you can always call the Tourist Information Center (☎ 03/3201-3331) to help with translation. It also doesn't hurt to be armed with a small pocket dictionary.

If you're heading out for a particular restaurant, shop, or sight, have your destination written down in Japanese by someone at your hotel. If you get lost along the way, look for one of the police boxes, called koban, found in virtually every neighborhood. They have maps of particular districts and can pinpoint exactly where you want to go if you have the address with you. Remember, too, that main train stations in major cities and tourist resort areas have tourist information offices (kanko annaijo) that can help you with everything from directions to hotel reservations. The staff may not speak any English, but you shouldn't have trouble communicating your needs.

A glossary of simple phrases and words appears in appendix B of this book. In addition, realizing the difficulties that foreigners have with the language barrier in Japan, the JNTO has put out a nifty booklet called the Tourist's Language Handbook. It contains basic sentences in English, with their Japanese equivalents, for almost every activity, from asking for directions, to shopping, to ordering in a restaurant, to staying in a Japanese inn. It also has a short list of useful Japanese phrases to help you get around on your own. Pick up a copy at a Tourist Information Center in Tokyo or at Narita or Kansai airports.

THE WRITTEN LANGUAGE No one knows the exact origins of the Japanese language, but we do know it existed only in spoken form until the 6th century. It was then that Japanese borrowed the Chinese pictorial characters, called kanji, and used them to develop their own form of written language. Later, two phonetic alphabet systems, hiragana and katakana, were added to kanji to form the existing Japanese writing system. Thus, Chinese and Japanese use some of the same pictographs, but otherwise there's no similarity between the languages; while they may be able to recognize parts of each other's written language, the Chinese and Japanese cannot communicate verbally.

The Japanese written language—a combination of kanji, hiragana, and katakana—is probably one of the most difficult in the modern world. As for the spoken language, there are many levels of speech and forms of expression relating to a person's social status and sex. Even non-verbal communication is a vital part of understanding Japanese, because what isn't said is often more important than what is. It's little wonder that St. Francis Xavier, a Jesuit missionary who came to Japan in the 16th century, wrote that Japanese was an invention of the devil designed to thwart the spread of Christianity. And yet, astoundingly, adult literacy in Japan is estimated to be 99%.

A note on establishment names: Many hotels and restaurants in Japan now have signs in romaji (Roman, or English-language, characters) in addition to their Japanese-character signs. For those that don't, take heart—appendix C contains the Japanese-character names of establishments recommended in this book that have signs in Japanese only; the appendix should help you recognize them.

OTHER HELPFUL TIPS It's worth noting that Japanese nouns do not have plural forms; thus, for example, ryokan, a Japanese-style inn, can be both singular and plural, as can kimono. Plural sense is indicated by context.

In addition, the Japanese custom is to list the family name first followed by the given name. That is the format I have followed in this book, but note that many things printed in English—business cards, city brochures, and so on—increasingly follow the Western custom of listing the family name last.

And, finally, you may find yourself confused because of suffixes attached to Japanese place names. For example, dori can mean street, avenue, or road; and sometimes it's attached to a street name with a hyphen, while at other times it stands alone. Thus, you may see Chuo-dori, Chuo Dori, or even Chuo-dori Avenue on English-language maps and street signs, but they're all one and the same street. Likewise, dera means "temple" and is often included at the end of the name, as in Kiyomizudera, which may be translated into English as Kiyomizu Temple; jo means "castle" and may appear at the end of a castle's name, as in Nijojo, or it may be left off and appear as Nijo Castle.

WRITTEN ENGLISH IN JAPAN

English words are quite fashionable in Japanese advertising, with the result that you'll often see them on shop signs, posters, shopping bags, and T-shirts. However, the words are often wonderfully misspelled or are used in such unusual contexts that you can only guess at the original intent. What, for example, can possibly be the meaning behind TODAY BIRDS, TOMORROW MEN, which appeared below a picture of birds on a shopping bag? I have treasured ashtrays that read THE YOUNG BOY GRASPED HER HEART FIRMLY and LET'S TRIP IN HOKKAIDO. In Okayama, I saw a shop whose name was a stern admonition to customers to GROW UP, while in Kyoto I saw the SELFISH coffee shop and the PITIFUL PUB. A staff member of the Hokkaido Tourist Association whose business card identified him working for the PROPAGANDA SECTION was probably more truthful than most. And imagine my consternation upon stepping onto a bathroom scale that called itself the BEAUTY-CHECKER. But the best sign I've seen was at the Narita Airport, where each check-in counter displayed a notice advising passengers they would have to pay a service-facility charge at THE TIME OF CHECK-IN FOR YOUR FRIGHT. I was unable to control my giggles as I explained to the perplexed man behind one counter what was wrong with the sign. Two weeks later, when I went back through the airport, I was almost disappointed to find that all signs had been corrected. But that's Japanese efficiency.

5 Cultural Snapshots: Japanese Arts in a Nutshell

TRADITIONAL THEATER

KABUKI Probably Japan's best-known traditional theater art, Kabuki is also one of the country's most popular forms of entertainment. Visit a performance and it's easy to see why—in a word, Kabuki is fun! The plays are dramatic, the costumes are gorgeous, the stage settings are often fantastic, and the themes are universal—love, revenge, and the conflict between duty and personal feelings. Probably one of the reasons Kabuki is so popular even today is that it developed centuries ago as a form of entertainment for the common people in feudal Japan, particularly the merchants. And one of Kabuki's interesting aspects is that all roles—even those depicting women—are portrayed by men.

Kabuki has changed little in the past 100-some years. Altogether there are more than 300 Kabuki plays, all written before the 20th century. Kabuki stages almost always revolve and have an aisle that extends from the stage to the back of the spectator theater. For a Westerner, one of the more arresting things about a Kabuki performance is the audience itself. Because this has always been entertainment for the masses, the audience can get quite lively with yells, guffaws, shouts of approval, and laughter. In fact, old woodcuts of cross-eyed men apparently stemmed from Kabuki—when things got a little too rowdy, actors would stamp their feet and strike a cross-eyed pose in an attempt to gain the audience's attention.

Of course, you won't be able to understand what's being said. Indeed, because much of Kabuki drama dates from the 18th century, even Japanese sometimes have difficulty understanding the language. But it doesn't matter. Many theaters have programs and earphones that describe the plots in minute detail, often in the English language as well. Thus, you can follow the story and enjoy Kabuki just as much as everyone around you. The best place to enjoy Kabuki is Tokyo, where performances are held throughout much of the year.

NOH Whereas Kabuki developed as a form of entertainment for the masses, Noh was a much more traditional and aristocratic form of theater. Most of Japan's shogun were patrons of Noh; during the Edo Period, it became the exclusive entertainment of the samurai class. In contrast to Kabuki's extroverted liveliness, Noh is very calculated, slow, and restrained. The oldest form of theater in Japan, it has changed very little in the past 600 years, making it the oldest theater art in the world. The language is so archaic that Japanese cannot understand it at all, which explains in part why Noh does not have the popularity that Kabuki does.

As in Kabuki, all Noh performers are men, with the principal characters consisting mostly of ghosts or spirits, who illuminate foibles of human nature or tragic-heroic events. Performers often wear masks. Spoken parts are chanted by a chorus of about eight; music is provided by a Noh orchestra that consists of several drums and a flute.

Because the action is slow, watching an entire evening can be quite tedious unless you are particularly interested in Noh dance and music. In addition, most Noh plays do not have English translations. You may want to drop in for just a short while. In between Noh plays, short comic reliefs, called kyogen, usually make fun of life in the 1600s, depicting the lives of lazy husbands, conniving servants, and other characters with universal appeal.

BUNRAKU Bunraku is traditional Japanese puppet theater. But contrary to what you might expect, Bunraku is for adults, and themes center on love and revenge, sacrifice and suicide. Many dramas now adapted for Kabuki were first written for the Bunraku stage.

Popular in Japan since the 17th century—at times even more popular than Kabuki—Bunraku is fascinating to watch because the puppeteers are right onstage with their puppets. Dressed in black, they're wonderfully skilled in making the puppets seem like living beings. Usually, there are three puppeteers for each puppet, which is about three-fourths human size: One puppeteer is responsible for movement of the puppet's head, as well as for the expression on its face, and for the movement of the right arm and hand; another puppeteer operates the puppet's left arm and hand; while the third moves the legs. Although at first the puppeteers are somewhat distracting, after a while you forget they're there as the puppets assume personalities of their own. The narrator, who tells the story and speaks the various parts, is an important figure in the drama. The narrator is accompanied by a traditional three-stringed Japanese instrument called a shamisen. By all means, try to see Bunraku. The most famous presentations are at the Osaka Bunraku Theater, but there are performances in Tokyo and other major cities as well.

Fun Fact Sumo

The Japanese form of wrestling known as sumo began perhaps as long as 1,500 years ago and became immensely popular by the 6th century. Today, it's still popular, and the best wrestlers are revered as national heroes, much as baseball or basketball players are in the United States. Often taller than 1.8m (6 ft.) and weighing well over 300 pounds, sumo wrestlers follow a rigorous training period, which usually begins when they're in their teens and includes eating special foods to gain weight. Unmarried wrestlers even live together at their training schools, called sumo stables.

A sumo match takes place on a sandy-floored ring less than 4.5m (15 ft.) in diameter. Wrestlers dress much as they did during the Edo Period—their hair in a samurai-style topknot, an ornamental belt/loincloth around their huge girths. Before each bout, the two contestants scatter salt in the ring to purify it from the last bout's loss; they also squat and then raise each leg, stamping it into the ground to crush, symbolically, any evil spirits. They then squat down and face each other, glaring to psych each other out. Once they rush each other, each wrestler's object is to either eject his opponent from the ring or cause him to touch the ground with any part of his body other than his feet. This is accomplished by shoving, slapping, tripping, throwing, and even carrying the opponent, but punching with a closed fist and kicking are not allowed. Altogether, there are 48 holds and throws, and sumo fans know all of them.

Most bouts are very short, lasting only 30 seconds or so. The highest-ranking players are called yokozuna, or grand champions; in 1993, a Hawaiian named Akebono was promoted to the highest rank, the first non-Japanese ever to be so honored.

There are six 15-day sumo tournaments in Japan every year: Three are held in Tokyo (Jan, May, and Sept); the others are held in Osaka (Mar), Nagoya (July), and Fukuoka (Nov). Each wrestler in the tournament faces a new opponent every day; the winner of the tournament is the wrestler who maintains the best overall record.

If you'd like to attend a sumo match while you're in Tokyo, see the "Spectator Sports" section of chapter 5. Tournament matches are also widely covered on television.

THE TEA CEREMONY

Tea was brought to Japan from China more than 1,000 years ago. It first became popular among Buddhist priests as a means of staying awake during long hours of meditation; gradually, its use filtered down among the upper classes, and in the 16th century, the tea ceremony was perfected by a merchant named Sen-no-Rikyū. Using the principles of Zen and the spiritual discipline of the samurai, the tea ceremony became a highly stylized ritual, with detailed rules on how tea should be prepared, served, and drunk. The simplicity of movement and tranquillity of setting are meant to free the mind from the banality of everyday life and to allow the spirit to enjoy peace. In a way, it is a form of spiritual therapy.

The tea ceremony, cha-no-yu, is still practiced in Japan today and is regarded as a form of disciplinary training for mental composure and for etiquette and manners. In Kyoto, I once met a fellow guest in an inexpensive Japanese inn who asked whether she could serve me Japanese tea and a sweet after breakfast. She apologized for her ineptitude, saying she was only a mere apprentice of tea. When I asked how long she'd been studying cha-no-yu, she replied 7 years. That may seem like a long time, but the study of the tea ceremony includes related subjects, including the craftsmanship of tea vessels and implements, the design and construction of the teahouse, the landscaping of gardens, and literature related to the tea ceremony.

Several of Japan's more famous landscape gardens have teahouses on their grounds where you can sit on tatami, drink the frothy green tea (called matcha), eat sweets (meant to counteract the bitter taste of the tea), and contemplate the view. Teahouses are traditionally quite small and have room for five or fewer people. There's one entrance for the host and another for guests, so small that guests must crawl through it to enter. In the center of the room is a small brazier for the teapot along with utensils needed for the making of tea—tea bowl, tea caddy, bamboo whisk, and bamboo spoon. After hot water is added to powdered tea in the bowl and beaten with the whisk, the bowl is passed from guest to guest. Tea etiquette requires that guests compliment the host on the excellent flavor of the tea and on the beauty of the tea implements, which of course change with the seasons and are often valuable art objects.

Several first-class hotels in Tokyo hold tea ceremonies in special tea-ceremony rooms; see chapter 5 for more information.

FLORAL & LANDSCAPE ARTS

IKEBANA Whereas a Westerner is likely to put a bunch of flowers into a vase and be done with it, Japanese consider the arrangement of flowers an art in itself. Most young girls have at least some training in flower arranging, known as ikebana. First popularized among aristocrats during the Heian Period (A.D. 794–1192) and spreading to the common people in the 14th to 16th centuries, traditional ikebana, in its simplest form, is supposed to represent heaven, man, and earth; it's considered a truly Japanese art without outside influences. As important as the arrangement itself is the vase chosen to display it. Department store galleries sometimes have ikebana exhibitions, as do shrines; otherwise, check with the local tourist office.

GARDENS Nothing is left to chance in a Japanese landscape garden: The shapes of hills and trees, the placement of rocks and waterfalls—everything is skillfully arranged in a faithful reproduction of nature. To Westerners, it may seem a bit strange to arrange nature to look like nature; but to Japanese, even nature can be improved upon to make it more pleasing through the best possible use of limited space. Japanese are masters at this, as a visit to any of their famous gardens will testify.

In fact, Japanese have been sculpting gardens for more than 1,000 years. At first, the gardens were designed for walking and boating, with ponds, artificial islands, and pavilions. As with almost everything else in Japanese life, however, Zen Buddhism exerted an influence, making gardens simpler and attempting to create the illusion of boundless space within a small area. To the Buddhist, a garden was not for merriment but for contemplation—an uncluttered and simple landscape on which to rest the eyes.

Japanese gardens often use the principle of “borrowed landscape”—that is, the incorporation of surrounding mountains and landscape into the overall design and impact of the garden.

Basically, there are three styles of Japanese gardens. One style, called tsukiyama, uses ponds, hills, and streams to depict nature in miniature. Another style, known as the karesansui, uses stones and raked sand in place of water and is often seen at Zen Buddhist temples; it was developed during the Muromachi Period as a representation of Zen spiritualism. The third style, called chaniwa, emerged with the tea ceremony; built around a teahouse with an eye toward simplicity and tranquility, such a garden will often feature stone lanterns, a stone basin filled with water, or water flowing through a bamboo pipe.

Famous gardens in Japan include Kenrokuen Park in Kanazawa, Korakuen Park in Okayama, Ritsurin Park in Takamatsu, and the grounds of the Adachi Museum. Kyoto alone has about 50 gardens, including the famous Zen rock gardens at Daitokuji and Ryoanji temples, the gardens at both the Golden and Silver pavilions, and those at Heian Shrine, Nijo Castle, and the Katsura Imperial Villa.

Appendix B:

A Glossary of Useful Japanese Terms

Needless to say, it takes years to become fluent in Japanese, particularly in written Japanese, with its thousands of kanji, or Chinese characters, and its many hiragana and katakana characters. If you know even a few words of Japanese, however, they will not only be useful but will delight Japanese people you meet in the course of your trip.

PRONUNCIATION

In pronouncing the following vocabulary, keep in mind that there's very little stress on individual syllables (pronunciation of Japanese is often compared to Italian). Here's an approximation of some of the sounds of Japanese:

a as in father

e as in pen

i as in pick

o as in oh

ō as in ooh or ou

u as in boo

ū as in booo

g as in gift at the beginning of words; like "ng" in "sing" in the middle or at the end of words

Vowel sounds are almost always short unless they are pronounced doubled, in which case you hold the vowel a bit longer. Okashi, for example, means "a sweet," whereas okashii means "strange." As you can see, even slight mispronunciation of a word can result in confusion or hilarity. (Incidentally, jokes in Japanese are nearly always plays on words.) Similarly, double consonants are given more emphasis than only one consonant by itself.
